I was anxious to retire to my room, for I had a long correspondence to write for the Bungtown Banner, besides a biographical and critical notice of the life and writings of the late James Thompson Hodges, the eminent archæologist, for the Morning Highflyer; but good manners kept me seated while the four—that is, the two young gentlemen and the two young ladies—executed a quartette in passable style, Miss Crickett doing the piano accompaniment with considerable skill. Then Miss Crickett and Gigsby sang a duet, while Podson looked on scowlingly; but his face brightened when Miss Crickett asked him to favor the company with an aria on the flute. He had the instrument in his pocket and produced it without delay. Never till that moment had I an adequate conception of the capabilities of a flute. As an instrument of torture, when unskillfully handled, I firmly believe it is worthy to take rank with the accordeon or the thumb-screws. During the performance Tom stole out, and presently returned with a couple of hollow reeds, each about eighteen inches long and three-quarters of an inch in diameter, pierced with holes like a flute. When Podson had finished his little piece and received our hypocritical applause, Tom presented him with one of the reeds, saying he believed they were Fijian flutes—that he had got them down on the wharf from a sailor who had brought them from the Islands. Podson tried the instrument and found that he could produce from it shrill, but not unpleasing sounds. After one or two attempts he succeeded in performing a simple air with tolerable success.

"Try this one," said Tom, presenting the other. "I don't think it blows quite so easy."

Nothing loth to give further proof of his skill—proud, indeed, of being the only one in the room who could bring melody out of the rude instrument of the savages—Podson took the second flute and began to blow upon and finger it. The sounds it emitted were rather choked; but as he exerted his lungs to the utmost to fill it with air it gradually cleared, and finally gave forth soft, mellifluous sounds. But in the meantime a singular phenomenon appeared. As Podson blew in the flute, a cloud of fine black particles came out of the mouth-hole and settled upon his face, until, from his mouth to his eyebrows, he was about as dark as any chattel ever purchased in the barracoons of Dahomey. At first the company stared with astonishment; but I, who had before seen a similar trick, was unable to restrain a violent outburst of laughter, which proved instantly contagious. I thought that schoolma'am would go into hysterics. Podson, turning around to see what was the matter, happened to glance into the mirror, which revealed to him the truth, but he was so dull as not to see the point of the joke. Instead of laughing he flew into a violent rage, threw the flute at Tom, missed him and hit the schoolma'am in the eye, and then rushed out of the room, and up stairs.

"Oh, my eye!" exclaimed the schoolma'am, covering the injured organ with a delicate little hand.

"Oh, didn't he look funny!" cried Polly; and she lapsed into a fit of laughter so immoderate that I thought she would roll off her chair.

"You little rascal!" said Mrs. Peablossom, as soon as she could control her risibles, "what possessed you to play such a trick on the gentleman?" and she gave Tom a box on the ear which did not seem to hurt him much, for he immediately began laughing afresh.

Gigsby with an air of concern advanced to the side of the schoolma'am. "Did that awkward brute hurt you much?" he inquired.

"Don't call such names, Mr. Gigsby," she replied. "I believe my eye is put out."

"The wretch!" said Gigsby. "You'd better put a raw oyster on it."

"But where shall I get the oyster?"

"Well, put a piece of raw beefsteak on it; that will draw the swelling out."

Mrs. Peablossom and Polly ran to the pantry, but soon returned with the information that the raw beefsteak was all out. They concurred in recommending cold water.

"Warm water is better," said I. "Cold water will relieve the pain, but it will set the color if the eye should turn black."

But the advocates of the cold water cure prevailed, and bound up Miss Crickett's eye with a cloth liberally saturated with their favorite fluid.

Then Gigsby and I took our leave. Our rooms were adjoining, while Podson's were across the hall. I had turned on the gas and sat me down to write, when I heard, proceeding from Gigsby's apartment, a sort of triumphal strain badly executed on a violin of indifferent sound. When this had lasted for a brief time, from the other side of the hall came a defiant note, from that most ear-piercing and nerve-torturing of wind instruments when played alone—a B flat clarionet. I was so annoyed that I could do nothing, but withal so amused that I did not care to interfere to stop the sport. The music (!) gradually grew wilder and louder; it was a trial of endurance between muscle on the one side and lungs on the other. "Plus potestatis tuo cubito," I mentally exclaimed to Gigsby; "plus venti tuis pulmonibus," to Podson. I verily believe the contest would have been prolonged all night between these foolish rivals, had not Tom, coming up to bed, brought a request from his mother that they would desist and allow the rest of the household to sleep.

"Order reigned in Warsaw," and I proceeded with my "pen-write." I had written I don't know how many pages; but it was about midnight when I heard Gigsby's door softly open and a stealthy foot passing through the hall and descending the stairway. A few minutes afterward I heard, nearly under my window, a flourish of violin music, and then Gigsby's not unmelodious voice singing "Beautiful Dreamer." He was evidently serenading the schoolma'am, who, I conjectured, slept in a chamber below. Hardly had he commenced when I heard Podson's door open, and another stealthy step crossing the hall and entering Gigsby's room. Then I heard a window softly raised, and then a splash, which was answered from below by a hoarse, gasping sound, succeeded by a volley of oaths of which I did not think Gigsby capable. A sleepy old Newfoundland dog on the back porch took up the chorus, which was echoed by all the dogs in the neighborhood—a hundred, more or less. Podson, in hastening back to his own room, stumbled and fell, smashing the pitcher he was carrying to atoms, and making a terrible racket; Gigsby came rushing in furiously, slamming the door violently and tumbling half way up the staircase; Tom rushed out, yelling incoherently at the top of his voice, and the women, frightened out of their seventeen senses by the unearthly clatter, screamed "Murder!" "Thieves!" "Police!" with all their might and main. It was more than an hour by my chronometer before matters were explained, quiet restored, and the members of the household again resigned to sleep.

Next morning Miss Crickett had a black and painfully swollen eye, and was fain to give her pupils a holiday. Mr. Podson made so humble an apology for his rage and the accident resulting from it that he was forgiven, though I am satisfied that Miss Cricket is not altogether appeased. Podson and Gigsby are now declared enemies; the latter has been to consult me about the best means of "getting even" on his big rival, and the former has confided to me his opinion that Gigsby is a nuisance and a scoundrel, and that we ought to adopt some measures to drive him off. They are constantly seeking to worry and annoy each other, and even the presence of the ladies hardly restrains them from mutual exhibitions of hatred and malice. I try to give them both good advice, but I might as well talk to a pair of enraged ourang-outangs. They are so blinded by passion and jealousy they cannot see what everybody else does—that their conduct renders them despicable in the very eyes whose approving smile they covet. It is plain that they cannot remain long under the same roof without a violent collision of some sort, but neither will consent to leave so long as the pretty schoolma'am remains. I, as a neutral power, have been successively called in council by Mrs. Peablossom, Miss Crickett and Polly—which last I am satisfied nurses a budding attachment for young Gigsby—but thus far we have not hit upon any plan of adjustment which seems feasible. Tom, too, has consulted me with regard to another trick which he meditates playing on "old Podson," as he calls him. I gave the young scamp no encouragement, but I hope he'll do it! In short, there is trouble brewing at my new lodgings; when the denouement arrives you shall have a full, true and particular account of all the circumstances.

JOHN CLERK.

THE FRENCH POLICE SYSTEM.

THOSE who purpose coming over to Paris during the Great Exhibition should be somewhat initiated into the habits of the country. Provided one is not a conspirator, and willing to submit to the laws and regulations enforced by the present government, one is certain to meet with a cordial reception, as well as courteous impartiality from any of the judicial authorities one may happen to be brought into contact with. Still, everything is so radically different here from what it is in England, that, to my idea, the wisest plan for foreigners who contemplate a visit to Paris would be to follow the advice given by St. Monica to St. Agustin: "Oublie ce que tu as su!"

For example, you arrive at Calais, Boulogne, Havre, or Dieppe. Your first thought is, "Where is my luggage?" You need not have this preoccupation, or any other, inasmuch as once you set your foot on French territory government takes charge of you, looks after your luggage, sees that you keep respectable hours, inquires where you lodge, forbids you to put flower-pots on your balcony, and now and then informs you that you had better whitewash the outside of the house you inhabit. When once you have settled in Paris,—whether you have selected a hotel, furnished lodgings, or a private house for your residence,—Monsieur le Préfet do Police will be made aware of the fact within twelve hours of your arrival, no matter how humble or exalted be your social position; not that he is "on hospitable thoughts intent," and purposes inviting you to one of his soirées or dinners, but simply in order that he may be kept au courant of the sort of life you may be leading.

"The Devil on Two Sticks," when he wished to know what was going on in any dwelling, did so by raising the roofs of the houses, and peering in from the upper regions of the air. The Préfet de Police, without removing a single slate, brick, or tile, is perfectly aware of all that occurs in the whole empire. His are indeed Argus eyes. You write an article in a magazine, and sign it with a nom de plume. Within twelve hours, at the latest, of its publication, M. le Préfet knows your real patronymic as well as you do yourself. If you write a book, M. le Préfet enjoys the privilege of receiving from your editor the first copy; and in vain may your friends besiege every bookseller in Paris for the work until he has granted permission for its sale. Should you take a fancy to turn valet, cook, or servant, you will have to appeal to M. le Préfet for what is called a livret,—viz. a little book, wherein the master who takes a fancy to you, or he who does not, will inscribe on the said livret, it to be their deliberate opinion that you are a trustworthy creature, a mere booby, or an intelligent member of the community. If you choose to make the Bourse or Exchange your place of resort, a special commissary will report to the powers that be whether you have gained or lost by your speculations. If you give a dinner or an evening party to above twenty-three persons, a police agent may enter your drawing-room, and put a stop to your enjoyment of your friends' society by summarily dispersing your guests.

Any one walking about at night and wishing to study Paris by moonlight, runs the risk of getting a lodging at the expense of the state, the honors of which abode will be done by a mouchard. The Préfet de Police not only is intimately acquainted with your character, habits, and mode of life, but can tell the hour at which you go to bed; that at which you rise; that at which you are in a good humor; and that, also, when you are usually in a rage. He knows exactly who you correspond with, what books you read, and most especially to what paper you subscribe. If you wish to be in the good graces of this Grand Vizier you ought, on your reaching Paris, either to subscribe to the Moniteur Universel or to the Petit Moniteur. It is true you will, even after the most attentive perusal of the said official sheets, utterly fail in gathering any sort of information therefrom. Yet you will have more chance of a ticket for the ball at the Hotel de Ville than if you took in the Siècle or the Opinion Nationale. I repeat what I have already said, that it is impossible that a Frenchman, an Englishman, a German, an American, a Chinese, etc., etc., can take up his residence in this capital or in any city in the Empire without the Prélet being perfectly cognizant of his past and present career. One example will suffice to prove this. A lady of my acquaintance, residing in a country town, received a letter from a niece, of whom she had not heard for many years in consequence of family differences. The young lady complained that her father and sister had abruptly quitted the French watering place, where they had lived for two years, and had left her without resources in a house full of servants, and prayed her aunt to receive her immediately. The lady, before acceding to this request, wished to ascertain the facts of the case. She applied to the Préfet of her department, to whom she was known. His secretary after listening to the case, requested her to return in twenty-four hours. Precisely at the given time the lady presented herself. The secretary laid before her some sheets of closely-written paper, on which were inscribed the most minute details of the life the family in question had led from the hour of their landing in France to the abrupt departure of the young lady's father and sister. The report confirmed the young lady's statement in every particular; and the reassured aunt unhesitatingly sheltered her unlucky relative.

To speak of Paris alone, there are at this moment above 300,000 names of strangers inscribed on the books of the Prefecture; the antecedents of the life of each individual being résumed, in few brief lines, and recorded in alphabetical order on the police register. These books became so voluminous, and took up so much space, that latterly cards have been substituted for registers. Each card bears the name of the foreigner in question, and beneath are the salient points of his past career, condensed into as few words as possible. The cards are placed according to their alphabetical order in tin cases. Each fresh arrival in the metropolis adds a fresh card to the collection. This arrangement works so admirably that fifty tin cases sufficed to supply all the facts required for judicial purposes.

A tremendous number of mouchards, or spies, are employed by the Préfet de Police to inform him of what is going on in Paris,—to feel the public pulse, as well as to try to detect culprits of every denomination. These mouchards are to be met with, not in the streets only, but in cafés, restaurants, public places of amusement, etc. They will enter into conversation with you, endeavor to make you express your political ideas, and try to entrap you in every way possible. I therefore think it my duty to caution my readers not to be too familiar with men whom they meet in any public place, and not to betray their thoughts as regards France, and more especially the French government.

Sitting one evening in a café, engaged in writing, I was accosted by a man who, under the pretext of not knowing Paris, entered into conversation with me. Presently he offered me a glass of Curacoa, which I declined. He then said he would like to dine with me, which I refused. Lastly he informed me that he had taken two tickets for the opera ball, reckoning upon one of his friends to accompany him, adding that the said friend not being able to keep his appointment, he would gladly offer me the ticket. The thought instantly struck me that I was in the presence of a mouchard, and I made up my mind to accept this last offer, and go with him to the Bal d'Opera, which I did. I remained with him till four in the morning. This occurred a few weeks after the coup d'état of the 2d of December, 1851, when so many statesmen and gray-headed generals were suddenly swept into prison. Vainly did my mouchard endeavor to make me speak on political subjects. Vainly did he try to draw out my opinions of the present government. I was too wide-awake, and had made up my mind to observe the same mutism as the Moniteur. Finally he invited me to sup with him. I accepted; and a capital supper it proved to be. He evidently hoped that iced champagne would have the effect of making me communicative, but my mouth only opened to absorb paté de foie gras paid for by the Préfecture de Police. The mouchard suddenly seized an excuse to part with whom he began to fancy might have discovered his game. Years elapsed,—eight or ten,—when I met my friend at a review by the Emperor in the Bois de Boulogne. I was then walking arm-in-arm with a government official. I noticed that he (the mouchard) tried to avoid me. I inquired from my companion whether he knew who the personage was. "Yes," he replied, "he is in the secret police." I had therefore guessed rightly.

The street agents of the police amount in Paris alone to above 2,000! Each has a specialty of his own. Some resort to cafés, others to public balls, some only frequent theatres and concert-rooms, others are only to be met with in the streets or Boulevards keeping a sharp look-out on the cabbies; others frequent the Boulevard, and accost the social evil, at dead of night, requiring its representatives to show their livrets as a proof that they have obtained from the Préfecture a license to pursue their dark trade. Some are traveling mouchards, and go from one department to another, and even from one country to another—from Paris to London, or from Paris to Florence, reporting on their return all they have heard or seen. I have even heard of some who were recommended as servants, butlers, or valets, and thus were introduced into the best houses.

Of the 4,000 or 5,000 sergents-de-ville who are to be met with in the different streets of the metropolis, I have nothing to say, inasmuch as they more or less resemble our own policemen, and are somewhat organized on the same system. Connected with the police are the commissaries de police. These only number 80. Their duty is to superintend the cleanliness of each quartier, take cognizance of misdemeanors and attend to any complaints which the public, French as well as foreigners, may have to make. Their residence is known at night by a square lantern of red glass hung above the door of their respective domiciles.

I know of no life more wretched than that of a police commissary. In virtue of his political functions, the commissary culminates hatred, contempt, and even a goodly crop of revenge, which sooner or later fall on him or his family. I have remarked that popular instinct invariably runs counter to his performance of any political duty; but when a commissary, in his capacity of agent of the administrative police, wishes to capture a thief, the ringleaders of a night brawl, or any other offender, public sympathy is immediately enlisted on the side of justice, and the police are efficiently assisted by every passer-by. When, on the contrary, the commissary is on the scent of a political criminal, there is not a man in his neighborhood who does not do his best to facilitate the escape of the culprit. The consequence is that the police, when on the track of some member of a revolutionary society, constantly give out that the object of their pursuit is a thief or a robber, by which means a noble-minded, though probably mistaken, patriot is captured and carried off to prison.

A considerable portion of the commissaries' time is engaged in attending theatres, and they possess in every theatre an entree to every part of the house, y compris behind the scenes. Their business is to see not only that the public conduct themselves in an orderly manner, but that the manager fulfils his engagements to the public. The commissary sees that the curtain rises at the precise moment announced on the playbill; is responsible that all due precautions have been taken to guard the house from fire or accident; he insists on the curtain being lowered at a certain hour, etc. To aid him in these various duties he has a picket of the municipal guard, and a certain number of sergents-de-ville, besides the fire brigade. His role at the theatre is anything but agreeable. On every first night it becomes his business to see that all passages suppressed by the Censure are omitted by the actors. It frequently happens that the public, who are perfectly aware that these suppressions have been made, shout for the omitted sentences, and, to use a familiar term, "kick up a thundering row." On this taking place, the commissary puts on his official scarf, and suddenly sturtles the audience by appearing in a front box, which manifestation invariably excites the risible faculties of the public, and generally suggests a shower of orange-peal, and even the still more unpleasant missile—much patronized on these occasions—roasted apples. The sergents-de-ville now come to the rescue of the representative of justice, and the theatre is transformed into a sort of field of battle; the actors, who usually consider prudence the better part of valor, take to flight; the curtain falls; and finally the public evacuate the theatre, shouting "Aux Lampions!"

In penning this, I by no means wished to make an attack on the French police. However disagreeable and vexatious this institution may prove to strangers who unintentionally infringe its edicts, I must in all thankfulness acknowledge that it is marvellously organized, and that it has rendered, and still renders, inestimable services. Most of the high police functionaries have proved to be men of undoubted capacity, who have not only contributed to the material embellishment of Paris, but have rendered still more efficient service by making it one of the most wealthy cities in Europe, and that within a marvellously short space of time. To a Préfet de Police we owe the boon of having the streets lighted by gas; to another the splendid trottoirs which have so recently replaced muddy footways which disgraced this metropolis; to another, the squares, ornamented gardens, and plantations of shady trees, which prove so great a source of healthy recreation to the working population of the capital. Finally, be it remembered that it was a Préfet de Police, M. Le Noir, who founded the mont de piété, which establishment enjoys the exclusive privilege of lending upon movables four-fifths of the value of gold and silver, and two-thirds of the value of other goods.

FASHIONABLE INTELLIGENCE.

NEW YORK CITY.—The Home Journal says, at a recent ball, given at Delmonico's, a young and beautiful married lady appeared in one of the new-fashioned ball dresses, which are now worn short, like the street dresses. The dress consisted of a pink silk underskirt, which just touched the top of the shoes, which were of pink kid, buttoned up over the ankle with white buttons. Over the pink silk was a shorter skirt, of white tulle, trimmed with pink satin pipings. The hair was dressed very high, and ornamented with a wreath of wild roses, the center of each rose containing a diamond of great brilliancy. The dress was made by a Parisian dressmaker, and, it is needless to say, attracted a great deal of attention. Another very beautiful dress was a short skirt, of white tarletan, with a wide box plaiting on the bottom, and having an overskirt of blue satin, trimmed with pipings of white satin, which were studded through the center with small pearl beads. The shoes were of blue satin, the same shade as the overskirt, and laced with a white cord and tassel. The gloves, which are now the fashion for evening wear, had a gauntlet of kid, which reached nearly to the elbow, and buttoned with a small gilt button.

A lady, residing in Twenty-third street, received her friends on New-Year's, seated on a throne, her two daughters seated on either side, while a band of music, stationed in an adjoining room, performed at intervals.

Several young men have appeared at fashionable receptions in this city recently, in something like court dress—maroon velvet coat and breeches, with silk stockings.

At a wedding in this city, last week, the bride's presents, consisting of silver, jewelry, India shawls and laces, were estimated to have cost one hundred thousand dollars.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermitteut fevers.
They purify the hreath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.
They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a heverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine wheu Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled hottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded my self very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, hearing the signature of G. W. Westhrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softeus and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammatiou, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per hottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can he relied upon, and for a mere wo hits we can save the hites and hills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed hy E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, aud causes the hair to grow with luxuriant heauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per hottle.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter aud clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, aud their pictures give more satisfactiou, aud are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, snd others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sauborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, aud are sold by Mills & Evaus fifty per cent. lower than any other estahlishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is hecoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is hut the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredihly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not hy defamation of others, to estahlish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must he gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a enre. This he is ahle to do, hecause he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southcast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholeshle and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss aud Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The fiuest hrands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at home all day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., ahove the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera Hnuse,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536 Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Joh and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the hest stylo, hy

M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, aud in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to huying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415,7417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street hetween Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, hetween Kearny and Montgomery,
San Francisco.

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!

PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities largo and small can be supplied at low figures, on application to

L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.

☞ All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE NEW AND ELEGANT STYLES OF

DRESS HATS!

FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER, 1867, ARE NOW READY

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S,

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial St...San Francisco
No. 125 J Street,.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second Streets.....Marysville
No. 72 Front Street.....Portland, Or

OUR STYLES OF GENTLEMEN'S DRESS AND BUSINESS HATS, manufactured of the best material and by the most skillful mechauics, excel any in fineness, taste, and durability ever introduced on this coast. We are receiving hy each steamer all the LATEST NOVELTIES from New York. London, and Paris. Call and see them.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' Honse,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candles sold hy us are warranted to he manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, helow Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street hclow Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blunn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entranco of the Rnss House,
San Francisco

Removal!!

JOHN F. SNOW.

COLORING, CLEANING AND RESTORING OF FEAthers, Kid Gloves, Silks, Woolens, Furs, etc., has removed to the new building of the "MECHANICS' INSTITUTE," opposite the old stand, 25 Post street, betweeu Montgomery and Kearny.

☞ 'RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for sale as usual.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Ahove Montgomery.....(South side.)

MAHOMET.

Mehomet was a little above the middle hight strongly but sparely made, with broad shoulders and a slight stoop; his hair was black and, in the prime of life, clustered over his ears; his mustache and beard were also black. the latter abundant and reachiug some way down his chest; his forehead was large, with a vein on it, which swelled when he was angry; his complexiou was fair for au Arab; his eyes were large, black and piercing, bloodshot and restless; his teeth where white and well formed but stood apart; his walk was so rapid that people had to run to keep up with him, and his gait is described as being like that of a man striding down hill. He was simple in his apparel; he never wore silk but once in life, and then he threw it aside in disgust, saying it was no fit dress for a man. His general attire was white tnd red striped cotton. Like all Arabs, he had no taste for comfort, and the luxurious refinements of artificial life were not known to him, or would have been despised had they become so. A bed of palm tree fibre, a low hut of burnt tiling with a palm tree roof would have been by him preferred to a palace. Still he was in some things of extremely delicate and sensitive taste, as in the use of perfumes and in his distaste for nn. pleasant odors. At Medina he once sent back a dish of mutton to the sender untouched, because it was flavored with onions, saying that they were disagreeable to the angel who visited him. He never traveled without tooth-picks, and antimony for the eyes. He was a good listener in conversation, and never in shaking hands was the first to withdraw his own. He was not addicted to any of the games or sports of which the Arabs were so passionately fond, and was in all things most unlike the heroic ideal of Arabic character.

How a Man Stole a Town.—The story in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly of the man who stole a meeting-house has suggested to the editor of a New Hampshire paper the reported stealing of that portion of town of Alton, in that State, which was formerly known as New Durham Gore. The legend runs thus: "On a time, the possessors of the wilderness now comprising the towns of New Durham, Wakefield, Middleton (which included Brookfield,) and that part of Alton known as New Durham Gore, agreed with a certain party to run out and duly bound a ce tain number of lots, each 100 by 169 rods, and if there was any land left, the party thus running out of the land should have it. The surveyor's name, we think, was Bryant, but whether he or his employers were the wicked party, we know not; suffice it to say, that instead of lying the lots out with right or square angles, as they were expected to do, the towns were laid out in lots with acute and obtuse angles, like diamonds, and consequently, each contained much less land than was intended by the owners, while the wicked tricksters got for themselves the whole of New Durham Gore. To this day the good farmers of these towns are not only much discommoded by their dia mond farms, but the increase in fencing is enormous.

Letters from Russia stated that communications with a great many telegraph stations were interrupted in consequence of the intense cold. The "wires were frozen," and covered everywhere with a coating of ice three inches thick. Will not this phenomenon give the Atlantic cable the monopoly of telegrams during the winter months?

A story is told of a young man who was crossed in love and attempted suicide recently by taking a dose of yeast powder. He immediately rose above his troubles.

When a dog gets his head fastened in a fence, it is unsafe to extricate him, unless you enjoy the pleasure of his acquaintance.

A poet wrote "See the pale martyr in a sheet of fire;" the printer made him say, "See the pale martyr with his shirt on fire."

What good would centuries do the man who knows how to waste his time?

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultatioos Free. all or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

Also,

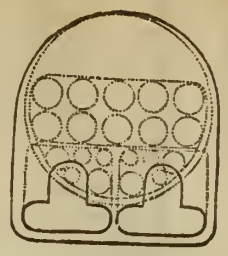
COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies. Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,

Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematica Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

SIGNS TO SUIT THE TIMES.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street . . . Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 320 Montgomery street.
Dain & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bro's., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s. 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 800 Howard street.

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic Company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MARCH.

March 9—SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
March 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Manly.
March 30—GOLDEN AGE, Captain James T. Watkins, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt Fuller.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.
Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.
These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock
Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.
For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.
The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched 1 April 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.
For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.
AND
TELEGRAPHIC INSTITUTE
(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)
408 California St.

THIS INSTITUTION IS DESIGNED TO PREPARE Boys and Men
FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,
and to impart a thorough
COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.
is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,
IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH AND MERCHANDISE,
opens a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He
COMMENCES SPECULATION,
carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the
UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,
a regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of
ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.
This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

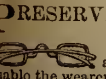
TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the departments, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.



PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent free-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents
TO SEND ABROAD.
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
.....OF.....
California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
ILLUSTRATING
The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.
PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,
And Published by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 & 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

NOTARY PUBLIC—
SPANISH NOTARY
The undersigned having been commissioned by Gov. Low as Notary Public, vice Henry Dreschfeld, deceased, has removed his office to 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co., where he will be pleased to see his former patrons, and receive a share of public patronage
A. G. RANDALL,
Notary Public, Broker, Translator, etc.
No. 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

D. J. OLIVER,
101, 103 and 105 Front Street. 110 Pine St.
ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS..
Where he offers for sale the largest stock of
Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.
ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 KEARNY STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, ingrowing nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.
W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
Near corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

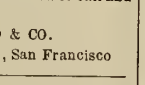
J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods.
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
[200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

VAN VLECK & KEITH,
Designers and Engravers
ON WOOD,
No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.
WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

E. POWER,
Architectural and Ornamental
WOOD CARVER
—AND—
COMPOSITION ORNAMENT MANUFACTURER, ETC.,
Robinson & Co.'s Mills,
30 and 32 California Street, San Francisco.

WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in



FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.
WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY
NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.
WILSON & EVANS.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

PSYCHE'S FEET.

BY GEORGE ARNOLD.

Her feet they are so small,
So delicate her tread,
The daisies do not bend at all
When she walks overhead;
But each looks up, and falls in love
With Psyche's tiny feet above.

She walks with such an art,
And steps so daintily,
If she should tread upon my heart,
'Twould still unbroken be,
Unless 'twere by the loveliness
Which Psyche's tiny feet possess!

A STAR IN FLAMES.

A wonderful phenomenon has dazzled the eyes of astronomers on both sides of the Atlantic—nothing less than a star in flames! In May last, a little twinkler in the constellation Corona Borealis, or "Northern Crown," suddenly blazed forth a star of second magnitude, and analyzing its rays with a spectroscope, the light was pronounced to be identical with that emitted by certain gasses in a state of combustion. The universal opinion of scientific men who observed the spectacle, was that the star was on fire—an opinion which was strengthened, as time wore on, by the gradual dying out of its newly acquired lustre. By the 22d of June the star had dwindled from the second to the nineteenth magnitude. It has since become still more insignificant, and when burned out—assuming the theory regarding it to be correct, it will, of course be invisible.

Although we have spoken of the burning as in progress, says the New Age, the probability is that the casualty occurred in a former and far remote age. The distance of the star from the earth is so enormous that the light of the conflagration may have been many centuries—perhaps thousands of years—on its journey hither! It must be borne in mind, too, that the fixed stars are supposed to be solar systems like our own; not sinworlds, but congeries of worlds, with suns for their centres. The theory of the astronomers is that a planetary system has been consumed! Imagine our own sun—now the genial source of life and warmth—suddenly wrapped in flames by the liberation and ignition of its internal gas! What would be the effect! Every planet and satellite, from red Mercury to the pale orb that runs its course on the utmost confines of the sphere of solar attraction, would be destroyed in the twinkling of an eye. The earth would be calcined, and of all its millions, not a vestige would remain. We may well shudder at the idea of a systems of worlds having been obliterated in a moment and without warning, and yet to the systems remaining, the one extinguished was but a grain of sand to the myriads on the sea shore. A due consideration of this latter fact may possibly calm the fears of those who look for a grand catastrophe in this part of the universe at an early day. If the incomputable millions of systems suspended in space are to be destroyed one by one—and this would seem to be a natural inference from the late phenomenon, if it has been correctly interpreted by the astonomers—our term may be much further off than the Millerites anticipate.

ITURBIDE, who died recently in New York, was a popular favorite in Mexico. He once made the following speech from the Imperial box at the opera house: "Mexicans, you want a speech from me, eh? Well, you shall have one. You want me to speak as the son of the liberator of Mexico, the immortal Iturbide. Well, he was your chosen Emperor; he was the only honest man in Mexico, and so you shot him! In doing so, you acted like the parcel of robbers and assassins that you always were and always will be."

TIGER HUNTING.—From a point of view a Frenchman who had been in India, speaking of the tiger hunts, pleasantly remarks: "When ze Frenchman hunt ze tiger, ah! ze sport is grand, magnifique! but, wen ze tigare hunt ze Frenchman, zen! zere is ze very devil to pay!"

New Axiom—A thorn in the bush is worth wo in the hand.

MADELEINE.

I.

I wait for you, O Madeleine,
And wait for your coming, sweet,
While the blue-bells tinkle a passion song
To the violets at my feet;

And the heart's-ease holds a tender thought
Of love in its tiny fold,
And the daffodil bends with the amorous breeze
To kiss the marigold.

II.

Ah! now you are coming, dear Madeleine,
For the garrulous bird in the tree
Stops for a moment his spiteful jibes,
And his senseless mimicry;

And the proud, pale lilies, so pure and grand,
Drift back and forth with a thrill—
Those queenly flowers that otherwise
Would stand so cold and still;

And the roses you sweep with your muslin dress
Sway blindly to and fro,
And flush to the very tips of their leaves,
With love and shame aglow.

III.

But what! You give me back my ring,
And tell me "To forget!"
And fate of years is whiffed away
In a passionate sigh of regret.

And the Hope that was singing of Love in my heart
Hushes its joyous tune;
And ominous clouds come drifting up
To hide the summer moon.

The mocking-bird that jeered in the tree
Now jeers me a song of regret;
He mocketh our tone and harps on the words
"Forget, forget, forget!"

IV.

The night grows damp, and the clammy wind
Comes up from the sea forlorn,
And the dreary fields, and the misty hills
Take the ashen hue of dawn.

But the weird-like bird, in a garrulous mood,
Sings in the garden yet;
And his song—ah, me!—forever will be,
"Forget, forget, forget!" C. H.

—Home Journal.

JOHN BRIGHT ON THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.—Dr. Emerton, President of the English International College, recently delivered a lecture on the French language, Mr. Bright, M. P., who was unexpectedly present, in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said he did not wish to detract from the credit due to the Doctor, but he thought he was over sanguine, as many present could remember the difficulties of learning French at school. The Mayor and the Doctor had expressed an opinion that the learning of the French language by the people of England would tend to promote peace between the two nations. He (Mr. Bright) was of the opinion that that would not follow as a matter of course. All the people in America spoke the same language as that spoken in England, but that did not prevent, during five years' war, the serious war that raged there, and which had incurred great danger in this country. Something else was wanted besides a mere knowledge of each other's language. We wanted fair dealing.

A MUSICAL MATTER.—A gentleman of this city, entertaining some friends a short time ago at the Boston Music Hall, with a sight of the great organ and other curiosities of the place, suddenly became aware of a series of "nudges" in his back, and turning, became also aware of a solemn countryman, evidently of an inquiring mind, who, indicating the statue of Beethovan with an interrogating finger, asked in the unmistakable pathos of New England:

"Is that statoo gilt?"

"No, sir; bronze," was the response.

"Bronze, hey. Must cost considerable. Who is it a statoo of?"

"Beethovan," said the gentleman, beginning to be amused.

"B. Tovin, hey," and then reflectively, with the impression of the statue of B. Franklin fresh in his mind—"Was he a Bostinman?"

A gentleman the other day had occasion to telegraph to Cambridge for a book, "Johnson's Poem on Plato." By the time the message reached Cambridge it had become altered nto "John Pomens on Plate Money."

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA AND YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.

WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health and expelling disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Sypilis or Venerial Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers In and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of
Saddles, Harness and Collars,
North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.
Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. Country Trade solicited.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Office, No. 408 Montgomery Street,
NEAR CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL (paid up) - - - $1,000,000 00
ASSETS Jan. 1, 1867, - - $1,093,131 92

PRESIDENT.....GEO. W. BEAVER
SECRETARY.....W. W. WIGGINS
MARINE OFFICER.....CAPT. AMOS NOYES
SURVEYOR.....E. N. TORREY

Policies Issued and Losses Paid in Gold.

MARINE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Hulls, Cargoes, Treasure, Commissions, Profits and other Subjects of Marine Insurance, to and from all Ports in the World, including Inland Risks.

FIRE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Rents, Vessels in Port, and their Cargoes, and other Insurable Property,
..AT..
GREATLY REDUCED RATES!

MARINE AGENTS.
NEW YORK. MESSRS. EUGENE KELLY & CO.
HONOLULU....MESSRS C. BREWER & CO.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
JOSEPH A. DONOHOE.....Chairman.
JOHN G. BRAY, ALBERT DIBBLEE,
H. W. HALLECK, ABRAM BLOCK,
WILLIAM PIERCE, JAS. H. DEERING,
JAS. T. DEANE, GEO. F. BRAGG.

DIRECTORS.

J. W. Brittan,	Jos. A. Donohoe.
Albert Dibblee.	George W. Gibbs,
Abner H. Barker,	R. G. Sneath,
James H. Deering,	Henry Barroilhet,
Henry S. Dexter,	Abram Block,
N. Van Bergen,	J. C. Johnson,
George F. Bragg,	J. T. Dean,
C. F. Fargo,	H. W. Halleck,
Henry L. King,	Henry L. Davis,
Charles Clayton,	T. E. Baugh,
Michael Reese,	S. C. Hastings,
George W. Dam,	C. A. Eastman,
Wm. G. Badger,	Benj. Hobart,
James W. Cox,	Levi Strauss,
Daniel Mayer,	Charles Lux,
Hiram Tubbs,	Jas. P. Goodwin,
Lloyd Tevis,	P. Maury, Jr.,
Alex. Forbes,	W. W. Montagne,
Jos. B. Thomas,	Nicholas Larco,
Morris Speyer,	William Pierce,
John G. Bray,	E. H. Winchester,
H. L. Dodge,	E. V. Hathaway,
Walter N. Hawley,	N. C. Fussett,
Isaac E. Davis,	A. Hayward,
E. L. Goldstein,	Samuel Crim,
Daniel Murphy,	John Center,
Wm. H. Sharp,	Theo. Le Roy,
C. L. Taylor,	George C. Hickox,
J. S. Hutchinson,	O. F. Giffin,
Chas. M. Plum,	W. C. Talbot,
M. F. Jones,	A. J. Bryant,
S. Heydenfeldt,	James Phelan,
Abram Seligman,	Geo. V. Beaver,
Thomas Breeze,	C. C. Knox,
F. P. McMahon,	Jas. P. Pierce,
J. C. Wilmerding,	W. W. Wiggins,
Anthony Chabot,	J. B. Roberts.
John F. Miller,

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET.
North side, four doors above Montgomery.
Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Fraacisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the cumplaint filed in the said city and County of San Fraacisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L. REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L. LIEN, PETER S. McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in aa actioa brought against yuu by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, iu and for the city and county of Sau Fraacisco, and to answer the cumplaint filed therein, within tea days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of tais Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, hut in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgmcut by default will be taken against you, according to the pruyer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defcadants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands aud premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claiaas of said defendants may be determined hy a decree of this Court, that it he declared and adjudged that the defeudauts, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever iu or to said lauds or premises, and that they he furever deharred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of Califor nia, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 5o cts.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of alifornia, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Fraucisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existiug between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the commoa property of the parties, he adjudged to belong to and be delivered to tais plaintiff; and that the care, custody aad education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaiutiff; and that pending this suit, the defendaut may, by order of this Court, be restrained and eujoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaiutiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general belief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and auswer tho said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply ro the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judical District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousaud eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of Califoraia, in aud for the City and Couuty of Sau Fraacisco.

BENJAMINS. BROOKS, Plaiatiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendaats.

Action brought iu the District Court of the Fifteeuth Judiciat District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of Saa Francisco, aad the complaint filed in eaid City and County of Saa Fraacisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, detendants. You are hereby required to appear ia aa action brought against you by the ahoveaamed Plaiatiff ia the District Court of the Fifteeath Judicial District of tbo State of California, ia and for the City and County of Saa Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed thercin, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of scrvice,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if scrved withia this Couaty; or, if served out of this Couaty, hut in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said actiou is hrought to obtain a decree adjudgiag and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendaut Harris upon the promissory uote and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage meutioaed, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and tho application of tho proceeds of sale after paymeot of costs und expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, aud that said defendaat Harris, and all persons claimiog uader him subsequeat to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers iacumbrancers or otherwise, may be harred aod foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed aad executed against said defeadant Harris for any deficieacy which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of eaid judgment. That the plaiatiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put iato possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above reqnired, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of Saa Fraacisco, this 12th day of January ia the year of our Lord one thousaud eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Actiou brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action bronght against you, hy the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this Connty; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within tweaty days; otherwise, within forty days—or jndgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By Jas. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and Couaty of San Francisco, State of Calitornia.

In the matter of the Estate of FRANCOISE P. BETUEL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distributioa should not be made.

On readirg aud filecg the petition of Frangois M. Betuel, the Executor of the last will and testament of Frangoise P. Betuel deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final accoont of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expeuses of administration have hcen duly paid; and that a portioo of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees of said deceased, aud praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate o the said Frangoise P. Betuel, deceased, appear before the said Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, then and there to show cause why an order of distributiou should not he made of the residue of said Estate among the devisees of the said Frangoise P Betuel, deceased, according to law:

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said eleventh day March, A. n. 1867: in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper priuted and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 5th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to he a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upoa the miuutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February A. n. 1867

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

19 5t By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

GEO. F. & WM. H. SHARP, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS THOMAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not he made.

On reading and filiog the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of Thomas Thumas, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed: that all the debts und expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided amoog the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for aa order of distribntioa of the residue of said estate amoag the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested ia the estate of the said Thomas Thomas, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and Couaty of Saa Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall ia said City aad County, on TUESDAY, the twenty-sixth day of MARCH, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., thea and there to show cause why aa order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate amoog the heirs of the said Thomas Thomas deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, That a copy of tbis order be published for four successive weeks, before the said tweaty-sixth day of March, A. n. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a news paper priuted and published in the said City and County

M. C. BLAKE, Probnte Judge.

Dated February 21st, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City aad Couaty of Sau Francisco, aad ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the forcgoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upoa the minutes of the Court.

Witness my haod aud the seal of said Court, this 21st day of February, A. n. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHENS, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. 123 5t.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.-ESTATE OF ELLEN O'CONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Admioietrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Conaell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this uotice, to the said Administrator at his office, No 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of Sun Francieco. WM. A. QUARLES, Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased.

Saa Francisco, February 9, 1867.

W. & C. BARTLETT, Attoraeys for Administrator, 323 Montgomery street. f9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSEN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estato of George C Petersen, deceased, to the creditors of, aud all persons haviug claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the accessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said adaministrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city aad county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Petersen, deceased. mh2-4t

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on 6th day of February A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on THURSDAY, the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting-room of J. C. Merrill & Co., Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, of, in and to all the undivided two ninths of the lot of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the westerly side of Berry street, one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet northeasterly from the northeast corner of Berry and Third streets; thence running northeasterly along said westerly side of Berry street one hundred and thirty seven and a half (137 1-2) feet to a point; thence at a right angle northwesterly two hundred and forty (240) feet more or less to a point in the easterly line of King street; thence at a right angle southwesterly along said line of King street one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet; and thence at a right angle southeasterly two hundred and forty feet, more or less, to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, from this date till Thursday the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon, by the undersigned. J. C. MERRILL,

Guardian of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors. 19

Dated February 8th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and Couaty of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH W. KERR, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should aot be made.

On reading and filing the petitioa of Hoaora Kerr, the Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph W Kerr, deceased-setting forth that she has filed her final accouut of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has heeo duly settled and allowed; that all the debts aud expenses of administration have heeu duly paid; aud that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distributiou of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persous interested in the estate of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, Anno Domini, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distributiou should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city aod county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, February 5th, 1867. 19 5t

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City aod County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February, A. n. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

HAIGHT & PIERSON, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greetiog to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said actioa is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bouds of matrimony heretotore and now existing betweea the plaiatiff and defendaut, und that plaiatiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned ia the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaiut, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my haad and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Califoraia, in and for the City and Couaty of Sau Francisco, this 18th day of January, ia the year of our Lord oae thousand eight hundred and sixty-seveo.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[Seal. Iat. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF JOHN THOMAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Joha Thomas, deceased, to the creditors of, aad all persons having claims against the said deceascd, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, witbin ten months after the first publicatioa of this aotice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Moutgomery street, ia the city and couuty of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator aad the Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.

J. F. FINN, Atty for Administrator. fe16-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF AUGUSTA SAAL.—Notice is hereby giveu by the uadersigaed, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deccased, to the creditors of, and all persons haviug claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, withiu ten moaths after the first publicatioa of this uotice, to the said Admiaistrator, at the office of his Attoracy, R. W. Heut, Esq., northwest coruer of Montgomery and Merchaat streets, ia the city and county of San Francisco. Dated February 9th, 1867.

H. O. GOUGH, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased. f9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS KEENAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the nadersigned, Administrator of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, to the creditors of, aad all persoas having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within tea months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Admiaistrator, at his place of busiaess, northwest coruer of Sacrameato and Sansomo streets, in the City and County of Saa Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, March 2d, A. D. 1867.

mh2-5t THOMAS BREEZE,

Administrator of Estato of Thomas Keenao, deceased.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and Couuty of San Fraacisco, State of Califoroia:

In the mutter of the estate of MINA HOFFMAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution sbould not be made.

Oa reading and filing the petitioa of Isaac D. Barnard, Executor of the last will and testament of Mina Hoffman, deceased, setting fortb that he has filed his final accouut of his admoistratiou of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided amung the legatees of the will of said deceased, and prayiug amoog other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate amoog the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persoas interested in the estato of the said Mina Hoffman, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of March, A D. 1867, at two o'clock; P M., then and there to shuw cause why au order of distributioa should not bo made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the last will and testament of the said deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said Tuesday the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, in the CALIFORNIAN, a uewspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, }

I Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city aod county of San Francisco, aud ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my haud and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Petitioner.

February 16th, 1867. fe16-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE H. HOSSEFROSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should oot be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by R. H. Sinton and H. M. Whitmore, the Executors of the last will of George H. Hossefross, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate and also all the personal property of the estate of George H. Hossefross, deceased, to pay the debts due by the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the eighteenth day of March A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should uot be granted to the said Executors to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be oecessary; and also the personal property of deceased.

And that a copy of this order be published at lesst four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 12th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. }

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap Attys. for Petitioners.

fe16-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filiag the petition of John Couch, the Administrator of Sarah McLaughlia, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his ananal aad final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has beea duly settled and allowed; that all the debts aad expenses of administration have beea duty paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to bo divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an ordcr of distributioa of the residue of said estate among the persons catitled:

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City aod County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, ia the City Hall in said City and Couoty, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. n. 1867, at elevea o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order for distribution should not be made of the residuo of said estate amoog the heirs of the said Sarah McLaughlin deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March, A. n. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a aewspaper priated aad published in the said City and Couaty.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated San Francisco, February 8th, 1867.

I. N. THORNE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. f99 5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persoas having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the oecessary vouchers, witbin ten moaths after the first publicstion of this aotice, to the said Admiaistrator, at bis place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City aad County of Saa Fraacisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Caroline Huebner, deceased. mh2 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this aotice, to the said Administrator, at his place of busiaess, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estato of James Edwin Reas, deceased. mh2-5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - SOLE PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - - BUSINESS MANAGER
C. L. GRAVES, - - - - STAGE MANAGER
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - TREASURER

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, MARCH 9TH,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
LAND AND SEA!

THIS EVENING, MARCH 9TH,
Miss Kingsbury will appear in the New Drama,
LAND AND SEA!
PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle, - -	$1 00	Orchestra, - -	$1 00
Parquette, - -	50	Upper Circle, -	25

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

DR. BENTON

WILL CONTINUE HIS SERIES OF LECTURES upon the subject of PSYCHOLOGY, MAGNETISM and its kindred sciences, at CONGRESS HALL, Bush street, on FRIDAY and SATURDAY EVENINGS, 15th and 16th inst. at 7 1-2 o'clock. The lectures will be illustrated by a variety of very amusing and astonishing experiments upon persons in the audience, showing also that the Electrical or Magnetic Currents, properly directed, are the best and safest method of curing disease. TICKETS FOR GENTS, 25 CENTS; Ladies and Children, Free.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOON Dr. Benton will give a FREE LECTURE, for LADIES ONLY, at 3 o'clock, at Congress Hall.

☞ N. B.—Office for treatment, over Congress Hall.
mh9 1t

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞ Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S March through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Exhibition of this Painting will close on the 9th of March.
SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street. (Russ Block.)

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED
BY USING
Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

San Francisco, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.
Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

Mr. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.
Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.
San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

San Francisco, Feb. 13, 1866.

To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

San Francisco, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

ATTEND

THE SALE OF

500 HOMESTEAD LOTS

....AT....

PLATT'S HALL!

....AT....

Twelve O'Clock To-Day!

COBB & SINTON,

Auctioneers,

407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

HOMESTEAD LOTS!!

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON'S

Great Credit Sale

...OF..

350 LOTS!

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

Monday Week, March 18th,

AT

Platt's Hall,

☞ CALL AND PROCURE MAPS.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
Auctioneers,
404 MONTGOMERY STREET.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

THE GREAT
New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S
White-Pine Compound!

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHOUT the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:
Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HAGAN & HORGAN,
Marble-Workers.
MARKET STREET, OPPOSITE THE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth Streets.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monoments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

AGENTS WANTED
FOR
Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

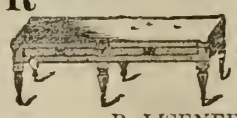
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM



Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. FONDA'S SAN FRANCISCO EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUSIVELY for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
Northeast corner of Montgomery and California streets, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

CHAS. E. HOPPS. THOS. DOWNING.

HOPPS & DOWNING,
House and Sign Painters,
NO. 22 SANSOME STREET,
Opp. the Cosmopolitan Hotel, San Francisco.

ORDERS FOR WHITENING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

A POINT ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.

Out of ten thousand regular physicians you cannot find one who will not say that STIMULANTS and INVIGORANTS are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet, in bygone years, humane practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fiendish ingenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so polluted and deteriorated them, that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians know, because the first analytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact that

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS!

Are absolutely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, whereon the testimony of the wise, the intelligent, and the philanthropic is rated at its just value, as the best protective against and cure for all diseases arising from impurity in the air or other unhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at the office of Haight & Pierson, No. 510 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, February 19, 1867.
ROBERT HAIGHT, Administrator
of the Estate of Jose A. Feliz, dec'd. mh9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MICHAEL HINES, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1867.
J. W. BRUMAGIM, Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased. mh9 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—

The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.

A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.

JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK
EVERY TWENTY DAYS!
Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
MOSES TAYLOR,
WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on
MONDAY - - - MARCH 25th, 1867.
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship
SANTIAGO,
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The AMERICA will sail on April 15th.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 17
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 16, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Wild Shots by Long-Bowmen, by John Clerk; Church and Sunday-School Recollections, by Prentice; Books Materially Considered, by John Clerk; Appreciation and Fashion; The Danger of Owning Diamonds LION'S MOUTH: The Web-foot Stranger; Sunday Ball Playing and Rowdyism; The Model Schoolhouse; The Respectable "Bulletin;" Women-Waiters in Beer Saloons; Letters from the People; Reviews of New Books; Literary Gleanings; Dramatic Affairs, etc. POETRY: John Center, by James Linen; SELECTED: The Art of Photosculpture; Husband-Hunting; "Black Sheep;" Crime and Want in Paris, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

Sunday Ball-Playing and Rowdyism.

The game of base-ball, so popular with the young men of San Francisco, is undoubtedly, when moderately indulged in, healthful and invigorating to the physical frame. Can it be possible that it is injurious to morals? Is the name of base ball pregnant with dark significance? Cannot the chest be expanded and the muscles strengthened by bowling and batting, running and catching, without a corresponding development of rowdyism? Or is the old Puritan theory indeed true, that Sabbath-breaking inevitably leads to all other species of vice and misconduct? We base these queries upon events which have recently occurred at Oakland. On Sunday, the 3d instant, one of our base-ball clubs went to Oakland, played a game with one of the clubs of that city, and got badly beaten. The Oakland boys then went home (we presume to give praise and thanks for their victory), but the San Francisco boys sought revenge by making love in a rude and boisterous manner to the pupils of a female seminary—in fact, behaved in such a horrible manner that the authorities were obliged to lock up two or three of them for a short time. "First innings" in that game for the "Horribles." However, they were soon out, and made an excellent run—homeward. Fired by the brilliant example and emulous of the fame of these "conquering heroes," on Sunday last another of our clubs—the "South Park"—went to Oakland, played base ball, got beaten, and were soon after seen by Mr. Kyte in the act of demolishing a railroad station. The witness kited up town, and brought a policeman down to the boat, who picked out half a dozen of the South Parkers as a sample lot, and lodged them in the calaboose for the night—a rather unlooked-for and unwelcome change of game, from base-ball to prison-base—second innings for the South Parkers. Whether or not their gloomy apartments were infested with bats we cannot tell. Next morning these erstwhile gay and sportive youths, now pale, spiritless and woe-begone, were arraigned before Justice Fogg, who, despite the arguments of pettifoggers, was quite clear that an offense had been committed, and that if the defendants were not actively concerned in it they connived at the misdemeanor of their companions, and were equally guilty with them. He then proceeded to inflict punishment by lecturing the young convicts for about a quarter of an hour on the subjects of intercivic etiquette, good behavior, and the Fourth Commandment, which he read to them from the authorized edition of the Statutes of Moses; after which he informed them that they should be furnished with board and lodging at the expense of the city for a period of ten days, unless they preferred to pay the bill—$2½ each—in advance, and forego the proffered accomodations. Being without means to pay their passage across the Bay, these ingenuous youths were obliged to accept the hospitality of the city of Oakland, tendered to them in an iron-clad box; but their fond parents, who at first probably did not know they were out, learned that they were in, and remitted the wherewithal to set them free. We have not heard that they were received by their friends, on their return to this city, with a band of music; or, on the other hand, that when they reached home they were spanked soundly and sent to bed: but we think there is no need of further discussing the propriety of playing base-ball on Sunday.

The Model Schoolhouse.

It is seriously proposed by some influential and leading Americans to devote a portion of the space devoted to the exhibition of American art in the forthcoming World's Fair at Paris to the exhibition of a model schoolhouse. It would be well also to have an American school in full blast therein. It would be well to have a little American boy of wealthy parentage per shoddy to write the following composition:

THE UNITED STATES.

The United States is a great country, because they are inhabited by Americans. The Americans are the noblest people on the face of the earth. They know everything and can do anything. We invented steam, and electricity, and monitors, and free government, and the Great Rebellion. George Washington founded the United States. Father says there is no place like home to make money in. He wants to get back home to go into a new speculation. Mother don't like Paris much, because she don't speak French and the Emperor has not been to call on us yet. We are going to take four big boxes of French dresses and millinery to home with us, and a French waiting-maid, and a French governess to teach in French. Father bought a statue yesterday. Common schools are the salvation of our country. The poorest boy may some day become President of the United States. We have been to the Opera. Pap says he had much rather hear me sing "Rally Round the Flag" or "Hail Columbia." We licked the English in '76. We are going to make Maximilian git up and git out of Mexico, you bet. America is the land of the free and the home of the brave.

The Web-Foot Stranger.

AN AVITORIAL COLLOQUY.

Stranger (just lauded:)

Tell me, Son of 'Frisco! Speak, thou favored dweller
In this breezy city, great and metropolitan,
Where the west wind sporteth, and the frisky tremblor
Cometh oft to scare thee;

Tell me what thou knowest of that strange contrivance,
The "air navigator," the fame whereof hath reached me
In my log-built cabin 'mid forests Oregonian,
And hath lured me hither.

For I said—"I'll see it, this aerial steamer,
And I'll go to 'Frisco, though it costs five hundred
Scads in double-eagles, saved through years of labor
In the Vale Willamette—

In the Vale Willamette, chopping pines gigantic,
Chopping mighty redwoods, chopping firs and spruces,
Chopping 'em and hawling, with a double ox-team
To the steamboat landing.

And so, from far Canemah, on the blue Willamette
By stage and steamer travel have I come to 'Frisco
In my slickest store-clothes, in my Sunday dry-goods,
To see the What-d'ye-call-it."

Citizen.

Welcome verdant stranger, from the land of Web-feet,
With thy scads five hundred, all in double-eagles!
Here's the town to spend 'em. A week perhaps they'll last thee,
Or possibly a fortnight.

To the What Cheer hie theo; take your hash there, stranger;
To Jackson street resort not, nor perilous Pacific,
Nor places subterranean; and O beware of deadfalls
And lager-slinging damsels.

Stranger.

Needless is thy warning, friendly son of 'Frisco,
Lo! I am no sardine, and I read the papers.
But of the aerial steamship, the wondrous What-d'ye-call-it,
Tell me now I pray thee.

Citizen.

O, axe-bearing woodsman! much-believing stranger!
Ox-compelling Web-foot from the pluvial valleys
Of the far Willamette! In thine optic organ
There's a spark of verdure.

Know, then, that last season was uncommon dull here,
There was little travel; the hotels were empty,
Business at a standstill, and a crisis threatened
In the money market.

Then our steamboat-owners, and the hotel keepers
And the whisky sellers, and the multifarious
Tribes that thrive and fatten on the verdant stranger
Did conspire together,

Planned this hoax stupendous, planned and advertised it,
Hoping for their pains, and capital invested,
From the verdant crowds to reap a golden harvest,
Who will rush to see it.

But, confiding Stranger, since so far you've journeyed,
Go the porker entire, and be in at the fizzle.
Buy a ticket, O friend, and to Shell Mound hie thee:
Twig the What-d'ye-call-it.

There you'll see a whale-boat, narrow, long, cigar-shaped,
And, on either side, aerial screw-propellers
To a big balloon tied, with hydrogen inflated;
That's the What-d'ye call-it.

Stranger.

Friendly Son of 'Frisco, I'm taken in and done for.
Back to far Canemah, to the pluvial valley
Of the blue Willamette, with my scads five hundred
Straightway will I hie me;

And my brother Web-feet, they shall hear my story.
Farewell! Son of 'Frisco; and may the next tremblor
Sink your Sand-hill city, with its cussed dead-falls,
To watery perdition!

For Sale.

Somebody (who conceals his name, probably because he does not want it generally known that he was such a fool as to invest his money in a "first-class paper" to be conducted with fourth-rate ability and tenth-rate business capacity) advertises in the Chroniele "Thirty-five shares of the 'Times Publishing Company' for sale." He is tired of paying assessments, we suspect. How much, now, would he be willing to pay a man to take those thirty-five shares of Times stock off his hands, and "no questions asked?" He might make a dicker with some candidate in want of an organ.

The Respectable "Bulletin."

We have for some time past been proud of the Bulletin as the most "high-toned" and respectable journal published in San Francisco. The Bulletin has published many articles with a view to elevate the tone of journalism in this city. It has published many able editorials, setting forth the advantages to be derived from the observance of strict impersonality in discussions between newspapers. We were much shocked by an article which appeared in the Bulletin of Saturday, March 9th. The Bulletin, which has for some time past been a most respectable paper, in this article descends to the level occupied by the late Flag in its most prosperous days. The Bulletin is accused by the Times (the successor of the Flag) with having encouraged disloyalty, and having been favorable to the establishment of a Pacific Republic. The respectable Bulletin, in answer to this charge, does not state that one of the editors of the Times owes for his washing, or that another has grog-blossoms on his nose, but makes use of arguments in rebuttal equally forcible. It says:

"There are, we believe, at least two Methodist ministers employed more or less in the Times office, who ought to tell the truth, and one English Secessionist who had control of a newspaper in Victoria during a portion of the rebellion, which published bitter secession articles against the Union. We should like to know which of these worthies has the brazen effrontery to state that the Bulletin was 'favorable to the establishment of a Pacific Republic at the outbreak of the rebellion?'"

The above is published in the respectable Bulletin, which has said so much in favor of impersonality in journalism. Has this paper actually condescended to bribe the "devil" of the Times office to find out for it that "at least two Methodist ministers" and "one English Secessionist" are "employed more or less in the Times office?" This is the most disgraceful thing that the Bulletin has been guilty of for a long time past. What right has it to know that two Methodist ministers are "employed more or less in the Times office," and what right has it to make that fact public? If the Bulletin is libelled by the Times newspaper, let it attack the Times, instead of making statements about the political and religious belief of persons employed more or less in the office. We are extremely glad to observe that the Times has not retorted on the Bulletin in like manner. The Times has not said: "There are, we believe, at least two atheists, four professional gamblers, three adulterers, two spiritualists, one Mormon preacher and a German homeopathist, employed more or less in the Bulletin office." The Times has not done this, and has thus proved itself more respectable than the Bulletin.

Women-Waiters in Beer Saloons.

The sapient Board of Supervisors have come to the conclusion that something must be done to prevent any citizen of San Francisco being robbed by a female in a lager-beer saloon, between 12 o'clock and daylight; they have, therefore, passed an ordinance closing all lager-beer saloons, where women are employed, between 12 o'clock and daylight. Probably in the course of five or six years the very wise, most honorable, and large minded Supervisors will learn that the best plan to prevent robberies in lager-beer saloons is, not to close them at 12 o'clock, but to close those which are conducted in a disreputable manner entirely. If every person, intending to open a saloon for the sale of liquors, were obliged to obtain a license from the police magistrate, and were, on evidence of robberies or misdemeanors having been committed in his saloon, deprived of his license, the disreputable saloons in this city would be closed within a very few months. There are virtuous, respectable women employed in some of the better class lager-beer saloons in this city, who, by their earnings, support their families, and who will, if their present occupation is taken from them, be driven to a worse. If every saloon were licensed and the continuance of the license were made contingent on the proprietor's keeping a quiet and respectable house, very little evil would result from the employment of women as waiters. The dens on Pacific and Jackson streets would soon be closed, and the respectable saloons where well-conducted and hard-working girls follow the calling to which they were brought up in Germany and France, would give no trouble to police. The sooner all saloon keepers in San Francisco are granted licenses of which they will be deprived, when they allow bad characters to resort to their houses, the sooner will the present evil of robbery in saloons be corrected. The ordinance closing lager-beer saloons at 12 o'clock will prove but a poor remedy.

What's in a Name?

On Monday evening the tender-hearted Supervisor McCoppin rose, with tears in his eyes, his breast heaving with sobs and otherwise showing signs of extreme distress, for the purpose of urging the Honorable the Board of Supervisors, to pass a resolution requesting the Governor to reflect whether Judge Rix had not laid it on a little too thick in the matter of the poor oppressed Irishmen who simply burned a few houses, killed one Chinaman and whipped a few others. Alas! the Supervisor who opposed this resolution was the man who, if there is anything in a name, we should have expected to be the first to beg the Governor's clemency in behalf of the rioters. Webster says "clement" is "mild in temper and disposition, gentle; lenient; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate." All the Irishmen in the city say Clement is "bloodthirsty, murderous; widout the laste taste of pity in him; an unmerciful haythen." In fact, all the Irishmen think it hard to find an unforgiving and stern Supervisor in Clement.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

THE OBLIQUITIES OF CRITICISM.

The possibility of working out a "Science of Criticism" so complete that questions of taste can be decided infallibly, and without appeal, leaving no more room for difference of opinion as to the merits of a picture or a poem than there is as to the sum of two numbers, is being quite extensively discussed in various quarters. Some weeks since we mentioned a learned and elaborate French work devoted to the subject; more recently, in looking over the new books at Roman's, we found an American book which, though not especially addressed to this single question, treats in an unusually thorough manner of topics involved in, or bearing upon the discussion. It is by Doctor G. W. Samson, President of Columbian College, Washington, D.C., and is entitled "Elements of Art Criticism, Comprising a Treatise on the Principles of Man's Nature as addressed by Art," etc., and though somewhat old-fashioned in its mode of presenting several of the doctrines advanced, is calculated to be of much use as a "handbook" to art-students and amateurs, and even to the artists themselves. Concerning comparative taste, or the different degrees of power of apprehending beauty in different individuals, Doctor Samson says:

"Aristotle discusses the limits of development in the appreciation of truth and beauty reached by different ages and sexes; and mentions the fact, that men of the same culture have keener or blunter native apprehension, and become more or less advanced in true taste according as they exercise their powers in the criticism and execution of works of art. Modern writers dwell upon the same fact; though sometimes without logical discrimination. Reid says, 'The most perfect works of art have a beauty that strikes even the rude and ignorant; but they see only a small part of that beauty which is seen in such works by those who understand them perfectly and can produce them.' 'As the color of the body is very different in different climates, every nation preferring the color of its climate, and as, among us, one man prefers a fair beauty, another a brunette, without being able to give any reason for this preference, this diversity of taste has no standard in the common principles of human nature, but must arise from something that is different in different nations, and in different individuals of the same nation.' Blair, while maintaining that there is among all mankind a common standard of taste, as like in its decisions as are those of reason and conscience, and contending that palpable differences of taste are as much perversions of a common nature as are abuses of the palate, yet urges that culture has as much to do with accuracy of judgment in art as it has in science. His words are, 'When we refer to the concurring sentiments of men as the ultimate standard of taste, or of what is to be accounted beautiful in the arts, this is to be always understood of men placed in such situations as are favorable to exertions of taste.' Burke remarks, 'Sensibility and judgment, which are the qualities that compose what we commonly call taste, vary exceedingly in various people;' yet he adds, 'there is rather less difference upon matters of taste among mankind than upon most of those matters which depend upon the naked reason.' Alluding to the taste of early youth, and of men in the infancy of natural culture, he says: 'I despair of ever receiving the same degree of pleasure from the most excellent performances of genius, which I felt in youth from pieces which my present judgment regards as trifling and contemptible.' 'The most powerful effects of music and poetry have been displayed, and perhaps, are still displayed, where these arts are but in a low and imperfect state.' 'But as arts advance towards their perfection, the science of criticism advances with equal pace.'"

In the fifth and sixth chapters of Book V., Grecian, Roman, and Mediæval painting are historically and critically treated. The subject of the seventh chapter (of the same book) is "The Rise of Modern Painting in Europe;" and the ninth chapter is devoted to "The late Development of Modern Painting in Europe and America." We make room for a paragraph or two from this chapter, on some of our popular artists:

"The artists of America, in the present as in the past generations, are of every nationality; among which German and Italian have next to those of native-birth been most numerous. In political views the German has been extreme in his theory of individual independence, fully keeping alive the hereditary spirit of his nationality; while the English tendency may have been to the opposite extreme. In religion the German has cast off all the restraints of ancestral faith, forgetting that individual minds must trust in every department of knowledge to the experience of the past, and not altogether to the slowly-reached deductions of personal reason; while the Italian has rested too entirely in a faith that is so purely hereditary as to be ignorant of its own foundation. In the mass of intelligent American scholars and artists, however, there has been a decided and strong tendency to comprehensive views, and a conservative course in both politics and religion; the reflex of which spirit is taking form in their works of art."

"In portrait every leading city has its one or more favorite artists; some of whom are destined to shine in this and other departments. Historic portraiture, in the field of aboriginal Indian subjects, has found in Stanley an enthusiastic devotee. History proper is worthily represented by Walker in his Battle of Chapultepec, and by Weir in his 'Embarkation of the Pilgrims.' In genre, or the lower order of sentiment presented in home life, Huntington, a pupil of Morse, has won praise. In the higher order of passion, Rothermel is showing decided genius; his 'Paul before Agrippa' exhibiting a creditable departure from the idea of Raphael in his cartoon of 'Paul at Athens,' in which the apostle is tall and commanding in person, while Rothermel's conception is according to the historic tradition of the Roman Lucian, as to the 'bald-headed Galilean with a hooked nose,' and of Nicephorus and others, who described him as small of stature, with aquiline nose, high forehead and sparkling eyes; while his 'Christian Martyrs in the Coliseum' is a master-work in architectural back-ground, in the grouping of the action of the picture, in the expression of the chief figures, and in the shade and aerial effects thrown over the whole. Fresco has just reached a worthy American character in the works of Brumidi in the Roman Cathedral at Philadelphia, and in the United States Capitol at Washington City.

"It is, however, in the field of extended landscape, and especially in distant aerial effects, that American artists have won the meed of leadership in a distinct school. While Leutze has recast admirably Italian and especially Venetian sky, a class of artists have caught the mantle of Cole in American scenery. The twilight landscapes of Weber are fairy-like in the management of aerial and ground tints; the sky of Church's 'Cotopaxi,' 'Heart of the Andes' and 'Niagara' is as rare in art as the subjects of his sketches are in nature: and Bierstadt's master-works, uniting both these fields, have established a new school in the history of coloring."

CRIME AND WANT IN PARIS.

I AM at loss to determine whether the approaching Exhibition or the continual advance in the prices of the necessaries of life (and you must let me include house-rent among them) is the cause of the fever which poisons the general blood here. I do not think I ever knew it in a worse condition. The police have been arresting persons with unusual rigor. The quarries north of the town are explored frequently by them, and numerous gangs of homeless wretches are carried from thence to jail. I am told that the vigilant supervision exercised over the lower classes of furnished lodgings is continual, and that their keepers are imprisoned upon the least neglect of the police regulations for their government. Immoral women and suspicious loungers on the streets are hurried, almost unquestioned, to some cell. The arrests nightly made by policemen, disguised as drunkards or impotent men, or concealed in lonely tracts of the city whose solitude is full of dangers to the belated passer, are numerous. Nevertheless crimes were never so frequent nor committed with so much impunity as they are at the present time. Murder is frequently perpetrated, not only on those fallen creatures whose lonely way of life offers a perpetual temptation to crime, but upon persons surrounded by company who live as it were constantly under some protecting eye. The criminal in every instance has escaped undetected. When the prices of life's necessaries are high, crimes—so those physicians who are constantly feeling society's pulse, the statisticians, demonstrate to us—are frequent. The illiterate, like the wolves in forests when driven to desperation by the winter, brave all dangers to procure necessary food. The form of despair which is most common, I had almost called it active despair, recklessness, takes possession of the poorer classes. The deficit in their little budget phrensies them into the belief that it is unimportant whether the deficit be great or small, for one can be overcome no better than the other, and they waste their means until they are driven to deeds of desperation. Bread is now nearly five cents a pound, the days when a bottle of wine could be had for eight cents have long since passed away, rents are oppressive, great time is lost in going and returning from business (all the abodes of the laboring classes in the centre of Paris having been torn down;) fuel is dear and necessary. The best wages earned go but a little way. The laborers who fail to be thrifty and industrious at once fall into bad habits, into debt, and thence into crime. Classes above the laboring class present quite as many prisoners to justice. Cashiers, clerks, young men of easy fortune are continually committing crimes to procure money, wherewith to satisfy their sensual desires. Everybody gambles. Young men of family find it hard to sit out plays, so impatient are they to be at the gambling table which, as they hope, will increase the income of their pleasures' requirements. The police have interfered time and again, are still interfering, but man's passions laugh at law and all its agents. To restrain vices reform, not repression, is the remedy. The Inquisition exerted all its power (and since the world was created no executive of any description ever exerted such power as that tribunal which brought political strength and conscience's pitiless delicacy to its assistance) the Inquisition exerted all its power to suppress prostitution and wonderfully failed. Louis XIV forbade games of chance and believed he had succeeded until one day he found the officers of his guard gazing silently and steadily on a cup of honey. In answer to his inquiries he found they had made up stakes which were to belong to him who was seated nearest the edge of the cup where the first fly should alight.

The Exhibition is looked on by a great many persons as the event which is to lift them above mediocrity of fortune into the lap of affluence. They are gambling upon this chance. Many persons have staked all they possess in order to furnish lodgings. They ask the most extravagant rates for them, and if they fail to secure tenants they must be entirely ruined. In this way every class here seems to be fevered.

Spiridion, January Letter in the Boston Gazette.

WHAT is the difference between a battered dime and a new penny? Nine cents.

THE worst organ-grinder—A hollow tooth that plays the deuce.

HUSBAND-HUNTING.

WHAT we said the other day about the odium which attaches to "match-making" naturally applies in a far greater degree to "husband-hunting." Practically, the two words mean much the same thing, since the successful result of a husband-hunt is of course a match, and match-making, in the common acceptation of the term, involves a husband-hunt. This latter fact is somewhat curious. There is no reason in the nature of things why the word match-making should be associated only with the pursuit of the unmarried male. On the contrary, the theory of marriage has always been that it is the woman who has to be hunted down. It is curious to note under what completely different circumstances, and occasionally in what grotesque forms, the same theory has been found all over the world, both in civilized and savage life. Sometimes the bride is carried away bodily from her home, as if nothing short of physical force could make a woman quit her maiden state. Sometimes the panting bridegroom has to run her down—no slight task if the adorer happens to be stout, and the adored one coquettish and fleet of foot. In marriage, this custom prevails only, we believe, among savages, but visitors to the Crystal Palace may see how modern civilization has adapted it to courtship in the popular pastime of kiss-in-the-ring. We have read of a savage tribe in which the bride is thought no better than she should be, if, on the day after the wedding, the bridegroom does not show signs of having been vigorously pinched and scratched. This custom, again, is perhaps represented in civilized life by the kissing and struggling which are supposed every Christmas to go on under the mistletoe. It is not unworthy of remark, as regards these two points of comparison between civilization and barbarism, that, as the woman gets more civilized, she seems more disposed to meet her pursuer half way. In the game of kiss in the ring, for instance, although the lady does not run after the gentleman, but, on the contrary, shows her maiden modesty by giving him as hard a chase as she can, she still delicately paves the way for osculation by throwing the pocket-handkerchief. And, in the Christmas fights under the mistletoe (if we may take Mr. Dickens as an authority), slapping, and even pinching in moderation, are considered allowable—perhaps we ought to say proper—on the lady's part; but scratching—serious scratching, we mean, which would make her admirer's face look next morning as if he had been taking liberties with a savage bride or a cat—is thought not merely unnecessary, but unfair.

This difference between civilized and savage woman may perhaps help to indicate the reason why, nowadays, match-making should, as a matter of fact, be associated with husband-hunting, in spite of the theory that it is the woman who has to be hunted, not the man. Popular phraseology has an awkward trick of making people unconsciously countenance the theories against which they most vehemently protest. Husband-hunting is a far more generally obnoxious word than even the much-injured match-making, simply because it flies in the face of the pet theory which we have described. But, if the theory really hold good in modern practice, why should man, not woman, be recognised as the professional match-maker's victim and legitimate game? Why does not wife-hunting, the word which this theory entitles us to expect, take its proper place in society? Heiress-hunting, indeed, is well known, but this can scarcely be considered a form of wife-hunting, for it is not the woman who is the object of pursuit, but her money-bags. We have the word heiress-hunting for the very obvious reason that heiresses are recognized game. The word husband-hunting exists for the same reason. Are we to infer from the non-existence, or at any rate the non-appearance in good society, of the word wife-hunting, that the practice is anything but common—that, since a hunt necessarily implies pursuit an one side and flight on the other, a man cannot well be said to hunt a woman who is either engaged in hunting him, or else only too ready to meet him halfway? Are we gradually tending towards an advanced stage of civilization in which woman will be formally recognised as the pursuer, and man as the pursued? We are not bold enough to take under our protection a view so glaringly heterodox, but still we think it only common justice to point out that there are difficult problems in the present state of society which the view helps materially to solve.

We fear, there can be no doubt that there is a good deal of truth in the Belgravian mother's lament that marriage is gradually ceasing to be considered "the thing" among the young men of the present day; that girls of good families and even good looks are taking to sisterhoods, and nursing institutes, and other new-fangled abominations, simply because there is no one to marry them. It is not merely that the young men are getting every day rarer; though, unless there is some system like Pharaoh's for putting male infants to death, what can become of them all is a mystery. India and the colonies may absorb a good many, though these places also do duty in the absorption of spinsterhood. But this will not account for the alarming fact, that in almost every ball-room, no matter whether in the country or in town, there are usually at least three crinolines to one tail-coat, and that dancing bachelors are becoming so scarce that it is a question whether hostesses ought not, for their own peace of mind, to connive at the introduction of the Oriental nautch. Yet even the alarming scarcity of marriageable men is not so serious an evil as their growing disinclination to marry.

With the causes of this disinclination we are not now concerned. Some attribute it to the increase of luxurious and expensive habits among bachelors—habits specially fostered by "those hateful clubs"; some to the "snobbishness" which makes a woman consider it beneath her dignity to marry into an establishment less stylish than that which it has perhaps taken her father all his life to secure; some to the demi-monde—an explanation very like the theory that small-pox is caused by pustules. But, whatever may be the causes of the disinclination, there can be but little doubt that it exists, and the worst part of matter is, that it is found among rich men no less than the poor. That really poor men should not wish to marry is, even the Belgravian mother must admit, an admirable arrangement of nature. But it is too bad that so many men-about-town should seem rich enough for yachting, or racing, or opera-boxes, or even diamond necklaces— for anything, in short, but a wife. The fact is, that in the eyes of poor men a wife is associated chiefly with handsome carriages, showy dresses, fine furniture, and other forbidden luxuries; and, inasmuch as there is not one law of association for the rich and another for the poor, this view spreads, until even rich men consider whether it is not possible to secure the luxuries without the wife.

Now, since marriage is, on the whole, an institution with which society cannot very well dispense—at any rate not until some good substitute has been found for it—it is clear that rich men ought not to be allowed to treat it in this way. If modern civilization tends to beget a disinclination to marry, it ought also, on the principle of compensation, to provide some means for counteracting this tendency, or keeping it under control. Is the increase of husband-hunting—we ask the question in a respectful and, we trust, purely philosophical spirit of inquiry—calculated to supply this great and obvious want? What are its merits, in this respect, as compared with the old-fashioned theory that woman should be wooed, not woo? Even the most inveterate hater of husband-hunting must admit that, so far as the great end of matrimony is concerned, the two sexes nowadays stand to each other in a most unnatural relation. It is alike the mission of both to marry, but whereas women are honorably anxious to fulfil this mission men, as we have already seen, are too ready to shirk it. Yet, by a strange inversion of the usual order of things, to the very sex which evades the mission is its furtherance and chief control entrusted. Besides, not only does woman take more kindly to the duty of matrimony than man—or at least nineteenth-century man—but she has comparatively nothing else to think about. A dozen occupations are open to him, but her one object in life, her whole being's end and aim, is to marry.

Surely, if the art of marriage requires cultivation, it ought, like everything else, to be entrusted to those who can give their whole time to it, not to those who have so much else to do. Even when a bachelor is in a position to marry, and not unwilling to make the experiment, he is still far less fitted for the furtherance of matrimony than a woman. He perhaps meets a nice girl at a ball, is taken with her, and after a mild flirtation thinks, as he walks home in the moonlight, that she would make a charming wife. He dreams about her, and next morning at breakfast, as he pensively eats a pound of steak, resolves that on the same afternoon, or the next at the very latest, he will contrive an accidental meeting, or even find some excuse for a call. But then comes office-work, or the Times, or some other distraction, and later on perhaps a visit from some matter-of-fact friend with an unromantic taste for "bitters," or a weakness for the Burlington Arcade. One day slips away, and by the next the image of the evening's idol has waxed comparatively faint. At least it is not sufficiently vivid to inspire him with courage for a call, or a too suspicious-looking rencontre. In a week he bows to the image as it is driven by, as coolly as if he had never had a thought of making his heart its shrine; and thus a golden opportunity for bringing together two young people, in whose auspicious union the whole community has an interest, has been cruelly thrown away.

How different might the case have been if fashion had allowed the lady to take the initiative, instead of compelling her to sit idly at home! She has no office-work, or Times, or any business but that of bringing last night's flirtation to a practical issue. Assuming her to be satisfied as to the eligibility of her partner, there is nothing to prevent her giving her whole time and attention to his capture. She is as little likely to throw away any chance of an interview calculated to help in bringing about this result as he is to neglect an opportunity for winning the lawn sleeves or silk gown. Marriage is of as much importance to her as either of these to him. It is perhaps not impossible that the mere notion of a woman's thus taking the initiative in courtship may to some appear outrageously immodest. But with this point we have nothing to do, as we have been discussing the theory of husband-hunting, not with any reference to its modesty, but solely and exclusively in its connection with the great question, how marriage is to be carried on. We put together the three facts that nineteenth century civilization makes men indisposed to marry, that it gives woman no object in life but marriage, and yet that it assigns the furtherance of marriage, which we assume to be an object deserving of careful cultivation, not to those whose interest it is to promote it, but to those who are comparatively averse to it. Modest or immodest, husband-hunting obviously tends to remedy this misdirection and waste of force.

We take this to be the right explanation—and we have endeavored to make it an impartial one—of the charge not uncommonly brought against the young ladies of the present day, that, as compared with their mothers and grandmothers, they are rather forward and fast, and that husband-hunting, in their hands, is gradually being developed to an extent scarcely compatible with the old-fashioned theories about maidenly modesty and reserve. The change may be considered the effort of modern civilization to remedy an evil of its own creation. The tide advances in one direction because it recedes in another. If the men will not come forward, the women must. It is all very well for satirists to call this immodest, but even modesty could be more easily dispensed with than marriage. Besides, without quitting our position as impartial observers, we may point out that it is only fair to the professors of husband-hunting to remember that there are two kinds of immodesty, and that some actions are immodest merely because it is the custom to consider them so. It would no doubt be immodest for a young lady to ride through Hyde Park in man's fashion. Yet what is there in the nature of things to make a side-saddle more modest than any other? The Amazons were positive prudes, and would never have even spoken to man if they could have contrived to carry on society without him; yet they rode astraddle. And if fashion could make this practice feminine, why should it not some day do as much for husband-hunting?—Saturday Review.

CONJURING OR PERFORMING ANIMALS.

In the present prevailing era of monntebanks and charlatanism it may not be uninteresting to see how perfectly the animal instincts of dogs, monkeys, and birds, have been trained to perform conjuring tricks equal to those of the best "Conjurors," and equally mystifying to their audiences, without the aid of any assistance more than their mere animal dexterity; and how easily the mysteries of their tricks are explained away.

It was an amusing study of the writer's younger days to visit any wonderful exhibitions of learned dogs, acting birds, etc., and to discover how they were taught. It is merely a work of time and patience to teach animals various feats of docility. Some are much more readily trained than others; especially the horse, the elephant, the dog, and the monkey. Although harsh treatment, beating, and half-starving, are too often resorted to, petting and kindness are more successful. At all events, a system of rewards for good behavior is essential, and is uniformly practised even when alternated with correction for failure.

An accurate observer sees that, when horses apparently keep dancing-time to a band, it is the music which invariably adapts its time to the steps of the horse. There is now in the Cirque Napoléon, in Paris, a large ape admirably trained to all the various feats of a circus-rider. He jumps on the horse and is carried round and round. He stands on one leg, holding out the other with his hand, vaults over a riding-whip, stands on his head, turns somersets, jumps over garters and through hoops covered with paper, all in regular sequence as the music changes. In taking his leaps he sometimes misses the horse in his descent, and then he runs rapidly after him, scrambles on the side palisades, and climbs to his place, keeping, all the time, the most perfect gravity of demeanor, instead of the grinning, self-satisfied smiles of his human compeers. Here, there has been a mixture of petting and flogging. At any failure, we noticed that poor Jacko looked frightened, and received a sly cut of the whip; after a successful feat, he had a little sweetmeat from the pocket of the master of the ring.

Many years ago, a learned dog was exhibited in Picadilly—Munito, a clever French poodle, very handsome, with a fine silky white woolly coat, half-shaved. He performed many curious feats, answering questions, telling the hour of the day, the day of the week or date of the month, and picking out any cards called for from a pack spread on the ground. At the corner of the room was a screen, behind which the dog and his master disappeared between each feat for a short time. We watched him narrowly; but it was not until after our second visit that the mystery was solved. There were packs of ordinary cards, and other cards with figures, and others with single letters. One of the spectators was requested to name a card—say the queen of clubs—tho pack was spread on the floor in a circle, faces upward. Munito went round the circle, came to the queen of clubs, pounced upon it, and brought it in his mouth to his master. The same process was repeated with the cards with figures, when he brought the exact numbers which answered the questions put as to the dates, or days, or hours; in the same way with the letter card, when he picked out the necessary letter to spell any short word called for, always making a full circle of the whole of the cards for each letter or for each number, and never taking up two letters or two numbers consecutively, though they might chance to lie close together. This fact we made out at the first visit, but nothing more. On the second occasion we watched more narrowly, and with that object took a side seat, so that we had a partial view behind the screen. We then noticed that between each feat the master gave the dog some small bits of some sort of food, and that there was a faint smell of aniseed from that corner of the room. We noticed that the dog, as he passed round the circle of cards, with his nose down and his eyes directed to the ground, never bounced on the right card as his eyes covered it, but turned back and picked it out. It was clear that he chose it by the smell, and not by that of sight. We recalled that, each time before the dog began his circuit, the master arranged and settled the cards, and we then found that he pressed the fleshy part of his thumb on the particular card the dog was to draw, which thumb he previously put into his waistcoat-pocket for an instant; and as he passed close to us, his waistcoat had an aniseed scent. After the performance, we remained until the room was clear, and then spoke to the master. He did not deny the discovery of his principle.

This clue enabled us some few years afterwards to explain the trick with cards, performed by a Java sparrow, exhibited along with other performing birds. The general feats were common enough, and were obviously the result of mere training: such as firing a small cannon, lying as if struck dead, drawing a little carriage—the bird putting its own head through the collar attached to the shafts, and another bird acting as coachman, etc.; but the card trick might have been taken to denote reason on the bird's part. A dirty pack of cards was handed to one of the company, who selected a card, and gave it back to the exhibitor, who shuffled the pack after replacing the card; he then put the pack upright in a kind of card-case, which so held them as to leave about half an inch above the brim. The Java sparrow hopped on the card pack, and presently began to peck at one of the cards, and finally drew out the identical one that had been drawn. The explanation became easy on examining the cards. At one end, each card had a thin layer of sweet-water paste; the selected card was taken by the exhibitor and placed in the pack; all the rest of the cards had the paste end downward, while this card alone was placed back in the pack with the opposite end upward. And the bird naturally pecked at that end.

Most people have seen an exhibition of a learned pig, whose star season in most populous cities generally exceeds, in period of time, that of the best of charlatans or conjurors, and whose performances were very similar to those of the learned dog: such as picking out cards, letters, figures, and numbers, answering questions, and apparently showing mental powers, which were merely the results of the animal faculties of smell and taste.

No doubt there is a degree of reasoning power in many animals; the anecdotes of dogs, elephants, horses, and monkeys, have long proved this; but the replying to questions, and the spelling of words, would imply something far beyond what instinct or training could effect, unless ingeniously brought about as above described.

The pony who is shown in a circus, answering questions by so many pawings of the leg or so many shakes of the head, merely obeys the recognised and consecutive signals of his master.—[Charles Dickens' Magazine.

The Brain in Sleep.—The principal evidence as to the state of the human brain in sleep is derived from the observation of a woman at Montpelier, a case well-known and often quoted. She had lost a portion of her skull cap, and the brain and its membranes were exposed. When she was in deep or sound sleep, the brain lay in the skull almost motionless; when she was dreaming, it became elevated; and when her dreams, which she released on waking, were vivid or interesting the brain was protruded through the cranial aperture. This condition has also been experimentally brought about and observed in animals, and the same result has been seen, namely, that in sleep the surface of the brain and its membranes became pale, the veins ceased to be distended, and only a few small vessels containing the arterial blood were discernible.

The Gentleman's Magazine.—It is said that an organic change will speedily be made in this, the oldest of English periodicals, for it was established by Edward Cave, as far back as the year 1731. The reports of proceedings of learned societies are to be discontinued, to make room for an historical novel.

Miss Helen Western, the actress, was the first to introduce the fashion, now so prevalent among ladies, of wearing a solitary long curl swung over the left shoulder.

Balloons are like vagrants. When up they have no visible means of support.

[For the Californian.]

BOOKS MATERIALLY CONSIDERED.

A THOROUGHLY good book, in whatever outward guise it may appear, is a welcome entertainment and a "continual feast" to the cultivated reader. It matters not if the volume be large or small, illy or neatly printed, well or clumsily bound, or not at all, so that the vigor and juiciness and flavor are there, it will be read and enjoyed. Yet the mere material qualities of books—the paper, and typography, and binding—are well worth consideration. A good book badly printed and bound is like a diamond in the rough—we know its value, but it does not please the eye; whereas such a book, printed on clear type on white, or delicately-tinted, paper, and neatly bound in modern style, is "a thing of beauty" to the outward sense, as well as "a joy forever" to the appreciative mind. Some persons have a fondness for hunting up the oldest editions of favorite old authors, under the hallucination that all their "mellowness and flavor" lies in the clumsy characters impressed with dingy ink upon tawny paper—paper not bronzed by time nor with "the umber of human contact," but simply such poor paper as our forefathers were able to obtain from their manufacturers two or three centuries ago. I used, in my younger days, to have a strange yearning for very old books, and never read or heard of one anywhere without breaking the Tenth Commandment. I have outgrown that passion, with other boyish follies, and now my bookish envy is only directed toward the possessors of such handsome volumes as are issued by the Riverside Press, Harper & Brothers, Ticknor & Fields, and other eminent publishers. I now regard very old books simply as curiosities, and not desirable on any other account when later editions are attainable. To scholars they may be occasionally valuable for comparison or reference; but to the general reader they have nothing to commend them. They are like an old, unslightly ruin, which you examine with curiosity and perhaps with some interest, but to attempt to read one of those ancient tomes would be like taking up a residence in the old ruin for an indefinite period, and endeavoring to find pleasure in gazing perpetually upon its hoary crumbling walls and ivy-grown turrets. As the novelty wore off it would become painful to the eye and, finally, irksome to the mind. For no one, I think, can find intellectual pleasure in a high degree, in anything which materially is wearying or repugnant to his senses.

[I may remark here, parenthetically, that this is true of manuscripts as well as of printed books. Many an excellent article or story, prepared for a magazine or a journal, has been rejected because its chirographic execution was so bad that the editor could not read it enjoyably; while many an inferior production has been accepted by the same infallible authority, because of the charm thrown around it by beautiful chirography. Yet this is a fact which many writers for the press ignore altogether.]

The size of a book, without reference to its contents, should depend upon the use for which it is designed. Dictionaries and other works of reference may be as large as you please—in their case size is no objection; and, indeed, they might come in handily in case your friend and yourself come to blows in your library over some knotty point of literature. But for ordinary reading let the book be of moderate size—a not over-thick octavo, printed in small pica Scotch face types, leaded, upon clear paper—not too white—with plenty of inner margin, and bound in any style you wish, only with a "bow back." Then you can hold it in your hand comfortably, at a convenient distance from your eyes, and read it with a sense of physical enjoyment that will often compensate for intellectual defects, or for that dryness which is inseparable from certain subjects. I abominate those ponderous tomes which one must hold on his knee or lay upon a table, and crouch over them in order to get the eye at a proper distance from the page, at the imminent risk of round shoulders and a contracted chest. Such unwieldly volumes were fashionable in the days of our ancestors, when it was the common ambition of authors and publishers to issue "goodly quartos," until the nuisance (for such it must have been to readers) became proverbial. A humorous poet (anonymous) three quarters of a century ago wrote:

> "A great book," some one says, "is a great evil;"
> Yet, when the book is half made up of margin,
> The evil is in that proportion lessened—
> Thanks to the London printers, who provide
> A comfortable breadth of vacant paper
> On which the mind may rest itself, fatigued
> With the bewilderimg simpleness that creepeth—
> Turbid and deep sometimes, and sometimes shallow—
> With even pace through the capacious page,
> Like a dark gutter through a field of snow.

Their wide margins and large types were redeeming features of the "great books" affected by our forefathers. The smaller volumes published during the last century are so closely printed and so dingy-looking that only the most indefatigable bookworm can have the patience to read them.

Works of fiction are usually closely printed in type graduated to the extent of the work, so as to bring it within a certain number of pages. The interest of the story is supposed to make up for all other defects. It is a rule generally applicable, however, that a book which is not worth printing neatly is not worth reading.

The pretty little blue-and gold editions of the poets, issued by Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, are only suitable for pocket companions—for a man to carry with him on a journey, or for sentimental youths and maidens to take along on an afternoon walk amid rural scenes. They are well adapted to the suburbs of Oakland. If I were a young man, and had a sweetheart living in Oakland, I would have a complete set of the poets, 16mo. size, in blue and gold. I fancy they would be very effective in love-making under those live oaks.

The amount of embellishment put upon and within a book must depend upon the character of the work, and the purpose for which it is designed. Gift books require a great deal; indeed, many of them are worthless except for their pictures and costly binding and gilding. They are pretty fooleries, not intended to be read, but to lie upon a center-table and be admired. I have seen a copy of Tupper's Proverbial Philosophy rendered tolerable by a profusion of handsome illustrations and a costly binding. The value of many works is greatly enhanced by appropriate illustrations; but they have a style of illustrating works of fiction which is execrable. It has been adopted by some of the new magazines at the East. The engraving is tolerably well executed, but the figures are as void of character or expression as those in the fashion plates. A great deal of embellishment is often bestowed upon "Family Bibles"—so called, probably, because none of the family ever looks into one of them except to see the pictures. In my young days we had at home an immense Bible — I do not remember its dimensions, but I have never seen another more than half as large. It was full of very fine steel engravings, and we youngsters (on Sundays, when we were not permitted to indulge in "secular amusements") used to beg for a sight of it. Once in a great while we were allowed to look through it; except on these rare occasions it was locked away in a closet underneath the book-case, carefully wrapped up in a linen cloth. Truly, in that case the "Word of the Lord" was precious in the sight of our family! This Bible had been brought from London, must have cost an immense price, and was, on the whole, about as useless a book as I ever saw. Besides its unwieldliness, it was entirely too costly to be used in the worship of God!

I observe that an effort is being made to re-introduce for the printing of books the coarse style of types that was used in the last century. That style has long been supplanted by new and beautiful styles of types, among which the "Scotch face" stands pre-eminent for clearness and delicacy of outline. It is to the obsolete style "as Hyperion to a satyr;" yet a designing type founder has the effrontery to declare that the latter is being restored to favor because of its "superior boldness and beauty!" Heaven preserve us! Some modifications of the capitals and small capitals look well enough on business cards; but for books it is utterly unsuitable. I sincerely pity the taste of that man who would prefer it to a bold, clear, modern type.

I learn from the papers that the London publishers have recently been discussing whether they should publish their books with the leaves cut or uncut. The question seems with them to be one of expense; as, besides the cost of cutting the leaves, the extra consumption of paper amounts to some fraction of a penny per volume where the books are intended to be trimmed. Some publishers expressed the belief that most readers preferred to cut the leaves of their own books!—a statement which Charles Dickens refuted in a brief letter, in which he showed the many advantages which must result from the proposed innovation (the rule in London having been to leave the books untrimmed). The result of the discussion has not transpired, but it is probable the London publishers will trim their books hereafter. Messrs. Ticknor & Fields have issued some books in the slovenly fashion of the London publishers; but their example has not been followed to any extent by first-class publishers in this country.

I purpose to write a book myself. I have most of the material at hand; I have only to write it up and get a publisher who is willing to "take chances." It will be a very stupid affair; but I mean to see what handsome typography, profuse illustration and neat binding will accomplish. Two to one that I make it a success!

JOHN CLERK.

CALIFORNIAN AUTHORS.—In a private letter to the Alta California, "Mark Twain" says he has compiled a volume of his sketches for publication, but will get some literary friend to look over it before putting it in the hands of his publisher, Carleton. He also writes that Carleton has in press a volume of Bret Harte's "Condensed Novels," which will be issued shortly.

THE Olympic Club gave an Exhibition and Social Party last evening at their rooms, which was largely and fashionably attended.

HOMESTEADS.—350 Homestead Lots are to be sold at long credit, at Platt's Hall, by John Middleton & Son on Monday next. See advertisement.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday Our American Cousin was played at Maguire's Opera House. Harry Edwards, who is generally good, was dull and vapid in the character of "Lord Dundreary;" Miss Alice Kingsbury played the small part of "Mary Meredith" pretty well: "Asa Trenchard" was played badly by W. Barry. On Tuesday and Wednesday, a weak play entitled The Harvest Home was produced. On Thursday Pauvrette was given to a full house, and was well played! The "Pauvrette" of Miss Kingsbury was a very effective representation, evenly played throughout; Mrs. Judah gave one of her marked and powerful characterizations in the part of the "Duchess;" Mrs. Jackson's "Louise" was all the part required; Mr. McCullough as "Bernard" made a very excellent old soldier, and gave evidence of a very happy adaptibility in sustaining old men's parts. The "Maurice" of Mr. Edwards was a creditable though not particularly a marked representation. The whole play was well represented and well acted The Avalanche scene, where an avalanche of snow and ice falls and encloses "Pauvrette" in her mountain cottage, was very effectively presented. Last night Fanchon was produced. This afternoon Pauvrette will be played. The performance this evening will consist of The Three Guardsmen.

Signor Roberto Hellerophanto, an itinerant magician, has effected an engagement at the Opera House, and will shortly give a performance consisting of the "Goblin Drum," the "Mystery of Second Sight" and other wonders. It may be thought unfair to prejudice the public against any clever professional by stating facts which reflect on his moral character, but I must say that there are sad rumors afloat regarding this Signor Roberto Hellorphanto. It is currently reported that very few cities which he visits are favored with a second sight of him, and that he practices sleight of hand in private life in a manner which would cause him to get into trouble were it made public. A painful suspicion is rife that the disappearance of a certain young lady of this city is not entirely unconnected with the appearance in this city of this soi disant Signor Roberto Hellerophanto. It is to be hoped that this adventurer will, on his appearance at the Opera House, be made to give an account of himself. European adventurers with high-sounding titles must not be allowed to come to the virtuous city of San Francisco, and corrupt the simplicity of our republican citizens, by introducing the vices of the rotten and effete monarchies of the old world.

On Wednesday evening, March 20th, Miss Pauline Conger will make her first appearance on any stage, at Maguire's Opera House, in Sheridan Knowles' play of The Wife, a Tale of Mantua. This play will be produced with a strong caste; Miss Conger playing "Mariana," John McCullough "Julian St. Pierre," H. Edwards "Ferrardo Gonzaga," and Pierpont Thayer "Leonardo." Miss Pauline Conger has, during rehearsal, evinced considerable aptitude for the stage; she reads well, and her friends confidently anticipate that she will achieve a great success. The performance will conclude with The Child of the Savanna, in which Miss Alice Kingsbury will appear as "Telula."

On Sunday evening Dr. H. B Davison will lecture at the Opera House on the Commercial Wants, Productions, Soil Climate etc., of the Pacific coast of Mexico lying adjacent to the cities of Colima and Guadalajara.

At the Metropolitan Theatre Heller, the Conjuror, is still performing to good business.

George W. Grotjan, the basso of the Trinity Church Choir, and one of the original members of the "Twelve," died in this city on the 13th inst. He leaves a widow (formerly Miss Louisa O'Keeffe) but no children. Mr. Grotjan, though his voice was not often heard in secular music by the public, was much esteemed both as an artiste and a man, by a large circle of friends. This is the third member whom the "Twelve" have lost since the formation of their society: W. Sparrow tenor, and W. B. Gould baritone, passed away some time ago.

The Academy of Music is shortly to be opened with a variety company.

On Friday, March 22d, the Masonic Board of Relief will take a benefit, engaging both Maguire's Opera House and the Academy of Music for the occasion. At the Opera House Miss Kingsbury, who has volunteered, will appear in a varied programme. Signorina Elvira Brambilla, Mrs. Lizzie Parker Northrup, Misses Emma and Clelia Howson, M'lle Louisa Tourney, Signor Mancusi, Henri Herberte, Frank Howson Sr., Frank Howson, Jr., John Howson, W. Schraubstadter and Miss Amy Stone and H. F. Stone have also volunteered and will appear in a vandeville. The Masonic Board of Relief accomplishes an immense deal of good, and we trust that the public will see to it that its usefulness is not limited by a want of funds.

George Pauncefort's polyglot entertainment—Othello in English, French German and Danish—will be given at the American Theatre, shortly. Full particulars will be given in a few days. Nothing will be left undone to render this entertainment a great success.

TOUCHSTONE.

[For the Californian.]

CHURCH AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL RECOLLECTIONS.

BY PRENTICE.

WHEN old "Tinman Smith" first heard the sound of a bass viol in our village choir, he deliberately rose from his seat and left the sanctuary. It was to him an unrighteous and unholy sound. He deemed the devil had got into the choir. The old gentleman was conscientious in his belief He belonged to the class who thought that God was most acceptably worshipped with devout sternness—that he should only be praised with the natural voice—that any approach to luxury and comfort in the church edifice was a sin and an abomination.

It is often remarked that infidelity is on the increase. Straight-backed pews, cold churches, long sermons, inflicted on little boys compelled to attend church twice a day by their parents, with a dose of Sunday-School thrown in ad interim, have had a great tendency toward free thinking. These things killed in me the seeds of early piety as a late Spring frost kills sprouting grain. I was obliged, year after year, to endure the misery which appertains to a sleepy boy compelled to sit under the castigation of a two hour sermon, divided into fourteen heads, with my little legs pendant from the seat, two inches from the floor, nudged time and again in the ribs by a pious aunt to prevent falling asleep during the intervals which she could spare from a pretended attention to the discourse and the inspection of numerous bonnets. There were ragamuffin boys whom I passed on the street without pious parents. How I envied them as I heard them playing under the church windows! The "church going bell" has for me ever had a dreamy sound in consequence of association with these things.

It seems as if I endured an eternity of Sunday-School. I hated all my teachers. The seeds of an awful depravity were inherent in me. They came up, sprouted and blossomed early. But my teachers knew not that I hated them. I was a quiet, demure little boy and always learned my lessons perfectly. It was fear that made me so good. I dreaded their reproof for defection in the catechism. That was the lash held over me. Censure and blame were more than I could bear. So to avoid these I became a good little boy; but how, in the meantime, did I store away hate in my little bosom. My first preceptress deemed herself a good woman. Her voice was nasal and sharp, her nose long, her general expression a cross between melancholy and shrewishness. She belonged to that class spoken of by Mrs. Browning, who sigh whenever they thank God. Why are my recollections of her so disagreeable? She never whipped me. She could not, since whipping was not practised in Sunday School. Yet I always felt that she would had it been allowable. It seemed even then as if she felt and reasoned thus: "I believe in an eternal punishment. I want to earn my deliverance from this eternal punishment in part, at least, by teaching this Sabbath School class. It is troublesome and vexatious, not by any means a labor of love, but then it's got to be done to escape eternal misery." Heaven forgive me if I wrong the poor woman. We used to be restless in Sunday-School. We became tired and wanted to have a little fun. And when she took my arm to make me sit up straight and not twist about on that hard bench like an unhappy eel, there was a spitfire nervousness in the grasp. I could feel it all over my body like an electric shock.

Mrs. H. warned us in the most solemn manner against walking in the woods on a Summer Sunday; it was sinful. I disobeyed her precepts, yet at the same time these forbidden Sunday walks were robbed of half their pleasure. I always expected to experience some demonstration of Divine wrath. She gave me Sunday-School books whose dreadful stories of fatal accidents befalling sinful boys who played, swam, and skated on the Sabbath, added to the still more horrible woodcuts of prophets and angels with which they were adorned, confirmed me in an inherent disposition to melancholy. Mrs. H. used to have little side talks with the other female teachers after our lessons had been recited. We had nothing to do then but sit still and look over those cheerful Sabbath-School books. Mrs. H. and the teachers generally talked about some other woman whose conduct did not suit them. There seemed also to be ever a mull in ecclesiastical affairs. There were disagreements and squabbles, and bickerings, and contentions in the very heart of the church.

Ours was a Methodist congregation. I was impressed in my unprotected infancy in the Methodist service. We changed our ministers every two years. I never heard the reason of this satisfactorily accounted for, unless it was to make the preachers and their wives weary of life, and convince them that they had on this earth "no abiding place or continuing city," and to give the elders an opportunity to rule the church and dictate to the minister. He was but a temporary mouthpiece. There were two and sometimes three cliques in our congregation, each ruled by some prominent member. If the minister could suit each clique he might get along in comparative peace. But this was impossible. He might go on quietly for the first few months, but some source of dissatisfaction was sure to be detected by the male and female watchers on the tower of Zion. And all this furnished much spiritual food, wherewith our teachers refreshed themselves during their seasons of rest. Well, I used to hear much of this conversation, and wondered; I wondered because I had been taught by these very teachers sentences like this: "Let there be no envyings or strife or contention among you." It was a great puzzle to me then.

Finally, my youthful dignity rebelled at the idea of being forever in a woman's class. I wished to belong to a man's class. I importuned my parents until they put me in a man's class. Mrs. H. did not feel angelic at this change. It was not complimentary to her. She could see no good reason why so promising a scholar should be taken from under her charge while making such progress in his spiritual education. I fear that the Old Adam caused her to regard Mr. Thomas Packard, my next teacher, with unchristian feelings. Mr. Thomas Packard was a storekeeper, a descendant of the Pilgrim Fathers. He could hear me recite a string of scriptural texts as well as any other man. But he seemed no more at home with reference to interpretations and explanations thereof, than Mrs. H. I heard differences of opinion regarding salvation. To my eager, and perhaps improper queries, Mr. Thomas Packard's replies were vague and unsatisfactory, or he told me that such things were above my youthful comprehension, and all I must do was to pray for a change of heart. He said it was very wicked to question the Divine will—that we were miserable worms of the dust, and that it was the height of presumption for us to use our poor human reason concerning the will and purposes of the Deity.

I discovered at last that I knew more than Mr. Packard did, and he sunk. I left Sunday-School forever. Mr Packard afterwards failed in business, became clerk of a steamboat and used to play cards and drink. His was the first great apostacy of which I became conscious. I looked with certainty for the intelligence of the explosion of that boat's boiler, as a judgment on Mr. Packard. Yet it never exploded. Passengers went in safety month after month, year after year, and the apostate Packard still handled cards and swallowed his toddy. It was even said that on one occasion, while a trifle merry, he playfully reminded a devout church-member of some of their old revival experiences.

The revivals, which occurred regularly every Winter, were gloomy and depressing seasons for me. All the other boys of my age were attracted to them. At first they went out of curiosity, or for the fun of the thing, to witness the conduct which, perhaps, may be termed uncommon, of those who had "experienced religion." Finally, many as usual became themselves converted. I was sometimes forced to go. The shouting, the ecstatic exclamation, the jumping up and down, the clapping of hands, the sobbing and groaning of those on the "anxious-seat," and the general whirl of religious fervor all conspired to shock and terrify me. I wanted to get out. I wanted the elders and brothers who besought me with inodorous breath to go up to the altar and be prayed for, simply to let me alone. I questioned not the doctrine, nor the certainty of an unending punishment for such a sinner as I felt myself to be, but I did not want such praying as that over me. Something within me was shocked and outraged during these manifestations of excitement. I tried to get religion by myself, and often at times did pray for this miraculous change of heart, but all to no purpose. I could never feel the first sympton of conversion. So I concluded that I must be one of those saved to be damned. And, let it be remembered, that I had at heart a great veneration, even amounting to awe, for religion. I could never go to the revival meetings and be amused as were many of my companions. It seemed to me a desecration, and yet I could not reconcile this sort of worship with my innate sense of religion.

The Millerite preaching gave me a terrible shock. I first heard it promulgated from the lips of a young man with an impediment in his speech. It seemed as if that sermon would never end. He proved conclusively from the writings of Daniel that the close of all things was very near, that the archangel's trump would shortly sound and the world to be burned up. How I wished to get out of that church. That the people could take this information so coolly, amazed me. My people ate dinner with as much relish as usual. I did not. Those dreadful predictions haunted me at school, and in the playground. I was actually afraid of the inside of our church for months afterward. I would have preferred a year of the old-fashioned, somniferous Old-School Presbyterian sermons, with fourteen heads and three subdivisions under each head, to one Millerite discourse.

EXTRA ROAR FROM "THE LION'S MOUTH."

Letters from the People.

TEACHERS' SALARIES.

Editor Californian:—The subject of teachers' salaries is becoming interesting. This remark has been made several times before. It is with difficulty that I can keep my pen out of any public discussion, not that I have any particular interest in the matter, yet I like to have a finger in the pie. Unquestionably female teachers should be paid something for their services. They ought not, for the credit of the city, to be allowed to starve. We cannot allow reports of us to go abroad to the effect that girls of various ages, ranging from sixteen to sixty, drop dead daily from inanition, while engaged in the performance of their duties. There must be a screw loose among those Grammar-masters. Power is an unaccustomed thing among schoolmasters; and if the Grammar-masters have power to reduce ladies' salaries, is it not evident they will do so? I have heard, on good authority, that it has been debated among them in secret council as to the length of time a female teacher can live on thirty dollars per month.

The Latin School should be thrown open to all. Why is it kept so exclusive? Why are not children of five or six years admitted to the privileges of this department?

Were it not for the Latin School, there might be more new schoolhouses. The question, however, is upon the adoption of a permanent schedule of salaries. By this schedule the Principal of the High School who now receives a salary of between two and three hundred dollars per month, would, the second year, get between three and four hundred dollars per month, the third year four or five hundred; and so on, till the sixth, when he would get considerable. The excess over what belongs to him must be cut from the meagre salaries of the lady-teachers; and by this scale of reduction, a female teacher who now receives sixty dollars per month as her maximum, would, the second year be cut down (making the two or three hundred dollars received the first year by the Principal of the High School the numerator and the lady's first year salary the denominator of a vulgar fraction), and then getting at the quotient by dividing this numerator by any denominator which comes handy, we get at the minimum to be received at the expiration of the fourth year by the lady-teachers, something like ten dollars per month, which is inconsiderable.

Still, if a reduction must be made, why should not the male teachers be reduced? I cannot see the propriety of reducing the females so near the verge of starvation, and not getting the male teachers anywhere near the verge. Let there be an equality in starvation. To sum the whole thing up, Mr. Editor, if this matter of education is to be such a bother to the public, let us abolish it altogether. I am a plain-spoken, hard-working man, and do not like to see the whole community thrown into a ferment every six months by a few schoolmasters.

ONE OF THE PEOPLE.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

Editor Californian:—The Bulletin, I perceive, still continues its insinuations, that the prosperity of the community is to be greatly enhanced by Chinese labor. Now I would like to know how they can get over this proposition: If you employ two Chinamen at fifty cents per day, will not the white man do double the amount of labor for one dollar that the Chinamen will do for fifty cents? At all events, the white man gets double the money, does'nt he? And, besides, of the dollar received for their labor by the two Chinamen, how much of it is invested in real estate, in machinery and in savings' banks? I venture to say, without fear of contradiction, not five cents. How much of the dollar received by the white man, goes into the bank? Without fear of contradiction, I venture again to say, not two cents. What a fallacy it is, then, for the Bulletin to attempt to prove that the Chinese are a benefit to us, because they are hired in the woolen mills.

ANOTHER PEOPLE.

Employment for All.

It is the easiest thing in the world to get employment at good wages in any capacity, in this city. The applicant has only to "loan his employer $5,000," and the thing's fixed.

BUILDING LOTS—On which advances can be obtained for building upon them—are to be sold at auction by Maurice Dore & Co., on Wednesday next. These lots are the property of the Germania Savings and Building Union, and they extend extra credits and the offer of advances to build with to the purchasers. Read the terms in their advertisement.

ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.—One visit to the Anatomical Museum, Montgomery st., between California and Pine, will constitute more to a knowledge of the structure of the human frame than reading all the books from the great Esculapius and his disciples, down to those of the thousands of quacks who claim him for their guide. In addition to the Wonderful Collection of Anatomical Curiosities, are the heads of two murderess embalmed and sent to the Museum from Mexico, looking as natural as life.

HAGAN & HORGAN, practical marble workers, have established themselves in business on Market street, opposite the Lincoln School House. As Mr. Hagan was the builder of the Broderick Monument at Lone Mountain, and is particularly proficient in the execution of Monuments, Headstones, Mantels, and other finer descriptions of marble work. Hagan & Horgan's prices for work have been placed at reduced rates.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT, No. 623 Commercial street, is where all the good things in market are daily served up in a superior style of cooking. Though our local epicurians are pretty well aware of this fact, yet there may be some benighted good-livers not posted as regards the superior merits of "Martin's"—for such this notice is written.

BY PURCHASING of the "Housekeepers Protection and Relief Society," No 131 Kearny street, ladies can procure every description of housekeeping articles at greatly reduced rates. See card on sixteenth page.

BATHS FOR INVALIDS, with the physician's knowledge, acquired by twenty-five years' experience, are not only the best, but the cheapest. Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

SICKNESS is generally so easily cured, where the sick have sense enough to avoid medicine, that it is a mere pastime to Dr. Bourne to effect the cure. *

TYPHOID FEVER.—In all fevers the most successful results attend water cure practice, as improved by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple Post street. *

WATER CURE.—"Pioneer," and only one, in San Francisco, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. No nonsense and time wasted; but pleasant work and quick cures, the result of long experience. *

COLDS AND COUGHS CURED by Doctor Bourne's pleasant process. Same as your grandmother's old-fashioned "rum sweat," only "more so." No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

ELECTRICITY.—Four bits gives you the use of the powerful and splendid electro-magnetic battery of Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CONTINUED.

CHAPTER VI.—A FIRST APPEAL.

HE was standing opposite to her, leaning against an angle of the wall, mingled fury and amazement in his face, but he did not interrupt her by a word or a sign.

"There is no power in me," she went on, "to tell you the strength of my conviction that this is the turning-point in our fate. Let us take the money we have, and go. Why should you stay in England, Stewart, more than in any other country? We have no ties but one another." She looked at him more sharply here, through all her earnestness. "Friendships and the obligations they bring are not for us. The world has no home bonds for us. Where money is to be made you can live, in such content as you can ever have; and where you are, I am as content as I can ever be."

"You are a cheerful counsellor," Routh broke out in uncontrollable passion. "Do you think I am mad, woman, when I have played so desperate a game, and am winning it so fast, that I should throw up my cards now? Let me hear no more of this. Come to your senses, if you can, and as soon as you can, for I will not stand this sort of thing, I can tell you. I will not leave this place an hour sooner than I intended to leave it. And as to leaving England, if the worst came to pass that could happen, I should hardly be driven to that extremity. What devil is in you, Harriet, to prompt you to exasperate me, when I looked to you for help?"

"What devil is in you," she answered him, rising as she spoke, "that is prompting you to your ruin? What devil, do I say? Words, mere words. What do I know or believe of God, or devil, or any ruling waylay, and torture and destroy? The devil of blindness is in you, the devil of wilfulness, the devil of falsehood and ingratitude; and a blacker devil still, I tell you. See that it does not rend you, as I read in the old book—forever closed for me."

Her breast was heaving violently, and her eyes were unnaturally bright, but there was not a ray of color in her face a d her voice was rapid and unfaltering in its utterance. Routh looked at her, and hated her. Hated her, and feared her, and uttered never a word.

"The madness that goes before destruction is coming fast upon you," she said; "I see it none the more clearly because that destruction must involve me too. Let it come: I am ready for it, as I have been for any evil for a long time now. You speak idle words to me when you reproach me, Stewart. I am above and beyond reproach from you. I am as wicked a woman, if the definition of good and evil be true, as ever lived upon this earth; but I have been, and am, to you what no good woman could be—and look to it, if you requite me ill. I don't threaten you in saying this—no threats can come from me, nor would any avail—but in your treachery to me, its own punishment will be hidden, ready to spring out upon and destroy you. Scorn my influence, slight my counsel, turn a deaf ear to the words that are inspired by love such as only a wretch like me, with no hope or faith at all in Heaven, and only this hope and faith on earth, can feel—and see the end."

He stepped forward and was going to speak, but she put out her hand and stopped him.

"Not now. Don't say anything to me, don't ask me anything now. Don't speak words that I must be doomed forever to remember—forever to long to forget. Have so much mercy on me, for the sake of the past and for the sake of the present. Ruin is impending over us; if you will, you may escape it; but there is only one way."

She had drawn near the door as she spoke the last words. In another instant she had left him.

Left him in a most unenviable state of bewilderment, rage, and confusion. The emotion which had overpowered him when he had made the discovery of yesterday was almost forgotten in the astonishment with which Harriet's words had filled him. An uneasy sense, which was not anything so wholesome as shame, was over him. What did she know of his late proceedings? Had she watched him? Had any of the gossiping tongues of the place carried the tidings of the beautiful American's openly paraded conquest? No: that could hardly be, for Harriet knew no one at Homburg but George, and George knew nothing about him. Was he not always either with his mother, or his uncle, or with Harriet herself? Besides, George would not say anything to Harriet that could hurt her. The fellow was a fool and soft-hearted, his quondam friend thought, with much satisfaction. He must set it right with Harriet, however; under any circumstances he must not quarrel with her; in this fresh complication particularly. It could only be a general notion that she had taken, and he must endeavor to remove it; for though he was horribly weary of her, though he hated her at that moment, and felt that he should very likely continue to hate her, even at that moment, and while resolved to disregard her advice, and utterly unmoved by her appeal, he knew he could not afford to lose her aid.

If the beautiful American could have seen the visions of probabilities or possibilities in which she was concerned, that floated through Stewart Routh's mind as he stood gazing out of the window when his wife had left him, she might, perhaps, have felt rather uneasy at the revelation. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge was not an adept at reading character, and sometimes, when a disagreeable impression that her new admirer was a man of stronger will and tougher material than she altogether liked to deal with crossed her mind, she would dismiss it with the reflection that such earnestness was very flattering and very exciting for a time, and the duration of that time was entirely within her choice and discretion.

Stewart Routh stood at the window thinking hurriedly and confusedly of these things. There was a strange fear over him, with all his assurance, with all the security which he affirmed over and over again to himself, and backed up with a resolution which he had determined from the first to conceal from Harriet.

"If my own safety positively demands it," he thought, "Jim's evidence about the note will be useful, and the payment to the landlady will be tolerably conclusive. Dallas told Harriet the initials were A. F. I wonder it never occurred to me at the time."

Presently he heard Harriet's step in the corridor. It paused for a moment at the sitting-room, then passed on, and she went out. She was closely veiled, and did not turn her head toward the window as she went by, Routh drew nearer and watched her, as she walked swiftly away. Then he caught sight of George Dallas approaching the house. He and Harriet met and shook hands, then George turned and walked beside her. They were soon out of sight.

"I don't think I shall see much more of Hombourg," George was saying. "My mother has taken an extraordinary longing to get back to Poynings. Dr. Merle says she must not be opposed in anything not really injurious. She is very anxious I should go with her, and Mr. Carruthers is very kind about it."

"You will go, George, of course."

"I don't quite know what to do, Mrs. Routh. I don't like to let my mother go without me, now that things are so well squared; I don't like to persuade her to put off her journey, and yet I feel I ought, if possible, to remain with my uncle until his truant son turns up."

"Has—has nothing been heard of him yet?"

"Not a word. I was awfully frightened about it, though I hid it from my uncle, until I met Mrs. P. Ireton, etc. But though she didn't say much, I could see by her manner it was all right. Bless you, she knows all about him, Mrs. Routh. I dare say he'll appear next week, and be very little obliged to us all for providing a family party for him here."

CHAPTER VII.—DURING THE LULL.

On the appointed day, at the appointed hour, Mr. Felton, accompanied by his nephew, called on Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, who received the two gentlemen with no remarkable cordiality. Coquetry was so inseparable from her nature and habits that she could not forbear from practicing a few of her fascinations upon the younger man, and she therefore relaxed considerably from the first formality of her demeanor after a while. But George Dallas was the least promising and encouraging of subjects for the peculiar practice of the beautiful widow, and he so resolutely aided his uncle in placing the conversation on a strictly business footing, and keeping it there, as to speedily convince the lady that he was entirely unworthy of her notice. She was not destitute of a certain good nature which rarely fails to accompany beauty, wealth, and freedom, and she settled the matter with herself by reflecting that the young man was probably in love with some pretty girl, to whom he wrote his verses, and considered it proper to be indifferent to the attractions of all female charmers beside. She did not resent his inaccessibility; she merely thought of it as an odd coincidence that Mr. Felton's nephew should be as little disposed to succumb to love as Mr. Felton himself, and felt inclined to terminate the interview as soon as possible. Consequently, she made her replies to Mr. Felton's questions shorter and colder as they succeeded one another, so that he felt some difficulty in putting that particular query on which George had laid restricted stress. He did not perceive how deep and serious his nephew's misgivings had become, and George grasped at every excuse that presented itself for deferring the awakening of fears which, once aroused, must become poignant and terrible. He had learned from Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge some of the facts which she had communicated to Routh: young Felton's intention of visiting Hombourg at about the period of the year which they had then reached, his departure from Paris, and the unbroken silence since maintained toward her as toward Mr. Felton himself.

The information she had to give was in itself so satisfactory, so tranquillizing that Mr. Felton, who had no reason to expect obedience from his son, felt all his fears—very dim and vague in comparison with those which had assailed George's mind—assuaged. It was only when his nephew had given him some very expressive looks, and he had seen the fine dark eyes of Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge directed unequivocally toward the allegorical time-piece which constituted one of the chief glories of the Schwarzchild mansion, that he said:

"My nephew has never seen his cousin, Mrs. Bembridge, and I have no likeness of him with me. I know you are a collector of photographs; perhaps you have one of Arthur?"

"I had one, Mr. Felton," replied Mrs. Bembridge, graciously, "and would have shown it to Mr. Dallas with pleasure yesterday, but unfortunately, I have lost it in some unaccountable way."

"Indeed," said Mr. Felton; "that is very unfortunate. Was it not in your book, then?"

"I wore it in a locket," said the lady, with a very slight accession to the rich color in her cheek—"a valuable gold locket too. I am going to have it cried."

"Allow me to have that done for you," said Mr. Felton. "If you will describe the locket, and can say where you were yesterday, and what time, I will take the necessary steps at once; these may not succeed, you know; we can but try."

So Mrs. Bembridge described the lost trinket accurately, and the visit came to a conclusion. As the two gentlemen were leaving the house, they met Mr. Carruthers, who accosted Mr. Felton with stately kindliness, and, entering at once into conversation with him, prevented the interchange of any comment upon the interview which had just taken place between the uncle and nephew. George left the elderly gentlemen together, and turned his steps towards Harriet's lodgings. In a few minutes he met her and joined her in her walk, as Routh had seen from the window.

He stood there, long after George and Harriet had passed out of sight, thinking, with sullen desperate rage, of all she had said. He felt like an animal in a trap. All his care and cunning, all his caution and success, had come to this.

It was strange, perhaps,—if the probability of the strangeness of anything in such a condition of mind as his can be defined,—that he seldom thought of the dead man. No curiosity about him had troubled the triumph of Routh's schemes. He had met so many men in the course of his life who were mere waifs and strays in the world of pleasure and swindling; who had no ties and no history; about whom nobody cared; for whom, on their disappearance from the haunts in which their presence had been familiar, nobody inquired, that one more such instance, however emphasized by his own sinister connection with him, made little impression on Stewart Routh. Looking back now in the light of this revelation, he could not discover that any intimation had ever been afforded to, or had ever been overlooked by him. The dead man had never dropped a hint by which his identity might have been discovered, nor had he, on the other hand, ever betrayed the slightest wish or purpose of concealment, which probably would have aroused Routh's curiosity, and set his investigative faculties to work. He had never speculated, even at times when all his callousness and cynicism did not avail to make him entirely oblivious of the past, on the possibility of his learning anything of the history of Philip Deane; he had been content to accept it, as well as its termination, as among the number of the wonderful mysteries of this wonderful life, and had, so far as in him lay, dismissed the matter from his mind. Nothing that had ever happened in his life before had given him such a shock as the discovery he had made yesterday.

The first effect on him has been seen; the second, ensuing on his conversation with his wife, was a blind and desperate rage, of a sort to which he had rarely yielded, and of whose danger he was dimly conscious, even at its height He was like a man walking on a rope at a giddy elevation, to whom the first faint symptoms of vertigo were making themselves felt, who was invaded by the death-bringing temptation to look down and around him. The solemn and emphatic warning of his wife had had its effect upon his intellect, though he had hardened his heart against it. It was wholly impossible that her invariable judgment, perception and reasonableness—the qualities to which he had owed so much in all their former life—could become immediately valueless to a man of Routh's keenness; he had not yet been turned into a fool by his sudden passion for the beautiful American; he still retained sufficient sense to wonder and scoff at himself for having been made its victim so readily; and he raged and rebelled against the conviction that Harriet was right, but raged and rebelled in vain.

In the whirl of his thoughts there was a fierce torture, which he strove unavailingly to subdue: the impossibility of evading the discovery which must soon be made; the additional crime by which alone he could hope to escape suspicion; a sudden unborn fear that Harriet would fail him in this need—a fear which simply signified despair—a harried, baffled, furious helplessness; and a tormenting, over-mastering passion for a woman who treated him with all the calculated cruelty of coquetry—these were the conflicting elements which strove in the man's dark bad heart, and rent it between them, as he stood idly by the window where his wife had been accustomed to sit and undergo her own form of torture.

By degrees one fear got the mastery over the others, and Routh faced it boldly. It was the fear of Harriet. Suppose the worst came to the worst, he thought, and there was no other way of escape, would she suffer him to sacrifice George? He could do it: the desperate resource which he had never hinted to her was within his reach. They had talked over all possibilities in the beginning, and had agreed upon a plan and direction of flight in certain contingencies, but he had always entertained the idea of denouncing George, and now, by the aid of Jim Swain, he saw his way to doing so easily and successfully. Harriet had always been a difficulty, and now the obstacle assumed portentous proportions. He had no longer his old power over her. He knew that; she made him feel this in various ways; and now he had aroused her jealousy. He felt instinctively that such an awakening was full of terrible danger; of blind, undiscoverable peril. He did not indeed know by experience what Harriet's jealousy might be, but he knew what her love was, and the ungrateful villain trembled in his inmost soul as he remembered its strength, its fearlessness, its devotion, its passion, and its unscrupulousness, and thought of the possibility of all these being arrayed against him. Not one touch of pity for her, not one thought of the agony of such love betrayed and slighted; of her utter loneliness; of her complete abandonment of all her life to him, intruded upon the tumult of his angry mind. He could have cursed the love which had so served him, now that it threatened opposition to his schemes of passion and of crime. He did curse it, and her, deeply, bitterly, as one shade after another of fierce expression crossed his face.

There was truth in what she had said, apart from the maudlin sentiment from which not even the strongest-minded woman, he supposed, could wholly free herself,—there was truth, a stern, hard truth. He could indeed escape now, taking with him just enough money to enable them to live in decent comfort, or to make a fresh start in a distant land, where only the hard and honest industries throve and came to good. How he loathed the thought! How his soul sickened at the tame, miserable prospect! He would have loathed it always, even when Harriet and he were friends and lovers; and now, when he feared her, when he was tired of her, when he hated her, to contemplate such a life now, was worse—well, not worse than death, that is always the worst of all things to a bad man, but something too bad to be thought of. There was truth in what she had said, and the knowledge of what was in his own thoughts, the knowledge she did not share, made it all the more true.

Supposing he determined to denounce George, and supposing Harriet refused to aid him, what then? Then he must only set her at defiance. If such a wild impossibility as her betraying him could become real, it would be useless. She was his wife; she could not bear witness against him; in that lay his strength and security, even should the very worst, the most inconceivably unlikely of human events come to pass. And he would set her at defiance! He kept up no reticence with himself now. Within a few days a change had come upon him, which would have been terrible even to him, had he studied it. He hated her. He hated her, not only because he had fallen madly in love with another woman and was day by day becoming more enslaved by this new passion; not chiefly even because of this, but because she was a living link between him and the past. That this should have happened now! That she should have right and reason, common sense, and all the force of probability on her side, in urging him to fly, now,—now when he was prospering, when the success of a new speculation in which he had just engaged would, with almost absolute certainty, bring him fortune,—this exasperated him almost to the point of frenzy.

Then there arose before his tossed and tormented mind the vision of a blissful possibility. This other beautiful, fascinating woman, who had conquered him by a glance of her imperial eyes, who had beckoned him to her feet by a wave of her imperial hand,—could he not make her love him well enough to sacrifice herself for him also? Might he not escape from the toils which were closing around him into a new, a glorious liberty, into a life of wealth, and pleasure, and love? She had yielded so immediately to the first influence he had to exert over her; she had admitted him so readily to an intimacy to whose impropriety, according to the strict rules of society, she had unhesitatingly avowed herself aware and indifferent; she had evinced such undisguised pleasure in his society, and had accepted his unscrupulous homage so unscrupulously, that he had as much reason as a coarse-minded man need have desired for building up a fabric of the most presumptuous hope.

As these thoughts swept over him, Routh turned from the window, and began again to stride up and down the room. His dark face cleared up, the hot blood spread itself over his sallow cheek, and his deep-set eyes sparkled with a sinister light. The desperate expedient to which he had resorted on the previous day had gained him time, and time was everything in the game he designed to play. The discovery would not be made for some time by George Dallas. When it should be made, his triumph might be secured, he might be beyond reach of harm from such a cause, safe in an elysium, with no haunting danger to disturb. The others concerned might be left to their fate,—left to get out of any difficulty that might arise, as best they could. The time was short, but that would but inspire him with more courage and confidence; the daring of desperation was a mood which suited Stewart Routh well.

Hours told in such cases. The fire and earnestness with which he had spoken to the beautiful widow had evidently surprised and, he thought, touched her. If the demonstration had not been made in his own favor, but in that of another, no one would have more readily understood than Stewart Routh how much beauty of form and feature counts for in the interpretation of emotion, how little real meaning there may be in the beam of a dark bright eye, how little genuine emotion in the flush of a rose-tinted cheek. But it was his own case, and precisely because it was, Stewart Routh interpreted every sign which his captor had made according to his wishes rather than by the light of his experience. Indeed, he had little experience of a kind to avail him in the present instance; his experience had been of stronger, even more dangerous types of womanhood than that which Mrs. Bembridge represented, or of the infinitely meaner and lower. As he mused and brooded over the vision which had flashed upon him, not merely as a possibility to be entertained, as a hope to be cherished, but as something certain and definite to be done, his spirits, his courage, his audacity rose, and the dark cloud of dread and foreboding fell upon him. He had so long known himself for a villain, that there was not even a momentary recoil in his mind from the exceeding baseness of the proceeding which he contemplated.

"I can count upon a fortnight," he said to himself, while completing a careful toilet, "and by that time I shall either be away from all this with her, or I shall be obliged to put George Dallas in jeopardy. If I fail with her,—but I won't think of failure; I cannot fail." He left a message for Harriet, to the effect that he should not dine at home that day (but without any explanation of his further movements, and went out.

"I do not see the force of your reasons for objecting to my introducing you to my mother," said George Dallas to Harriet. Mrs. Carruthers had passed them in an open carriage during their walk, and George had urged Harriet to make his mother's acquaintance.

"Don't you?" she replied, with a smile in which weariness and sadness mingled. "I think you would, if you thought over them a little. They include the necessity for avoiding anything like an unpleasant or distressing impression of her mind, and you know, George," she said, anticipating and silencing deprecation by a gesture, "if she remembers your mention of me at all, she can remember it only to be distressed by it; and the almost equally important consideration of not incurring your stepfather's anger in any way."

"As for that, I assure you he is everything that is kind to me now," said George.

"I am happy to hear it; but do not, therefore, fall into an error which would come very easy to your sanguine and facile temperament. Be sure he is not changed in his nature, however modified he may be in his manners. Be quite sure he would object to your former associates just as strongly as ever; and remember he would be right in doing so. Will you take my advice once more, George? You have done it before—" she stopped, and something like a shudder passed over her; "let bygones be completely bygones. Never try to associate the life and the home that will be yours for the future with anything in the past,—least, O least of all, with us."

"What do you mean, Mrs. Routh?" George asked her, eagerly. "Do you mean that you want to give me up? I know Routh does—he has not spoken to me a dozen times of his own accord since he has been here—but you, do you want to get rid of me?"

She paused for a moment before she answered him. Should she say Yes, and be done with it? Should she let things drift on to the inevitable end, yielding to the lassitude of mind and body which was stealing over her? Should she gain another argument to use in a renewed appeal to her husband for the flight in which she saw the sole prospect of safety, by providing herself with the power of telling him a rupture had taken place between herself and Dallas, and her power of guiding him was gone? The temptation was strong, but caution, habitual to her, instinctive in her, restrained her. Not yet, she thought: this may be my next move. George repeated his question,—

"Do you mean that you want to get rid me?"

"No," she answered, "I do not, George. I was only led into overstating what I do want, that you should conform to your step-father's reasonable wishes. He has been generous to you, be you just towards him."

"I will," said George, warmly. "I wonder how far he will carry his newly-found good-will. I wonder—" he paused; the name of Clare Carruthers was on his lips; in another moment he would have spoken of her to Harriet. He would have told her of the self-reproach, mingled, however, with hope, which daily grew and throve in the congenial soil of his sanguine nature; he would have pierced Harriet's heart with a new sorrow, a fresh remorse, by telling her of another life, young, innocent, and beautiful, involved in the storm about to burst, whose threatenings were already sounding in the air. But it was not to be—the name of Clare Carruthers was never to be spoken by George to Harriet. Apparently she had not heard his last words; her attention had strayed; she was very weary.

"I must go home," she said, abruptly. "We are close to your mother's house. You had better go to her now; she has returned from her drive."

"Let me see you home," said George; "pray don't dismiss me in this way."

"No, no," she said, hurriedly; "let me have my own way, please. You will come to me to-morrow, and let me know your plans."

She stood still, and put out her hand so decidedly in the attitude of farewell, that he had no choice but to take leave of her. They parted on the shaded road, close to the garden gate of Mr. Carruthers' house. As Harriet walked away with her usual rapid step, George looked after her very sadly.

"She is fearfully changed," he said; "I never saw anything like it. Since I went to Amsterdam she might have lived twenty years and been less altered. Can it be that my uncle is right, that Routh ill-treats her? I wonder if there's any truth in what those fellows said last night about him and Mrs. P. Ireton? If there is, it's an infernal shame,—an infernal shame." And George Dallas opened the little gate in the wall, and walked up the garden with a moody countenance, on which, however, a smile showed itself as he lifted his hat gayly to his mother, who nodded to him from the window above. His spirits rose unaccountably. The positive information which Mrs. Bembridge had afforded Mr. Felton relative to his son's expected arrival had immensely relieved George's mind. He was satisfied with the progress of his novel; day by day his mother's health was improving. His prospects were bright. The distressing recollection of Deane, and the unhappy consequences of the tragedy, were becoming light and easy to him; sometimes he forgot all about it. If he could but win his step-father's confidence and regard sufficiently to induce him to pardon his clandestine acquaintance with Clare, he would be altogether happy. How serene and beautiful the weather was! He stood in the veranda, which extended into the garden, bareheaded, and inhaled the sweet air with keen pleasure. His impressionable nature readily threw off care and caught at enjoyment.

"It's such a glorious afternoon, mother," he said, as he entered Mrs. Carruthers' sitting room; "I am sure you must have enjoyed your drive."

"I did, very much," his mother replied. "The air seems rather closer, I think, since I came in. I fancy we shall have a storm."

"O no," said George, carelessly. Then he said: "Shall I read you my last chapter? I want to post it this evening. It's a funny chapter, mother. I bring in the queer old bookseller I told you about, who persisted in being his own banker."

"I remember, George. What are you looking at?" He had taken up a letter from the table beside her, and was scrutinizing the address closely. "Are you admiring the handwriting? That is a letter from Clare Carruthers."

"O," said George. And he laid down the letter, and went to fetch his manuscript. So it was she who had forwarded Mr. Felton's letters to him. Ellen must have asked her to do so—must, therefore, have talked of him,—have mentioned him in some way."

But had she done so in a manner to arouse any suspicion in Clare's mind of his identity? Did Clare remember him? Did she think of him? Would she forgive him when she should know all? These, and scores of cognite questions, did George Dallas put vainly to himself while he read to his mother a chapter of his novel, which certainly did not gain in effect by his abstraction. It pleased the listener, however, and she knew nothing of his preoccupation; and as he made the packet up for the post he came to a resolution that on the following day he would tell Harriet "all about it," and act on her advice.

With nightfall the wind arose, and the storm blew, and raged over the little white town, over the dark range of the Taunus, over the lighted gardens deserted by their usual frequenters, and, all unheeded, over the brilliant rooms where the play, and the dancing, and the music, and the harmless amusement and the harmful devilment went on just as usual. It blew over the house where Harriet lived, and raged against the windows of the room in which she sat in silence and darkness, except for the frequent glimmer which was thrown into the apartment from the street light, which shuddered and flickered in the rain and wind. Hour after hour she had sat there throughout the quiet evening during the lull, and when the darkness fell and the storm rose she laid her pale cheek against the window-pane and sat there still.

The shaded roads were deeply strewn with fallen leaves next day, and the sun-rays streamed far more freely through the branches, and glittered on pools of water in the hallows, and revealed much devastation among the flower-beds. Rain and wind had made a wide-spread excursion that night; had crossed the Channel, and rifled the gardens and the woods of Poynings, and swept away a heavy tribute from the grand avenue of beeches and the stately clump of sycamores which Clare Carruthers loved.

George had finished a drawing very carefully from the sketch which he had made of the avenue of beeches, and, thinking over his approaching communication to Harriet, he had taken the drawing from its place of concealment in his desk, and was looking at it, wondering whether the storm of the past night had done mischief at the Sycamores, when a servant knocked at the door of his room. He put the drawing out of sight, and bade the man come in. He handed George a note from Harriet, which he read with no small surprise.

It told him that Routh had been summoned to London, on important business, by a telegram,—"from that mysterious Flinders, no doubt," thought George, as he looked ruefully at the note,—and that they were on the point of starting from Homburg. "Seven o'clock" was written at top of the sheet. They were gone then; had been gone for hours. It was very provoking. How dreary the place looked after the storm! How chilly the air had become! How much he wished Arthur would "turn up," and that they might all get away!

To be Continued.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1867.

APPRECIATION AND FASHION.

THE allegation that the people of the United States have —as a people—but little appreciation of high art, so often made by foreign observers, is, we believe, very generally admitted to be true by cultivated Americans. Certainly, the best pictures, the best music, the best literature, the best architecture, are not most popular with the American public—but are they with any public? "Englishmen," says John Ruskin, "will not read a thoughtful book." This is doubtless true in the sense intended, but is it any better with Frenchmen, or Germans?—unless, indeed, we accept as literally veracious the statement that in Germany every one is reading Buchner's famous handbook of materialism. As to Americans, we think it must be admitted that they are not more given to reading "thoughtful books," or to relishing thoughtful writing of any kind, than Englishmen. So far as Californians are concerned—or at least that portion of them who reside in San Francisco—the monthly reports of the books taken out of the Mercantile Library Association tell a far from flattering story. Yet every now and then we find some book or picture of the highest merit, some actor or musician who is a true artist in a sense in which those seldom are who win favor with the general public, becoming suddenly and immensely popular. George Elliot's Felix Holt, notwithstanding certain defects, is a work of genuine art, and in many respects the finest work of fiction that has appeared for several years. There is nothing sensational about it, nothing meretricious, nothing melodramatic, and very little incident. In short, it was quite destitute of those elements that cause Miss Braddon's and Mrs. Wood's novels to be so widely read. And yet it had an immense sale, for a book of its high grade, and was read by everybody. How much genuine admiration and enjoyment of the excellencies of the work had to do with this result, and how much of is to be attributed to the influence of fashion, is quite an independent consideration.

The career of Ristori in the United States is a stronger case, suggesting the suspicion that accident, caprice, skillful management, often create a popular furore where there is no general popular appreciation. Admitting all that is claimed for her genius, it will scarcely be contended that the mere attraction of the performances themselves, carried on as they were in a foreign language, can account for the amazing success she has achieved. At the Brooklyn Academy, the amount of money taken at the doors on a single night exceeded, we are told, the highest that she ever received at any one appearance in any of the great European Capitals. Anyone who knows even a little of the forces and impulses that sway American society, will readily understand that curiosity and fashion had more to do with such a result, than intelligent admiration of the great actress.

The history of her subsequent triumphs at the West would seem to lend confirmation to this view. In Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and other places, her success was proportionally greater than it had been in New York, notwithstanding that the Metropolitan critics had predicted her failure in the "provincial cities." These facts are triumphantly cited by several of the Eastern papers, in proof of the "readiness of our people to appreciate everything that is really artistically good and "high-toned." The facts do, indeed, establish that our people will run after a world-wide celebrity, and that they will pay liberally to see and hear "what is artistically good and high-toned," whether they understand it or not. If, from the audiences that Ristori has drawn in the United States, all were to be deducted who went merely because she was the rage, because a contagious furore had been created, and because everybody who was anybody went, we very seriously doubt whether her visit would have proved a profitable one.

CHINESE AND ENGLISH PHRASE BOOK.—A neat little volume, bearing the above title, has been compiled by Benoni Lanctot and published by A. Roman & Co. of this city. It contains colloquial phrases enough for conversational and ordinary business purposes, with the names of the days of the week, month, etc., in English and Chinese, the pronunciation of the Chinese words being indicated by English characters. It will be a great convenience to merchants, employers, proprietors of poultry yards, members of anti-Coolie associations and others who have dealings with our Celestial residents.

LOCAL ARCHITECTURAL ITEMS.

THE new building for the Pacific Insurance Company is approaching completion. As the Company offered a premium to some half dozen of our Architects for a design, we had expected to see something creditable to the taste of the committee and to the skill of the successful competitor, but we are forced to the conclusion that, like most of such competitions, the decision was not governed by the merit of the design.

The building as it stands seems, in our judgment, to be ill-proportioned and ungainly; the main entrance, standing away and cutting off so much of the corner, makes the narrow front on California street very insignificant, and the tower carried above the roof makes this defect more marked, giving the building an air of being discontented with its site, and vainly striving to squirm itself up on to Montgomery street.

The front is overloaded with ornaments and cut up with pilasters, etc., to the utter destruction of all breadth of effect or beauty of proportion either in mass or in detail.

The cornice lacks projection, the modillions are broad and flat—the consols too bulky, the frieze bulging with what were intended for enrichments, giving the whole entablature a very squat look.

The dormer windows are likewise very heavy and "wooden," being much too wide for their height, and the keystones surmounting them are but little better than those on a Montgomery street building by the same architect.

Perhaps the plan and interior finish may make some amends for the defects of the exterior; if not, the company and their friends may perhaps find some consolation in looking from their windows at the New Exchange, which promises to be one of the finest buildings in our city, and of which we may speak further another day.

The Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's building is another instance of unfortunate selection of the design; with the exception of the doorway it presents no very marked feature, in its present state, and that is enough to spoil any front.

The location is a good one, and the amount expended ought to produce an elegant building. We can judge better, however when the structure is further advanced.

THE DANGER OF OWNING DIAMONDS.

IT seems that one of the enterprising Sunday papers published in the city of New York, has been at the trouble of obtaining what it claims to be a list of all the persons residing in that city who are the owners of diamonds, with a statement of their value, and has published such list and statement for the gratification of the curiosity of its enlightened readers. This list, which from the way in which its publication is commented upon by the New York Press, must be to some degree accurate, could of course only have been procured from the jewelers from whom the stones were purchased. The New York Herald anticipates the most alarming consequences from this breach of confidence with their customers, by the jewelers, and also takes it for granted that the fortunate possessors of the jewels will be pained rather than flattered by seeing their names in print and their wealth blazoned to the world. We suspect that the vast majority of the owners of diamonds in San Francisco would experience no indignation at a similar expose—unless indeed their fears of the tempting effect upon thieves and burglars were aroused thereby. The Herald says:

"These details are a positive incentive to burglary, and by supplying them they have exposed the families that deal with them to the danger of being robbed and assassinated. It is probable that as soon as the list reaches the other side it will bring upon us such an influx of expert cracksmen from European capitals as has never before been witnessed in the experience of our police. Their notions of republican simplicity have hitherto protected us from their inroads; but as soon as they get an inkling that New York is such a fruitful field for their operations we shall unquestionably become conscious of their presence."

We suspect that the writer scarcely does justice to the intelligence and general information of the "expert cracksmen of the European capitals," when he attributes to them this belief in the "republican simplicity" of life in New York. They are not so entirely cut off from all communication with the cis-Atlantic members of their fraternity as not to have heard of "Shoddy."

OUR FINANCIAL POLICY.

WE have received from the publishers, A. Roman & Co., a volume entitled "The Financial Economy of the United States Illustrated, and Some of the Causes which Retard the Progress of California Illustrated. By John Alexander Ferris, A. M." The book is dedicated to "The Friends of our Constitutional Currency—Gold and Silver Coin; to the Advocates of Justice and Right, wherever they may be found in the United States; to all who recognize the importance of moral principle in national legislation and jurisprudence, and all who desire the permanent prosperity of the American Republic in general, and of the Pacific States especially"—embracing, with perhaps the exception of the last clause, a tolerably extensive class.

We shall reserve any expression of opinion as to the merits of Mr. Ferris's treatise until we shall have given it a more careful examination than we have yet been able to do. Meantime, in order to enable our readers to form some idea of the scope of the book, and the range of topics discussed, we give the headings of a few of the chapters—or as the author prefers to designate them, "numbers:" "Amount of Currency Needed in the United States—Does California Need the National Banks?—The Legal Tender Act Examined—Resumption of Specie Payments—The Tariff of the United States—Its Effect upon the Value of Gold for Uses Abroad—Bank Circulation—Government Circulation—The Sales of Gold by the Secretary of the Treasury—Who Owns the Gold taken from the Government Lands?—The Duty of California in Relation to the Legal Tender Act—Paper Currency; the Testimony of Statesmen, Financiers, Economists, Philosophers, and Philanthropists, upon the subject of Paper Money."

The concluding chapter is devoted to a subject of the greatest interest to every inhabitant of the country this side of the Rocky Mountains—"The Pacific Railroad." Mr. Ferris is confident that the road may be finished by January, 1872—in less than five years.

This volume is strictly a California publication, being printed in this city by Towne & Bacon. It bears the imprint, "San Francisco: A. Roman & Co., 417 & 419 Montgomery st. New York: 17 Mercer st.," from which it would seem that the firm has established a branch house in the latter city.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.—Mr. D. Cameron, proprietor of the Neptune Iron Works, is building for the "Lake Chapala and Rio Grande Steam Navigation and Commercial Company" (recently organized for purposes of navigation and trade on Lake Chapala, Rio Grande, and other waters in the States of Michoacan, Jalisco, Colima and Agnas Calientes, Mexico), three stern wheel steamers of about 150 tons capacity each, and of the following dimensions: length, 75 feet; breath of beam, 16 feet; depth of hold, 5 feet. Their frames are being constructed of 3-inch angle iron, the sides of 3-16 plate iron, and the decks of wood. Each boat will be furnished with an engine of 75-horse power. After being set up the boats will be taken apart, transported with their engines to Lake Chapala, reconstructed in a substantial manner, and then, after successful trial trips, turned over to the Company. They will be used for carrying freight and passengers for a distance of about 100 miles, connecting with a railroad about 40 miles in length to Guadalajara. These are the first boats of the kind built upon this coast, although iron steamers navigated the San Joaquin in early days, and the little iron propeller Washington, of 45 tons, has been navigating Oregon waters for many years, and has made several successful trips on the upper coast. These boats draw but eight inches of water, light, and might be successfully employed in navigating the shallower streams of our own State. Mr. Cameron has had many years' experience in building iron boats on the Clyde, in Scotland, and those which he is now constructing are of excellent workmanship. At 11 o'clock, A. M., to-day, one of these boats, having been completed, will be taken apart preparatory to transhipment, in front of the Neptune Iron works, at the corner of Mission and Fremont streets.

THE PACIFC COAST BUSINESS DIRECTORY FOR 1867.—We are indebted to Henry G. Langley, compiler and publisher, for a copy of the above-named work, just issued in handsome style from the press of Towne & Bacon. It forms a large octavo volume of 800 pages, 568 of which are devoted to statistics, embracing "the name and postoffice address of each merchant, manufacturer, and professional residing in the States of California, Oregon and Nevada; the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana and Utah, and the Colony of British Columbia. Also, a Gazetteer of the counties, cities, and towns, and an exhibit of the resources of the Pacific Coast. Great expense and labor have been incurred in the preparation of this book, which, although it is not altogether free from errors and omissions—unavoidable, perhaps, in the first edition of a work of the kind—contains information of the highest importance not only to men of business, but to all who would acquaint themselves with the industry, resources, internal improvements and general prosperity of the Pacific States and Territories. It is well worth the price asked for it.

On our fourth and fifth pages will be found "Church and Sunday-School Recollections," an amusing sketch, by Prentice, and an essay entitled "Books Materially Considered," by John Clerk.

BETRAYED

I.

They strode above the blazing hills,
When all the day was glowing bright:
Merrily rippled a thousand rills—
Hastily followed the night.
Then stars were wise, and stars were pale,
But told no tale, but told no tale.

II.

The hissing stalks were dumb with frost,
The mists fell down upon the fields;
Two sorrowing souls to heaven were lost—
As ever when maiden yields.
Unholy graves with crosses twain,
Are what remain, are what remain.

San Francisco, Cal. CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

[New York Weekly Review.]

WILD SHOTS BY LONG-BOWMEN.

I CONFESS to a liking for that numerous and much nbused class of persons who are addicted to "drawing a long-how"—otherwise, telling unconscionable stories, whenever they can find a patient or credulous audience. They are generally amusing, and rarely do any harm except to their own reputations for truth—though they do occasionally damage the truth of history when they find any one silly enough to believe their absurd and impossible narratives. Without going hack of the present generation for instances, we may mention that Albert D. Richardson, Tribune correspondent with the Colfax party which visited this coast in 1865, has been sadly victimized by long-bowmen at different points on his route, and that his forthcoming work on the Western States and Territories will contain, among many hits of useful information and happy description, a number of fictitious and very absurd local legends. Colonel Nicholls, who contributed to the February number of Harper's Magazine the illustrated sketch of "Wild Bill," has caused the rupture of two-thirds of the waistbands and corsets in Springfield, Missouri, with immoderate laughter, and of the other third with excessive rage, on account of his ludicrous Munchausenism and libellous misrepresentations. But it is probahle that he was imposed upon by some graceless denizen of the insulted village. However, my business is not with already distinguished champions of the long-bow, but with some whose names are yet unknown to general fame, and whom, in consideration of much amusement they have afforded me, I propose to embalm in immortal print, to wit: in the CALIFORNIAN.

Several years ago I knew an old fellow named Captain Job Howler. I know not what right he had to the title, hut he always insisted upon it, and I am sure if he were alive and looking over my shoulder as I write he would do so now; so I add it. He was ahout seventy years old, short, slender and tough as hickory, with a thin, wrinkled face about the color of a superannuated California saddle, a nose like a hawk's hill, and a pair of hrilliant, small hlack eyes. He had been a sailor on Lake Erie, and knew more about ocean steamers and clipper ships than the men who invented them. Whercver Captain Howler could find a company of men and a vacant chair he would seat himself, cross his legs and twist them into a resemblance of Mercury's caduceus, place his elhow on his knee and his chiu in the palm of his hand, and with a grim smile of conscious wisdom listen to the conversation which might be going on until a gap occurred, when he would proceed to fill it. One day the subject of discussion wos a recent brilliant naval exploit.

"'Taint nuthin'," chimed in the Captain; "'taint nuthin' at all compar'd with the hattle of Lake Erie. Ye see I was thar with Commodore Perry. Jist afore we went inter action, Commodore Perry he looked 'raouud, nnd ses he, who's at the helm?' ses Perry, ses he. 'Capting Job Haowler,' ses I. 'All right,' ses Perry, ses he. 'The kentry's safe! Lay her on to that 'ere Britisher, Capting Haowler,' ses he. 'Aye, aye, sir,' ses I; and I jist tuck that 'ere ship nnd run her daown inter the trough of the sea, an' kep' her thar till we got clus up alongside of the Britisher, an' she never see us till we riz right up au' guv her a hroadside right atwixt wind an' water. She struck her colors mighty quick arter that, I tell yeou!"

"But, Captain Howler, how did you keep your ship in the trough of the sea? I didn't understand that," said a Douhting Thomas.

"No, I reckon yeou don't, but yeou will when yeou've follered the sea as long as I have. Wall, arter the fight was over, and we'd tuck the hull bilin' of the inemy, Commodore Perry he comes up to me an' ses he, 'Capting Haowler,' ses he, 'I'm praoud of yeou this day. I never see sich seamanship afore;' ses the Commodore, ses he. And then he giu orders to the steward to make a hull hogse't of milk punch to treat all hands in the fleet."

"Where did the milk come from?" again queried the doubter.

"Whar did it come from? Wall, we sent ashore arter some of it, hut we got the most on't ahoard. We had one of the gaul darndest keows for givin' milk on board that 'ere Niagara yeou ever see. We used to milk her three times a day, and she gin nigh onto forty quarts every milkin'. But the curousest thing ahout that 'ere keow was that she never had a calf; and her mother never had a calf, nuther—sort o' run in the hreed."

"Yon must have fed that cow pretty well," suggested Thomas.

"I reckon we did—gin her mostly hiled carrots and choppe d wheat, jest as much as she could eat on 'em. Fine country thar abaout Rochester—raise the gnul firedest crops of wheat! An uncle o' mine had a farm aout thar into Genesee county, and a patch o' wheat on't, nn' once when I was thar on a visit we tuck a lot of that 'ere wheat and measured it in a three-bushel bag, straw an' all, jest for curosity, yeou know; and then we thrashed it out an' run it threough the fan-mill, an' may I he gaul-darned if there wan't more clean wheat than we could squeeze inter that 'ere bag!"

"What d—d nonsense!" exclaimed the douhter, contemptuously; and then the whole company began to laugh uproariously.

The Captain slowly untwisted his legs and raised himself t a standing posture. "Look here, yeou, mister," snid he, shaking his shriveled fore finger at the offender, "if 't'wan't that I'm under twenty thousand dollars bonds not to strike a man with my fist, I'd gin yeou a gaul-darned good lickin'. But I hit a man wunst in Buffalo with my fist, an' it killed him dead on the spot, and some on 'em was for hangin' me, but finally, seein' as haow I had the hest eend of the quirril, they let me off by givin' them bonds never to strike another man as long as I lived. But my son Oliver will be to hum in a week or two, an' then we'll see if he'll let his old father be insulted by sich as yeou."

I helieve that Captain Job Howler finally departed this life without having given his bondsmen any trouble on account of his pugnacious propensities; though it was often very evident to the most superficial observer, that nothing restrained him from "pitching in and walloping" some great double jointed fellow, three times his size, hut those unfortunate bonds!

Another skillful long-bowman with whose acquaintance I was honored, was called "Snapping Andy," on account of a peculirr trick he had of "batting his eyes" incessantly. He was a tall, stout fellow, with a very long nose and a grave expression of countenance. He was a sailor hy education, a miner by occupation, a gambler hy profession, and a story-teller for diversion. Nothing gave him so much enjoyment as to spin ridiculous yarns for the edification of a crowd of "greenies," who would be induced by his serious face and earnest manner to accept his narratives for gospel truth.

One cold Winter night I was sitting by a bar-room fire in a northern mining town. Around the stove were half a dozen new arrivals from the Willamette Valley in Oregon, two or three miners, and "Snapping Andy," who was twirling his thumb and looking abstractedly at the stove. Presently the bar-keeper came around to stir up the fire.

"What hlasted stuff is that about you that smells so, John?" said Andy.

"That's Florida Water," said John. "Dou't you like it?"

"No, I don't like any of these new-fangled perfumes—don't none of them come up to Attar of Roses."

"What do you know about Attar of Roses?" demanded Johu, sneeringly.

"Me? I had a vial of the pure stuff once—got it down at Alexandria, in Egypt, when I was there in a man-of-war in '42. There was one o' them rich fellers came alongside one day, and steppin' out o' the hoat he slipped and fell overhoard, and I jumped in and pulled him out; and after he went ashore he sent me a lot of preseuts, and among 'em was that 'ere vial of Attar of Roses. If I could have got it to New York I'd have got two or three thousand dollars for it, but I lost it. D—d curious circumstance—did I ever tell you about that?"

"No," said John; "how was it?"

"Well, you see, the Viceroy sent aboard a pair of ostriches for a present to President Tylcr, and after we got to sea we used to let 'em run about the decks, because they seemed to pine away and get sick like when we kept them shut up. Well, them ostriches, you know, is a very queer hird—they won't eat no grain, nor meat, nor vegetables if they can only git iron, and glass and rocks—got powerful strong stomachs, them ostriches has. You've heard that about ostriches, haven't you?" said Andy, appealing to one of the Oregonians.

"Yes, I b'lieve I've heerd or read about it somewhars," replied the individual addressed.

"Well, them ostriches et up all the loose nails and scraps of iron they could find ahout the decks, and all the knives and forks aud spoons they could get hold of, and being purty tame they'd come up hehind the sailors and pick their sheath-knives out of their belts or their jack-knives out of their pockets, and swaller them. One day the carpenter left his chist open and they found it and et up a lot of his tools. Another time one of 'em picked the watch out of the First Lieutenant's pocket and swallered it, chain and all. Next thing, one day when I took this here vial of Attar of Roses out of my chist, jist to look at it and see if it was all right, you know, one o' them cussed ostriches come up and picked it out o' my hand and swallered it. You bet that feller had a sweet breath all the rest o' that voyage! Nohody da'st to do anything to tho danred critters, hecause they was a present from the Viceroy of Egypt to the President, don't you see? Well, after that, they got into the steward's room one day, and scoffed all the tumhlers and wine-glasses; and then they tackled the belayin' pins and the marlinspikes and didn't leave ne'er a one ahoard the ship. Up to that time they'd lived purty high; hut after they'd et up all the loose iron and glass and things they begun to lose flesh and git low-spirited. I was in hopes the hlasted things would die, hut they didn't. They used to go prospecting arouud, tryin' to draw the spikes out of the hatches and decks and the eye-bolts out of the sides, and sometimes they'd make a raise of one, and that seemed to keep 'em alive. Finally they got down into the gun-room and holted a lot of grape and canister shot and some four nnd six-pound balls, hut the gunner's mate looked out for them after that, and they didn't git in there no more. At last they took to the for'ard part of the ship purty much, and amused themselves pickin' ahout the chain cables; we s'posed they was eatin' off the rust and scales, and didn't pay no attention to them. They seemed to be pretty well contented with what they got off the cables and sich hroken crockery as was throwed ont to them occasionally. It was mighty lucky for us they didn't have no appetite for ropes and timher, or they'd a' ent us out o' ship! Well, we got to New York at last, and wheu we got off the Battery the Captain give orders to let go the right bower, and we let go, and blow me if that 'ere chain cable didn't all pay out and went slump down to the hottom after the anchor. So hefore we let go the other bower we examined the cable, and found that them infernal birds had et about five fathom and a-half right out of the middle of it—fact, true as I'm sittin' here! We set them ostriches ashore as quick as we could, and they was sent on to President Tyler at Washington, and the first thing they done was to eat up nn iron railin' in front of the White House. Then Tyler he sent them back to the Zoological gardens at New York, and there's men there that makes a livin' hy gatherin' up old irou and broken glass to feed 'em on, Did you ever see an ostrich, sir?" continued Andy, turning again to his friend from Oregon.

"No," replied the web foot, who had been sitting with mouth open, swallowing every word of the preposterous story; "hut I've seed picters of 'em, and read of 'em eatin' iron nnd glass and things."

"Well, you see, they swindled me out of a nice little stake; but I didn't loso near so much by them as I did by Adams & Company."

"How much did you lose by Adams & Company?"

"Nigh about a hundred thousand dollars. I'd made a lucky speculation, and left my money in their hands till I got ready to go home to the States; but they busted np and left me flat on my hack, and I had to go to work again."

"Adams & Company busted me up, too, confound 'em!" said one of the honest miners.

"Me too," said another.

"They only let me in for twenty thousand dollars," said John. "I don't mind a small sum like that. But what speculntion was that yon made so much money at, Andy?—faro, or poker?"

"Ne'er a one. It was in the Winter of '54. There'd been a purty heavy gale, and a vessel came in from the Sandwich Islands with the news that a hnrrycane had took the roofs off of the King's palace and all the public huildin's at Honolulu. Them buildin's had all heen roofed with clam shells, put on very close and neat—makes a very good roof, but it's a mischief of a long job to put it on—took 'em twenty years the first time. So when I heard about the accident I goes down to the wharf where there was a vessel jest come down from Puget Sound with a cargo of cedar shingles. I bought an interest in the cargo and persuaded the Captain to take them shingles over to the Islands, and as soon as the King heard they had arrived he came down with all his Ministers and body-guard to look at them, and he bought the whole lot and paid for them in gold. We cleared two huudred thousand dollars off them shingles,"

"I wish," said the Oregonian, "I could git such a chance as that to sell shingles. I don't git no more than five dollars a thousand for good yaller pine shingles—not more'n day wages."

"Where do you make shingles?" inquired Andy.

"On the Long Tom, about fifteen miles from Eugene," answered the Oregonian.

"Oh, yes, that's in Oregon. Was you ever on the Santiam?"

"Ya'as, I've hin thar to see a cousin of mine that lives thar nigh to Jefferson."

"Well," said Andy, "I staid there one winter with n friend o' mine. Great country for game, that—bear and deer, plenty, and we killed an oyster there once."

"An oyster?" said the Oregonian. "I didn't know there was oysters thar."

"Yes; the hoys heard it one night about dark, in the edge of a piece of timber, and we concluded to hunt it that night, because the cussed critter had nipped a calf and a couple of hogs, and we reckoned he had come after more. So we called in some of the neighbors, and took our guns nnd dogs, and started. It was so dark we had to take pitch-pine torches; but purty soon the dogs got on the critter's trail, and after chasin' about two miles they treed him. When we came up there he was lying out on a limb, gnashin' his teeth and howlin' terrible. We blazed awny at him and fetched him down, but he was only wounded a little, and when the dogs tracked him he chawed up a couple of them in mighty short order; but when we got loaded up again we soon put him out of miscry. That was the biggest oyster I ever saw—his shell measured four foot across, and he weighed five hundred pounds after be was was dressed."

"Did you eat him?" inquired the Oregonian.

"Eat him?—of course we did. We salted him down, and had oyster stews all that winter. Well, I guess I'll go across the street and see how that game's gettin' along. Good evenin' gentlemen." And Andy left.

"Look here, stranger," said the Oregonian, don't you think that 'are feller stretched it n little about the oyster? I never heerd of one that size afore."

"I think it is likely he is mistaken about the size of the animal," I replied. "But then there is a great difference in the size of oysters."

JOHN CLERE.

THE ART OF PHOTOSCULPTURE.

HOW STATUES ARE MADE IN ONE DAY BY MACHINERY.

ONE of the most novel, simple, ingenious and at the same time beautiful inventions which has ever been given to the world is the application of mechanics to the fine art, known as photosculpture. M. Willeme, a French artist, conceived the idea of bringing photography to the aid of sculpture, so that by an easy mechanical process busts, medallions and statues as perfect as a photograph can make them, can be produced in whatever size desired, from the smallest medallion cut upon a lady's finger ring or breastpin, to the colossal statue for a monument or park. The invention has proved a complete triumph, having been successfully practiced in Paris since 1863. The patent right for England has been sold to a company in London for a fabulous sum, and Mr. James McKaye of New York is just introducing it to the American public. The London Court Journal for January 6th says photosculpture is becoming the rage in Paris. People are no longer satisfied with a carté de visite for their albums. Before 1867 shall have come to an end people will be collecting sculpture galleries of their friends. "I must beg the favor of your statue for my collection" will be an ordinary request in polite society.

Already a number of large establishments for the manufacture of busts, statues and medallions have been opened in Paris, and others are in process of erection. One is now being built on the Champs de Mars, opposite the emperor's pavilion, in connection with the great exposition. This last photosculpture establishment is to be an immense concern, giving employment to some three hundred hands. It will be kept in operation night and day, for the accommodation of the large crowds of people attending the exposition, who will be anxious to get their busts or statuettes executed in Paris as a souvenir of 1867. During the night the building will be lighted by electric lights, and the process continued the same as by solar light.

In Paris the statue which you sit for in the morning is delivered at night perfectly finished. The same thing will soon be done in New York. Peter Cooper was turned out on Monday, Admiral Farragut on Tuesday, and to-day Horace Greeley is being immortalized in a statuette. There is but one machine in operation now, but fifty will soon be needed to meet the demands. Over fifteen thousand dollars' worth of work has already been ordered, and customers will be served in regular rotation.

Although the process of producing statuary by photography is a very simple one, it may be difficult to fully explain it upon paper. After much expense and trouble the rooms necessary for this peculiar business have been completed, and for about a week the art of photosculpture has been carried on in America; the first bust made being one of Schuyler Colfax, the Speaker of the House of Representatives. In a week or two at most we may expect to have statuettes, busts, and medallions of our own citizens placed before us, in addition to the admirable French and English specimens of this work which have been on exhibition for some time at the rooms of McKaye & Co.

The first room visited in the process of producing a piece of statuary after this new and novel method is called the rotunda. This is a circular room, twenty-six feet in diameter, at the top of the house, with a conical ceiling or roof, composed entirely of glass. In the exact center of the room is a circular dais or platform, four or five feet in diameter, which can be raised or lowered at pleasure; this is about six inches high, and is called the "register." The top of the platform is cut like a pie by black lines, crossing each other through the center, into twenty-four pieces, slices, or degrees; these degrees are registered or numbered upon the sides or circumference of the platform or register with large black figures, from one to twenty-four. Arranged around the room, equally distant from each other and the center of the room, are twenty-four cameras. These twenty-four cameras are all on a level with each other, and all produce the same sized picture. They are also of that height from the floor which corresponds nearly with the center of the person who is to be photographed. If the center of the body is above or below the focus of the camera the register can be adjusted so as to meet the case. The twenty-four cameras are stationary in the walls of the rotunda, and all open into a dark gallery which runs entirely round the rotunda. Twenty-four glass sensitive plates are prepared, and one is put into each camera; the covers of the whole twenty-four cameras are so arranged with cords and pulleys that they can be opened and shut with the simultaneousness of clock work. Everything now being in readiness, the man having assumed upon the register the position he wishes to occupy in the marble (think of being turned into stone!) the twenty-four cameras around the whole circumference of the rotunda fly open and in an instant close again. The man can now take up his hat and cane and walk home—he has performed his part of the work.

The artist has now twenty-four small sized photographs of the individual upon glass plates, each one of which shows a picture of the person from a different position, the angle being one twenty-fourth part of a circle. The whole two dozen pictures taken in combination give the complete circumference of the sitter, back, sides, and face, from the full face round to the full face again. Looking at the pictures in rotation, from one to twenty-four, is the same in fact as walking round the individual would be, and looking at him from twenty-four different stand points. Thus we have a complete picture of the entire person, with every fold in the dress from head to foot. Now it is easy to see that if a point of connection can be found by which all these twenty-four pictures can be brought into one, and transferred to clay, the result will be a likeness of the sitter as accurate as could be produced by the photograph. This is the very thing which has been accomplished by the invention of Mr. Willeme. Each picture as it is taken, as a matter of course, registers upon the glass plate the number of the degree, or angle, of the sitter which it represents: thus number one picture may be a directly full front view of the man, then number two will be one twenty-fourth of the way round, and accordingly represent a partial side view, while a fourth of the way round, or number six, would represent a full side view, and half way round, or number twelve, would give a direct back view.

The picture on the glass plate having been thrown upon a white sheet of paper in a magnified condition, it is a very easy matter for an artist to sketch all the outlines of it with a lead pencil. He draws the profile of the face, the outlines of all the features, every fold in the clothes, the buttons, shoulder-straps, etc. When he has completed his task there are twenty-four of these outline sketches, each one of which represents the individual from a different angle, the same as the original glass plates did. These sketches are half-life size, or thirty-six inches long; if the statue is to be half-life size, the pictures must be full life size, and so on in the same proportion.

Having got the twenty-four models from which the pantograph or molding machine is to cut the statue, we descend to the molding room. The artist heaps up a mass of clay around an iron rod, as high as the statuette is to be, and in diameter large enough to contain it. Number one sketch of the gentleman who is to be produced in plaster of Paris is fastened up on a plane surface at the right of the molding table. A large brass pantograph* is suspended in front of the molding table, one arm of which is made to pass over the flat surface of the outlines of the picture, while the other contains a sharp needle or a clay saw, as the case may be, which reaches to the clay. Whenever a movement is made by one arm of the pantograph over the picture a corresponding movement takes place with the needle or saw in the other arm, and the clay is cut away accordingly.

Number one gives a directly front view of the man; the profile of the sides of the head, face, neck, shoulders, arms, legs, etc. Now, if the arm of the pantograph is moved over these outlines the other arm will give the same outlines in the clay.

Turn the clay mass one quarter of the way round, and put up picture No. six, which represents a direct side view of the man in outline, giving the form of the forehead, nose, mouth, chest, etc., in front; the back of the head, back, etc., behind. If one arm of the pantograph is passed over these outlines, the other produces the same effect upon the clay, and thus the statuette begins to assume the form of the original. By the time the whole twenty-four pictures have been gone over in this manner, the result upon the clay is roundness and portraiture; and the features and form of the individual stand out in exact proportion, which it is impossible for the most skillful artist to obtain. The great difficulty of proportion, features, position, character, etc., which requires so many months and hard study after the old method, is all overcome by this simple process. It takes but a few hours to cut out the statue with the pantograph, it takes less time to draw the pictures, and but an instant to take the twenty-four original photographs on glass, two men being able to operate the rotunda.

So far, all the process is purely mechanical, and every thing is gained for art by M. Willeme's ingenious invention. After the pantograph has done its work, the bust or statue is submitted to the hands of an artist or sculptor, who carefully goes over the details. This work is nothing compared with what has been done, and it takes but a little time to dig out the corners of the eyes, separate the hair, put on the finger-nails, scrape the buttons on the coat, and make a slight wrinkle here and there. It is perfect fun for a sculptor to do such work as that, mere play by the side of that which has been done. These finishing touches complete the process, and the bust or statue is sent off to be cast, copies of which can be produced as fast as they are wanted.

The Union League club of this city having ordered statuettes of Grant and Farragut to be cut after the new process, yesterday the operation was witnessed at the rooms of Mr. McKaye, 882 and 887 Broadway. The outline sketches of Admiral Farragut having been drawn, the clay was heaped about the line of departure on the register, and the pantograph set at work. At first a rough outline of the statuette appeared, but as the clay revolved and new views of the admiral were put up the grand old sailor came out of the clay like sunshine struggling through a thick fog.

Large chunks of what is called "fat" fell off on every side, and the prominent features began to appear. First the head took form, the neck and broad shoulders came to view, the outlines of the arms, military coat and pants, even to the toes of the boots, came as if by magic from the clay. The cap which he holds in the right hand by his side, and the nose upon the face were the prominent points which developed first in the cutting process. Soon the sharp points of the pantograph began to seperate the arms from the side of the body, to mark out the shoulderstraps and the fingers upon the hand. In this way, amid intense interest, the hero of many a naval conflict was cut in the clay, which will be immediately cast in plaster of Paris, and from that turned to marble. The operation was as practical as the building of the ship, the forging of the anchor, or the casting of the cannon—it only needed a Longfellow to put the deed into a song. To-day the philosopher of the Tribune is on the register, and the pantograph is petrifying his features. It requires but a few hours to do the operation, and if fifty or one hundred pantographs were up and in running order the public could get statuettes or busts as fast as they desired.

The great value of this method of cutting designs from photographs in clay consists in its wonderful application to practical, or if they may be so termed, business purposes. All New York knows that Mr. Hunt has furnished some elaborate designs for the gateways of Central Park. In those designs many statues of men, and colossal groups of men and horses appear, and as an objection to them it has been urged that they were too costly and extravagant for the people to pay for. A colossal figure of Ward's Indian Hunter would grace one of the gateways, but even this, if it should be produced after the old method, would cost too much, and the prospect now is that the park will be without gateways for many years to come, and when we do have them they are as likely to consist of stone posts with a stiff statue or two as anything.

But the invention of Mr. Willeme has put the most costly and elegant designs within our reach, at a moderate price compared with our present estimates. The pantograph can cut out colossal statues as well as small ones; it can be driven by steam—and is now so driven in Paris—as well as by hand. A horse, or any animal, can be produced as well as a man, and of any size or position required. All the designer or architect has to do, is to select his figures, and dress and group them according to his ideas, upon the register of the rotunda—in a second the form is caught, and this is all the pantograph requires. As the business increases, a larger rotunda will be built, and in connection with it a foundery established where castings can be made in bronze or iron.—New York Evening Gazette.

*Perhaps the reader does not know what a pantograph is, since the name is so high sounding, being composed of two Greek words, meaning art and description. It is not a new invention, but has been long in use—the only novelty in this case is in its application. Webster calls it an instrument for copying, reducing, or enlarging maps, plans, or figures. Heretofore it has been used by school-boys for drawing upon plain surfaces. The invention of Mr. Willeme consists in combining the twenty-four pictures, more or less, in such a manner as to produce with the pantograph a statue.

ABOUT SEWING-MACHINES.—Mrs. Caroline L. Pearson, 52 Court street, Brooklyn, a lady who has had twelve years' practical acquaintance with the leading Sewing Machines asserts, that the Grover & Baker Machine is the best, and gives the following reasons:

Q—Among your acquaintance who have used the Grover & Baker and also other machines, state whether or not the Grover & Baker is, in all cases known to you, preferred for family use.

A—I suppose I have compared my experience with over five hundred ladies, and I never, except in one instance, found that they preferred other machines to the Grover & Baker, when they have tried both machines.

Q—What are the reasons of this preference? Please state them fully and at large.

A—The principal reason, or one of the main reasons, is for the elasticity and durability of the stitches, the regularity and beauty of the stitch on all fabrics alike. There are some machines which sew very nicely on certain kinds of work that do not sew well on others. I have never found the fabric yet that the Grover & Baker Machines will not sew in the most beautiful manner. I think it does not take more than half the time to adapt or adjust the Grover & Baker Machine to different kinds of work and fabrics than it does on any other machine. I think the stitch is invaluable to families, in furnishing a cheap and rapid mode of beautiful ornamentation.

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

MISS EVANS, the English authoress of "Adam Bede," "The Mill on the Floss," "Silas Marner," "Felix Holt, the Radical," and other works of fiction characterized by extreme liberal sentiments, has arrived in New York City, and is a guest in the family of her first publisher, Mr. J. C. Derby, in West Forty-eighth street. Miss Evans is engaged on a new work that will soon be given to the public, and is so far advanced with the story that the publication may be expected in the Spring.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermitteut fevers.
They purify the hreath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsin und Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the hest Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled hottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded my self very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unhearahle. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liuiment will do. It is iuvalnable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, hruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or heast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine nnless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, hearing the signature of G. W. Westhrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, he "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least noney. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instaut death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo hits we can save the bites und hills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed hy E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to nse Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beanty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

A POINT ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.

Out of ten thonsand regnlar physicians you cannot fiud one who will not say that STIMULANTS und INVIGORANTS are absolntely necessary in medical practice. And yet, in bygone years, humane practitioners have besitated to administer them, because the fiendish iugenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so pollnted and deteriorated them, that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians know, hecause the first anulytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact that

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS!

Are absolntely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, whereon the testimony of the wise, the intelligent, and the philanthropic is rated at its just valne, as the best protective against and cure for all diseases arising from impurity in the air or other nnhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can he. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much hetter pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street gallerics. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durahle Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagous from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other estahlishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is hut the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every availahle means that promised relief, hut without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not hy defamation of others, to estahlish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must he gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no donht the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself nnder his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

D. J. OLIVER,

101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.

ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,

Where he offers for sale the largest stock of

Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.

PERFECT SPECTACLES exactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minnte employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536 Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprisos the LARGEST AND FINEST assortmeut in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

DR. FONDA'S SAN FRANCISCO EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
Northeast corner of Montgomery and California streets, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!

PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities large and small can he supplied at low figures, on application to

L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.

☞All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE NEW AND ELEGANT STYLES OF

DRESS HATS!

FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER, 1867, ARE NOW READY AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S,

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial St...San Francisco
No. 125 J Street,.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second Streets.....Marysville
No. 72 Front Street.....Portland, Or

OUR STYLES OF GENTLEMEN'S DRESS AND BUSINESS HATS, manufactured of the hest material and hy the most skillful mechanics, excel any in fineness, taste, and durahility ever introduced on this coast. We are receiving hy each steamer all the LATEST NOVELTIES from New York, London, and Paris. Call and see them.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

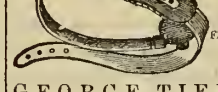
AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!



LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Removal!!

JOHN F. SNOW.

COLORING, CLEANING AND RESTORING OF FEAthers, Kid Gloves, Silks, Woolens, Furs, etc., has removed to the new building of the "MECHANICS' INSTITUTE," opposite the old stand, 25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

☞'RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for sale as usual.

ADVICE TO GREEN SKATERS.

1. Never try to skate in two directions at once. This feat has often been attempted by beginners, but never successfully. It always ends in sorrow.

2. Eat a few apples for refreshments, sake while skating, and be sure and tbrow the cores on the ice for fast skaters to break their shins over. Fast skaters are your natural enemies, and should not be allowed to enjoy themselves peaceably.

2. Sit down occasionally, no matter where, right in tbe way of the rest of the party if you want to. There is no law to prevent a new beginner from sitting down whenever he has an inclination to do so.

4. Wben you meet a particularly handsome lady, try to skate on botb sides of her at once. This is very pretty, and sure to create a sensation. If the lady's big brother is in sight it is well to omit this.

5. Skate over all the small boys at once. Knock 'em down. It makes great fun, and they like it.

6. If you skate into a hole in the ice, take it coolly. Think how you would feel if the water was boiling hot.

7. If your skates are too slippery, buy a new pair. Keep buying new pairs until you find a pair that is not slippery. Tbis will be fun for the dealers.

8. In sitting down, do it gradually. Don't be too sudden; you may break the ice.

9. When you fall headlong, examine the straps of your skates very carefully before you get up. That will make everybody think you fell because your skate was loose. Beginners always do, you know.

10. Wear a heavy overcoat or cloak until you get warmed up, then throw it off, and let the wiud cool you. This will insure you a fine cold that will last you a long time.

11. After you get so you can skate tolerably well, skate yourself sick immediately. Don't be reasonable about it; skate three or four hours—skate frantically—skate till you can't stand up. Do this every day, and it will be sure to make you sick at last; and then you may die, and that will be such an excellent thing; it will be such a good example for the rest of the young people.

A Siamese Colossus.—The Bangkok Recorder describes a visit to one of the wats or Bhuddist cloisters of the city, which covers ten acres of land, contains two temples, and has an image which far exceeds the Colossus of Rhodes in size. He is reclining on the right side, with his head resting on the rigbt hand. He is one hundred and thirty feet long, about twenty-eight feet around the belt, and the length of the little toe on the right foot is three feet four inches. The natives say his bowels are full of large water jars. The labor of constructing and gilding this image must have been immense, and have taken years to accomplish.

The tendency of people to carry qnotations too far was illustrated in a prayer-meeting the other day, by a brotber exclaiming in an agony of piety. "O, Lord, have mercy upon us miserable sinners, of which I am the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely."

The Dutchman that had a rush of blood to his head, and turned himself beels up to make it rush back again, has since died of strabismus in his spinal contortions.

The man who minds his own business was in the city last week, but left immediately, he felt so lonesome.

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

Also,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

Dr. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound!

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,

401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years (15th (1866) in San Francisco,) enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,

Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,

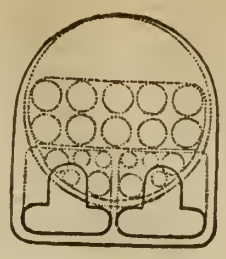
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,

Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this Safe. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; with out excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyncken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell. Craana & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steiamana, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts. 206 Front, cor. Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 75 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co, 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 120 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street

THE PUZZLED CENSUS TAKER.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

"Got any boys?" the Marshal said
To a lady from over the Rhine:
And the lady shook her flaxen head,
And civilly answered "Nine!" *

"Got any girls?" the Marshal said
To the lady from over the Rhine:
And again the lady shook her head,
And civilly answered "Nine!"

"But some are dead?" the Marshal said
To the lady from over the Rhine:
And again the lady shook her head,
And civilly answered "Nine!"

"Husband, of course?" the Marshal said
To the lady from over the Rhine:
And again she shook her flaxen head,
And civilly answered "Nine!"

"The d—l you have?" the Marshal said
To the lady from over the Rhine:
And again she shook her flaxen head,
And civilly answered "Nine!"

Now what do you mean by shaking your head,
And always answering "Nine?"
"Ich kan nicht English!" civilly said
The lady from over the Rhine.

*Nein (no) pronounced nine in the German.

About twenty years ago, when Franklin Pierce and the present Senator Clark stood at the head of the Hillsborough bar, in New Hampshire, there was upon the docket a celebrated suit called the "Horse Case," which, from its long continuance before the Courts, became familiar, by name at least, to nearly every one in the county. The action was one brought by Smith and Jones, livery-stable keepers, of Manchester, against one White, to recover the value of a pair of horses alleged to have been killed by the defendant while conveying an insane man from Manchester to the asylum at Concord. There was plenty of proof that the horses died soon after their arrival there; but the defendant took the ground that they died of disease, and not from being overheated, and that a sufficient time had been allowed to travel that distance with ease. Then it became necessary to show the jury the time of starting and the time of arrival at Concord. Plaintiffs brought to the witness-stand many citizens from Manchester and Concord; and, among the latter, a tall, bony, slab sided, lanky, sleepy-looking fellow, who officiated as hostler at the stable. I think it was Mr. Clark who conducted the cross-examination of this witness, and I give you the substance of the concluding portion:

"What time, Sir, did I understand you to say it was when the horses were driven up to the stable?"

"Just as I was goin' to dinner."

"What time was it when you went to dinner that day—by the clock?"

"Just twelve."

"To a minute, Sir?"

"Yes, Sir."

"What time was it when you went to dinner the day before—by the clock?"

"Just twelve."

"To a minute, Sir?"

"Yes, Sir."

"What time did you go to dinner the day before that—by the clock?"

"At twelve."

"To a minute, Sir?"

"Yes, Sir."

"And what time did you go to dinner a week previous—by the clock?"

"At twelve."

"To a minute, Sir?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Now, Sir, will you be kind enough to tell the jury what time you went to dinner three months before the last date—by the clock?"

"At twelve."

"To a minute, Sir?"

"Yes, Sir."

"That is all, Sir," said the counsel, with a gleam of satisfaction on his face and a glance at the jury, as much as to say, "That man has settled his testimony, gentlemen." And so we all thought till, just as he was leaving the stand, he turned to his questioner with a curious comical expression on his face, and drawled out, "That 'ere clock was out o' kilter, and hadn't been goin' for six months." There was a general roar in the gallery in which I sat. Mr. Clark sat down, and I noticed that the Judge had to use his handkerchief.—Harper's Magazine.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

FIRST PREMIUM 1857 — 1858 — EUREKA — 1864 — 1865

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 SANSOME ST. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by

M. BONNET,

Office—Express Building (up stairs),

N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,

San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS

Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,

Near corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

[200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 1?

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

603 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,

NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches

AT

The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,

No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

Main street, Petaluma.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,

San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO

WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine

Wines, Liquors and Segars,

NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,

Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description. All goods sold are warranted.

CHAS. E. HOPPS. THOS. DOWNING.

HOPPS & DOWNING,

House and Sign Painters,

NO. 22 SANSOME STREET,

Opp. the Cosmopolitan Hotel, San Francisco.

ORDERS FOR WHITENING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,

From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

MONDAY - - - MARCH 25th, 1867.

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship

SANTIAGO,

(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The AMERICA will sail on April 15th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE: 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides. Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.

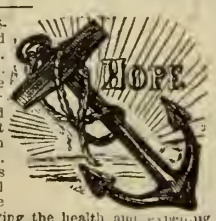
THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.



WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health and expelling disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions. Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Sypilis or Venerial Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleansos the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM. San Francisco,
and all Dealers

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter,

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,

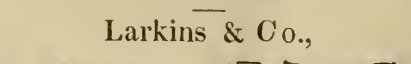
Carriage Manufactory,

NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work. A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,



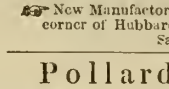
Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

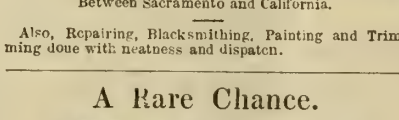
Pollard & Carvill,



Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.



THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

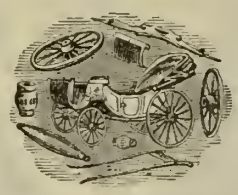
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.

Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.

H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of

Saddles, Harness and Collars,

North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand. Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CORNS!

DR. V. POPPER,

Surgeon Chiropedist,

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMP AN

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Office, No. 408 Montgomery Street

NEAR CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL (paid up) - - - $1,000,000 00
ASSETS Jan. 1, 1867, - - $1,093,131 92

PRESIDENT.....GEO. W. BEAVER
SECRETARY.....W W. WIGGINS
MARINE OFFICER.....CAPT. AMOS NOYES
SURVEYOR.....E. N. TORREY

Policies Issued and Losses Paid in Gold.

MARINE INSURANCE

....UPON....

Hulls, Cargoes, Treasure, Commissions, Profits and other Subjects of Marine Insurance, to and from all Ports in the World, including Inland Risks.

FIRE INSURANCE

....UPON....

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Rents, Vessels in Port, and their Cargoes, and other Insurable Property, --AT--

GREATLY REDUCED RATES!

MARINE AGENTS.

NEW YORK. MESSRS. EUGENE KELLY & CO.
HONOLULU....MESSRS C. BREWER & CO.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

JOSEPH A. DONOHOE.....Chairman.

JOHN G. BRAY,	ALBERT DIBBLEE,
H. W. HALLECK,	ABRAM BLOCK,
WILLIAM PIERCE,	JAS. H. DEERING,
JAS. T. DEANE,	GEO. F. BRAGG.

DIRECTORS.

J. W. Brittan,	Jos. A. Donohoe,
Albert Dibblee.	George W. Gibbs,
Abner H Barker,	R. G. Sneath.
James H. Deering,	Henry Barroilhet,
Henry S. Dexter,	Abram Block,
N. Van Bergen,	J. C. Johnson,
George F. Bragg,	J. T. Dean,
C. F. Fargo,	H. W. Halleck,
Henry L. King,	Henry L. Davis,
Charles Clayton,	T. E. Baugh,
Michael Reese,	S. C. Hastings,
George W. Dam,	C. A. Eastman,
Wm. G. Badger,	Benj. Hobart,
James W. Cox,	Levi Strauss,
Daniel Mayer,	Charles Lux,
Hiram Tubbs,	Jas. P. Goodwin,
Lloyd Tevis,	P. Maury, Jr.,
Alex. Forbes,	W. W. Montague,
Jos. B. Thomas,	Nicholas Larco,
Morris Speyer,	William Pierce,
John G. Bray,	E. H. Winchester,
H. L. Dodge,	E. V. Hathaway,
Walter N. Hawley,	N. C. Fussett,
Isaac E. Davis,	A. Hayward,
E. L. Goldstein,	Samuel Crim,
Daniel Murphy,	John Center,
Wm. H. Sharp,	Theo. Le Roy,
C. L. Taylor,	George C. Hickox,
J. S. Hutchinson,	O. F. Giffin,
Chas. M. Plum,	W. C. Talbot,
M. F. Jones,	A. J. Bryant,
S. Heydenfeldt,	James Phelan,
Abram Seligman,	Geo. V. Beaver,
Thomas Breeze,	C. C. Knox,
F. P. McMahon,	Jas. P. Pierce,
J. C. Wilmerding,	W. W. Wiggins,
Anthony Chabot,	J. B. Roberts.
John F. Miller,

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

JACOB SHEW,

Pioneer Photographer

612 CLAY STREET,

North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

HOW STEBBINS GOT SLEWED A SLEIGHING.

BY THE "FAT CONTRIBUTOR."

Great flakes of snow the air did fill, clothing in white both dale and hill; livery men rubbed their hands in glee, the fall of the "beautiful snow" to see. They know that their customers never mutter atany price for a horse and cutter, (so they make their bread and butter), and snow brings gains beyond their dreams, for the use of four and six horse teams. Young Stebbins saw the snow a falling, and that very day he went out a calling, on his Dulcina, Susie Brown—there isn't a prettier girl in town—and asked at once without delaying, if she would go with him out sleighing. Susie smiled and looked quite happy, turning inquiringly to her pappy, who had no objection to letting the pride of his house go out on a little sleigh ride. He remembered, no doubt, the days of his youth, when Susie's mother was younger in truth; and a pleasure it was by night or day, to glide o'er the road in a one-horse sleigh.

The shades of night were falling fast, when along the Millcreek road there passed a horse and sleigh with two young folks covered with robes and shawls and cloaks. A maiden, with blooming cheeks and fair, the snow flakes shining in her hair, like pearls at night out on a "tare.", Tune up your harp, my gentle muse-e the maiden fair was Stebbins' Susie, and the festive youth who held the "ribbons," was no one else but Susie's Stebbins!

Away they glide, this joyous load, passing all others on the road; the steed himself enjoyed the fun, sometimes trotting and then on a run; to beat his pace no horse was able, although he came from a livery stable. Almost as quick as I tell it to you the Mill Creek House appeared in view, and then they stopped their foaming steed, not, as Stebbins said, "to feed," but on the sly—the wicked thing, to get a hot gin-sling. Poor Susie in the parlor thinking of the happy hours the snow was linking, little dreamed that Steb. was drinking.

One sling in, he wanted another, "just for company," he said, "for its brother," and he slung in slings of gin and sich till he felt himself immensely rich, and wanted to bet a pile of "tin" no one could beat him driving in. "Bring forth the horse!" The horse was brought, the pair got in, and quick as thought away, away and on they dash, Stebbins laying on the lash, torrents less rapid and less rash, and Susie crying she'd left her sash! But Stebbins, having stuffed his skin with red-hot slings of Holland gin, swore he didn't care a pin; no one should beat him into town, if she'd left everything 'cept her gown.

Flying swift by the Millcreek stream, a snow bank—then a sudden scream—the sleigh tipped over—out they shot, over the fence into a vacant lot. The horse kept on at a smashing pace, and never slackened in the race till he met his owner face to face.

There is a moral to our tale that should be heeded by every male. Don't drink slings 'till you are slung into a lot from out your "pung;" and when you are out on a little whirl, desiring simply to sleigh your girl, be careful, sir—don't think us rude—that in sleighing her, you don't get slew'd.—Cincinnati Weekly Times.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,

DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.

—ALSO—

The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.

A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.

JACOB SCHREIBER,

Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L. REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L. LIEN, PETER S. McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California and Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court diasolving the honds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general belief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply ro the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk, By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS THOMAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of Thomas Thomas, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed: that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid: and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Thomas Thomas, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the twenty-sixth day of MARCH, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Thomas Thomas deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said twenty-sixth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a news paper printed and published in the said City and County

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 21st, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. 123 5t.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of MINA HOFFMAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Isaac D. Barnard, Executor of the last will and testament of Mina Hoffman, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of the will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Mina Hoffman, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the last will and testament of the said deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said Tuesday the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, }

I Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Petitioner.

February 16th, 1867. fe16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator, and the Admiuistrator of the estate of Caroline Huebner, deceased. mh2-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS KEENAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, northwest corner of Sacramento and Sansome streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, Msrch 2d, A. D. 1867.

mh2-5t THOMAS BREEZE,

Administrator of Estate of Thomas Keenan, deceased.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE H. HOSSEFROSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by R. H. Sinton and H. M. Whitmore, the Executors of the last will of George H. Hosselross, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate and also all the personal property of the estate of George H. Hossefross, deceased, to pay the debts due by the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the eighteenth day of March A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executors to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary; and also the personal property of deceased.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 12th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. }

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap Attys. for Petitioners.

fe16-5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased. mh2-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF JOHN THOMAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.

J. F. FINN, Atty for Administrator. fe16-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at the office of Haight & Pierson, No. 510 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, February 19, 1867.

ROBERT HAIGHT, Administrator of the Estate of Jese A. Feliz, dec'd. mh9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MICHAEL HINES, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM, Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased. mh9-5t

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MARCH.

March 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Maury.

March 30—GOLDEN AGE, Captain James T. Watkins, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE AND TELEGRAPHIC INSTITUTE.

(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)

408 CALIFORNIA ST.

THIS INSTITUTION IS DESIGNED TO PREPARE Boys and Men

FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,

And to impart a thorough

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,

IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH AND MERCHANDISE,

rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He

COMMENCES SPECULATION,

Carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,

A regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of

ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.

This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph Operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the departments, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE.....SOLE PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....BUSINESS MANAGER
C. L. GRAVES,.....STAGE MANAGER
W. STEVENSON,.....TREASURER

First Appearance (on any Stage) of
MISS PAULINE CONGER,
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, 1867.

ALICE KINGSBURY AS "TELULA."

Will be presented Sheridan Knowles' Great Play of
THE WIFE—A TALE OF MANTUA.

MARIANA.....MISS CONGER
Julian St. Pierre.....John McCullough
Ferrardo Gonzaga.....H. Edwards
Leonardo (for this occasion).....Pierpont Thayer

To conclude with 2 Acts of the Great Melodrame,
THE CHILD OF THE SAVANNA.

TELULA.....MISS KINGSBURY
Don Alphonso.....J. McCullough

The rest of the cast embracing the entire strength of the Company.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, MARCH 16TH,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
PAUVRETTE.

THIS EVENING, MARCH 16TH,
Miss Kingsbury will appear in the Drama of
THE THREE GUARDSMEN.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle	$1 00	Orchestra	$1 00
Parquette	50	Upper Circle	25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

AMERICAN THEATRE.

EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTION.

Will shortly be presented to the public of San Francisco, Poly glot Representation of Shakespeare's Grand Tragedy of OTHELLO!
In English,
In French,
In German,
In Danish,
By the following Artists in the principal Roles: Mr. George Pennefort, Mons. Bonnet, Herr Boger, P. Thayer, Belle Divine, Fraulein Meyer.

☞ Full particulars and time will be announced in Programmes and in the daily papers.

DR. BENTON

WILL CONTINUE HIS SERIES OF LECTURES upon the subject of PSYCHOLOGY, MAGNETISM and its kindred sciences, at CONGRESS HALL, Bush street, on FRIDAY and SATURDAY EVENINGS, 22d and 23d inst., at 7 1-2 o'clock. The lectures will be illustrated by a variety of very amusing and astonishing experiments upon persons in the audience, showing also that the Electrical or Magnetic Currents, properly directed, are the best and safest method of curing disease. TICKETS FOR GENTS, 50 CENTS; Ladies and Children, Free.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOON Dr. Benton will give a FREE LECTURE, for LADIES ONLY, at 3 o'clock, at Congress Hall.

☞N. B.—Office for treatment, over Congress Hall. mh16-1t

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL
AUCTIONEERS.

OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.

W. A. QUARLES, Auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY.

WEDNESDAY.....MARCH 20, 1867
At 12 o'clock, M.,

Extra Credit Sale,

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE GERMANIA SAVINGS & BUILDING UNION.

TERMS—One quarter Cash; one-qnarter in 1 year; one quarter in 2 years; one quarter in 3 years.

Deferred payments to be secured on the property, bearing interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, interest payable every three months.

57 Building Lots,

Situated on Post, Buchanan, Fulton, Octavia, Waller, Kate, Webster and Fillmore streets. The Lots are all on the Grade. Title perfect

☞These Lots are so located that they can easily be reached without the aid of Street Railroad Cars, and therefore afford a great saving to families. Those farthest off are alongside the Protestant Orphan Asylum, within three blocks from the San Jose Railroad Depot, in a most delightful valley, free from the prevailing winds and fogs, with fine shrubbery on the ground. Those located on Fulton and Octavia and on Post and Buchanan streets, are no farther off from the City Hall than the corner of Third and Townsend streets, all surrounded by dwellings, and having fine views.

☞The Germania Savings and Building Union will extend loans for building upon those lands, with little or no expense to purchasers.

☞Maps and Diagrams are placed at the junction of Market and Valencia streets, at the Odeum and upon the ground.

MAURICE DORE & CO, Auctioneers

HOMESTEAD LOTS!!

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON'S

Great Credit Sale

...OF..

350 LOTS!

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

Monday Next, March 18th,

AT

Platt's Hall,

☞CALL AND PROCURE MAPS.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
Auctioneers,
404 MONTGOMERY STREET.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
MARCH
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

The Chinese Classics, by James Legge, D. D., 4 vols.
Chinese and English Phrase Book, by Benoni Lauctot.
The China Pilot.
The Gulf of Siam Pilot.
The Open Polar Sea, by Dr. I. I. Hayes.
Berlin and Sans Souci, by Mrs L. Muhlbach
Ancient and Modern Greece, by C. C. Felton, 2 vols.
The Claverings, a Novel, by Anthony Trollope.
Charles Wesley seen in his finer and less familiar Poems.
Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures.
Life of Jesus, by Edmund Kirke.
Two Marriages—Tauchnitz edition, paper.
For Ever and Ever, a Novel, by Florence Marryat.
Youmen's Observations on the Scientific Study of Human Nature.
Schaff's History of the Christian Church.
Froude's History of England, vols. 7 and 8.
The Adventures of a Griffin on a Voyage of Discovery, written by himself.
History of Scotland, by Rev. James Mackenzie.
Fairy Tales, by Prof. Henry Morley.
My Father's Garden, by Thomas Miller.
Manual of Freemasonry, by Richard Carlile.
Mysteries of Freemasonry, by John Fellows, A. M.
The Rob Roy on the Baltic, a Canoe cruise.
Records of Five Years, by Grace Greenwood.
The Financial Ecooomy of the United States Illustrated, by John A. Ferris, A. M.
Historical Memoirs of Friends, by William Hodgsou.
En Avant, Messieurs! Being a Tutor's Counsel to his Pupils, by Rev. G. H. D. Mathiae, M. A.
Beechenbrook, a Rhyme of the War, by Margaret J. Preston.
The Handy Volume Shakespeare Pocket edition, 5 vols., paper.
Journal and Correspondence of Miss Berry, edited by Lady Theresa Lewis.
Journal of Maurice de Guerin.
The Complete Phonographer, by James E. Munson.
The Holiday Chaplet, by A. L. O. E.
Two Marriages, by Miss Muloch, author of "John Halifax," etc. 12mo., cloth.
Bayard Taylor's Colorado.
Pickwick Papers, diamond edition, complete in one volume.
Studies in English, by Schele De Vere, L.L.D.
Half Hours with the Best Letter-Writers, by Charles Knight.
Cyclopedia of Freemesonry, edited by Robert Macoy.
Braithwaite's Retrospect for January, 1867.
The Slide Valve, by N. P. Burgh.
New Guide to the Sheet Iron and Boiler Plate Roller.
Poems, by Mrs. Frances Dana Gage.
Morning by Morning; or, Daily Readings, by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Lange's Commentary on Acts.
Joseph II and his Court, by L. Muhlbach.
Brought to Light—a Tale of England and America.
Tribune Almanac and Political Register for 1867.
Recollections of Henry W. Allen, by Sarah A. Dorsey.
Shimeall's Political Economy of Prophecy.
Sunday Magazine for 1866. Sold only by subscription.
Good Words for 1866. Sold only by subscription.
Parlo Social—a Hand Book.
Practical Guide for Paris and the Rhine.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,
Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

HOUSEKEEPERS'
Protection & Relief Society.

HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,
And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY.

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

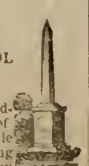
623 COMMERCIAL STREET,

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up staire for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

HAGAN & HORGAN,

Marble - Workers,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.



Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NAYLOR C. DAVIS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John H Madison, Administrator of the Estate of Naylor C. Davis, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs at law of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 15th day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs at law of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 11th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM LOEWY, Clerk.
m16 5t By WM. LEDLIE, Deputy Clerk.
CHAS WITTRAM, Esq., Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN NERAC, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brunnagim, the Administrator with the Will annexed of the Estate of Ellen Nerac, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisee named in the Will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate to the party entitled thereto:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the devisee of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said sixteenth day of April A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 14th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco,

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and stamp.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JECHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner m16 5t

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,

Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN.
JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIA
Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

TO ALL SUFFERING HUMANITY

WHO
VALUE HEALTH AND CHERISH LIFE.

Healey's Rheumatic Liniment

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivaled.

Price Fifty Cents and One Dollar per bottle.

☞Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 18. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 23, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Mining Experiences in California, by Prentice; A Hygienic Humbug, by John Clerk; The McCrackens Abroad; A Lofty Revenge; LION'S MOUTH: Betrayed into Matrimony; The Insane Correspondent of the Bulletin; The Power of the Press; The Red Bandanna. Literary Gleanings; Dramatic Affairs, etc. POETRY: Dreaming, by John Clerk, Love's Seasons, by T L. Johns; John Center, by James Linen. SELECTED: The Story of Rufus Helstone; A Parenthesis or two; Souvenirs of the Sanctum; Men's Vanity; Billiards, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

The Red Bandanna.

Who, now, owns a red bandanna handkerchief? Aye, more—who will own one? Some one, a few days since, dropped such an article on the stairs leading to the CALIFORNIAN Office. It was picked up and brought in. Its ownership was vainly sought. No one would claim it.

It was unanimously rejected by the compositors. The foreman admitted such articles to have been fashionable twenty-five years ago, but at present no sympathy existed between him and red handannas. Said one to the senior editor, "You've lost your handkerchief," pointing to the unclaimed bandanna. "My handkerchief!" and a cloud o'erspread the brow of the chieftain; "that my handkerchief! I carry a red bandanna?" and he scuffled indignantly out of the disorderly sanctum.

Enter Mr. B. "Mr. B., we've found your handkerchief." Such were the words which fell on Mr. B's. ears. Mr. B. took time to collect his thoughts. He was not fully certain he had lost such an article. Sometimes he might carry one, and then again he might not. It was not best under any circumstances to treat lightly the announcement that he had lost a pocket handkerchief, because in these times handkerchiefs are handkerchiefs. He was about instituting a search in his pockets when his eyes fell upon the red bandanna. Then his brow became cloudy. His face, more expressive than words, said: "Do these people imagine me capable of using a red bandanna handkerchief? Have I no greater reputation than this for taste in dress?" He sat down and endenvored to converse in his usual vein, but to no purpose. The red bandanna had cast a shadow on him. People thought him capable of carrying the red bandanna.

It was proffered to the Dramatic man Had he lost a handkerchief? T——m is a man of the world, quick to think and slow to act where vital interests are concerned. If some one had lost a nice linen handkerchief it might be that he stood ready to claim it. But when the fatal bandanna was thrust before his eyes, not all his habitual self-command could restrain him from a slight recoil. The red bandanna with all its accompanying disagreeable associations, entered into his soul. His face assumed its most intense expression of disgust, which would have rendered doubly nauseous a dose of rhubarb.

Red bandannas are worn about the necks of dusty herdsmen in the interior; they used to be a conspicuous feature in the gay faudango and form a part of the boliday trappings of Mrs. and Miss Foo Chee. And so the red bandanna still lies upon the office desk unclaimed. It has been offered time and again, and still no owner comes. There must be a stigma attached to its ownership. It is contemned by fashion. Poor bandanna!

An Absurd Question.

Our agricultural contemporary publishes on its first page an article headed with the ridiculous interrogatory—"Shall our girls live, or die?" They shall live, certainly. We can't afford to let them die; for, in such an event, what would become of the human race? What would the boys do if the girls should all die? What would become of all the picnics, and the games of forfeits, Copenhagen, courtiug, kissing, et cetera? The jewelers and dry goods dealers would be forced to shut up shop; the vendors of tilting-hoops and accompanying fixings would be ruined; store-clothes and immaculate linen would speedily become unfashionable, men would run wild and the world lapse into barbarism. We cannot possibly get along without the girls. So long as they are girls—and even after they have become matronly women, with grave household cares and duties—let them linger in this vale of tears to brighten it. Our girls have no notion of dying, if rounded forms, rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes have any significance. Stick to your cabbages and turnips, Mr. Farmer, leave the girls to us, and we'll warrant them to live, and enjoy it.

Lottie Lorimer on The Vanity of Men.

We have received the following letter from a young lady, who made a most unwarrantable attack on the male sex. Men have a right to criticise the weakness of women. Women should exalt man to the station of a god—consider him perfect in every particular. We are deeply shocked at the following

LETTER FROM LOTTIE LORIMER.

Dear Lion: Will you please roar a little for me? I'm a woman, but I don't think that an honest masculine lion ought to think any the worse of me on that account. I want justice. I want you to give a good loud, earnest roar against the men who are continually talking of female vanity as if vanity were a foible especially feminine. We are continually chaffed (that's a word my big brother uses, and though I know it's thought wrong to talk slang by some straight-laced people, I think some slang words very expressive and I will use them whatever people may say) about our fondness for looking at our faces in mirrors. If we have pretty faces, why should we not look at them? But that is not what I was going to say. I want to know if men are not quite as fond of looking at their faces in mirrors as the ladies are. Isn't there a great big splendid mirror in nearly every cigar store in the city? Havn't I seen dozens of men, when their cigars weren't out, and they knew it, walk into a cigar store, pretend to light their cigars, and then turn around to the mirror and twirl their moustaches? OH! I've no patience with these hyprocrites, who pretend that they never care about looking in a mirror; that if it were not for women all the mirrors in existence might be smashed, and that women look at their faces more than men! Why, I ask, are those mirrors placed in the cigar stores? Don't men like to look at their faces? Oh, no. Tell me please; roar a good loud roar, and oblige

LOTTIE LORIMER.

We were grieved when we read this letter. We are sorry that Lottie Lorimer, who is, we are sure, a very nice young lady, in spite of her prejudices, should have arrived at such a false conclusion from the fact that mirrors may be seen in cigar stores. These mirrors are not hung up in cigar stores for the purpose of encouraging the growth of the feminine vice of vanity in the masculine sex. No! Every respectable cigar store has a mirror for the purpose of assisting its customers to light their cigars properly. Lottie Lorimer may laugh at this statement, but it is nevertheless a fact. If a cigar is not properly lighted it may run down on one side, and give discomfort instead of pleasure to the smoker. If a man will take the pains to look steadfastly at the reflection in the mirror of the outer end of his cigar, and will apply with due care and deliberation the fire to that end, his cigar will smoke well from the beginning to the end. We can assure Lottie Lorimer that for this reason alone are mirrors placed in cigar stores.

The Insane Correspondent of the "Bulletin."

"Moffat Weir," the Sacramento correspondent of the Bulletin, who, as we have stated before, we have good reason to suppose is Professor Gilliard, the unfortunate negro who became insane and was reported to have been sent to the Stockton Lunatic Asylum, is getting worse. In his letter dated March 18th, he, after remarking that Mrs. Laura Cuppy, who gave a series of popular lectures on Spiritualism and other subjects at Maguire's Opera House in this city, has been drawing large audiences at Turn Verein Hall, says:

"Mrs. Cuppy, in spite of Shakespeare's unconditional assertion to the contrary, has induced a very large number of travelers to return for a brief period from that bourne from which no traveler e'er returns, and likewise to give some tabular statistics concerning the climate, geography, staple products and inhabitants of the bourne."

He then gives a sample of the manifestations elicited by the agency of Mrs. Laura Cuppy:

"For instance, the shade of Wilson Flint having been invoked and busily engaged in pounding out answers into the material world, with a very awkward table, to numerous foolish questions, some irreverent fellow sent up the inquiry, 'Have you, Flint, yet struck fire?'"

He then continues:

"On emerging from one of the entertainments I passed a young man respectably dressed but with a sinister expression in his countenance, who must have been the asker of the malign question, for while others were expressing respectful wonder at the manifestations, he said, with a cruel sneer, that if she had lived a century or so agone Mrs. Cuppy would have been burned for saucery, but that now sensible persons knew that she was merely cracked—a brace of such execrable puns as very clearly manifested the badness of his heart."

Now as Mrs. Cuppy confines herself entirely to delivering lectures, is not a medium, through which communications are given by raps, never has practised with awkward tables or educated tables, nor asked the spirits either foolish or sensible questions in public, the sooner Professor Gilliard, alias "Moffat Weir," the Sacramento correspondent of the Bulletin, is really sent to the Stockton Lunatic Asylum, the better it will be for the readers of that journal. He is not only a maniac, but a deliberately untruthful maniac. He did not go to one of Mrs. Cuppy's "entertainments," did not pass a young man "with a sinister expression of countenance," and no young man except Professor Gilliard, otherwise "Moffat Weir," made silly puns about Mrs. Cuppy, whose lectures simply display the fruits of a cultivated mind, extensive reading and patient thought. We are troubled about the Bulletin at present. It is not as respectable as it was some months ago, and is getting very silly. Is the editor out of town?

Betrayed into Matrimony.

Our rich and estimable fellow citizen, Michael Reese, is in sore distress. Mrs. Caroline P. Clark has sued him for breach of promise of marriage, and may prove the giving of the promise and the breach thereof. If there were in the United States a law such as was introduced in the English Parliament in 1770 it is possible that Michael Reese might completely turn the tables on the widow. The act to which we allude provides as follows:

"All women, of whatever age, rank, profession, or degree, whether they shall be maids or widows, that shall from and after this act impose upon and betray into matrimony any of his Majesty's male subjects by paints, scents, cosmetic washes, artificial teeth, false hair, spanish wool, iron stays, hoops, high-heel shoes, or bolstered hips, they shall incur the penalty of the law now in force against witchcraft and like misdemeanors; and the marriage, upon conviction, shall stand null and void."

We do not know whether or not the widowed plaintiff wears false hair in the form of a water-fall, we do not know whether or not Mrs. Caroline P. Clark bolsters her hips; but it is possible that Michael Reese could, by bribing her female acquaintances, or otherwise, find out. If it be proven that this Caroline P. Clark has deliberately attempted to "betray into matrimony" the young, handsome and confiding Michael Reese, by paints, cosmetic washes, artificial teeth, false hair, spanish wool, iron stays, hoops, high-heel shoes or bolstered hips, or, indeed, by false calves, patent palpitators or any such devices, we do beseech the jury to bring in a verdict against her; and if the Judge would on this occasion strain the law a little, and order the aforesaid designing widow to be arrested for witchcraft, we should be pleased. But if, on the other hand, Michael Reese is indeed as is alleged a Don Juan, a betrayer and deceiver of widows; if Michael Reese did promise to marry Caroline P. Clark, did entangle her affections by bestowing on her costly gifts of partly-worn-out-pantaloons, masses of rich gingerbread (far more wholesome than sponge cake) and photographic likenesses of himself; if Michael Reese did this, and still refuses to marry Caroline P. Clark, then let the jury bring in a verdict compensating the black-eyed widow for the injury which Michael Reese has inflicted on her.

The Power of The Press.

The influence for either good or evil which a first-class journal may exert is incalculable. It is with feelings of gratitude to the Providence which ordained that the Times should be started in this city, that we observe that this first-class journal has discovered that it has already accomplished some good. In Wednesday's issue it says:

"A few days since, we commented upon the impropriety of sentencing criminals without any regard being had to their previous good or bad character, and endeavored to demonstrate the injustice of such a course, both to those who had offended against the laws repeatedly, and to those who were first offenders. We then stated it as our opinion that the Judges of criminal courts were in duty bound to examine into the antecedents of convicted prisoners, previously to sentencing them, and to take their record into consideration in deciding upon the punishment to be inflicted."

The Times stated its opinion. It continues:

"It is at all times gratifying to find that suggestions put forward by the press for the good of the community are received and acted upon in a proper spirit by the officials, in whose power it lies to remedy the evil to which their attention has been drawn; for the press unfortunately but too often receive credit only for some sinister intention, or the furtherance of selfish objects"

In consequence of the Times having stated its opinion, the principal criminal Courts in this city and county—so it says—"have adopted the practice of consulting the police record of criminals before sentencing them." If we were not blessed with a Times the Judges would inflict the same sentence on the old jail bird as on the neophyte in crime; the man who once in six months became inebriated would receive the same punishment as the habitual drunkard. Let us all subscribe for the Times, which made the astounding discovery that an old offender against the law should be punished with more severity than a beginner in crime—the Times, which invented the system of "graduated punishment"—the Times, which first suggested to the Judges the propriety of searching the Police records before sentencing a prisoner. This reform has been accomplished in "a few days!" Truly the Power of the Press is great!

Too Much Appetite.

There is a class of people in this city who go sometimes many days without a "square meal." How they support life is a mystery. Judging from an anecdote related to us by a friend, they seek that variety of food best calculated to satisfy an appetite and keep it satisfied. One of the "Great Impecunious" helped himself to a cracker from the counter over which are dispensed oysters in a saloon not far from the corner of Clay and Montgomery streets. On the cracker he poured some tomato ketchup. "That's good to raise an appetite," said the oyster man. Impecunious had almost taken a bite, but on hearing this he stopped. "Good to raise an appetite?" he remarked, inquiringly. "Yes, of course it is," was the reply. "Then I'll none of it," said Impecunious. "I haven't sat down to a table for a fortnight I want no more appetite than what I've got. Anything that raises more appetite I must avoid to escape starvation." And he dropped the appetizing morsel and fled.

New Version of an Old Proverb.

'Tis the last morsel that fills the Lion's maw!

THE STORY OF RUFUS HELSTONE.

TROUBLES, calamities, judgments of God—ay, sir, they seem terrible when they come one after another on a man's head; but, to my thinking, the most terrible thing of all that can happen to a bad man is that the Almighty should forget him, and let him alone. Sit down, sir, and let me tell you what happened in this very house, and round about it, when I was a lad, and what has happened since; all winding from one clue into one piece.

As far back as my memory serves me, the Lodge Farm was tenanted by a family of the name of Helstone, and it is of my master, Rufus Helstone, that I am going to speak as a man God let alone. The Lodge has been gutted by fire since his time, but it was then kept in good repair, and looked outside much as it must have looked in old days, when ladies on a journey, whom the monks might not entertain in the abbey, rode up to its door and claimed a night's lodging and hospitality. There is enough of the ancient walls left to suggest what it was originally, but only just enough; and inside all the fine old stonework and woodwork are gone. But the shafts of the oriel window stood the fire, and that was reglazed, and there it is—a grand window, sir, and most beautiful for seeing the moonlight on the water. It was and is the dormitory for the farm-servants.

I must ask you to go back with me to one night at the end of the last century, when there was everywhere upsetting, overturning, and war in the world, and we were fighting the French at sea. It was harvest-time, and the moon was nearly at full. The oriel window let in the light broad as day, but a more wakeful light. I can sleep in the sun, but the moon shining on my face is like a bad dream to me even now. I had my straw mattress in the darkest corner, but a very little stir would rouse me on these clear nights. At the time I am speaking of, there were only two of the farm-servants housed at the Lodge besides myself, the shepherd and waggoner—young men, and I but a lad to do odd jobs about the place, and help everybody.

Yes, sir, I was a sailor since. I have been round the world, and have seen fifty years of adventures. But for an event to which I shall presently come, here I might have dug and delved all my life at the earth, never raising my eyes above it. I thank God that He has given me a wider view of His world.

Shaw, the shepherd, was a solitary sort of man. I hardly remember the sound of his voice. He always whistled to his dog, and liked the dumb beast's company better than any Christian's. Waggoner was a rough, good-natured fellow, not readier with kicks and curses than most of his kind. He hardly belongs to my tale. Moonlight or storm were all the same to him. He slept and snored to drown the roaring of the wind in the big chimney on the loudest night. But shepherd was a restless mortal. He knew the stars, and had a deal of queer out-of-the-way knowledge that was not good for him. Not a bird could cry but it was an omen, not a leaf could fall but it was a sign. He knew all the ways of the forest, and all the wild stories people told of what had been done in it since the days when the Norman kings who conquered England made hunting-grounds of their corn-fields and habitations south and north, and were tracked and taken by strange deaths, they or their sons, as they pursued the game over cold hearth-stones. When Shaw did talk, it was of such things as these; and he would always dwell on the dark end of his legends with a fierce enjoying pleasure. He could neither read nor write, but he had a wonderful memory and noticing power; and, if he had got the chance. I suppose he might have been made a scholar. But he did not get the chance.

A favorite notion of his was that somewhere in the abbey there was a hidden treasure. What monastic ruin has not its tradition of rich coffined relics and secret hoards of gold? Ours has, of course. Shaw spent his Sunday afternoons there instead of in church, and it was a joke against him that he spent them questing for gold—a joke he sullenly resented as no joke, being convinced in his mind that a treasure there was, and that sooner or later he should find it. And the strangest thing of all is, sir, that he did find it. I know he found it, though I never handled it, nor even saw the glitter of the coin He found it, and it was his destruction.

That night of which I have spoken was the time, and I was the witness. He had lain down in his place, and had fallen asleep while I was still walking. He tossed, he groaned, he sat up; I think I can see him now, his white face that never tanned, his black hair and eyes, in the ghostly brightness of the moonlit room. He scared me wider awake than ever; but presently he dropped into another uneasy sleep, from which he started a second time. The same thing was repeated; but at the third time he got up and dressed himself with stealthy haste, saying over and over, with a low chuckling glee that sounded awful in the hush, "I see where it is! I see where it is! I see where it is!"

I lay very still, very still, holding my breath till he went out, when I put on my clothes and crept after him. He had left the door ajar, and I saw him just disappearing under the trees, with a pick over his shoulder. I said to myself that he would kill me if he discovered me following him. But I followed, slipping from tree to tree and from shadow to shadow. More than once I thought I saw another man besides himself; but when I looked earnestly to make the figure out, there was none. Shaw never glanced behind him—indeed, he was, no doubt, so possessed by his object that he did not think of pursuit and detection. He came to the abbey, and went straight to a certain spot in the ruins (which I will show you, sir, if you please), where the moonlight was very strong. Without delay he tore the long grass away at the foot of the wall (there is no ivy on that part), and slowly, with his pick, levered out a stone. Then he knelt down. I did not dare to go near enough to see what it was he took from behind it and clutched to his breast with suppressed laughter; but something he did take out, and take away, forgetting the pick that had dropped in the grass. Fast he set off towards the cliffs. Where could he be going, I wondered. He went down and down the rift, and, when he had got nearly to the bottom, he stopped all on a sudden. I supposed that he had just remembered the pick. He did not, however, return for it, but began to scrape away the dead leaves and soil with his hands under a clump of hollies, and there he concealed his treasure, carefully covering it up and drawing the boughs to the earth to hide that it had been disturbed. It was likely to be safe enough; few people went or came that way.

Then, sure that he would not remove it again that night, I crept, and crawled, and ran to get back to my bed, and had barely time to cast off my clothes and hide myself breathless in my gloomy corner when he returned. The rest of the night I slept, and I hope so did he, though he was up before me, and when I looked into the tool-shed there was the pick in its usual place, so that he must have fetched it from the ruins the very first thing.

All that morning there was about Shaw an air of suppressed exultation, which Master Helstone, when he saw him, remarked with a sneer, "You'll be finding that pot o' gold soon, Shaw," said he. "You have a look of good luck about you to-day."

"That's more than I can say for you, master," was shepherd's reply.

I had no chance of getting to the abbey, much as I wanted to view the place where Shaw had prised the stone out of the wall. I was clearing the flower-borders in the garden until dusk, and as I was putting by my tools he came and took away the spade. What I began at once to anticipate happened that night. Shaw got up when the Lodge was all quiet, and stole out again, I following him as before. For ever so long he went up and down the orchard, seeking a good place to hide his treasure. Where three of the biggest crab-trees stand in a triangle, their roots writhed in and out of the earth, he dug a hole, neither wide nor deep: for I looked at it well while he was gone to the rift to bring his treasure. When he returned with it he sat down and nursed it, hugged it, wept over it, seemed hardly able to put it out of his sight. I got back safe, and after about half an hour he came back too.

Now I had shepherd's secret I did not like it; it became the terror of my life. He gave up his Sunday afternoon visits to the rains, and sat either in the orchard itself or in the kitchen which looked upon it. I had opportunities enough now of going to the ruins, but I never ventured. He had taken on to be suspicious. From being a silent man, he became a mute; but the stealthy watchfulness of his eyes was everywhere, especially on me. I hardly dared sleep of nights lest he should do me a mischief, and when they grew long with the coming on of winter, I began to cast about in my mind how I would run away from the farm and go to sea. But I kept my plan very close for fear Shaw should forestall me with his hand or his knife at my throat.

Running away, however, was not so easy; and at last I told Master Helstone, one morning when we were afield together, that I wanted to leave the Lodge, and I told him why. I never knew till then that master was a bad man.

"Shsh!" hissed he, as he gathered my meaning, and glanced over his shoulder either way, as if the birds of the air might carry the matter to Shaw.

As I looked at him I wished heartily I had kept my own counsel, for now I saw that I had two enemies to dread instead of one, and that Master Helstone was the more dangerous. For the rest of that day he never let me out of his sight. He was plotting what he would do. Early the next morning he sent Shaw off to Southampton with some sheep for the butcher, and me he ordered into the garden to work under the mistress's eye. He disappeared for a few hours, but about noon he came and told me to go down to the rift and gather an armful of holly to deck the Lodge for Christmas, which was close at hand. This was, indeed, unless my memory fails me, Christmas-Eve.

The finest hollies and the richest in red berries grow near the bottom, and I had cut a big bundle and pocketed my knife again, when I was suddenly pounced on by two kidnappers of the press-gang, which was always on the prowl in the great war time. "In the King's name," said they; but I knew it was Helstone's doing, though I held my tongue, except to tell them I'd as lief serve his Majesty as my master. The men laughed, and one of them answered that there was then no love lost between us, for my master had given them a golden guinea apiece to rid him of me.

My adventures at sea have no place in this history, so I must ask you, sir, to skip over the three years' cruise that made a sailor of me, and land with me on the Hard of Portsmouth. I had shore-going leave of three weeks while the War-Horse took in her stores for another cruise, and as the weather was fine and hay-harvest in progress, I walked over to Southampton to look up old friends The first I dropt on was waggoner coming into the town with a load of grass, and he told me a deal that was news. The master he said, was flourishing like a green bay-tree. He had added the High Farm to Lodge Farm, and was growing mighty rich and prosperous, and bringing up his sons like young squires. He said a queer thing had happened on the same day I went away—the shepherd had run stark mad. By bit and bit, from one and another, I got the whole story, but I got it from Helstone himself chiefly. I was not afraid of the face of any man now, and I went openly to see my old master, and ask him how he did; taking heed you may be sure, not to betray that I knew the good turn he had done me three years and a half before.

I thought he was a little uneasy at first sight of me, but that went off, and he began to inquire if I recollected a cock-and bull story I had told him of a treasure that Shaw, the shepherd, had found in the ruins, and buried in the orchard. "Oh yes," I said, "I recollect it; and was there no treasure there?" "No," he replied, "nothing at all. Shepherd's pranks of hiding and seeking had ended in dangerous insanity; and though his ravings were all of gold, no gold had ever been discovered in any of his haunts." I believed only as much of this as I pleased; but I kept my countenance, and asked what had become of Shaw after. Master raised his voice, and staring me full in the eyes, as if he defied my thoughts, said he had died in the madhouse at Southampton. "The best thing God could send him, if he was mad, was death," I said.

When I came home from my second cruise, which was not for nearly seven years, Helstone was still in his place, and richer, and higher, and mightier than ever. All things had gone well with him, and all men spoke well of him. I remember one woman in the village who had barely enough to keep body and soul together, pointing out to me how the Lord had blest him; how he had laid farm to farm, and house to house; how he had been forced to pull down his barns and build bigger, to store his fine harvests; but when I came to inquire if he was a merciful man and a charitable man to the poor, she said, "Oh no, there was not a harder man in the forest; but see how the Lord prospered him." I answered nothing, but I thought in my heart that the Lord was only letting him alone. It was easy for hard and greedy men to get rich in those bad times.

In my next cruise, which was only a short one, we had a fight with the French off the coast of Spain, and I got the wound that disabled me for service aboard ship. But I was not disabled altogether for a life of adventure; and when I was out of hospital, I made an engagement with a party of scientific gentleman to go on an expedition to Australia. Peace had been made, the old king was dead, and Bonaparte was dead and buried in his sea-island prison before I came back. Ay, sir, what a story that of Bonaparte's will be in the ages to come! Rufus Helstone was a Bonaparte in a small way—a strong man without scruples. When I was at Southampton again in the year 1824, he was still alive, a hale and hearty man, with an easy satisfied air; the world had gone so very well with him, that he may have come to think his prosperity the best proof of his deserts. Well, sir, well, we know whether that is so or not; man looks on the outward appearance, but God looks at the heart.

I was away in America for another six years, and when I came home again Helstone's place knew him no more. He had dropt and died one day, without a word, at his own gate, while he was driving a bargain with a cattle-dealer from Portsmouth. His sons buried him with much pomp and vanity; but no sooner had the grave closed over his head, than the luck that had followed him all his life turned against them. They were fine young men, good natured, better hearts than their father; fair scholars too, and gentlemen in their looks and ways. You could not say—nobody could say—where the troubles came from that came on them, but troubles dogged them like a fate, or a providence, as you choose to consider it.

The first thing was, the brothers quarrelled over the division of the property; they lived in the same parish, and they never spoke. The elder, John, who had the Lodge Farm, married a lady from London, and kept her a carriage. She was a handsome and lively madam, but her pride could not brook the shock it sustained when her first child was born deformed, and not deformed only, but, as it soon appeared, a half-wit. She never had another to live, and she fell into low melancholy ways. I suppose she had not much comfort of her life. Her husband was wasteful; he took to drinking, and his temper was soured with the constant vexations and failures he met in his business. If it was a bad year for the crops for other people, it was worst of all for him; every ear of corn he cut sprouted in the stack, or rotted on the ground. If there wa disease amongst sheep, amongst cattle, it was of his flocks, his herds, that not a hoof escaped. Then came the firing of the Lodge, the farm-buildings, the stack-yard—no uncommon crime in those troublous times when reform in parliament did not bring immediate plenty into the cupboard of the half-starving laborers. It was the act of an incendiary, no doubt; but for ever so long, though rewards were offered by the county and the government, the constable could get no inkling of who did it. John Helstone was ruined, and his wife died of the fright, and, during the misery of it, the brothers were made friends. James Helstone gave John and his poor lad a home, and they had lived together reconciled for nearly six months, when, on the information of John's former house-servant, James was charged with the arson. He was tried at the Winchester assizes, found guilty. and condemned to death. And he was hanged for it, sir; and they brought his body home in a cart from the jail, and buried it on the north side of the church, where unbaptized children are buried. The Lord had mercy on his soul, and he died a penitent man; but would you not say, sir, that the sins of the father were being visited on the children when, when I tell you that the general belief, and my belief, is that James Helstone's life was falsely sworn away by the very man who committed the crime? He is walking the earth yet, and, to judge by his countenance, god is not leaving him alone. John Helstone lived a few years longer, a broken, miserable man, but, from what I have heard, he had peace at his death. As for the poor half-wit, his son, he is glad to do a hand's turn wherever he can to earn a mouthful of meat; but he can read Latin and Greek, sir, enough to give you the name of a book. He was sent to a good master to be made the best of, while his father could pay for it.

These are facts, sir, that all the world of hereabouts knows; but over the facts I need not tell you that people have woven now a tissue of romantic stories. One is, that Rufus Helstone sold himself to the devil to have good luck in this world, and that the devil supplied him with strange money to make him rich. Now, I see a vein of truth in this, sir. I have been shown several ancient coins in and around the parish, coins both gold and silver, that Helstone paid away for rent, and stock, and wages, and which folks have kept for curiosity.

One of the finest is a rose noble of Henry VIII, which the parson has—he took it in tithe. Now this devil's money, you may be sure, sir, was the shepherd's treasure. That is my reading of the legend. What is yours, sir, if it is not the same?—All the Year Round.

SOUVENIRS OF THE SANCTUM.

BY A. E. LANCASTER.

UPON looking into the dictionary for the meaning of the word sanctum, I perceive that it comes from the Latin sancire, to consecrate, and that the meaning attached to it is: "A sacred place; hence, a retreat for privacy; as an editor's sanctum." The quietness with which the illustration, "as an editor's sanctum," is introduced. would incline the lexicographical wayfarer to suspect Noah Webster of a modest joke at the expense of the editorial crew. The truth is that no place is less private than an editor's private room. People of all grades—constant readers and old subscribers—appear to think that the apartment where leading articles are written, and the proofs are corrected, is just as much a public institution as the newspaper itself. Fools and angels rush in together pell-mell, and neither are afraid to tread.

An editor's work is like a woman's work, for it is never done. The greatest trial of the editorial martyr is not the amount of work transacted, but the amount of jabber and annoyance he has to bear the brunt of from bores unnumbered. A few instances will suffice to illustrate this. Suppose the managing editor to be left alone for a half hour or so in the latter part of the evening. The local reporters are at the Central Station, or have all gone home with the exception of the solitary detenu who lingers on in the vain dread of a murder or suicide at the eleventh hour, which generally means two o'clock in the morning. The news editors have dropped off in search of tired nature's sweet restorer—ale and oysters; the theatrical writer has folded up his lorgnette and wended his way home triumphant in the conviction of having utterly crushed and broken in spirit the tragic debutante who made so utter a failure. So the managing editor, feeling somewhat faint—particularly at the prospect of a fresh pile of uncorrected proofs—steps out for a moment to purchase a cup of aromatic coffee and a triangle of the appetitive apple-pie. On his return to his own apartment—the "sanctum"—a stranger is sitting at the desk, a man with his hat on and wearing a bearskin coat. Stranger looks up and bestows upon the editor an encouraging nod, as though to bid him make himself at home, and not to be utterly borne down and discontented. In the shaggy stranger's hands is a telegraphic dispatch—strictly private, of course, or there would be no fun in the stranger's reading it. This is soon disposed of, and the stranger's hand commences to rummage at its own sweet will among the manuscripts on the editor's table. It comes across a letter on a personal and private subject, addressed to the editor by a relative. But the fact of the letter lying open on a table in an editorial rooms, renders it, of course, the property of any member of the public who may have the condescension to pick it up after having had the curiosity to intrude where he has no business and isn't wanted. At this point, if the managing editor's nerves have not become utterly wrecked by the shocks incident to a long-continued course of bores, the following conversation probably occurs:

M. E.—You have no business with that paper, I believe, sir. It is altogether private.

Bore 1.—Oh, yes! didn't see till I'd picked it up. Any further news from Baltimore?

M. E.—Nothing of any importance, sir.

Bore 1.—Do you manage this paper?

M. E.—Yes, sir.

Bore 1.—Why, you're rather young for that. How old are you?

M. E.—(sternly). Indeed, I don't know, sir.

If this answer be given in the proper manner it is generally quite enough to demolish even so impudent a creature as Bore 1.

Or perhaps the following scene takes place:

A very meek and quiet and industrious little editor, who, as Josh Billings says of the mosquito, is a cheerful little creature, singing as he toils, suddenly has his contemplative chin jerked from the hollow of his hand, where he has been reposing it, by the sudden concussion with the table of the newspaper file, which, upon looking up, he discovers has been thrown there by an excited-looking indvidual with red whiskers, a naval cap, and a complexion almost as solferino-colored as the silk that lines his cloak. The bare and hirsute hand of this apparition is palpitating up and down with amazing velocity, and its dirty-nailed fore-finger is beating the devil's tattoo on a little semi-editorial article in the middle of the open page.

"Look-a-here!" exclaims the apparition in a voice husky with rage, and beating the tattoo thrice to every sentence, "Look-a-here! Who wrote this? Let me see him! Let me see the man that wrote this! Let me have the pleasure of calling him a liar! Let me have the opportunity of putting my fist in his jaw! Look-a-here, sir! Look-a-here!"

The weak little man having had long experience of newspaper life, and not being unused to such scenes, looks quietly on, and is at length made to understand that Captain Regal's name has somehow or other been printed Captain Wriggle—probably by one of those unfortunate "the-printers-made-us-say," by which the editors who make blunders cast the blame on the typos—and Captain Regal, having more whisky in him than wit, chooses to imagine that an affront is intended. That an assault and battery is not then and there perpetrated by the enraged Captain Regal is due to the coolness, courage and experience of the meek little man who makes the important correction with a stroke of the pen, and sends the heroic bravado away as meek as a lamb and as pleased as Punch.

Bloody and disastrous as this affair might have proved, it is no worse than the dangers to which the lonely editor is exposed from the unhallowed incursions of incensed stage managers.

"Do you call that a criticism," screams Manager Pinchbeck. "It's abuse, sir; unwarranted abuse; and I'll not have it, sir. Do you want to turn people away from my theatre? I'd have you to know, sir, that my company's the best in the city. It can't be beat, nowhere. I want my advertisement stopped. I am not going to advertise in one column to be abused in the next."

Manager Pinchbeck has none of that reverence for the "sanctum" with which he would invest others with respect to the green-room. And it is an interesting fact that theatrical managers and amusement agents, and, in a less degree, actors, who would not think of giving a newspaper man the freedom of "Behind the Scenes," make no scruple of ignoring the admonition of "No loud talking permitted," conspicuously printed in the placards that direct to the editorial rooms.

One of the most frequent of all bores is the man who wants to look through your exchanges or over the files. He usually drops in toward the middle of the night, as though had been lying in wait for that convenient season, in some dark entry opening out of the landing, and requests to look at the Hifalutin Harbinger—an exchange which every news-clipper very greatly prizes because of the political squibs with which it teems. The bore in question has no respect for news or newspapers, but goes bungling through your exchanges with the same composure with which an M. D. probes a wound and feels for a ball. The Hifalutin Harbinger being found at last, he surreptitiously pockets it, and makes a bolt for the door, when he is informed that the newspaper is needed for clipping purposes. The bore usually affects surprise, protests that he had no idea that the newspaper was needed, and finally offers to pay for the privilege of carrying it off. After the patience of the news-clipper—who has been nervously gyrating his scissors upon the pivot of his thumb, as though debating the question of throwing them at the bore's head—has been severely tried, the bore is at length made to understand that the Hifalutin Harbinger can on no account be suffered to leave the room, but that the bore is welcome to copy from it whatever he chooses at the office.

One of the most profound and accomplished bores I ever met with, was a lady with liquid blue eyes and the softest voice in the world. How the news editors and the local reporters and the typos and the proof-readers, among whom she alternated, kept themselves from falling victims to St. Anthony's fire, or St. Vitus' dance, or similar nervous afflictions, can be explained only on that principle of compensation which overrules society and always neutralizes the bitter with a touch of the sweet. The hobby of this woman was female dress, and she had at one period of her life written an essay, entitled the "Beauties of Bloomer," which it became the frantic object of her life to see in print. Upon profound reflection, I am convinced she must have been a widow, for there is only one character I can call to mind in all history who deserves to be mentioned in the same breath with her, and that is to be found in the case of the importunate widow and the unjust judge. Her plan was to leave the article, totally regardless of the assurance of the party in whose charge she left it that rejected communications were in no case returned, and looking with lofty scorn upon the warning to that effect printed on the first page of the journal. At the interval of a week after it had been thrust into some dusty pigeon-hole, just long enough to become completely forgotten, she would commence the carefully-concerted plan of attack, and open the ball by inquiring for that "little article" on the "Beauties of Bloomer," which had been left for examination a few days ago. If the party with whom she had left it was not in, she invariably said she would wait, to the dismay and consternation of the assembled staff. This waiting usually meant an audible soliloquy, on the female's part, in which remarks not in the highest sense complimentary were made upon newspaper proprietors, editors, reporters, correspondents, printers, foremen, proof-readers, devils and cashiers. To spice this agreeable diversion, the authoress of the "Beauties of Bloomer," would then begin an elaborate inspection of the entire apartment, opening drawers and prying into private papers and memoranda, poking among pigeon-holes, looking over the shoulders of editors, catching at ideas, jerking newspaper files about, and scissoring out choice articles about Eugenie and the latest Parisian follies, propounding questions to every one in the room, and especially to the highly wrought and miserable man who was trying to get up some sensation heads to the last despatch, and finally concluding with a visit to the composing-room, where she looked over the forms, upset the type, followed the foreman around for corrected proofs of her "little article," and quoted to the bewildered proof-reader the most bitterly sarcastic portions from the "Beauties of Bloomer."

The natural sister to this lady is the large-eyed sylph who wrote the celebrated serial of "The Pampered Poodle, a Tale of Blood;" signs herself Emerette Ennuyee, and brings poetry, three times a week, of the cheerful nature of "The Heart's Grave," "The Soul's Sepulchre," "The Mildewed Life." A very lovable and interesting creature is the large-eyed sylph. Her favorite hour for making raids is ten o'clock in the morning, when no one is about except the private policeman, or the day editor, of whom she is not afraid even in his flannel shirt and slack suspenders. Looking at "life and its issues" in that distant Boorioboola-Gha way in which large-eyed sylphs are wont, the nice and paltry question of coat or no coat, vest or no vest, is swallowed up in the broad and general view she takes of humanity. Still, the large-eyed sylph is a first-class bore, for she does not write even decent rhymes, and she thinks all her geese are swans.

Any editor of a morning newspaper in a large city, with sufficient time and sufficient memory, might make up a very readable book out of his reminiscences of bores. In addition to those we have merely indicated and touched upon, is the man who is going to start a little newspaper on his own account, for circulation, and who wants the use of your exchanges after you are done with them—the man who imagines that reserved seats at the theatre can be had in any number for the asking, and who cannot enjoy a play unless he goes as a deadhead; the man who is forever inquiring after a miserable piece of rhyming trash that was written on both sides, and forthwith precipitated into the waste-box; the man who wants an editorial notice about the favorable situation of his country hotel; the man who totes his patent to the sanctum, and always says he can wait; the party that comes in at two o'clock in the morning "pretty full," with a bandaged head and a black eye; and a party of roughs who announce their intention of giving a monosyllable commencing with h to the editor. These and a hundred others have their seasons, on which we have no space longer to dwell. And when we think of an editor's room these lines have a new significance:

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's roar,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Bore!"

—Philadelphia Press.

PHILADELPHIA is building $1,000,000 worth of schoolhouses.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF POE.

A FEW weeks ago we published some reminiscences of Poe by Mrs. Weiss, a Virginian lady, which tended to place his character in a more favorable light than that in which it has heretofore been generally viewed. Since that time another woman, whose name and writings are familiar to the magazine readers of thirty years ago, has made a further contribution toward the magnanimous work of rescuing the dead poet's name from unmerited opprobrium. Mrs. Oakes Smith throws discredit upon several of the most shameful stories current about Poe, which have gained general belief because they rest upon the authority of his "friends" and "biographers," by whom they were first published to the world. But these female champions, though their reminiscences, if accepted as entirely reliable and unbiassed, remove a load of obloquy from the memory of the author of "The Raven," are very far indeed from portraying him as a man calculated to inspire either confidence or affection. The old story of his ingratitude to Mr. Allan, his adopted father, is familiar to every reader of the biographical sketches by Griswold and Willis, both of whom, for some reason, seem to have aimed at painting Poe in the darkest colors. Mrs. Smith gives quite a new version of the matter. After narrating the circumstances of the death of Poe's parents, by which the boy was thrown upon the world without any natural guardian or protector, she says:

"A merchant of Richmond, Virginia by the name of Allan, adopted little Edgar as his own child. He was a spirited, handsome boy, precocious in intellect and of arrogant, self-willed temper. Here was, certainly, fine material upon which to work—the germs of the scholar or the hero. But nature is stronger than education. I do not believe the blood of father or mother was of the best quality to produce the most reliable results. The excitements and exhaustions of the profession are not favorable to the best maternity—the tawdry accessories of the stage are not the most desirable associations for the growing mind and heart of a young child, who has everything to learn.

"Mr. Allan was childless and wealthy, and, it would seem, injudiciously indulgent to the boy, yielding quite too much to his arrogance, and far too lenient to his outbreaks of temper. But it must be borne in mind that the young Edgar was living in a state of society in which spirit was ranked as the test of manliness, where coercion was reserved, like the whip, for the slave only, and where the assertion that "he who ruleth himself is greater than he who taketh a city," is a musty, old fogy view, unbecoming a gentleman.

"At length Mr. Allan, tired of the caprices and outrages of the boy-genius, and having married a second time and now become a father, turns him out of doors without a cent in the world; and so this child of genius, reared in luxury, after having been born in the hot-bed of excitement, with his keen, precocious intellect and sensitive nerves, is a houseless beggar.

Mr. Allan died, as rich men can, peacefully in his bed; and men praise him as the "patron" of Edgar Poe. To my eyes he committed a grievous wrong. When he had once assumed the responsibility of this boy, it was his duty to carry it through, and to see how the world went with him. After he had denuded him by his indulgence, it was the height of cruelty for him to cast him, defenceless as he was, upon the hard bosses of the world.

"It must be borne in mind that he was but a boy of sixteen, and if this youth had become such a monster, he had been ripened under the very eye of his guardian. Where was the fault?

"At the time when he was associated in Richmond with the excellent and simple-hearted Dr. White, as editor of the Southern Literary Messenger, he was but nineteen. Thus, three years after having been turned adrift in the world by his guardian, he is of sound mind enough and respectable enough in appearance to be taken into the family of Dr. White as assistant editor.

"Even then he had written much, not only in prose but verse also—had written great quantities of the latter before his guardian abandoned him."

Of the poet's alleged dissipation and debauchery, Mrs. Smith says:

"He could not have sunk himself very low, for his looks and manner bore not the shadow of a trace of any irregularity.

"If he did make the mistakes imputed to him, I can only say that Edgar Poe was right royally organized, when he could rise so above every vestige of disorder, as the lion shakes the dew from his mane."

The position occupied by Poe in New York society, upon his removal to that city, is thus indicated:

"It must have been in 1842 that Poe first came to reside permanently in New York. He was at once admitted into its literary circles, where his superior address and remarkable conversational powers at once attracted attention. Then there was more prestige attached to literature than at present exists. The field is now so over-filled, and the persons of marked ability so comparatively few, that the desire for companionship with literary persons is much less.

"At that time, at the houses of Rev. Dr. Dewey, Miss Anna C. Lynch, Mr. James Lawson, and others of scarcely less celebrity, might be found some of the finest spirits of any age, whose brilliancy entitled them to all the homage they received. It was in these circles that I first met Edgar Poe. He had criticised myself and some others, who could well survive it, very severely, but not entirely ungenerously, and I harbored no malice against him. His wife was at this time much an invalid, and rarely went out, but he was fond of naming her, and dwelling upon her loveliness of character. His manners at these reunions were refined and pleasing, and his scope of conversation that of the gentleman and the scholar. What ever may have been his previous career, there was nothing in his look or manner to indicate the debauchee."

The following is not an exaggerated estimate of Poe's critical powers, as will readily be admitted by all who are familiar with the specimens of subtle literary analysis published by him in Graham's Magazine while he was editing it:

"His critiques were read with avidity, not that he convinced the judgment, but because people felt their ability and their courage: he took the public idols so by the beard and knocked them right and left, till people saw they were no gods at all, but miserable shams. Sometimes he found the genuine, and attempted the same process with a cool hardihood; but he is a pigmy in giant's armor who does not come out magnified by the blows of an assailant. These critiques of Edgar Poe were live productions; he did not play with his pen, but wielded it. Right or wrong, all was real at the time. He was terribly in earnest. He was carried away as by an avalanche of words and emotions. Men and women with their books under their arms marched in grand procession before him, and he discovered the rich goods of one, the thefts of another, the divine art, the heavenly beauty, the profound meanings of some, while others were totally enigmatical and unrevealed to him.

"He was himself in the highest degree original and unique, hence he could not abide either twaddle or plagiarism. Some of his strictures upon these grounds will long be remembered; and, by and by, when the accounts of certain authors are made, it will be seen that he was more than three-quarters right. We need now, in this day of mawkish adulation, a critic with a trenchant pen like that of Edgar Poe's. We need an eagle to swoop down upon the noisy brood of geese and crows and jackdaws, to set their feathers fluttering. It was a sad day that took Edgar Poe out of the world of letters, just at the time when his powers were ripening, his judgment maturing, and I believe, and I speak not unadvisedly, his deeper and better intimations assuming shape and urgency. Though late, that part of his character was rapidly developing."

Mrs Smith thus furnishes what is probably the true explanation of the excesses and the dissipation generally attributed to the poet:

"In person, Poe was of medium height, slender and refined in organization. Nature designed this man little lower than an angel, for his exquisite machinery rebelled at any and every violation of the laws of his creation. He should have respected these laws. Delicate, almost, as a fine woman, he had no aptitude for the life of the debauchee, and those who willfully and recklessly led this man into the habits of dissipation, knowing his infirmity, were guilty of a crime. It is not enough to say that people must take care of themselves; there are myriads of persons incapable of this, and therefore it is the duty of the strong to help the weak. I have been told that it was an amusement in some quarters for persons to present Poe with wine for no purpose but to watch its effect upon his sensitive nerves. This was nothing less than devilish, for it took little to move him from his proprieties."

The austerely virtuous gentlemen who write the "literary notices" for our dailies, and who within a few months past have "improved" the opportunity afforded by the occasion of mentioning a new edition of Poe's works, by delivering moral lectures for the benefit of the readers of the Alta and the Times, and descanting upon the depravity and worthlessness of this unfortunately constituted man of genius, will perhaps gain a new idea of the man, from the following—unless indeed they are too firmly rooted in the Pharisaic faith that there can be nothing worthy admiration in human character, except that "goodness" that consists of abstinence from vice rather than prowess in virtue, and regards a decent conformity to the laws of external morality as the one thing desirable in human life:

"Mr. Poe was spiritual, abstract, intellectual; he had a manly sense of independence which rendered patronage of any kind repugnant to him. I do not think he ever found any very appropriate sphere in this life; genial moments, green oases in the dreary waste he certainly found, for he, in one phase of character, had an almost childish desire for companionship. I have often thought how happily such a man as Poe, and some others, might have been, placed in an atmosphere of taste and appreciation, in some little court—like that of Bavaria, for instance, which so fostered the genius of Goethe and Schiller; but in our country the life of genius is a perpetual struggle.

"Mr. Poe, near the close of his life, lived in a little bandbox of a house at Fordham, and there his wife died. The Brothers of the Jesuits' College, in that place, contrary to their wont, gave him free access to their groves and gardens, and there he unquestionably passed the happiest years of his life. His simple manners and studious habits endeared him to the good Brothers, who often saw him at midnight as they passed to their vigils, moving silently under the lofty trees, too absorbed in meditation to notice their presence.

"I have more than once sat spell bound under the Shaksperean illusion of Edwin Booth as 'Hamlet,' and always in the grave scene I thought of Poe. The same deep thoughtfulness—the profound expression of sadness—the weird silence and gloom which harmonize so wonderfully with the character of the shadowy Dane, served to reproduce the image of Edgar Poe."

The American Cyclopedia, adopting the statements of poor Poe's "friends," asserts that he "died in consequence of a drunken debauch" in his native city. Mrs. Smith declares that is not true. She says:

"At the instigation of a woman, who considered herself injured by him, he was cruelly beaten, blow upon blow, by a ruffian who knew no better mode of avenging supposed injuries. It is well known that a brain fever followed; his friends hurried him away, and he reached his native city only to breathe his last."

Dr. BENTON's series of Lectures, at Congress Hall, on Magnetism and Psychology are both interesting and amusing, and will be continued on this evening, and on the evenings of Friday and Saturday next.

A HYGIENIC HUMBUG.

It is frequently asserted, by self-styled "Journals of Health" and writers of "sanitary" articles for the newspapers, that the health of Americans, and especially of American women, is declining; that the race, though mentally improving, is physically deteriorating to an alarming extent; that natives of the soil are less robust and vigorous than adopted citizens, and that the latter are chiefly entitled to the credit of increasing the population of the country, not only by immigration but by obeying the Divine command to the earliest progenitors of the human race, to "increase, multiply and replenish the earth." It happens that these statements, while possessing a semblance of truth, are devoid of the substance. They are based upon very carelessly collated and sometimes distorted statistics, and not unfrequently upon the consummate ignorance of writers, who undertake to treat learnedly of subjects upon which four out of five American women of average intelligence and education could (if modesty would permit) instruct them: or concerning which they might learn something from the advertisements that, without any inconvenient regard for decency, occupy a large space in many of the first-class "family" papers at the East, as well as in California. We have had tracts, and phamplets, and essays, and statistics innumerable thrust at us to show that in the Eastern States the number of births from native-born parents is alarmingly on the decrease, while foreign-born parents increase the population with commendable regularity and perseverance. Dr. Nathan Allen of Lowell, Massachusetts, is the latest sensation-monger upon this subject. In a recent letter to the New York Observer he shows that, in an inland town of Massachusetts which has been inhabited for six generations, the first generation had an average of 9½ children to each family, the second, third and fourth, a fraction over 7, the fifth 4⅞ and the sixth and last only 2¾. After dwelling pathetically upon the mournful physical degeneracy of modern married people, Dr. Allen proceeds:

"In one small town, settled in 1655, may be found recorded the history of twenty six families having 10 children each, twenty families having 11 each, thirteen families having 13 each, five families having 14 each, one family having 15 and one having 21. There were ninety families having one thousand and forty three children. And nearly all the children born in those early times grew to adult age, whereas now only about one-half reach adult age."

There are some things that have probably never occurred to Dr. Allen, with all his medical knowledge and profound statistical information. One is, that extraordinary fecundity in the human species is a peculiar condition of proletarianism and ignorance. There is a well-worn adage which says: "A fool for luck and a poor man for children." The latter portion of it, at least, is of very general application. Wherever poverty and a semi-barbarous mode of living are combined—whether it is in the wretched purlieus of populous cities, or on the outer verge of civilization, among the oppressed peasantry of Europe, the ill-paid operatives and laborers of manufacturing and commercial communities, or the down-trodden negroes of the Southern States, the number of births is appallingly great; and the more wretched and hopeless the poverty the greater the fecundity, as a general rule. As people acquire wisdom, with wealth and its refinements, they learn that parental honor and happiness do not consist so much in the number; as the character of their children; therefore they moderate their desire for offspring, and endeavor rather to rear a few well than many indifferently. The people who in 1655 settled the small town in Massachusetts to which Dr. Allen alludes, doubtless shared the sentiment which has been common to warriors, invaders and pioneers in all ages—that the chief end of man is to subdue and populate new countries, and the chief end of woman to breed soldiers; whence has been derived the silly notion that it is more honorable for a woman to be the mother of boys than of girls. Yet those ancient villagers, notwithstanding the exceedingly limited range of their ideas and aspirations, performed a very useful part in peopling a country which needed men and women more than anything else. At this day it is simply impossible for parents of ordinary means, in a State so thickly populated as Masachusetts, or even in California, to raise ten children decently, to say nothing of twenty-one.

Again: In new countries, where the rapid increase of population is desirable, Nature tolerates, and even favors, extraordinary fecundity. This is observable not only in the human species but in the brute creation. But she will not tolerate over population. She constantly employs wars, pestilences, epidemics and disasters to prune the rank overgrowth of humanity. It may have been observed that the victims of these remedial agents are usually selected from among the most prolific class—those who lack the knowledge or the means to live properly, in a physical sense. But for this wise provision (the sentiment may sound harshly, but the experience of ages has demonstrated its correctness) the world would long since have been overrun with a miserable race of beings, hardly a remove above brutes—so numerous and so densely crowded that the exercise of all their faculties would have been required to procure food enough for their sustenance

Dr. J. C Jackson, of the Danville (New York) Hygeian College, in a lecture based upon Dr. Allen's statistics, said :

"God made man to live to old age. To die when he is ripe. Untimely deaths of human beings are as deplorable as is the untimely fall of the fruit one grows."

The sentiment is pretty plausible and taking, but it will not stand the test of common arithmetic. I do not profess to understand God's purpose in creating man, or His wise intentions regarding the duration of human existence ; but this much I do know, that if all men and women had died only of old age, and each generation, from Adam to the present, had increased only five fold—a moderate computation, Dr. Allen would think—the earth could not have contained the human race at this time.

But to return to the relative merits of native-born and adopted citizens for the purpose of population. Let us take the statistics upon which Dr. Allen depends for the soundness of his position. A writer in the Medical and Surgical Reporter thus turns the doctor's own weapon against him :

"Dr. Allen says that in 1865 the births in Boston were as follows : Foreign, 3,575 ; American, 1,641 ; Unknown, 60. The deaths the same year were as follows : Foreign, 1,308 ; American, 3,143. Here, he says, the whole number of births exceeded the whole number of deaths by 734 ; but the deaths of Americans exceed the births by 1,520. But in order to be counted by Dr. Allen as a foreign decedent it is necessary that the deceased person should have been born abroad ; when counted as a foreigner in the list of births, he only exacts that the child's parents, or one of them, should have been born abroad. But now let the computation of births and deaths alike be made with reference to parentage : Children of American mothers, 1,650 ; of foreign, 3,587 ; of unknown, 38 ; total, 4,541. Deccdents of American parentage 1,245 ; of foreign, 2,868 : of unknown, 428 ; total, 4,541. The results of the correct calculation may be summed up as follows : American parentage—births, 1'650 ; deaths, 1'245 ; gain, 405. Foreign parentage—births, 3,587 ; deaths, 2,868 ; gain, 719. Unknown parentage—births, 38 ; deaths, 428 ; loss, 390. So, instead of a loss of 1,502 to the native American population, there really is a gain of 405—relatively a greater gain than that to the foreign born population."

So it seems, if the figures are correct, that of children born in Boston of American parents 24 per cent. survive to 20 per cent. of children born of foreign parents—a difference of 4 per cent. in favor of the vigor of the native stock.

Yet again, there is a fact which, important as is its bearing upon one of the most vital questions concerning our social and political economy, learned writers, who predicate the assumption that American women are physically degenerating upon their paucity of offspring, are either unacquainted with or have studiously ignored. It is that a very large proportion of our countrywomen, learning from their preceptresses in fashion, the French ladies, do not want and will not have a numerous progeny. I am aware, now, that I am treading upon delicate ground and must proceed cautiously, lest I shock the moral sensibilities of those "prurient prudes" against whom Charles Reade lately leveled the sharp arrows of his satire. I have not forgotten what a storm of fastidious horror and prudish indignation "Gail Hamilton" brought about her ears when, in one of her racy, common-sensible articles in the Atlantic Monthly, she boldly discussed the duties and relations of maternity, and declared that it was a grievous wrong for a woman to bear a larger number of children than she was able to care for and educate properly, and to degrade herself to a mere breeder of human animals, to the neglect of her duty to her family, society and herself. Yet this theory was not original with Gail Hamilton. It had for many years been accepted by a large number of American women, and practiced by them in ways harmless or hurtful, according to the degree of knowledge they possessed. And so it frequently happens that a woman's childlessness is attributed to her ill-health, when precisely the reverse is true—her ill-health is due to her self-enforced childlessness.

The discussion of the further details of this subject belongs strictly to the province of the medical journals ; and I am surprised that no respectable periodical of that class has hitherto ventured upon it. Yet here is the whole secret of the alleged "physical degeneracy of American women." Constitutionally I believe they are as vigorous and prolific as the women of any other nativity ; and if they leave to their foreign born sisters a disproportionate share in the population of the country, it is from choice rather than from disability. Whether they do wisely and well, or the reverse, I shall not at present attempt to discuss ; I simply state what I know to be true ; but I think the feeling that prompts a woman to prefer bringing up two or three children properly, to dragging up a dozen or a score in a reckless, hap hazard, semi civilized way, is entitled to some consideration—perhaps respect—provided that, in carrying out her idea, she violate no law, Divine, human, or natural.

As a proof that American women in the manufacturing districts of the Eastern States (where Dr. Allen gathered the bulk of his statistics) can be quite the reverse of sterile when they choose, I quote from the New York Nation :

"We have heard of its being said by a well-known politician of Massachusetts, who should know the manufacturing population very well, that the operatives systematically increase their families, in order that their children going into the mills may add to the family income. In the West, a farmer's boys are a part of his capital, and large families are considered a blessing," etc.

Thus it appears, on respectable authority, that American women of the industrial classes can be as prolific on occasion as either English, German or Irish women ; and I have no doubt that our countrywomen generally would be found, were a scientific investigation of the subject possible, to possess physiological capabilities inferior to none. In personal beauty, strength, vigor and endurance they are not surpassed in the world.

If this article shall be the means of preserving any considerable number of our incomparable American young ladies from the "hygienic" inflictions which charlatans in physic and smatterers in physiology are preparing for them in view of their entirely supposititious degeneracy, the author will experience a gratification second only to that which he will derive from the receipt of his expected pecuniary douceur from the proprietors of this excellent journal. JOHN CLERK.

[For the Californian.]

JOHN CENTER.

HE was taught in the Hielan's his ain mither tongue,
And philibegs graced his teugh hurdies when young ;
When a callant he played on the bagpipes fu' weel,
And wad carry to market a pack or a creel.

John's a pure blooded Celt, and is nae human cur,
And will stick to a frien' firm and fast as a burr ;
When louns heartless wad crush or laws siccar oppress,
A kind lug he aye lends to the tale o' distress.

Altho' no unco buirdly, he's wiry in frame,
And for labor wad pit swankie birkies to shame ;
Ever free frae a' pride, save the pride o' a man
That will do for himsel' aye the best that he can.

Let poortith stare at him wi' a purse that is toom,
And just gie him a desert he'll sune mak' it bloom ;
What cares he tho' his gear may amount na' to much,
Since maist ilka thing turns into gowd at his touch ?

He's aye busy at wark, and as sure's ye're alive,
Like the queen-bee he'll banish the drones frae his hive ;
He can flourish whaur ithers wad perish and rot,
But for bairn-getting John nicht as weel be a stot!

Wi' an eye that is keen and a head that is soun',
Ye can scarce fin' his match a' the hale kintra roun' ;
He is blest wi' strong sense, and the pawkie odd brick
Cares as little for priests as he does for auld Nick.

He still feehts wi' the Courts and he feehts wi' the laws,
And he shows how the land deeds are covered wi' flaws ;
But nae matter how cloudy John's claims may appear,
He can read thro' the darkness his ain title clear.

The great chieftain o' squatters is law-read and wise,
And frae marshes o' mud he's made beauty arise ;
Were the place only fit for puir mortals to dwell,
He wad strongly dispute the Deil's title to Hell!

Like the cock on the middin that craws unco crouse,
Sae auld-farrant and couthie he rules his ain house ;
Owre the nappy wi' frien's he is dead-sweer to part,
And a bonnie bit lass can dance aff wi' his heart.

As time dims the bricht ee and seams deep the brent brow,
So the winter o' auld age will whiten the pow ;
Wi' a conscience that's clear and an air o' content.
O may ilk ane look back at a lifetime weel spent.

San Francisco, March, 1867. JAMES LINEN.

SAN FRANCISCO OLYMPIC CLUB.—The second Exhibition and Social Party of this flourishing gymnastic association, for 1867, was given at the Club Rooms on Friday evening, March 15th, to a crowded audience, including over two hundred ladies, and nearly one hundred and fifty gentlemen, besides members of the Club, of whom about two hundred were present. The limited accommodations at the disposal of the Club made it impossible to seat all the audience ; and we heard frequent expressions of a desire that the next exhibition might be given in some theatre, or public hall, where the public generally might have an opportunity to witness the graceful and daring feats of these amateur gymnasts. We have not space to dilate upon the respective merits of the twelve different acts composing the programme under notice, but may mention, as given (we believe) for the first time on this continent by white men, the great Japanese ladder feat, very successfully performed by George H. Strong and Master John Tappeiner, and the Japanese pole, done by W. S. Lawton, with all the ease and agility of the original, and with a complete and laughable imitation of the Japanese costume and manner. Among other acts deserving special notice were the double sommersaults by H. J. Ladd and F. W. Hutchinson ; the Niagara Leap (a brilliant and hazardous performance) by L. P. Ward and G. S. Brown ; the Giant Swing by H. B. Russ ; the Horizontal Bar Perche by G. S. Brown and C A. Bennet ; and the familiar but always welcome Zampillaerostation, gracefully done, with the double sommersaults, by H. B. Russ and L. P. Ward. After the performance, the apparatus and mattresses were cleared away, and dancing commenced, to the fine music of Ballenburg's band, which had also furnished an inspiriting accompaniment to the gymnastic feats. We believe it was generally conceded that the Olympic Club fairly surpassed themselves on this occasion, and that their Hall had never been the scene of an exhibition so brilliantly and thoroughly successful.

THE "glass of fashion and the mould of form" are seen in Lamott's hats, as well as under them daily in Montgomery street. Lamott leads the fashion. *

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday the capital comedy entitled A Bird in Hand is worth Two in the Bush was produced at Maguire's Opera House to a good audience. The play is a very clever one, and was well played throughout. Miss Alice Kingsbury played "Ellen Prodigal" very prettily, and John McCullough as "Theodore Prodigal," played the part in a quiet, gentlemanly manner and very effectively ; Mrs. Harry Jackson as "Mme. Reginald," the vulgar wife of Reginald Prodigal, acted extremely well and caused much laughter. In either tragedy or genteel comedy, Mrs. Harry Jackson is quite at home, and never fails to make a hit when cast in a character in either of these lines of dramatic business. Harry Edwards as "Roderick Praisworthy," who for the purpose of testing the character of his two nephews, pretends to die and will his property to the elder one, was very clever, as he is indeed in every character which he has played on the San Francisco boards (except that of Lord Dundreary, which he accepted as a mortification at the commencement of Lent,) and gained much applause. Harry Jackson, who has to play parts unsuited to him, found one which afforded him an opportunity to display his talent on this occasion, and played "Capias Shark," the lawyer, with great skill. The entertainment concluded with a magical performance a la Heller, by Harry Jackson. Many of Heller's best feats were done as perfectly as they are by the great conjurer himself. The card tricks, the "Goblin Drum," the "Mystery of Second Sight" and others were very cleverly performed, thus proving the truth of Heller's statement that "these feats are all easy enough if you only know how to do them." Jackson knows how to do them and does them easily. The performance of the automaton dancers is certainly more amusing than that of Heller's "Wood Minstrels." The same bill was given on Tuesday.

On Wednesday Miss Pauline Conger made her first appearance on any stage, in the character of "Marianna" in Sheridan Knowles" play of The Wife, a Tale of Mantua. She exhibited much self possession, and occasionally displayed dramatic power. For a first attempt Miss Pauline Conger's impersonation of "Marianna" was creditable ; but we cannot say that her style of reading is good. She would now and then read with feeling, but she was generally cold and monotonous.

On Thursday Fanchon was produced, and was repeated on Friday for the benefit of the Masonic Board of Relief. It will be produced this afternoon and in the evening, when Miss Alice Kingsbury will make her last appearance, and take her farewell benefit.

Miss Kate Denin will make her appearance in The Fast Family, a translation of the famous French comedy by Benjamin Webster, Jr., son of Webster, the London theatrical manager, and President of the Dramatic Authors' Association of Loudon. The reputation of the play and the ability and experience of its translator, both warrant us in bespeaking for it a favorable reputation.

On Thursday next Harry Edwards, who is acknowledged by all who have witnessed his performances to be one of the very best actors who has ever appeared on this stage, will take his first benefit in California. Julius Ceasar will be produced on this occasion.

George Pauncefort's polyglot entertainment—Othello in English, French, German and Danish—will be given at the American Theatre on Monday night with the following cast : "Othello," in English, Mr. Pauncefert ; "Iago," in French, Mr. Bonnet ; "Cassio," in German and Danish, Herr Roger ; "Roderigo," in English, Mr. Pierpont Thayer ; "Desdemona," in English, Mrs. Pauncefort ; "Emilia," in German, Fraulein Meyer. The play has undergone a most careful rehearsal, and from its novelty of production must draw a large attendance.

At the Metropolitan Theatre, Heller continues to draw good audiences to witness his conjuring tricks. TOUCHSTONE.

DR. JORDAN'S ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.—The benefits arising from the information and instruction which any man, either in or on the outside of the medical profession, may obtain by visiting this institution, and studying the usually veiled secrets of the human anatomy by the aid of the hundreds of models on exhibition there, is incalculable. The privilege of visiting similar institutions has until within late years, been restricted to the medical world ; but now, modern science has thrown open their portals to the world in general, so that all may acquire the secrets of the "house we live in."

THE BIG LITTLE ONE.—On Saturday last the big little Dramatic Chronicle, which seems to have more pluck in attacking error than any one of the larger papers of this city, eularged the borders of its phylacteries. Whatever appears in the Chronicle is read with interest, and the theater-going public have learned that its criticisms on dramatic matters are fearless, reliable, and unprejudiced.

MAURICE DORE & CO'S credit sale of Homestead Lots lying just West of the old Mission Church, fronting on Market, Centre and adjacent streets, will take place at their spacious sales room on Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock M. This is most desirable property for investment, being level land of good soil and good grade, and lying within two blocks of the Howard street railroad. See description of property and terms of sale in advertisement on 16th page.

DRY GOODS FROM AUCTION.—Meagher Taaffe & Co. advertise in our columns, to-day, an extensive list of black silks, and other articles of dry goods (enough to stock two or three ordinary dry-goods stores) recently purchased at the large auction sales of H. M. Newhall & Co., which they are selling at prices lower than ever before offered in this city.

MRS. WINSHIP'S millinery establishment, it will be seen by advertisement in to-day's paper, has been removed to 23 Post street, Mechanic's Institute Building. Mrs. Winship advertises that particular attention will be paid to making of all kinds of lace work and head dresses, and the doing up of laces, etc.

THE GREATEST CURES OF DISEASES EVER RECORDED are made by intelligent Water Cure Physicians. Among them none is more distinguished for devotion to his art and thorough experimental knowledge, than Dr. Bourne, of San Francisco, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

BATHS FOR THE SICK, with the physician's knowledge, the result of twenty-five years' experience, are the best and cheapest, and by far the most pleasant mode of "doctoring." No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, Dr. Bourne. *

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER VIII.—THE SEVERING OF THE HAIR.

THE storm which had swept unheeded over the heads bent over the gaming-tables at the Kursaal that wild autumn night, was hardly wilder and fiercer than the tempest in Stewart Routh's soul, as he, making one of the number of the gamblers, played with a quite unaccustomed recklessness, and won with surprising sequence. This was earlier in the night, when the powers of the air were only marshaling their forces, and the elemental war had not extended beyond the skirmishing stage. Many times he looked impatiently round, even while the ball was rolling, as if expecting to see some one, who still did not appear; then he would turn again to the green board, again stake and win, and resume his watch. At length a touch on his elbow caused him to look round in a contrary direction, where he saw a man standing, who immediately handed him a note and went away. Then Routh smiled, swept up the money which lay before him, and left the room. The battle had fairly begun as he stepped out from the shelter of the portico, and, buttoning his coat tightly across his chest, and pulling his hat down to his eyebrows, set himself, with bent head, against the storm. His way led him past his own lodgings, and as he took it on the opposite side of the street, he saw, indistinctly, Harriet's figure, as she sat close beside the window, her head against the panes. Something dreary and forsaken in the aspect of the window, with its flimsy curtains wide apart, the indistinct form close against the glass, no light within the room, made Routh shiver impatiently as he looked at it; and just then the light in the street flickered and swerved violently under the influence of a sudden blast, which drove a sharp cascade of rain rattling against the window.

"Moping there in the dark," said Routh, with an oath, "and, making things a hundred times worse, with her cursed whining and temper."

The Schwarzchild mansion was near, and he was soon removed as far from all associations with discomfort and dreariness as brilliant light, a blazing fire of odorous wood burning in a room too large to be overheated by it, luxurious surroundings, and pleasant expectation could remove him from such discordant realities. Presently Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge made her appearance. The room was a long one, and she entered by a door which faced the chimney where he was standing. Much as he had admired her, irresistibly as her beauty had captivated him with its ordinary charm of recklessness and lustre, with its rare, far-between moments of softness and grace, he had never really understood until now how beautiful she was. For there was a mingling of both moods upon her as she came towards him, her amber silk dress, with the accustomed drapery of superb black silk lace falling round her, and sweeping the ground in folds such as surely no other mere gown, made by mundane milliner, had ever accomplished. Rich purple amethysts were on her neck and on her wrists, and gleamed on the comb which held the coils of her hair Wax-lights in profusion shed their softened light upon her, upon the cream and rose tints of her brow and cheeks, upon the scarlet of her lips, upon the marvelous darkness of her eyes; and the capricious blaze from the burning logs shot quivering streaks of light among the folds of her dress, glancing over the jewels she wore, and playing redly on the hand which she held out, while yet some steps divided her from Routh, gazing at her in absorbed, almost amazed admiration.

"How tired and pale you look," she said, as he took the proffered hand, and she allowed him to hold it. The words were slowly spoken, in the tone of solicitude for him, which is one of the most potent weapons in a beautiful woman's armory. "Sit there," she went on, drawing her hand gently from his hold and indicating a seat, while she settled herself into the recesses of a huge German sofa. "How could you imagine I would go to the Kursaal to-night? Just listen!" She held her hand up; a cloud of filmy lace fell back from the beautiful round white arm. Then she dropped the hand slowly, and waited for him to speak. He spoke with strange difficulty; the spell of the power of her beauty was upon him. This was not what he had intended. He had meant to conquer, not to be conquered,—to sway, not to be ruled.

"I thought," he said in a low tone, "you would have come, because—I—I did not know you would allow me the happiness of coming here."

"Did you not? I think you don't understand me yet. I wish to see you, you know, and I did not wish to go out this evening. It is quite simple, is it not?"

"It is indeed, for such a woman as you."

She laughed. "Is not that rather an awkward speech,—rather an equivocal compliment? How posed you look!" She laughed again. Routh felt unspeakably embarrassed; he had a sense of being at a disadvantage, which was unpleasant. She saw it, and said,—

"What a temper you have! You'd be rather hard to please, I fancy, if one were in any sense bound to try."

"Don't jest with me," said Routh, suddenly and sternly, and he rolled his chair deliberately near her as he spoke. "You did not allow me, you did not invite me to come here to-night; you did not do this, which seems so 'simple' to you, because you are as much braver than every other woman, as you are more beautiful,"—he looked into her dark eyes, and their lids did not droop,—"only to jest with me, only to trifle with me, as you trifle with others. You are a wonderfully puzzling woman, I acknowledge; no woman ever so puzzled me before.

"Each time I see you, there is something different, something new in your manner, and each time it is as though I had to begin all over again; as if I had not told you that I love you, as if you had not listened and confessed that you know it. Why have you sent for me? You dismissed me yesterday with something which you tried to make look and sound like anger,—ineffectually, for you were not angry. And I was prepared for the same line of tactics to day. Well, you send for me. I am here. You come to me a thousand times more beautiful,"—he dropped his voice to a whisper, and she grew pale under the fixed fire of his eyes,—"infinitely more beautiful than I have ever seen you; and in your eyes and in your smile there is what I have never seen in them; and yet you meet me with mere jesting words. Now, this you do not mean; what is it that you do mean?"

He rose, and leaned against the mantel-piece, looking down upon her bent head, with the light shining on the jewels in her hair. She did not speak.

"What is it that you do mean?" he repeated. She had laid one arm along the cushioned side of the sofa, the side near him. He clasped it, above the wrist, impressively, not caressingly, and at the touch the words he had spoken to her before, "Would you not be afraid of a man who loved you with all the passion of his heart?" recurred to her, and she felt that so this man loved her and she was afraid of him.

"I dare say many others have loved you, and told you so," he continued, "and I don't ask you how you received their professions. I know the world too well, and what it brings to men and women, for any such folly. That is of the past. The present is ours. I ask you why you have brought me here? A woman who resents such words as those I have spoken to you before now, does not give a man a chance of repeating them. You have not sent for me to tell me that you are insulted and outraged, to talk the cant of a hypocritical society to me. I should not love you, beautiful as you are, if you were such a fool." He saw that his audacity was not without its charm for her; her head was raised now, and her dark eyes, looking up, met his looking down, as she listened, with parted lips and deep-drawn breath.

"Be sure of this," he said, "no man has ever loved you as I love you, or been willing to stake so much upon your love." The sinister truth that lurked in these words lent the sinister expression to his face again for a moment which she had sometimes seen in it. "How much I stake upon it you will never know. So be it. I am ready, I am willing. You see I am giving you time. I am not hurrying you into rash speech. I dare say you were not at all prepared for this when you and I met, and you took the initiative in what you intended to be an ordinary watering-place flirtation,—while you were waiting for Arthur Felton, perhaps?" he said savagely, for, as he went on, the savage nature of the man was rising within him, and for all that his grasp was on her soft, white arm, and his gaze was searching the depths of her dark eyes, he was speaking rather to himself than to her; rather to the unchained devil within than to the beautiful fatality before him.

"It is possible you had some such notion," he said. "I don't ask you to acknowledge it, for if so, you have abandoned it." He stooped lower, his eyes looked closer into hers. She shrank back and covered her face with her disengaged hand. "Yes," he went on, in a gentler tone, "I know you soon discovered that I am not made for make-believes; and now,—now that you have sent for me, and I am here, what is it that you mean? You cannot make me the pastime of an hour; you cannot shake off the hold which such love as mine lays upon your life,—would still lay upon it were you a feebler woman than you are. What then? Are you going to take the wine of life, or are you going to content yourself with the vapid draughts you have hitherto drank? You must tell me, and tell me to-night, what it is you mean; for a crisis in my life has come, and I must know, without faltering or delay, how it is to be dealt with."

He lifted his hand from her arm, and, standing directly before her, bade her look up and speak to him. She did not move. Then he sat down on a velvet footstool before her sofa, and drew her hands away from before her face. There were signs of agitation on it, and he read them, not quite correctly, perhaps, but to his own satisfaction.

"Listen to me," he said, in the gentlest tones within the compass of his voice. "I have a right—have I not?—to ask you, to know what is your meaning towards me? What did you bring me here for? Remember the words I have spoken to you, not once only, or twice; remember the story I told you on the balcony yonder; remember the tone you have occasionally adopted in all your levity, and then do not attempt to deny my right to speak as I am speaking, and to demand your answer."

"You—you found me alone here—in my own house—and—"

"Absurd!" he cried. "You are talking nonsense, and you know it. Did you not intend me to understand that I should find you alone? Did your note, your summons (I tore it up, but you remember the words as well as I do), mean anything else? Do you not know this is all folly? There is no need to play with me. I am a sure prize, or victim, which you please; you know that well enough, and I must know which you do please, for this is, as I said before, a crisis for me. Which is it?" he said, and he held her hands more tightly, and looked at her with a pale face. "Which is it? Mere coquetry—a dangerous game with a man like me, I warn you—a game you won't find it possible to play? or—or the deep, deep love of a lifetime—the devotion which will never swerve or falter—the passion which will blot out from your knowledge or your fears everything beyond itself."

Weak, imaginative, without principle, easily ruled by strength, though a despot to weakness, the woman he addressed listened to him like one in a dream. Not until afterwards did a sense of being tricked and trapped come to her. Had her demeanor towards Routh really implied all this? Had she yielded to the rapacity for admiration, to the thirst for conquest, which had always dominated in her nature, once too often, and far too completely? This was precisely what she had done, and she had fallen into the hands of a stronger being than herself. In a blind, vague, groping kind of way she felt this, and felt that she could not help or deliver herself, and felt it was something like fear, even while her imagination and her vanity were intoxicated by the mingling of defiance and pleading in his words, in his tones, and in his looks.

"You and I," he went on, "would say to others, would say to each other in some of our moods, or would have said when first we met, that no such thing as this all-sufficing love exists, but each of us knows well that it does, and may, and shall be ours! This is what I mean. Again I ask you, what is your meaning in all this?"

"I don't know," she replied, releasing her hands, and rising. He allowed her to pass him, and to walk to the fireplace. She stood there, her radiant figure glittering in the lustre of the fire and the wax-lights. She stood there, her head bent, her hands before her, the fingers interlaced. After a minute Routh followed her and stood before her.

"Then you will not answer me,—you will not tell me what your meaning was in sending for me to-night?" There was tenderness in his tone now, and the slight inflection of a sense of injury which rarely fails with a woman.

"Yes," she said, looking up full at him, "I will tell you. I wanted to let you know that I think of going away!"

"Going away!" cried Routh, in unbounded amazement; "going away! What do you mean?"

"Just what I say," recovering herself, and resuming her usual tone and manner as soon as he released her from the spell of his earnestness and passion,—"I am going away. I don't treat you quite so badly as you try to make out, you see, or I should not tell you about it, or consult you, or anything, but just go,—go right away, you know, and make an end of it."

Routh's stern face flushed, and then darkened with a look which Harriet had learned to know, but which Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had never seen. She did not see it now, and continued:

"I sent for you to tell you this. I don't like the place. It's too small, and yet every one comes here, and I'm talked of. Ah, you sneer! Well, I know. I remember all I have said about that, but it is one thing to be talked of in London or Paris, and quite another to be the object of the daily curiosity and the malice—"

"You mean the envy, don't you?" said Routh.

"No, I don't, I mean the malice: well, the envy, or the malice, or only the observation, if you like, of always the same people, whom I meet in always the same places. That is a part of my reason, but only a part. I don't like Mr. Felton; I don't like Mr. Dallas; less than any people in the world I choose to have them spy and overlook me; and—and—I don't want to be here when that man comes."

Routh stood before her quite silent.

"You know—you remember," she said with a smile, "Arthur Felton. By the by, you need not make faces about my wearing his photograph any more, for I've lost it,—lost it before I got home yesterday. In fact, I fancy he is in some trouble, perhaps in some disgrace; and I have no fancy for being here when he arrives, to have him quarreling with me if I avoid him, and his father regarding me with horror if I don't; so—" and here she knelt on the white rug and stretched out her hands toward the fire, which shone reflected in her upraised eyes—"so I am going to—" She paused, tantalizing him.

"To —?" he repeated after her, almost in a whisper.

"To London," she said; and laughed, and looked at him, and rose. "Now, sit down, and let us talk it over, and be reasonable."

Still quite silent, Routh obeyed her. His manner, his look was changed. He was thoughtful; but an air of relief had come upon him, as if help had reached him from an unforeseen quarter.

There was no light in the window as Routh passed by it returning to his lodgings. But there was a lamp in the hall, at which he lighted a candle and went into the sitting-room.

Harriet was still sitting by the window; she did not raise or turn her head, and Routh thought she was sleeping. He went up close to her, and then she languidly opened her eyes and rose.

"Have you fallen asleep here in the dark, Harriet?" said Routh, "and without a fire! How imprudent and unnecessary."

"I am not cold," she said; but she shivered slightly as she spoke. Routh took up a shawl which lay upon a chair and wrapped it around her. She looked at him, quietly but sharply.

"Don't be afraid; I am all right to-night, Harry," he said. I've won a lot of money at the tables, and I've been thinking over what we were saying this morning—" He paused a moment, and then went on with some constraint in his voice: "I think you are right so far, that the sooner we get away from this the better. I will consider the rest of the matter when we get to London."

Harriet looked at him still, closely and sharply, but she said nothing.

"You are too tired to talk about anything to-night, Harry, I see," said Routh, with good-humor which did not sit on him very naturally, "so we will not talk. But would it be possible for you to be ready to start in the morning?"

"Yes," said Harriet, quietly, and without showing the least surprise by voice or countenance, "I will have everything ready."

Homburg von der Hohe was graced for only a few days longer by the beautiful American. Her pony-carriage and the gray ponies, the French groom, the luxurious wrappings, the splendid vision of satin, and lace, and jewels, all disappeared, and the Schwarzschild mansion was for a while desolate, until again occupied by the numerous progeny of a rich and rusty Queen's counsel.

It was understood that Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had returned to Paris. "Every season is the right season for Paris with those Americans," said a contemptuous Briton, who secretly held himself aggricved by the abrupt departure of the handsome widow, who had never appeared more than conscious of his existence, certainly not interested in the fact; "it draws them like a lodestone."

"She has evidently heard nothing of Arthur," said Mr. Felton to his nephew, "or she would have sent us word." He spoke timidly, and looked at George with anxious eyes. George looked undisguisedly serious and troubled.

"I wish your letters had arrived, uncle," he replied. "I begin to fear we shall not see Arthur here; and—and to be sorry that so much time has been lost."

A week later, George Dallas wrote to Harriet Routh from Paris, as follows:

HOTEL DU LOUVRE, PARIS, October —

My dear Mrs. Routh.—I am here with my uncle. My mother and Mr. Carruthers are traveling more slowly. We are all to meet in London. Meantime, a circumstance has occurred which may prove of great, and must be of some importance to Mr. Felton and to myself. I am compelled to ask your assistance, which I know you will give me with all your accustomed readiness and kindness. Accompanied by my uncle, I went this morning to a jeweller's shop in the Rue de la Paix to order the bracelet you know of to be re-made for my mother. I had not previously undone the packet containing the gold band and the turquoises, which you sealed up and kept in your desk for me, since the day you gave it to me at Homburg. The things were wrapped up in letter-paper, you will remember. I opened the packet on the counter of the jeweller's shop, shook the turquoises into a box he handed me for the purpose, and was holding up the gold band for him to examine, when my uncle, who was looking at the paper I had laid down, suddenly called to me, and pointing to some writing on it—mere memoranda, apparently, of articles to be purchased (I enclose a correct copy)—exclaimed, "This is Arthur's writing!" I saw at once that it was his writing, and determined to apply to you in the first place for information on the matter. It is now clear that my cousin has passed under another name than his own, and that Routh and perhaps you have known him. There is a date, too, upon the paper, —10th of April of this year. You took the paper out of the lower division of your desk. You may be able to tell us all that we have so long been anxious to know, at once. Pray answer this without delay. I think it best not to write to Routh, because my uncle and he are almost strangers, and also, dear Mrs. Routh, because it comes naturally to me to address myself to you. How strange that all this time you and Routh should have known Arthur, and I, living in intimacy with you both, should have been in a manner seeking him! You will, no doubt, be able to tell us everything without an hour's delay; but, in any case, we shall be in London in a week, and shall have Arthur's portrait to show you. I am sure this letter is very ill expressed, but I am still bewildered at the strangeness of the occurrence. Write at once. My room is No. 80.

Always yours affectionately,
GEORGE DALLAS.

P. S. The jeweller of the Rue de la Paix is a jewel among his tribe. He undertakes to replace the diamonds, and, as far as I can judge—to be sure, it's only a little way—with stones just as fine as those I sold at A—— for a third less than the money his Hebrew Dutch confrere gave me. I had a mind to tell him the value of the original diamonds, but I didn't,—the honestest of jewellers is only human, and it might tempt him to raise the price and not the value. But I think he recognized a master-mind in my uncle.

To be Continued.

TWENTY-FIVE.

I see the surf on Sandy Hook;
I see the bay below me spread:
And here I lie, with pipe and book,
And the blue sky overhead.

A quarter of a century
Has passed, and still I live to say
(Ah, little joy it gives to me!)
"I'm twenty-five to-day."

It is not very long to live;
At twenty-five we're scarcely men;
And yet, a trifle I would give
If 'twere threescore and ten.

A dozen threads among my hair
Have changed from chestnut-brown to snow;
But if they paled from weight of care,
It had been long ago.

About my eyes and on my brow
A few faint wrinkles I can trace;
Time sets his signet even now
Upon my form and face.

And yet I look both young and fresh:
I am not worn, nor pale, nor thin;
Care's scars are light upon the flesh,
But deep on that within.

Ah, yes! as seasons onward roll
My outward form seems still to thrive;
But, looking back, I fear my soul
Is more than twenty-five. —GEORGE ARNOLD.

THE VALLEY OF THE AMAZON.—In consequence of the connection of the Amazon with its tributaries and their great extent, the opening of that river will produce considerable effect on the commerce, not merely of Brazil, but also on that of the republics of Ecuador, New Granada, Peru, etc. The opening of the river to commerce will be almost as advantageous to the world as if our government opened the navigation of the Mississippi. The object of the Brazilian authorities is to increase the population of the Valley, as it is at present but 250,000. When speaking of "the Valley" of the Amazon, we must not imagine two great slopes between which the river flows. It is one extensive even plain. Its slope from the Tabantiga to the Atlantic does not exceed two hundred and forty feet. The slope in one mile is but ten feet. Owing to the prevalence of the trade winds and the presence of such a great quantity of water, the climate is not excessively hot and is not exposed to such sudden changes as are witnessed here. The usual temperature is 84°; it seldom reaches 90°. The temperature on the banks of the river is generally 78°. The streams flowing from the forest are colder. The Professor then described many of the smaller tributaries, and entered into a lengthened account of the vegetation on their banks.—Professor Agassiz's last Lecture.

PARIS FASHIONS.—A recent letter from Paris says: "The most characteristic features of the present fashions certainly are the diminished size of the crinolines—if worn at all—and the slimness given to the appearance around the hips. The dresses are made excessively gored, quite tight in front, and gradually swelling out at the lower part, till forming a sharp-pointed train. These are intended for evening toilettes, and the fashion is more and more gaining ground of wearing, for out-of-door wear, short skirts, over a petticoat either similar to the upper one, or forming a contrast. In the latter case the body answers to the petticoat, the casaque, made en sac, being the same as the petticoat. Cotton velvets, called velveteens, are frequently made in this way, and are much worn. Black is more fashionable than ever, and when trimmed with colors and a profusion of jet, is now thought dressy enough for evening wear."

A MAN BURNED TO DEATH BY INTERNAL FIRE.—A well authenticated case of spontaneous combustion occurred in Columbus, forty miles south of Indianapolis, Indiana, Feb. 16th, 1867. Andrew Nolte, a German, very intemperate in his habits, was found dead in his shop, his lips entirely burned away, leaving a ghastly hole, his tongue charred to a crisp. His nose was also burned, as if by fire coming out of his nostrils, and his clothes were still burning when found. No other part of his body save the air passages was burned. Physicians who examined the body pronounce it a clear case of spontaneous combustion. It is supposed that the fire was communicated by attempting to light a cigar.

THOSE T'S.—Two terribly tired travelers toiled through tangled thickets, thickly thorned, towards the Taliturn turnpike, telling touching tales, theoretically told, to those that thought themselves thoroughly theoretical tacticians. Therefore, the throng that threw themselves thickening thitherward thought them Thespians. Thraso-like, they thundered thrasonically their thriftless threnodies. Thirsty, they tippled together. Their tractability told them tolerably tolerant. Their tortuosity, too, transfigured the Taliturnians timorously. The tokay that they took, trying the tavern table, told terribly—tinting, tinging, troubling their thoughts—till their tintinnabulary tones tortured the tired townsmen; they thereupon thrashed the tipsy tironian tyros through the town. Two trashy trappers, tugging two terrible tridactyle tigers, took three triennial tulips to the theological teachers there, telling them that theorems theoretically treated tended towards tiring the too thoughtful theologians; that therefore theology thetically tinctured thoroughly throttled the thin thesis that theophany throws theurgy to the thoughtless. Their tedious trifling teased the teachers terribly, though their theories taxed their theosophy throughout, therefore the turnkey took the two to the trap. The tonsor trimmed them tastefully. Their testimony taken tachigraphically tabooed them, till their taciturnity turned to the tallest talking. The tagrag thronged the taphouse talking theatrically. The tavern thronged, the town tattlers told tautological tales, ten times tensible, tense, terse, thickly tinged, titillating, tissued to tickle the thoughtless. The theatre took—"The Tempter's Toils" threw the theatre-tending town to transcendentalism. Thus the Taliturn turnpike tale terminates. Toll the tocsin! tell the treason! theological Taliturn taken theatrically! Tacitly taking the tale that the T's tell, thoroughly tried, Tottotethius turns triumphautly to the telic T.

SLEIGH-DRIVING.—Sleigh-driving is the one grand, unalloyed pleasure to be enjoyed in Russia. There is nothing to compare with a long, furious sweep in a good Russian sleigh, over hard, crisp, clean snow, wrapped in good furs. A great bear-skin is hanging over the back of the sleigh, and its apron, another bear-skin, covering your legs, while your feet, encased in fur galoches, rest on a doubled-up black Siberian curly sheep-skin; on your head is a fur cap, as tall and straight and round as a very large English hat without the rim, and your hands are buried four inches deep among the sable sleeves of your coat. As you lie easily back, thus comforted, under a clear, frosty, bright sky, the horses in graceful, silver-mounted harness, toss their heads, the bells tinkle merrily. The driver, in high wolf-skin cap and sheep-skin coat, over which he has drawn a handsome blue caftan, trimmed below the arms with silver-plated round buttons as large as little eggs, and with a large parti-colored sash bound around his waist, is a fellow all excitement, of one mind with the three wild horses, who tear on at whirling speed, dashing the crisp snow in showers from their hoofs, at times for a moment half blinding you with the finest, cleanest and whitest powder in the world. With these appliances, and as you see and feel them all, you know the luxury of sleigh-driving. I am not speaking of a drive through the streets of St. Petersburg, but a drive of thirty or forty miles over untrodden virgin snow through the forest, when trees are clothed in a dense fantastic foliage of hoar-frost, festooned with ten millions of stalactites, and when the pure, bracing air, as you rush through it, sends the blood tingling through your veins.—Russian Life.

A DOG'S MEMORY.—Professor Agassiz allows a liberal margin for believing that animals may reason, and the history of the dog shows many instances where a quality far subtler than instinct governs his actions. We have just heard of one to add to the number. Carlo, a dog of the pure St. Bernard breed, was stolen from a neighboring city some two or three years since, when about two years old, and was mourned almost as much as if it were a child that had been lost. Last week the family were much surprised to have Carlo rush in, very excited, with every exhibition of delight, wagging his tail in a furious manner, and saluting every one with a bark and a caudal flourish. Once domiciled he remained, nor denoted by any action his desire to return to the home he had left, wherever it might be. He was perfectly familiar at once with the scene and its details, as though he had never been away, and took his place at once as a returned member of the family. He has also visited his old friends around the neighborhood, and inquires, so far as looks go, for their health and happiness.

MATCHED.—A burglar was lately convicted in Brooklyn on the circumstantial evidence of an internal revenue stamp. The culprit had left the cover of a match-box on the premises, and he had in his pocket, at the time of arrest, the box itself, attached to which was the torn fragment of a revenue stamp. On placing the cover on the box the broken edge of the stamp fitted exactly; and on this proof the prisoner goes to the penitentiary for ten years.

THE London papers make a great fuss over five inches of snow. They had twenty-five feet at Meadow Lake, in this State, on the 10th of March.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1867.

THE McCRACKENS ABROAD.

IT is not a pleasant reflection for an American, that the complaints of such a vulgar, twaddling busybody as Mr. McCracken should have sufficient influence with our government to produce that unique diplomatic episode, the Seward-Motley correspondence. That the slightest attention should have been paid by an American Secretary of State to such a farrago of ignorance, conceit, and malice as McCracken's epistle containing the original charges against Mr. Motley, is a national disgrace. Upon the very face of the production, it was the emanation of personal spite. It required no unusual amount of perspicacity to divine at a glance the motives in which it originated, and even to form a tolerably accurate theory in regard to the nature of the grievances which the writer had suffered at the hands of the Minister. Mr. Seward, with his experience and knowledge of the position in which an American minister is placed at a foreign Court, could scarcely have failed to guess that the complainant was one of those coarse, purse-proud individuals who, because they have money enough for foreign travel, imagine themselves entitled to that consideration which mere wealth generally secures in this country, but which mere wealth cannot secure in European society, and that Mr. Motley had failed to bestow upon him all those attentions which he conceived his due. Pique was palpably at the bottom of the matter; and that the pique originated in some fancied slight or neglect—possibly in some refusal to afford McCracken more social countenance and social facilities than he had any right to expect—was, if not a natural, by no means a strained inference. Mr. Seward must often in the course of his residence abroad have come into contact with that class of his countrymen who expect their Minister to "take them round after dinner to see the king in a sociable way," and who regard any attempt to explain the difference that exists between the usages and etiquette of the White House and those of the Tuileries, as an indication of a bias in favor of "an effete and bloated aristocracy." He must have understood the class to which the writer belonged; and we fear that in paying any attention to his communication he was guilty of a deliberate act of demagoguism.

"Tens of thousands," says the New York Nation, in an article on the embarassments of American ministers abroad, "now cross the Atlantic every Spring, of whom three-eighths belong to a class which in no other country in the world possesses the means of making the 'grand tour,' or ever think of it. Of late years a very large proportion of the very wealthiest have been persons who have made fortunes rapidly, and to say the least are not attractive in mind or manners. They swarm now in every European capital, and having plenty of diamonds and shawls, and couriers and maids, they see no reason why the European salons should not be open to them. They are nearly always determined at all events to go to court, and to make the minister take them, and the unfortunate man in most cases dare not refuse." But merely being presented at court is not enough for many of them. They also want invitations to "the parties" at the "Tooleries" or the "Palace." Any disappointment in these unreasonable expectations is sure to be visited upon the head of the luckless diplomatist, in the shape of letters to the newspapers (if not to the Secretary of State) denouncing him as a flunkey and a snob.

It is barely possible, however, and we wish for Mr. Seward's sake that it could be made to appear as an established fact, that he acted in this matter in deference to the wishes of the President, and in opposition to his own. It is very easy to understand how Mr. Johnson should sympathize with McCracken's grievances, and feel honestly indignant at Mr. Motley's alleged infidelity to "our institutions," and his undemocratic respect for the usages and etiquette of aristocratic Courts.

The silly slanders against Mr. Bright, so industriously circulated by the less scrupulous portion of the Tory press, and which obtained some credit even in the United States, have been pretty thoroughly exposed by the correspondence between Mr. Garth and the Great Reformer, and by the demonstration of his work-people at Rochdale, twelve hundred of whom presented him with an address filled with expressions of respect, and denying with warmth the reports referred to. In his reply to the address, Mr. Bright said: "If it were true that we were the oppressors of those who live near us, and to whom we pay wages, you were the the oppressed....and if we were devoid of conscience, you were proved to be devoid of independence."

A LOFTY REVENGE.

WE observe that several of the Eastern journals are absurdly indignant over a very curious contribution to mathematical science, in the shape of a "New Algebra," by General D. H. Hill, of the late Confederate army. In this unique work, the chivalrous ex-warrior has hit upon one of the oddest devices for "getting even" with the victorious Yankees and soothing the mortification of defeat, that ever presented itself to the masculine mind; indeed, there is something so essentially feminine, both in the general conception and in the spirit and style in which it is carried out, that we are quite unable to resist the conviction that the idea was originally suggested to the gallant soldier, by some fair Secessionist, of the class whose patriotic zeal was so intense and so sensitive, that the mere sight of the blue uniform operated as an immediate provocative of expectoration. That the "Northern Abolitionists" would after the close of the war be vigorously berated both in prose and rhyme, by the less virile portion of their antagonists, was a thing to be expected by any one who has been brought to understand that the beldame element in human nature is pretty widely diffused, and is not exclusively the characteristic of the weaker sex. The "Bill Arps" and "Brick Pomeroys," and the whole tribe of the bright and shining lights of Confederate literature who have evinced so much energy and fertility of objurgatory eloquence in viturpeating the enemy whom they took care to keep out of the way of until the fighting was over—all these might have been predicted by any person of ordinary sagacity and knowledge of human nature; but that mathematical science could be pressed into the service, and a textbook of Algebra be made a vehicle for inculcating in the minds of the rising generation of the South the sacred duty of cherishing an undying hate and contempt for the Yankee nation—this is an idea the originality of which savors of indubitable genius. To this patriotic task, General Hill has devoted his intellectual energies. Having been debarred by the force of untoward circumstances from longer serving his country in the tented field, he laid aside the sword for the pen, and retiring to his study elaborated the whimsical work which seems strangely enough to have provoked the ire of certain very thin-skinned Northern journalists. We cannot resist the temptation to give a few amusing extracts:

Milk sells at Boston at a cents per quart. A milkman mixed a certain quantity of water with b quarts of milk, and sold the mixture at c cents per quart, without losing by the sale. What is the quantity of water added?

A Yankee mixed a certain quantity of wooden nutmegs, which cost him 1-4 cent apiece, with a quantity of real nutmegs, worth 4 cents apiece, and sells the whole for $43, and gains $3 75 by the fraud. How many wooden nutmegs were there?

At the "Woman's Rights Convention," held at Syracuse, N. Y., composed of 120 delegates, the old maids, childless wives, and bedlamites, were to each other as five, seven and three. How many of each class?

A gentleman in Richmond expressed a willingness to liberate his slave, valued at $1,000, upon the receipt of that sum from charitable persons. He received contributions from twenty-four persons; and of those there were 14 19 fewer from the North than from the South, and the average donation from the former was 4 5 smaller than that of the latter. What was the entire amount given by each? Answer—$50 by the North, $950 by the South.

The field of battle at Buena Vista is six and a half miles from Saltillo. Two Indiana soldiers (volunteers) ran away from the field of battle at the same time; one ran half a mile per hour faster than the other, and reached Saltillo five minutes 54 6-11 seconds sooner than the other. Required the respective rate of travel?

These specimens are amply sufficient to establish the author's claims to rank with the brightest "particular stars" of Confederate literature. "Bill Arp" can no longer be fairly considered "the greatest living Southern satirist," as his enthusiastic admirers delight to phrase it. In justice to the fair author, her name should not be withheld from her countrymen. The editor—for our theory is that the General is only the editor, though the modesty of genius has prevented the lady from placing herself in the foreground—should be too magnanimous to appropriate laurels that do not fairly belong to him.

The Napa Register is indignant with the Bulletin for its editorial allusion to the country papers as "the yelpers of the interior," a phrase which is certainly scarcely in keeping with the tone of dignified reserve that has generally characterized the Bulletin, at least the last year or two. The Register then proceeds to assert the usefulness and influence of the country press with much spirit, and concludes with the declaration that "the interior" intends to make the next Governor, and and that said next Governor will more than probably be Mr. Bidwell. So far as we can gather from our California exchanges, the disposition to press Mr. Bidwell's claims in a spirit not altogether free from provincial jealousy of San Francisco, is very general. So far as capacity is concerned either of the three gentleman named from this city in connection with the office is Mr. Bidwell's equal; while in respect of long, able, and fearless service in the ranks of the Union party, and of early identification with liberal and progressive ideas at a time when the profession of them was neither profitable nor popular, one at least of the three has claims far stronger than can be advanced for Mr. Bidwell.

[For the Californian.]

DREAMING.

Bright and wurm is the sunshine;
Soft is the air and balmy;
Scarcely a ripple ruffles the waters
That ebb in the placid bay.
The holy rest of the Sabbath
And its blissful quiet calm me,
As I lie alone on the beach, all idly
Musing the hours away.

Off in the harbor yonder
There lies a barque at anchor;
From the Indian seas she has brought a freightage
Of gums and spices rare;
Though her hull is worn and battered
And her sails from jib to spanker
Storm-rent and tattered, around her are scattered
Sweet odors upon the air.

And the perfumed zephyrs lull me
Into a trancéd vision
Of far away islands, clustered like jewels
That beauty's breast adorn;
Of never fading verdure,
And emerald vales Elysian,
Vine-festooned arbors and sweet flowers blushing
With the glorious tints of morn.

Of white bloomed orange gardens,
With parterres of red roses;
Of tangled thickets breathing the fragrance
Of cinnamon and spice;
Of nutmeg-trees and palm-trees,
Acacias and mimosas,
And groves where nestle bright golden pheasants
And birds of paradise.

Of a fair round valley inland,
Through which a streamlet dancing
Merrily murmurs a musical measure,
Till lost in a fairy lake,
On whose clear breast a sunbeam,
Entrancéd and entrancing,
Lies like a lover on a maiden's bosom,
Dreaming, and fearing to wake!

In that sequestered valley
So fair and calm and peaceful,
Willingly would I dwell forever
With only my loved ones near.
Oh, that were an existence
Supremely blest and blissful,
Where the restless world with its noise and tumults
Might never assail my ear!

But lo! my dream is ended,
For down from the bleak coast highlands
Angrily sweeps the wild sou'-wester,
Furious with storm and rain.
Vanished are all my visions
Of the beautiful far spice islands;
And I wearily wend my way to the city—
Back to my toil and pain.

San Francisco, March 17, 1867. John Clerk.

LOVE'S SEASONS.

A YEAR ago I loved her,
Then Love was in its Spring;
The buds were coyly op'ning,
Fearing cold blasts withering.

Next Love was in its Summer,
And the rich, warm flowers
Grew luxuriously and wanton,
O'er the once cool leafy bowers.

Soon Love was in its Autumn,
And its luscious fruits I ate;
With their juices I was drunken,
Yet not wearied until late.

Then Love was in its Winter,
And the horrid ice and snow
Buried Love—I thought, forever—
But I have not found it so.

Love was dead, but Love still liveth,
Another Spring has come;
Love arisen now appeareth,
Seeking in my heart a home.

Weep not for Love's past seasons—
When the old Love seems to die,
Frozen dead by chilly Winter,
Then bethink thee, Spring is nigh.

Ever dying, ever living,
Like the blossom, bud and tree,
Love has seasons, and oh, joyful!
'Tis Love's Summer now with me!

—Tremenheere Lanyon Johns.

Cobb & Sinton's Great Real Estate Sale.—On Tuesday next, March 26th, Messrs. Cobb & Sinton, Auctioneers, will sell at Platt' Hall eight hundred magnificent building lots, covering the finest part of the city, and embracing the well-known "Hudson Garden and Orchard Tract." The Bay-View Shell Road leads directly through the property, and the Potrero and Bay-View Horse Railroad, which will be completed by the 1st of July next, will connect these tracts, within a convenient distance, with the heart of the city. The title is impregnable, and those who wish to purchase homesteads will never have a better opportunity. The terms are—All sums over $600 one-fourth cash; one-fourth in one year; one-fourth in two years, and one-fourth in three years; all sums under $600 one-half cash, balance in one year: deferred payments secured by mortgage on the premises, and bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable quarterly.

[For the Californian.]

MINING EXPERIENCES IN CALIFORNIA.

BY PRENTICE.

ONE of the most uninviting spots to the human eye is a bar—not a bar over which whisky is retailed by the the glass, but a bar on some auriferous stream, a bar covered with boulders and mud. In such a place did I first commence digging for gold in the great State of California. I struck the mines with fifteen dollars and twenty-five cents in my pocket; I left them some ten years afterward with nearly the same amount; the only difference being that the first named sum really belonged to me, while the last was borrowed. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." The man who assisted me pecuniarily to get out of those places is now one of the Lord's creditors.

Not long in the mines did I waste in idleness. One day I beheld two men endeavoring to turn over a big boulder on Stony Bar. Stony Bar is on the Tuolumne River. The place may be known to but few at present, for years have elapsed since white men worked it. Like thousands of other bars in this State its dirt, stones and boulders have been turned over and over again, first by the Caucasian, and last by the Mongolian, in search of the precious metal. When I beheld those two men striving with the big stone, to use the parlance of the country, I "pitched in" and helped them turn it over. Then I inquired if they could take a partner. They hardly knew whether they wanted one or not, but finally concluded to take me in "just for luck." That was my first mining interest. I knew nothing of the business—couldn't use a long handled shovel properly, couldn't "rock the cradle," but I could pack buckets of dirt. That was all. The company was very poor. Our rocker, shovels, picks and other implements were borrowed; so were our blankets. Our provision was charged at a neighboring store, and it remains charged even unto this day. Of one partner there remains a faint recollection that he was not a white man. All else is veiled in obscurity and darkness. The other was a faded, elderly, melancholy individual in dungaree pants, a bursted straw hat with protruding hair and a faded bandanna handkerchief tied about his neck, very much tarnished owing to the frequency with which he blew and wiped and then wiped and blew his nose; for he had a perpetual cold, also three dogs and an old rifle. He was a forty-niner and had of course made and lost a dozen fortunes in the country. He borrowed a pair of the store-keeper's blankets, for it was melancholy to see such a man with such a cold sleeping uncovered by a fire at night; and he finally went off with them in a melancholy manner, without a word of thanks, apology or offer of pecuniary remuneration to the charitable store keeper. So endeth the first lesson.

Next I creviced with a Nova Scotian. Crevicing consists in digging out the auriferous earth from cracks and holes in the rocks along the river bank. Crowbars, picks, long handled spoons, crooked pieces of iron hoop, scrapers, brushes and pans, are all necessary in crevicing. Sometimes it requires half a day to get a single pan of dirt, but that may yield several dollars. It was a fine business in 'forty-nine and 'fifty, when nuggets were pried out with butcher knives, but the first comers speedily lapped up this golden crerm. In fifty-seven I discovered that crevicing involved labor in all sorts of uncomfortable positions, such as crawling into a horizontal hole and fishing out dirt from the further extremity with the spoon, the further end of the crevice being just out of reach, and always supposed to hold the richest pay. You lay on your back and scraped dirt in your face. You squatted for hours dragging infinitesimal doses of soil with a crooked iron, or lay down with your backboue to the hot sun ou a hot rock and baked while the right hand was digging up fistfulls of dirt. There is no end to the positions required in crevicing. My Nova Scotian and myself lived in a brush shanty. A level spot the size of a common table could nowhere be found. The only uniformity in the rugged precipitous ledge was its being all inclined at or near an angle of forty-five degrees. We lived in a perpetual slant. We slept on a slant, and were obliged to "chock" our feet at night with large stones to avoid sliding into the river. We subsisted on potatoes, bread and pork. Our potatoes often rolled into the river, and in fact almost everything that would roll or slide had a tendency to move in that direction. Thus for three weeks we lived in a sitting posture, for comfortable standing ground there was noue. Then came one night the first Fall rain. That was indeed a night of exposure and patient resiguation to the fury of the elements, for we were not even able to walk to keep the chilled blood in circulation. That wound up crevicing.

There I enjoyed the experience of being a partner with three other men in a bank or placer claim It was a claim of great expectations and small results; always promising a strike, and as regularly averaging from two and a half to four dollars per day. It was a claim calculated to develop a vast amount of patience in the science of waiting—waiting for water—a matter, by the way, in which every miner must have had more or less experience. A wire suspension flume conveyed to us water from the main ditch over the river. This flume was in a chronic state of break-down, whenever the ditch was not dry. By the way, we waited nearly a year for the construction of the flume, sustaining life and developing the country in the mean time by grubbing out from one to two dollars per day with pans and rockers. For six months after getting water our reservoir had a trick of breaking away at night. As a rule it was one day's work on the claim and two on the reservoir. Such labor was unsatisfactory in its results, yet it had to be done.

There was also no end of labor expended in the construction of tail races, setting sluices, getting ready to wash dirt. Betwixt all these delays we did not average more than half the time in the actual work of extracting gold from the dirt. And this is the history of three-fourths of California mining.

In the search for gold the labor unproductive of any profit has been sufficient to lay a railroad track from this to the Atlantic coast; and had the weary hours passed in unprofitable waiting been employed in its construction, the double track might also have beeu completed.

My three partners were Irishmen. The Irish are brave, patriotic and impulsive. The Irish mind when cultivated is brilliant, possessing many attractive qualities. I had to deal with three Irish minds in the husk. There is no doubt but that fifty or a hundred years of education and contact with intellectual society would have made model men of my three partners. But Fate had placed me at the wrong end of the hundred years, in so far as related to any pleasure to be derived from their company. Rich mines of mental wealth might have been hidden in their brains, but such treasure was at that time buried in unfathomable depths.

These three partners with one accord lifted up their voices and grumbled at me, because the claim did not meet their anticipations. I had unfortunately been too sanguine regarding its value; and they had been partly induced to invest their money and time owing to my representations. All that I had said I believed at the time. Such a spot had prospected three cents to the pan and a spot at the further end of the claim two cents, and in the bottom of a shaft sunk in the middle I had taken a bit "prospect" from the ledge, and it was quite natural to suppose that all the ground would yield in the same proportion. But it did not. Therein lay the grand trouble. It ought to have yielded handsomely. I used all my powers of reasoning to no purpose in endeavoring to convince the three partners of the injustice practiced ou us by that mineral ground after it had held out such flattering prospects. Yet they became more sulky and surly. "They hadn't seen no such prospects as some folks talked about; there had been a heap of blowing about that claim; they wanted to sell out and go to Cariboo." They made matters so disagreeable for me at last that I wished them in Cariboo, cold as it is said to be, and I hadn't then sufficient charity to have interposed to prevent them from going to any hotter place.

This experience taught me never to be sanguine in recommending any sort of business. No man has since that period been advised by me to invest in anything, let it promise what it may. You may produce mountains of shining gold, yet I would say, "Use your own judgment, my friend. Here are the facts and the probabilities so far as human reason can foresee. Thus and so would I do were I in your place, but don't rest on me entirely. I've been rested on to my grief."

The infection of selling out having seized my partners they sold. They sold to me. I bought one share for one hundred, one for one hundred and fifty, and the last for two hundred dollars. These shares were bargained for privately and separately with each partuer—hence the inequality in the price. The transaction over, the scale of prices demanded and given to each became known. Of course the hundred dollar man was not quite so well satisfied as the man who had received one hundred and fifty dollars; neither was he who had received one hundred and fifty so joyful in heart as he who had pocketed two hundred. The first two enjoyed a farewell grumble with me for having sold themselves out so cheaply, and then departed. The other partner was comparatively satisfied. He had received more money than his fellow beings.

I have noticed that a great amount of worldly pleasure is derived from this source. The immortal part of man finds a great deal of occupation in scheming and contriving how he may get a cent a pound more for his wheat, sugar and cotton than somebody else.

Sole proprietor of the claim, I was very well satisfied. I was divorced from three incumbrances, and head over heels in debt, since I had borrowed money from numerous poor but good-hearted miners, that this grand purchase might be accomplished. I next worked with Chinamen "on shares." Still the claim persisted in not paying. The Mongolians left in disgust. Calamities thickened. My boots wore out entirely. I went without boots. There was au unmerciful trader near by who had stores of boots, but none could I get of him without first handing over two-thirds more than their real value in dust or coin. And shortly afterward, while looking out for the interest of the country in the capacity of delegate from my precinct to the county convention, in a pair of borrowed boots, I was eaten out of house and home by the cows. This may sound strange to the inhabitauts of large towns and cities, but it is literally true. Years ago houses covered with cotton drilling were very common in the mines. I lived in such a house. Cows love cotton drilling, or rather they love to chew it, perhaps for the sake of the salt it contains. At all events, while I was a delegate to our country convention, elected to that dignity by reason of being the only person in our precinct who could read and write, the cows ate up my house. I returned and found my hearth desolate. More—they ate up all my flour and potatoes. They chewed into rags my blankets and the scanty stock of garments left behind. Nor was this all. Adding insult to injury, they had committed indignities in every direction.

The heavens at this period seemed of brass, owing to complication of financial difficulties enhanced by vaccine ravages. The store of the milk of human kinduess in one breast—for cows—was entirely exhausted.

About this time I suffered the pangs of an experience in the hog business. A small drove—in fact, to come down to the naked truth, a moderate litter—of pigs, including their maternal relative, were offered for sale at a very low figure. Revelling already in the dignity of being sole owner of a tract of mineral land, I coveted also that of a stock raiser. A train of half developed ideas shot through my brain which might be thus expressed: Hogs—climate favorable to increase—cost nothing to keep—increasc like compound interest. So I borrowed more money and bought the family. For a few days they were the pride of my heart, and in imagination I saw the valleys and plains covered with forthcoming hogs and pigs. In my engrossing desire for the accumulation of wealth I cured nothing for the ravages to be wrought by my thousands of hogs on our valley, so beautiful in the springtime, carpeted with green and chequered with wild flowers. I cared nothing if the few springs and tiny rivulets, so rare in the hot hills of California and so welcome to the traveler, were converted into pools and streams of filth for hogs and pigs to wallow in. I was justly punished for my selfishness. As soon as the maternal hog became acquainted with the neighborhood she organized her progeny into a guerilla band, and commenced one continued series of forays on the dwellers round about. They lived well for a time; better, indeed, than the miners, for they broke into the cloth-covered houses and feasted on the flour and beans. Irate men came to me at noon, saying that my swine had devoured their dinners left in the morning on the fire to cook—had dragged and eaten half baked bread from Dutch ovens. I apologized in vain. Our small community was in a porcine ferment. They threatened to shoot. I suppose they shot, for the herd gradually diminished in numbers. At a sort of impromptu mass meeting held at my house, I contended that my hogs had a natural right to roam the plains in search of sustenance. The sentiment of the community was, however, adverse.

It is quite useless to reasou with men upon abstract questions of right and wroug, where such questions endanger the security of their bread and butter—especially where burglarious hogs enter into the discussion.

Then my swine pestered me by day and disturbed my rest by night with their squealing. They slept in a pile close to the house. There was ever a constant struggle the livelong night. The little pigs on the outside of the pile wished to secure a central position. The nights were cool and frosty, and the inside was warmer than the outside. Finding that the hog business agreed with me neither mentally or physically, I sold out after a two months' fearful experience. So ended my struggles for wealth with the hog considered as a quadruped. It could not be well left out in my mining experience, so closely is it interwoven in that lamentable history.

I have mined in the river also. I worked four months one Summer with four men, endeavoring to divert the Tuolumne from its natural course, that we might get all the treasure supposed to be locked up in its bed. The occupation was not a very diverting one, nor did the Tuolumne seem much diverted by our labors. There was a constant strife between us and the river, and finally the river conquered. I know that claim must have been possessed by a devil. When the "head dam" was not leaking the "foot wall" was, and when these two were stopped the "side walls" commenced similar operations. The largest leaks always started just as we were about to quit work and get our suppers. Then ensued a grand conflict and two or three hours of sand packing and sand dumping into the insatiable maw of the Tuolumne. River claims require to be kept free from water by constant pumping, the motive power being generally furnished by undershot water wheels. Our claim was thus equipped, but the devil who presided over its destinies filled the pumps with sand once in twenty four hours, generally at midnight. Then he sent sticks and logs down the river to break the floats of the wheel. A sudden rise filled us up with water just as were ready to take out "pay dirt." Two weeks were occupied in getting in statu quo again. The ground had been partly worked the previous season. It was said that a rich bank had been left. We found no such bank. It must have been moved down stream by the Fall freshet. What dirt we were able to get at was wheeled out on the river side. It was our intention to get out as much as possible before the rains set in, and then wash it out at leisure. And finally the rains descended and the winds blew, the river come down and also came up even higher than the piles of "pay dirt," and washed them entirely away. If I recollect rightly, something like eight dollars was realized from the claim. All this time debts for board and clothes and boots had been accumulating.

I mention boots again because they are a fearful and expensive necessity in the mines. Clothing can in a great measure be dispensed with; for a pair of dungaree pants and a gray woolen shirt will last a man a year; or, if poverty precludes the purchase of these articles, you may array yourself in a gunny bag, or even go as you came into the world, excepting boots. One must have boots. And here it is proper that a voice should be raised in condemnatiou of the feeble things in the shape of boots palmed off by designing speculators upon the being once known as the "honest miner." They are mere delusions, ofttimes with no more leather in their soles than honesty in the hearts of the manufacturers. It is time that shoemakers here and elsewhere were disabused of the idea that the sole mission of California miner is to wear out their worthless boots.

The river claim terminated disastrously. Indeed, it commenced with a bad omen, for on the first day one of our boys was bitten in the hand by a rattlesnake while turning over a boulder. To save his life we made him druuk on bad whisky, which came near killing him, for he was not a steady drunkard and his insides could not accommodate themselves at once to an inferior article.

The snake died. And at the last washing away of everything everybody took to whisky to cure the bite of disappointed hopes. But such was the custom on the river ten years ago.

Some day I will tell you something about my operations in quartz.

A PARENTHESIS OR TWO.

"LOVE me, love my dog." A wise adage, I dare say. I don't at all mind their loving me, but I have the strongest objection to their loving my dog—when, as in this instance, my dog is represented by my wife. I am an old bachelor just returned from my honeymoon, and I should be intensely happy under such circumstances, were it not that the men who, until now, have contented themselves with loving me (and it is bare justice to them to mention that they never made their affection for me unpleasantly conspicuous), have now taken to loving my wife. I can never go out without the conviction that, on my return, I shall probably find that Tom, Dick, or Harry, of my bachelor days, has just dropped in to see his old friend, and that, finding me from home (T., D., and H. cannot be taught to remember my club nights), the obliging visitor has remained to enjoy a gossip with my pretty wife.

And the worst of it is, she likes it! She laughs and pouts, and declares she is never sure of having a minute to herself; but she doesn't care to have a minute to herself, or she could have it, and would have it. Is "Not at home" so hard to say? (She has already caused it to be said to some of my relations; I know that.)

But she is such a little humbug (I suppose all women are to a certain extent). I believe coquetry to be innate with her. In her infancy she had her baby lovers, one of whom she would always contrive to render so sulkily miserable for an afternoon, that the unfortunate little aspirant for her favors would be put in the corner for "Temper" by his nurse, while the fair cause of the fault and punishment would play with the brother of the wretched victim before his eyes, lavishing on his rival her sweetest smiles, and behaving altogether with the grace of an angel. And as she grew up, my stars, how she grew in grace, grew in beauty, and grew in coquetry! At fifteen she was the most finished little flirt, the most heartless little humbug, I ever saw. (Is heartless too strong an expression? No. I verily believe she had no such thing as a heart during our courtship. She could have had none, or she could never have witnessed my sufferings with such consummate indifference. It was not so much that I suffered because I could never find out whether she really loved me or not, as that I suffered because I could never feel sure that she did not love half a dozen others as well. Hateful and heartless! Then why did I marry her? I don't know. Don't ask me.)

But she has the prettiest and most loving ways that ever beguiled a man into matrimony; she has the sweetest smile, the most enchanting laugh, the most caressing voice that ever drove man to distraction. (But these charms should be reserved exclusively for me, and they are not.) Her face (I love it) is as bright and sunny when raised towards Jack as when raised towards me. And yet Jack didn't marry her. (I suspect Jack regrets that he didn't; or why does he drop in so very often now?)

I put it to any one. Can it be a pleasant thing for me, when I come home tired and—well, suppose I say cross—to find my wife sitting back in a low chair, warming her feet by the fire (she has uncommonly pretty feet), with her hair done up with cherry colored ribbons (she knows she looks best in cherry-colored ribbons, for Jack is always telling her so), her lips parted and her blue eyes eager with suspense, looking full up at Jack as he reads to her? True, when I come in she beams at me, and makes room for my chair by her side, and the book is allowed to close, and the conversation (I always think conversation with three so stupid!) becomes general, till Jack finds out (what I am convinced he would never have discovered if I hadn't come in) that it is getting late, and takes his departure. The instant he is gone, up springs my wife, wheels my easy-chair round to the fire, warms my slippers, scorching her pretty face sadly the while, rings for tea (I dare say she and Jack have had tea), and then, drawing a stool close to my side, clasps her hands before me, in the old winning attitude that first took my heart by storm years and years ago, when my darling was but a child (a child, and what is she now?), and says, "And now, dear, that that stupid bore is gone, tell me what you have been doing all day." (Now what, I ask, is any one to say to such a charming little humbug?)

I had meant to talk very gravely to her about her conduct towards my so-called friends (particularly Jack,) and I had even concocted a sentence beginning with, "You must really think seriously, my dear——" but it is of no use, when things come to this pass. I can't look at her and scold her (and she takes very good care I shan't scold her without looking at her), so the subject drops, as all subjects do drop when she is by, and I luxuriate in my easy-chair and warm slippers, and, gazing on my pretty wife as she flits about the room like a household fairy as she is, feel that I am blest among men. (But this state of things is not calculated to last. The next evening finds Jack in his old place, his abominable face undeniably good-looking as ever.)

He is fresh, open, and good-tempered is Jack (why in the name of fate shouldn't he be good-tempered when talking to my wife?), and his honest eyes (these fellows always have honest eyes) express unqualified admiration of my wife. Mine! (Let me say it again, it does me good; my wife, Jack; a dozen times over, mine.) While she on her part has to-night discarded the cherry-colored ribbons, and has come out all over blue ribbons (I wish Jack wouldn't alter his taste in ribbons so often, it makes our bills high), and is altogether most bewitching.

What am I to do? I can't prevent her looking lovely (and I wouldn't if I could). I can't stop the supplies. I can't snip away those distracting ribbons. Sooner than resort to such measures, let all the Jacks ever heard or thought of, drink my wines, read my paper (I wish Jack would read the papers more when he comes; he knows nothing of politics), or sing themselves hoarse to my wife's sweet accompaniment! (Still if I could think of any half measure that would prevent Jack from giving us more than, say five evenings a week of his valuable time, I should feel it a relief.

I have an idea! (I dare say my wife does not think me capable of it, but I have.) Jack likes pretty women (I have a tolerably good proof of this every day of my life); suppose I introduce him to one. I know one who is, strictly speaking (though I have never found any one who thought so), far more beautiful than my wife. I will take Jack there, this very night, and see if she can't act as a corrective to the blue and red ribbons. I mention it to Jack. He doesn't see it, of course (I never expected he would); but he consents to go with me, and he goes. She doesn't act as a corrective to the blue and red ribbons (of course she doesn't; he's much too far gone for that). Jack says she's not "his style" (his style is probably at the moment flirting furiously with Dick of my bachelor days), and the evening is a failure.

We both come away in a bad humor (not an uncommon occurrence in my case, by-the-by), and bear with us invitations to an approaching ball; to which, of course, she will wish to go. She does wish to go; she says it will be "delightful." When the night arrives, she appears in complete ball room attiré, like a——("Vision of light," Jack very kindly remarks.)

Talk of her beauty (though it's really worth talking of) in her every-day ordinary dress (if any dress ever looked ordinary on her), what is it then to what it is now! Well! She looks very lovely in her feathery whiteness, and I am very proud of her, and should be quite willing to go to this or any other ball and see her enjoy herself as much as she could, poor child! (were it not that, down stairs, waiting for us, is—Jack). Jack! In the most dandified "get up," with the most irreproachable tie, and in his hand the most exquisite bouquet of white camelias. (They are not for me, but perhaps the next best thing to a present for oneself should be a present for one's wife.) I say nothing (chiefly because I have nothing to say), and we set off. My wife says, "should I mind going outside, because her dress does take up so much room?" I don't mind, and I go outside.

They (Jack and my wife) are dancing their seventh round dance. I feel that to-night either Jack or I will go mad (and that it won't be Jack). I make a last effort. I tell my wife that I feel unwell, and hint that I should like to return home. She is goodness itself. She is so sorry! The heat of crowded ball-rooms is the worst thing possible for a headache. I must go home at once; I need not feel the least uneasy about her. Jack will see her home. (Will he? Not if I know it.) I sit on. There they go again, gallop the eighth. (I wish people would take to dancing alone—hornpipes, for instance—I could then be content to sit and look on for any length of time. How young she looks, how unutterably fair, with her blue eyes shining, and her soft hair pushed from her flushed cheek!)

The evening comes to an end at last, and I take my little wife home (and listen to her innocent laughter and girlish glee, with a thankful heart, for my darling is as open and as pure as the day). Still I must take some measures (for Jack's sake).

Poor Jack! I think about it all the rest of the night, and I hit upon a little plan to show Jack that my little wife's pretty ways and carressing manners are natural to her, and inseparable from her, and are bestowed on others as freely as on him.

I coax Dick (that is, I mention it to Dick, who jumps at the idea) to come and spend an evening with us. He arrives about ten minutes before Jack's usual hour for appearing, and I put him and my wife down at the piano (which means that I do nothing of the kind, but that they establish themselves at that instrument, and I don't interfere). Jack arrives. Jack evinces astonishment, bewilderment, discomfiture. Sitting back on the music stool, accompanying without a book, for her blue eyes are raised above the level of the music-desk, is my wife, while over her leans Dick, singing with the greatest expression the burden of Balfe's popular song: "Then you'll remember me." Jack is sulkiness itself all night, and provokingly proof against all my little wife's attempts to flatter him into a more social state of mind. He takes his leave early, and confides to me at parting that he thinks he shall go abroad; "for after all, old fellow," he says, "there is nothing to be done in England." I agree with him, and hint that I would like to know in what part of the world he thinks there is anything to be done, when he replies, still sulkily busy with his great-coat, "It's all one; I don't suppose there's anything to be done anywhere." I retort, "Well, good-bye, old chum, if you really mean it. I suppose when you come back you'll be bringing your wife with you—some foreign beauty, to startle the natives." Jack catches hold of my arm, and in the tone of one who delivers a new idea, says, "But what is beauty?" (rather good that, from Jack), "and besides—all women are humbugs."

So Jack goes off (and I cannot but feel glad at Jack's departure). Absence will be very good for Jack, I know. Whereas, for me!—How happy I am as I resume the thread of my honeymoon, and feel that there is none now but myself to admire (I conveniently ignore Dick) the sweet face of my pretty wife!—All the Year Round.

MEN'S VANITY.

WITH regard to this very subject of vanity, men's notions about themselves, and women's views on the same point, are, according to our experience, considerably at variance. Women probably, we may almost say certainly, when their sex is accused of vanity, will acknowledge "the soft impeachment." They have heard it asserted very often; and it may be that every woman in her heart knows that there is something with regard to which she cherishes a little vanity. But men, if charged with being vain, will roundly deny it. This does not, however, diminish in women the conviction that the vanity exists, notwithstanding all disclaimers.

Take the vanity of dress. That women should be careful to dress as well as others is often given as an instance of their vanity. Are there no men to whom the length or width of a coat, the placing of the buttons, the set of a shirt-front, the width and shape of a collar, the fashion of a neck-tie, are objects of unceasing anxiety? The time which women spend in arraying themselves has often been made matter of reproach. But it is within our knowledge that men will spend more than an hour in dressing for a dinner-party. If a woman spends much time in getting herself up we have at least a work of art as the result of the painstaking; but a man after it all is but a creature in no wise distinguishable from all the others of the sex at any social gathering, and the vanity is more unpardonable, seeing that the result is so ineffective.

Closely connected with this is the vanity of personal appearance. No woman consults their glass with more anxiety than do many men. Wrinkles and gray hairs are grievous to them; and the restorative arts of the beautifiers are devoted exclusively to the service of the fair sex. Do not men grieve when they begin to lose their good figure? Do they not subject themselves to tortures in the matter of boots? Are all those beards and moustaches cultivated and kept in order without thought; and is there no exultation when these appendages are abundant, and of the desired color and texture? What pains must be taken that the line which divides men's "back hair" may be straight! Double glasses and pairs of brushes, contortions of body and much agony of mind, must all be brought into requisition before the desired effect is accomplished.

Then there is the vanity of influence over the other sex. When a woman possesses influence over men she is always conscious of it, and uses it or not, as she likes, without making much fuss. If she does not possess it, however, she does not go about under the delusion that she has the power if she only chose to exert it. But with men the case is totally different. As "lords of the creation" they feel they ought to have influence; and we never met with a man, however mean and insignificant, who was not firmly impressed with the notion that, if he so willed it, all the women of his acquaintance would be "at his feet." Of course men do not go about saying it in so many words. They would only get ridiculed for their pains, if the notion found vent in outward expression. But the idea is there, and women are aware of it, and they perhaps laugh a little at the notion, and the vanity of it.

There is also the vanity of opinion—perhaps we ought to say infallibility of opinion. Occasionally women dogmatize; but they are in most cases ready to admit that there are subjects about which they do not know everything. But, when men utter an opinion, they seem to consider it final: and that any one who disagrees with them is either a knave or a fool. They may not say so, but it is evident they think it.

We need hardly draw attention to the vanity of sex in which men indulge. That they are men, and therefore superior, is a fact which they not only feel but are so constantly bringing up that one begins half to suspect, that a thing which needs such perpetual reiteration is not, after all, so sure a ground for self-laudation as it appears to be.

AMONG the wonders at the Paris Exhibition will be an ambulatory Chinese restaurant, made of bamboo, and borne on the shoulders of a Celestial. It is an institution complete in itself, and is to be seen everywhere in China where workmen are congregated. It serves a hot cutlet or a fried fish for a few farthings.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.

They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

A POINT ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.

Out of ten thousand regular physicians you cannot find one who will not say that STIMULANTS and INVIGORANTS are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet, in bygone years, humane practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fiendish ingenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so polluted and deteriorated them, that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians know, because the first analytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact that

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Are absolutely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, whereon the testimony of the wise, the intelligent, and the philanthropic is rated at its just value, as the best protective against and cure for all diseases arising from impurity in the air or other unhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

D. J. OLIVER,

101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.

ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,

Where he offers for sale the largest stock of

Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

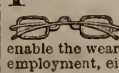
Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.



PERFECT SPECTACLES exactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536 Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY
PRINTING?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

DR. FONDA'S SAN FRANCISCO EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
Northeast corner of Montgomery and California streets, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!

PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities large and small can be supplied at low figures, on application to

L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.

☞All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE NEW AND ELEGANT STYLES OF
DRESS HATS!
FOR
SPRING AND SUMMER, 1867, ARE NOW READY
AT
MEUSSDORFFER'S,
HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial St...San Francisco
No. 125 J Street,.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second Streets.....Marysville
No. 72 Front Street.....Portland, Or

OUR STYLES OF GENTLEMEN'S DRESS AND BUSINESS HATS, manufactured of the best material and by the most skillful mechanics, excel any in fineness, taste, and durability ever introduced on this coast. We are receiving by each steamer all the LATEST NOVELTIES from New York, London, and Paris. Call and see them.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT
AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,
AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Removal!!

JOHN F. SNOW.

COLORING, CLEANING AND RESTORING OF FEAthers, Kid Gloves, Silks, Woolens, Furs, etc., has removed to the new building of the "MECHANICS' INSTITUTE," opposite the old stand, 25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

☞'RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for sale as usual.

BILLIARDS CUE RIOUSLY CONSIDERED.

BY HARRY POMEROY.

"Would you like to play a game?" you ask of some party in the hall.

"Well—I don't know--yes—I'll play one game. I don't play much of a game though—never did.

"I'm all out of practice—nothing but a 'scrub' player at best.

"However, I'll try yon one. I don't think I've played a game for three months."

This response you'll get nine times out of ten, and nine times out of ten you'll get beat, and you may play a very fair game too. It is one of the idiosyncrasies of players to rate themselves low in your estimation. One gets the conceit taken out of him in this way. Playing with four different parties one evening, who all to a man reiterated the above, as nearly as possible, I was beaten by the lot. They all laid over me heavy.

They all allowed I played the best game, but somehow or other, they beat me. They were lucky, they said. It was flattering to my skill, but rather flattening to my wallet, and not very agreeable to my feelings. I noticed they kept playing pretty regularly after that night, probably to get into practice again.

Billiards is a handy game to have in the house, and is countenanced by the first families of fashion.

Some of America's young shoots know more about the billiard table than they do about the multiplication table.

It is popular with the fair sex, more so than foot ball, and many of them play a fair game. They like it on account of the "matches" frequently made, and the "kisses" they often meet with. It's a spicy game with them, as they always play with the "mace."

It is popular with misers, as there are many chances to "play safe into the pockets." Gold miners like it also, on account of the "pockets."

There is a deal of "angle" to the game, and those fond of fishing patronize it.

There are many jokes cracked while playing this game, but one can always see the "points."

Artists like it, as there are many chances to "draw;" likewise detectives, as they can "spot" and "follow."

It isn't a rough and tumble game. It is rather a voluptuous game than otherwise, rolling over the "beds" and striking against "cushions."

Builders like it on account of being so near "slate and marble beds;" so do likewise tombstone manufacturers.

It isn't popular with sportsmen, as no "foul shot" is counted.

Those fond of the society of the fair sex like it, as many "misses" are met with.

Bankers like it on one account, as they can "discount" freely; when heavy runs are made on them, it is rather disheartening.

It isn't a popular game with the author of "Griffith Gaunt," as he don't admire "Round Table" shots.

The four ball game is not popular with Jews—the "three ball" game is their forte.

It is popular with hotel keepers, on account of the *inn*ings.

Billiard players and men sentenced to be hung feel somewhat different about coming to the end of the "string."

The former like it, and the latter don't.

To those who are troubled with any *cue*taneons affliction, it affords frequent opportunities to "scratch."

Children don't have to go out of the house which contains a billiard table, to play on the "green."

It is not popular with Fenians, as there is a deal of "English" connected with it.

Take it all in all, it is a *cue*rious game.

I like it myself better than any other game outside of woodcock, canvass backs, or draw poker.

There are several in this country who have reached a high degree of perfection in it.

Phelan has always had an intense feelin' for the game.

The brothers Dion are death on billiards, so to speak. They live, and probably will die on billiards.

Deery has cost many of them dear y.

Some play the game rashly, and exhibit much excitement. Others are Eaton their way along steadily, and May become top sawyers in a Little while if they continue to Foster the game.

Kavanagh don't like to cave I know to any of them.

There are others that ought Tobin mentioned, but they don't come to me.

Most of the players seen in the saloons don't play as good a game as the above mentioned, owing no doubt to their being "out of practice," and "not having played for three months."—Boston Sunday Times.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound!

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION, SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Ponches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,

Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

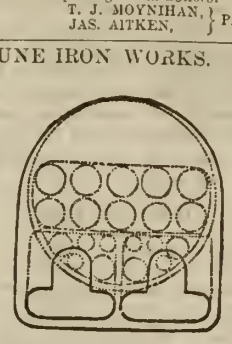
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN, JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.,

Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematica Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL, JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,
cor. Sansome, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Simon, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 429 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 656 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gostave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kobler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Graly, 860 Howard street.

Skating Extraordinary.—The Cedar Hill Skating Park was crowded with the elite and beauty of the city, she cause of the gathering being the skating match for the championship of the city, announced to take place at four o'clock. At the time appointed the contestants for the championship entered their names. They were ten in number. At four o'clock exactly the trial of skill began, and each one of the youths went through his performances with great skill and remarkable dexterity. One of them wrote the alphabet on the ice with his skates almost as fast as a person could recite it. Another wrote a verse from the Bible; a third drew a likeness of Butler; a fourth marked out "the path of prosperity;" a fifth drew a picture of a dog leading a blind man; but the sixth one capped the climax. He drew a glistening promissory note for $10, and marked out the place for the revenue stamp to be stuck on it; he then wrote out an affidavit that he was entitled to the premium, and whirling quickly dropped on his base on the ice on the affidavit, but rose to his feet at once, leaving on the meltable document a stamp as near like a notary public stamp as could be. After these exploits the judges put their heads together and awarded the premium to F. Lamoot. Certificates were awarded to Henry Price, L. C. Robinson and J. G. Speed. —Louisville Courier.

The Value of Silence.—Deep and powerful souls adjust everything in silence, and make no noise with their doings and with themselves, They go their way like the works of nature. In deep silence the sun ascends the heaven; silently sinks the night down upon the earth. What prepares itself in greater stillness than the reawakening of nature, and what is mare glorious than the Spring?

The Passaic Falls, the Press says, present a magnificent appearance. The great crevasse is nearly filled with frozen ice and snow, which clings to the rocks in solid masses, presenting the appearance of a river frozen in falling over a rock.

An exchange tells us of an editor who went soldiering, and was chosen a captain. One day at parade, instead of giving the orders, "Front face, three paces forward," he exclaimed: "Cash, two dollars and a half, in advance."

Medical.—"Young Man's Friend and Protector," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should luform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the Acruary, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will he furnished with Prospectus.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE
AND
TELEGRAPH INSTITUTE,
MECHANICS' INSTITUUE BUILDING,
Post Street, between Montgomery and Kearny, San Francisco.

This institution is designed to prepare Boys and Men
FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,
And to impart a thorough
COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.
It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,
IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH and MERCHANDISE,
rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He
COMMENCES SPECULATION,
Carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the
PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,
A regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of
ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.
This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph Operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the departments, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY
EUREKA
FIRST PREMIUM 1857 1858 1864 1865
OF
MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.
(706 Sansome St. 706)
SAN FRANCISCO.
BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents
TO SEND ABROAD.
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
.....OF.....
California Scenery!
A SERIES OF OVER
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
ILLUSTRATING
The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.
PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,
And Published by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 & 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.
LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR
RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES
C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.
WHOLESALE PRICES.
☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
Headley's Great Work!
The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,
Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.
In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works, Call or send once for Circulars and Terms.
E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.
STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.
The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the
SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.
Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.
☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.
Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor
ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.
Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.
Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets, San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK
IN TWENTY DAYS!
Car States Mail via Nicaragua!
ER
TAYLOR,
AN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
HARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on
M MARCH 25th, 1867.
Connecti with the magnificent Steamship
SANTIAGO,
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.
The AMERICA will sail on April 15th.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets
Up stairs, San Francisco.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.
IS A CONCENTRATED extract of the choice root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:
Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc.
Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this Sarsaparilla, and the patient is left in comparative health.
Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this Extract of Sarsaparilla.
Do not discard this in valuable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have need Ayer's—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all for it.
Ayer's Cathartic Pills, for [illegible], Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Humors, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Dysentery, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and
They are sugar coated, so that they may take them pleasantly, and they are the best cathartic in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by
CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco, and all Dealers

NIGHT AND MORNING.

A NEW VERSION—NOT BULWER'S.

It is really shameful, dearest,
You shonld scold me for last night,
When my accents were the clearest,
And my tie was neat and right.
For my liquor with dilution
Of mnch water, I had ta'en,
And the "U. S. Constitution"
I could utter very plain.

I am jolly, too, this morning,
And not "chippy" in the least,
Thoughts of "pick-me-nps" I'm scorning,
And my breakfast was a feast.
You forgive me?—tell your daughter
Then to bring, if it be handy,
Just a single soda-water—
And a tiny spot of brandy!

THE VICISSITUDES OF A FOX HUNT.

The London Court Journal has the following account of a wonderful fox hunt in Yorkshire: "Frost and snow have sent the Nimrods of Yorkshire into forced inaction, and there seems at present no immediate prospect of a resumption of sport. The last run with the Sinnington, the day preceding the break in the weather, was of a very remarkable nature, being exciting and lndicrous, by tnrns, for upward of ten hours, the back lanes and yards of Kirby Moorside being hunted long after dark. The meet was at Tylas Bridge, and a fine hunting morning secured a large field. Kirkdale Wood and Cauldron Mill Whin were drawn blank; but there was 'music' on Skiplan Plain, and a fine fox broke cover and rattled away by Rawton Tower to Balm Hagg earths, where none were open, so he turned to the left for Brobkil Whin, and then by the river side to a by-earth. The field were quickly extemporized into 'navvies,' and pick and shovel became the order of the day. Reynard had earthed so effectively that it was 3:30 P. M. when he was reached, a trench by this time having been cut nine feet deep and ten yards long. The master, Mr. Kendall, drew him out and turned him at liberty, giving him a fair start. Off he went on a most extraordinary career, leading the field a rattler for Sleightholme Dale, where he turned for the open, and forward to Tadmoor, thence to Hagg Wood, and back to Skiplan earths, but found no shelter. The scent being good and the hounds in full cry, Reynard was forced into the river at Couldron Mill, which he swam for two hundred yards down, thus baffling the pursuers for a time. By this time the field had thinned, as night came on, but Parker and a few choice spirits remained, determined not to give in. The hounds were soon on the line again, and Reynard rattled away to Robin Hood's Hole, and then to Kirby Moorside town, where he entered some farm premises, and from a wagon mounted the roof of a barn, from which he coolly surveyed the host of men, hounds and curs by which he was quickly surrounded. Reynard refnsed to be captured, and at a bonnd clearing the rnck, he took across numerous gardens, and eventually sheltered beneath the dress of a young woman in an out-house. This caused some commotion, and Reynard being dislodged, made his way to the Market-place, from whence he was for a time lost. Supposing the day's sport ended, Parker and a few of the remaining hunters repaired to the King's Head, where, on riding into the yard, Reynard was encountered. In the dark the chase recommenced, again through gardens and back yards. At last Reynard songht refuge in the Parsonage grounds, surrounded by walls 10 feet high, the level being below the high ground outside. Now knowing this, Parker jumped over and turned a somersault before reaching terra firma, but, though stunned, was on his legs again and after the game. A sensation of a different kind just then happened. A member of the hunt who had been out all day ventured on a leap in the dark, and landed in a water butt. Excitement was only increased by accidents, and Reynard took them afresh over walls and gardens into the streets again, and was eventually lost. Next morning, however, it was found that he had earthed in a hole of the roof of a thatched cottage, where he remained during the night, and, being disloged at daylight, afforded another run on a small scale."

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA
YELLOW DOCK
AND
IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

DR. HAYDEN,
Dentist,
653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

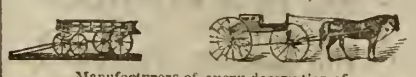
WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description. All goods sold are warranted.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.
Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work. A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.
Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 606 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of
Saddles, Harness and Collars,
North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand. Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Office, No. 408 Montgomery Street,
NEAR CALIFORNIA.
CAPITAL (paid up) - - - $1,000,000 00
ASSETS Jan. 1, 1867, - - $1,093,131 92
PRESIDENT.....GEO. W. BEAVER
SECRETARY.....W W. WIGGINS
MARINE OFFICER.....CAPT. AMOS NOYES
SURVEYOR.....E. N. TORREY
Policies Issued and Losses Paid in Gold.
MARINE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Hulls, Cargoes, Treasure, Commissions, Profits and other Subjects of Marine Insurance, to and from all Ports in the World, including Inland Risks.
FIRE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Rents, Vessels in Port, and their Cargoes, and other Insurable Property, ..AT..
GREATLY REDUCED RATES!
MARINE AGENTS.
NEW YORK. MESSRS. EUGENE KELLY & CO.
HONOLULU....MESSRS C. BREWER & CO.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
JOSEPH A. DONOHOE.....Chairman.
JOHN G. BRAY, ALBERT DIBBLEE,
H. W. HALLECK, ABRAM BLOCK,
WILLIAM PIERCE, JAS. H. DEERING,
JAS. T. DEANE, GEO. F. BRAGG.
DIRECTORS.
J. W. Brittan, Jos. A. Donohoe,
Albert Dibblee, George W. Gibbs,
Abner H. Barker, R. G. Sneath,
James H. Deering, Henry Barroilhet,
Henry S. Dexter, Abram Block,
N. Van Bergen, J. C. Johnson,
George F. Bragg, J. T. Dean,
C. F. Fargo, H. W. Halleck,
Henry L. King, Henry L. Davis,
Charles Clayton, T. E. Baugh,
Michael Reese, S. C. Hastings,
George W. Dam, C. A. Eastman,
Wm. G. Badger, Benj. Hobart,
James W. Cox, Levi Strauss,
Daniel Mayer, Charles Lux,
Hiram Tubbs, Jas. P. Goodwin,
Lloyd Tevis, P. Maury, Jr.,
Alex. Forbes, W. W. Montague,
Jos. B. Thomas, Nicholas Larco,
Morris Speyer, William Pierce,
John G. Bray, E. H. Winchester,
H. L. Dodge, E. V. Hathaway,
Walter N. Hawley, N. C. Fassett,
Isaac E. Davis, A. Hayward,
E. L. Goldstein, Samuel Crim,
Daniel Murphy, John Center,
Wm. H. Sharp, Theo. Le Roy,
C. L. Taylor, George C. Hickox,
J. S. Hutchinson, O. F. Giffin,
Chas. M. Plum, W. C. Talbot,
M. F. Jones, A. J. Bryant,
S. Heydenfeldt, James Phelan,
Abram Seligman, Geo. V. Beaver,
Thomas Breeze, C. C. Knox,
F. P. McMahon, Jas. P. Pierce,
J. C. Wilmerding, W. W. Wiggins,
Anthony Chabot, J. B. Roberts.
John F. Miller,

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET.
North side, four doors above Montgomery.
Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken this establishment.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MARCH.

March 30—GOLDEN AGE, Captain James T. Watkins, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt Furher.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

THE CALIFORNIA
Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

TO ALL SUFFERING HUMANITY
WHO
VALUE HEALTH AND CHERISH LIFE.

Healey's Rheumatic Liniment

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

Price Fifty Cents and One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents — CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

HOUSEKEEPERS'
Protection & Relief Society.

HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,

And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

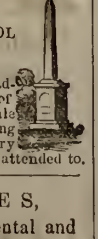
MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET,

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

HAGAN & HORGAN,
Marble - Workers,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.



DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS-CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served witbin this county; or if served out of this county, hut in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment hy default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to tois plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, he awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, hy order of this Court, he restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant he ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general helief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer tho said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply ro the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judical District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25tu day of Septenher, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Actiou brought in tho District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint bled thereiu, within teu days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment hy default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said actiou is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimouy heretofore and now existing between the plaiutiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaiut, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of Januarv, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased. mh2 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased.—Notice is horeby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at the office of Haight & Pierson, No. 510 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, February 19, 1867.

ROBERT HAIGHT, Administrator of the Estate of Jose A. Feliz, dec'd. mh9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MICHAEL HINES, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM, Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased. mh9 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NAYLOR C. DAVIS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John H. Madison, Administrator of the Estate of Naylor C. Davis, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in the Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to he divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 15th day of April, A. D 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs at law of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 11th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to he a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
m16 5t By WM. LEDLIE, Deputy Clerk.
CHAS WITTRAM, Esq., Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, hut in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs ot suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to app ar and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN NERAC, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the Will annexed of the Estate of Ellen Nerac, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisee named in the Will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate to the party entitled thereto:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the devisee of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said sixteenth day of April A D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 14th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss.

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. m16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Caroline Huehner, deceased. mh2-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS KEENAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, northwest corner of Sacramento and Sansome streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, March 2d, A. D. 1867.

mh2-5t THOMAS BREEZE,
Administrator of Estate of Thomas Keenan, deceased.
WINANS & BELENAP, Attorneys for Administrator.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS THOMAS, deceased.

Order to show csuse why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of Thomas Thomas, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons intercsted in the estate of the said Thomas Thomas, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the twenty-sixtb day of MARCH, A. n. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Thomas Thomas deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said twenty-sixth day of March, A. n. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated Februsry 21st, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of Sau Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 21st day of February, A. n. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. 123 5t.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of Sau Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, hut in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff he permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Actiou brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, hut in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to he $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and he put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSEN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George C Petersen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Petesen, deceased. mh2-4t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

LAST NIGHT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, MARCH 23D,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
FANCHON.

THIS EVENING, MARCH 23D,
Benefit and Last Appearance of Miss Kingsbury
FANCHON.

MONDAY EVENING,
Reappearance of
MISS KATE DENIN.
First Representation in California of Benjamin Webster's Comedy in four Acts—
THE FAST FAMILY.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle	$1 00	Orchestra	$1 00
Parquette	50	Upper Circle	25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

AMERICAN THEATRE.

EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTION.

ON MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 25TH,
Will be presented the Polyglot Performance of
OTHELLO!
In English,
In French,
In German,
In Danish,
By the following Artists in the principal Roles: Mr. George Pauncefort, Mons. Bonnet, Herr Roger, P. Thayer, Belle Divine, Fraulein Meyer.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THURSDAY MARCH 28TH,
BENEFIT OF
HENRY EDWARDS.
Shakspeare's Grand Tradegy of
JULIUS CÆSAR!
Presented with a perfect force and cast.

DR. BENTON

WILL LECTURE AT CONGRESS HALL THIS evening, March 23d, and will continue his series of lectures upon the subject of PSYCHOLOGY, MAGNETISM and its kindred sciences, at CONGRESS HALL, Bush street, on FRIDAY and SATURDAY EVENINGS, 29th and 30th inst., at 7 1-2 o'clock. The lectures will be illustrated by a variety of very amusing and astonishing experiments upon persons in the audience, showing also that the Electrical or Magnetic Currents, properly directed, are the best and safest method of curing disease. TICKETS FOR GENTS, 50 CENTS; Ladies and Children, Free.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOON Dr. Benton will give a FREE LECTURE, for LADIES ONLY, at 3 o'clock, at Congress Hall.

☞N. B.—Office for treatment, over Congress Hall.
mb23 1t

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

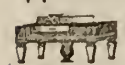
NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

WALTER S. PIERCE,



Manufacturer and Importer of
PIANO-FORTES.
FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.
☞PIANOS TO RENT.☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S
Piano Manufactory
Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.
Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.

800 HOMESTEAD LOTS

COBB & SINTON'S
THIRD SPECIAL
Grand Credit Sale
..OF..
800 MAGNIFICENT
BUILDING LOTS
ON THE HUDSON GARDEN AND ORCHARD TRACT,
25 by 110 Feet Each,
TITLE, UNITED STATES PATENT,
Will take place on
Tuesday, March 26th, 1867,
AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,
....AT....
PLATT'S HALL!

Call and procure maps of H. S. WILLIAMS & CO., 638 Clay street, or of

COBB & SINTON,
Auctioneers,
407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.
OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.
W. A. QUARLES, Auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY.

WEDNESDAY.....MARCH 27, 1867
At 12 o'clock, M., at Salesroom,
POSITIVE AND PEREMPTORY
CREDIT SALE
....OF....
That Beautiful & Desirably Located Tract,
WEST OF THE OLD MISSION CHURCH BUILDINGS,
KNOWN AS HOLT'S RANCH!
....COMPRISING....
MISSION BLOCKS,
Nos. 102, 103, 117, and 121, and portions of Nos. 104. 118 and 122,
Fronting on Market, Centre, or 16th, Sparks, or 15th, Tracy, or 14th, Sanchez, Noe and Castro streets;
IN LARGE SUBDIVISIONS.
TERMS—One third Cash; one-third in 1 year; one-third in 2 years;
At One Per Cent. Per Month Interest.

☞The sale of this choice property will afford an unusual opportunity for men of moderate means to acquire homesteads in a centrally located and accessible portion of the city at a reasonable price, and on easy terms. The Howard street cars pass within two blocks, and the Market street cars within four blocks of the property. Market street is graded, macadamized and sidewalked to within four blocks of Sanchez street, and will, in a short time, be open to this street.

The land is level, and on a good grade.

Lithographed Maps of the property now ready for distribution at our office.

TITLE UNQUESTIONABLE.
MAURICE DORE & CO, Auctioneers

MRS. WINSHIP,

Fashionable Milliner.
NO. 24 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.
Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.
☞Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

THE FANCY
PIANOS
OF
CHICKERING & SON
Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's.
Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
MARCH
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

The Chinese Classics, by James Legge, D. D., 4 vols.
Chinese and English Phrase Book, by Benoni Lanctot.
The China Pilot.
The Gulf of Siam Pilot.
The Open Polar Sea, by Dr. I. I. Hayes.
Berlin and Sans Souci, by Mrs. L. Muhlbach.
Ancient and Modern Greece, by C. C. Felton, 2 vols.
The Claverings, a Novel, by Anthony Trollope.
Charles Wesley seen in his Finer and less Familiar Poems.
Mrs. Candle's Curtain Lectures.
Life of Jesus, by Edmund Kirke.
Two Marriages—Tauchnitz edition, paper.
For Ever and Ever, a Novel, by Florence Marryat.
Youman's Observations on the Scientific Study of Human Nature.
Schaff's History of the Christian Church.
Froude's History of England, vols. 7 and 8.
The Adventures of a Griffin on a Voyage of Discovery, written by himself.
History of Scotland, by Rev. James Mackenzie.
Fairy Tales, by Prof. Henry Morley.
My Father's Garden, by Thomas Miller.
Manual of Freemasonry, by Richard Carlile.
Mysteries of Freemasonry, by John Fellows, A. M.
The Rob Roy on the Baltic, a Canoe cruise.
Records of Five Years, by Grace Greenwood.
The Financial Economy of the United States Illustrated, by John A. Ferris, A. M.
Historical Memoirs of Friends, by William Hodgson.
En Avant, Messieurs! Being a Tutor's Counsel to his Pupils, by Rev. G. H. D. Mathias, M. A.
Beecheubrook, a Rhyme of the War, by Margaret J. Preston.
The Handy Volume Shakespeare Pocket edition, 5 vols., paper.
Journal and Correspondence of Miss Berry, edited by Lady Theresa Lewis.
Journal of Maurice de Guerin.
The Complete Phonographer, by James E. Munson.
The Holiday Chaplet, by A. L. O. E.
Two Marriages, by Miss Muloch, author of "John Halifax," etc. 12mo., cloth.
Bayard Taylor's Colorado.
Pickwick Papers, diamond edition, complete in one volume.
Studies in English, by Schele De Vere, L.L.D.
Half Hours with the Best Letter-Writers, by Charles Knight.
Cyclopedia of Freemasonry, edited by Robert Macoy.
Braithwaite's Retrospect for January, 1867.
The Slide Valve, by N. P. Burgh.
New Guide to the Sheet Iron and Boiler Plate Roller.
Poems, by Mrs. Frances Dana Gage.
Morning by Morning; or, Daily Readings, by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Lange's Commentary on Acts.
Joseph II and his Court, by L. Muhlbach.
Brought to Light—a Tale of England and America.
Tribune Almanac and Political Register for 1867.
Recollections of Henry W. Allen, by Sarah A. Dorsey.
Shimeall's Political Economy of Prophecy.
Sunday Magazine for 1866. Sold only by subscription.
Good Words for 1866. Sold only by subscription.
Paris Social—a Hand Book.
Practical Guide for Paris and the Rhine.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,
Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner.
Samuel Hill, Agent,
111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

DRY GOODS

FROM AUCTION!
MAGEE, TAFFE & CO.,
9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

HAVE JUST RECEIVED FROM THE GREAT AUCTION SALE OF H. M. NEWHALL & CO., THE FOLLOWING LARGE LINES OF SUPERIOR FRENCH, ENGLISH AND AMERICAN DRY GOODS, ALL OF WHICH ARE WARRANTED SOUND AND OF SUPERIOR QUALITY, AND WILL BE OFFERED ON

MONDAY, MARCH 18TH,

AT PRICES LOWER THAN EVER BEFORE SOLD AT IN THIS CITY.

SILKS.

50 pieces Black Silks, from $1 to $1 50 per yard.
75 pieces Bischoff's Black Silks, from $1 50 to $3 per yard.
90 pieces Bonnet's superior Black Silks, from $2 to $4 50 per yard.
40 pieces Bonnet's Extra Black Silks, from $3 to $8 per yard.
500 pieces Plain, Brocade and Plaid Silks, in all colors and designs.

DRESS GOODS.

200 pieces super. Scotch Ginghams.
300 pieces super. French Ginghams.
500 pieces Empress Cloth, in new designs.
200 pieces plain Challys, in new designs.
300 pieces Black Alpacas.
200 pieces Colored Alpacas.
2000 pieces super. Barnesly and Scotch Towels.
500 dozen super English Hose and Half Hose.
100 dozen super. Linen Shirts, at $2 75, $3, $3 50 and $4.
200 dozen super. Cotton Shirts.
Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings, Flannels, Quilts, Blankets, Linen Sheetings, Table Cloths, Napkins, etc. etc.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET, LICK HOUSE.

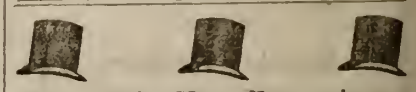
WHOLESALE HOUSE,
NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE STREET.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:
In the matter of the estate of BENJAMIN P. GREEN, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Benjamin Courtis, Administrator of the estate of Benjamin P. Green, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the claims against the estate, and the expenses of administration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the twenty-second day of April A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 22d, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.
Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 22d day of March, A. D. 1867
[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JACOBS, Deputy Clerk.
F. A. Fahens, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
mar23 4t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of J. C. BEIDEMAN, deceased.
Pursuant to an order of the Judge of said Court, made this day, notice is hereby given that Monday, the 22d day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, being a day of a regular term of said Court to-wit: of the April Term, A. D. 1867, at the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, has been appointed for hearing the petition, this day filed, of Bernard Kennedy, praying for a decree authorizing and directing John W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate left unadministered of J. C. Beideman, deceased, to convey to the said petitioner certain real estate situated in said city and county, and particularly described in said petition, upon the payment to said Administrator of the balance of the purchase money of said real estate; at which time and place all persons interested in said estate may appear and contest said petition by filing their objections in writing.
Dated March 22d, 1867.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JACOBS, Deputy Clerk.
Messrs. Drake & Hent, Attys. for Petitioner.
mar23-5t



Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE
HAT OR CAP,
AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of
LAMOTT'S HATS!
CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 19
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 30, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Trouble at My New Lodgings, by John Clerk; Street Car Recreation, by Prentice; The Ignorance of Our Legislature; Poetry and the Press. LION'S MOUTH: A Bar-room Oracle on the Cubernatorial Question; A Bad Spell; Sharpening the Sword of Justice. Literary Gossip and Gleanings; Dramatic Affairs; Paragraphs, etc. SELECTED: A Mysterious Lodger; An Interesting Event; Portrait of Queen Elizabeth; Black Sheep; Runaway Horses; Poetry, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

A Bar-room Oracle on the Gubernatorial Question.

MR. EDITOR: Did you ever hear one of those curious specimens of humanity known as "Saloon Oracles," hold forth on war, diplomacy, or politics, to an admiring audience? If not, it would have been worth your while, and worth something more, to have been present at the Faust Cellar last night, at about half past eleven o'clock, while a certain "statesman" was enlightening an admiring crowd by discoursing on the interesting topic of "Who's to be the next Governor?" The stutesman drops into the Faust every night about the time the Sacramento hout urrives in order, as he declares, "to read the Union." He certainly doesn't drop in to drink, for he never does that—unless asked to. During the war-times he used to explain to his audiences all the military manœuvers going on, point out the strategic blunders of the generals on either side, show how the thing "ought to have been managed, by G—," etc. Last evening, his opinion on the Gubernatoriul question being asked by a farmer-looking man who had just treated, the Statesman held forth in something like this style: "Who's to be next Governor, is it? Supposin' I knew all about it, and I haven't said I did—but supposin' I knew. Them that's acquainted with me'll tell you I'm one of the kind that don't tell all they know. I'm not a great man, an' never pretended to be; but I'm one of the kind that makes 'em. I know how they're made here in California, and I've helped make a heap of 'em that wasn't born great by a good many chalks. Yes, I don't mind if I do (this in response to an invitation to "take something" from a young man ambitious of the honor of drinking with the maker of great men); a little hot Santa Croix, George; its sharp enough to-night for something warm. I helped make Governor —— and Governor —— too; und neither of them was ever cut out hy Nater for great men. I had a finger in making a certain United States Senator, and a precious lot he's turned out! Gentlemen, I'll own up to being ashamed of that job. Well, it served me right. I deserved the treatment I got. Threw off on me after the work was done! No exact promise, you know; nothing in black and white; no witness to the understanding; that of course wouldn't do; hut it was understood that I was to have the Consulship to—well, never mind where. But who's to be next Governor, is it? That's the question, hey? Well, now, the country says it's to be Bidwell, and I say it'll he Bidwell, unless we put up a particularly neat combinatiou. Them interior polititians make a big noise; and all their little one-horse organs are cackling like a whole baruyard of setting hens driven off their nests; but the country politicians don't know how to put up anything. I've got a combination in my head that'll lay out Bidwell as cold as a door-nail—or as a coffin-nail, for that matter—a combination that'll give Pixley or Gorham the nominution sure. I'm not a great man, but I know how they're made. And I know what's the best material to make 'em of, and what's more I know what they're made for. We make 'em to use 'em, and that's the reason why we take such devilish poor raw material to work up. We don't want a smart man, or a man that's set in his way, or a man that's too devilish honest and particular. We want a man that's manageable, a man that'll do about what he's bid. I can put up u combination that'll nominate Pixley or Gorham; but what good'll that do me? They're too smart and too obstinate to be managed. (Well, I don't mind if I do; my voice is gettin' husky with all this talking. A drop of hot Santa Croix—and you needn't make it quite so strong of Spring Valley as the last.) Gentlemen, the material I want to operate on, when I go to work to make a great man, isn't flint, nor yet cast iron—its dough, gentlemen, or pretty soft clay at the worst. We don't want to take up men of "positive qualities," as the papers call 'em. We want men of "negative qualities." You can hold 'em better in hund, and they'll make better running. They're popular, and pleasant, and amiuble, and all that. They've never trod on nobody's toes, nor upset nobody's apple cart, nor made unpopular speeches that the newspapers can rake up ag'inst 'em. They're too good-natured and anxious to please every one for that. Now, Bidwell's a man of first-rate negative qualities, but I suspect he's notional and too d—d particular to prove a valuable investment for the time an' talent of them that'd make a great man out of him. Who's to be next Governor, is it? Well, it just depends upon the combinations, that's the whole story. A neat combination can do anything, and I've got a partic'larly neat one, and if there's any authorized an' confidenshill friend of Pixley's, or Gorham's or Fay's around, or for that matter, of Bidwell's either, I don't care if they hear what I say; and what's more, I don't care if their principals hears it. Them's my views on the subject, gentlemen, ut your service. (Thank you; don't mind if I do. Hot Santa Croix, George; its good for the throat, and I'm a little hoarse.)"

There, Mr. Editor, that's not phonographic, but it's deuced close to it. I only wish the "candidates" could have heard it as delivered, for no description can give an idea of the "statesman's," impressive style of elocution.

Yours truly,
CAPTAIN WRACGE.

Sharpening the Sword of Justice.

Justice in San Francisco is apt to search out and punish with equal severity one species of offeuse ut u time. The gamblers have felt the pressure of the law, and the sword of justice is bared against them with stern effect. The day before yesterday the police suddenly awoke to the fact that the utterance of profane and obscene language in the public streets was an offense against the law. Five men and boys were arrested on that day for committing this abominable misdemeanor which has hitherto been allowed to pass unpunished. One of the purties urrested, who had been in the habit for many years of using profance and obscene language even while in conversation with police officers, inveighed against Chief Crowley in the words of "Clandio" in Measure for Measure:

—"But this new governor
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unscour'd armor hung by the wall
So long that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and for a name,
Now puts the drowsy and neglected act
Freshly on me:—'tis surely for a name."

Chief Crowley will earn a good name for himself if he reforms this crying public evil, and perhaps he would do well to commence by reading u homily on the vice of profane swearing to the members of the Police Force.

A Bad Spell.

We admire the new Mechanics' Institute greatly; we think that the arrangement of the rooms is admirable. The library, reading-room and chess-room are all that could be desired; they show great mechanical skill. The center-piece in the chess-room also displays mechanical skill; it consists of a pedestal formed of plaster, surmounted by four female figures. Under the first of these figures is the word "Unity;" nuder the next "Fraternity;" the next "Liberty," and then comes "Egality." We cannot say that we are acquainted with this last named female; Liberty, Fraternity and Unity we know, but who is "Egality?" Now it is all very well to adorn the Institute with plaster-of puris statuary, but not to place on that statuary hard words past finding out. The manufacturer of this center-piece is L. Bacon, as we gather from the inscription, "L. Bacon fecit," on the hase. Fecit is good Latin, Mr. Bacon, but "Egality" is neither English, French nor any other language. Why did you not inscribe "Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite, Unite," on your very pretty piece of work; or, better still, use nothing but English, and instead of making an attempt at egalite inscribe on that pedestal "Equality?" The directors of the Mechanics' Institute hud better see that a little plaster is applied to this eye-sore, and employ some one to chisel "Equality" in place of "Egality."

"Poor Tray!"

In the recent proceedings of the Board of Supervisors we fiud the following:

"An order was passed amendatory of the Pound Ordinance, relative to muzzling dogs, and providing that all dogs not led by a cord, or string, or chain, shall be deemed running at large."

It only remains to pass an order for the extraction of the teeth of all dogs muzzled, unmuzzled, tied or untied. Then we may rest in peace. What can be the cause of this canine stringency? Who among the Supervisors is threatened with hydrophobia? Or who is intriguing for a speculation in dog chains? When every man shall lead his dog by a cord or string, what a stumbling and tripping on our sidewalks over these same cords and strings there will be!

P's and Q's.

Beriah Brown, in an article announcing the close of the first year of the Daily Oregon Herald, objurgates thuswise on the conduct of "Democratic futhers who, in their desire to have their sons understand both sides and judge for themselves have placed in their hands to operate upon their plastic minds the most pestiferous publications, forgetttng to accompany the poison with the only proper antidote." If Beriah has monopolized nearly all the P's in this article, the intelligent reader will observe thut he has at the same timo given the cues to the Democratic fathers in question. That's so like Beriah! He has always been a stickler for an equal division of the political P's and Q's.

Necessity for the Removal of Hitching Posts.

We suggest that the time has nearly arrived for hitching posts to be deemed a nuisance. No one makes use of them, und the police have long since stopped the seizure of unhitched horses. If the Board of Supervisors can spare a litte time from the consideration and study of dogs, let them pass an order for the removal of these posts, or else have them illuminated at night with gas. They are dangerous—much more so than unhitched horses. A friend from the country writes us as follows:

"I have not yet quite recovered from a contusion of the abdomen, caused by running against a bent iron hitching post in your city. I was quite sober at the time."

The movuble posts which let into the side walk are also the cause of many grievous wounds. A lady showed us her toe not long since, which was almost entirely demolished hy forcible contact with the iron projecting a few inches above the curbstone.

Other advantages may be derived from the removal of these obtrusive posts.

In the course of six or eight months, when the existing popular offense of loose dogs has been entirely worn out, a few well-planned runaways through Montgomery street, attended hy the judicious killing of an interesting child or an aged and estimable citizen, will call for the revival of the hitching posts. The police will then have two fresh sources of arrest, viz: posts not erected in conformity to municipal order, and unhitched horses. Their removal may give some parties a profitable contract. So will their subsequent replucemeut. The matter is worthy of serious consideration.

The Insane Correspondent of the "Bulletin."

We rather fancy that Professor Gilliard, the insane colored lecturer who, we have good reason to suppose, has been writing Sacramento letters to the Bulletin over the signature of "Moffat Weir," has at length reached the city of Stockton, and may perhaps by this time be an inmate in the Lunatic Asylum. We notice that he was this week announced to lecture in Stockton. It may be that the letters which the Bulletin has published as Sacramento correspondence were really written by the unfortunate Professor Gilliard ("Moffat Weir"), while he was confined within the walls of the Lunatic Asylum—the ignorance of events happening in Sacramento displayed in them favors this supposition. We trust that, now the Professor has been released from restraint, and has resumed his lectures, his mind will be diverted from the idea of continuing to be Sacramento Correspondent" of the Bulletin.

Startling.

"A mathematical genius informs us that if the earth were a common ball, shot at the sun from its present distance, with the velocity it now travels with, and the moment of explosion telegraphed to the sun, they would get the telegram in about five minutes, and see the earth coming in about eight minutes, and would have nearly two months to prepare for the blow, which they would receive about fifteen years before they heard the original explosion."—Dennyson's Astronomy Without Mathematics.

This is a useful truth for children. It should be hammered into the head of every youth in our glorious country. When the earth is thus shot at the sun, this will become most valuable information.

Reason for Closing the Evening Schools.

In a recent discussion by the Board of Education it was proposed to close the evening schools after April 1st. One member thought "no young man who was kept at hard labor all day is in a condition to study in the evening, and it would be wrong to extend to them any such facility." It is possible the young man may be the best judge in this matter. This argument in favor of closing the evening schools certainly has the charm of novelty. It manifests a praiseworthy and parental solicitude for the "young man's" sunitary welfare.

School-House Stolen.

The increasing interest taken by the people in various portions of the State is evinced by the fact that a school house, in the south end of Calaveras county, was lately stolen—in fact, carried off bodily Education is the great safeguard of American liberty. Our children must he educated, even though we ure obliged to steal school-houses and kidnap schoolmarms. We shall next hear of the stealing of churches, und the forcible abductiou of ministers.

Perjurer Acquitted Per Jury.

That there was perjury committed by one or more of the witnesses in the Clark-Reese breach of promise case cannot he denied. However, it is certain that whatever advances the plaintiff made to Michael, the advances which he made to her ($250 12½) were very modest for a millionaire.

Pardoned Out.

Gov. Blasdel of Nevada has pardoned out the man who stole the service plate from an Episcopul church some years since. It was ascertained that the offense came within the jurisdiction of an ecclesiastical, und not a civil Court. The man has promised to join the church.

A Nice Point in the Clark-Reese Case.

It having been reported that there were several Jews among the jury in the Clark-Reese case, Nobbs observed that though Michael Reese, a Jew, had a right to a trial by jury, he did not think it right that his case should be decided by the Jewry.

A MYSTERIOUS LODGER.

THOUGH we could hardly hope to meet with a model lodger again, like the Rev. Mr. Adolphus, who had been with us ever since we began house-keeping, it was certainly desirable—so Annie and I concluded—to have a lodger of some kind; for my salary at that time, as junior clerk in the respectable banking firm of Lawes & Fielding, was more prospective than real. It being decided, therefore, that a second lodger was a necessary evil, a card notifying that apartments for a single gentleman were to be let within took its place in our window; but week after week passed away without a single applicant for our very genteel and commodious rooms.

The hot days of June were drawing to a close when, on reaching home one evening from the office, I saw by the sparkle in my wife's eye that she had something particular to tell me, and I was scarcely seated before the news burst out.

"Tom, dear, we have got a lodger at last!"

"Did you say a lodger?" I cried, starting up. "What is the individual's name?"

"Mr. James Twoshoes."

"A very ancient and honorable name, well known in nursery history. Describe him."

"There's not much about him to describe. He's like any other commonplace gentleman who is drawing on toward middle age, with little in his appearance to distinguish him from any one else. He is about five-and-forty years old, as near as I can judge. Short black hair, with just a tinge of gray in it; no beard or whiskers; dressed in a new glossy suit of black clothes. He has a habit of carrying his head forward a little, and partly on one side, which gives him the appearance of being continually listening for something which he is expecting every moment to hear."

"A description worthy of a passport. When does he arrive?"

"About noon to-morrow. He sleeps at one of the hotels to-night. But I forgot to say that he will only be a temporary lodger. He has engaged the rooms by the week, as his stay in Markhallow will only be a short one. He may want the rooms for one month, two months, or three months, he said—just as the fancy takes him, and dependent on how soon he grows tired of our little town.

"Ah, well! I suppose a temporary lodger is better than none. What references did he give?"

"References!" exclaimed Annie, in blank dismay. "Upon my word, I was so taken up with the idea of letting the rooms that I forgot all about references."

"Through which forgetfulness," I said, severely, "you introduce into the house a person of whom we know absolutely nothing."

"Oh! he's thoroughly respectable, my dear; you may tell that at once from his appearance!"

Punctual to appointment, Mr. Twoshoes arrived at noon the following day; and I may here say that my wife's description of him was so close and faithful, that I can find nothing to add to it. A portmanteau and a writing-case formed the whole of our new lodger's baggage.

"Mr. Starling, I suppose?" he said, with a pleasant smile, and a hearty shake of the hand. "I hope we shall suit one another; at least, I am sure it will not be my fault if we don't. Fine place this of yours," he went on, after we had introduced him into his rooms. "I am quite in love with it already."

He sat down as he said this, and laughed in a hearty way that it did one good to listen to. Who could ask such a man for references? From that moment I gave up the idea as an absurdity.

"Your good lady," he went on, "has, I presume, told you that I am here only for a short time. My stay may be limited to three weeks, or it may extend over three months. For my part, I'm a fellow who always makes a point of giving way to my whims. So long as a place takes my fancy, there I stick, as fast as a barnacle—till some fine morning a whim pops into my brain, and then, hey, presto! I'm off by the first train—Rather an uncomfortable, vagabond sort of existence, you probably think. So it is. I grant it. But what can a fellow do whose whims are the master of him? Give way to them, of course; and that's just what I do. Well, well," he went on, "I've seen many a more lively and populous place than this that hasn't pleased me half so well. I'll take a cutlet for dinner, if you please; and any little pastry you may have on hand."

I saw nothing more of Mr. Twoshoes that day, for when I reached home in the evening he was seated up-stairs in his own room, as my wife told me, smoking an immense meerschaum. To say that my wife and I were prepossessed in favor of our new lodger, is merely to state the bare fact of the case. We were delighted with him, and felt sure that he would bear comparison whith even such a model individual as the Rev. Mr. Adolphus.

At the end of a week Annie and I were unable to make out the profession of Mr. Twoshoes, though we considered the question in all its bearings, and gave due weight in our deliberations to the various vague hints thrown out at different times by our lodger. We concluded at last, in lack of all direct evidence, that whatever he might formerly have been, he could now be nothing more nor less than a gentleman living on his private means.

From the first day Mr. Twoshoes had bargained for the use of a latch-key, with free permission to come in and go out at whatever hours of the day and night he might think proper; and he was not long before he made frequent use of the privilege we had so readily conceded him. Not unfrequently he would leave the house at dusk, and not return till two or three o'clock next morning; at other times he would set off early in the morning and remain out the whole of the day.

"When one of my whims lays hold of me," he laughingly observed to my wife on one occasion, "and whispers to me that I had better take a ramble, then I must obey, and call Shank's mare into immediate requisition, whatever hour of the day or night it may be."

I confess, however, that it gave me a "turn," as my wife would say, when, on reaching home one evening just after dusk, I encountered Mr. Twoshoes on the steps, he was in the act of closing the door behind him, habited from head to foot in the garb of a groom.

I could hardly believe in the reality of what I saw; but there he stood, benignantly smiling down upon me from the height of the steps, not disconcerted in the least, but calmly puffing away from the little black pipe between his lips. On his head he wore a Glengarry bonnet; round his neck a blue and white scarf, fastened with a horseshoe pin; a waistcoat low down on the hips; a short cutaway coat, breeches and gaiters; decidedly "horsey."

All these particulars I could make out by the light of the opposite lamp. He remarked that one of his whims had overtaken him, bade me a cheerful good night, and walked off at a leisurely pace down the street.

It was three o'clock next morning before Mr. Twoshoes returned, and having let himself quietly in, stole upstairs to his bedroom so gently that he would hardly have disturbed a mouse.

But worse was to follow. Mr. Twoshoes had been with us about a month when I was one day sent to R——, a neighboring town about thirteen miles away, on business for the firm. I had finished my business at R——, and was setting out late in the afternoon on my return, when it began to rain heavily, for which reason I determined to take the shortest road home, through a wide tract of barren moorland, dreary and desolate in the extreme, with not more than half a dozen houses on it in a distance of as many miles.

I had got half way across the moor on my return, when my horse, which was but a poor innkeeper's hack, betrayed such unmistakable signs of distress, that I pulled up at a roadside inn, the only one within a distance of several miles, in order to have my horse fed before continuing my journey. While the hostler was busy outside, I entered the little taproom to obtain some refreshment for myself.

On one side of the room sat two or three individuals in the dress of laboring men, while opposite to them, and quite alone, sat a man on whom the whole of my attention was immediately concentrated. It not Mr. Twoshoes himself it was his living presentment! I started back in amazement, as though I had seen a ghost, when my eyes first fell on him; and the next moment was about to accost him familiarly, but some inward feeling made me hesitate just as the words were forming on my lips. The stranger, if stranger he were, gave me one long, steady glance, and then resumed his perusal of a ragged county newspaper.

Was I right or wrong in imagining that a faint gleam of surprise shot for a moment out of his eyes, to be immediately quenched in that dull, unrecognizing stare?

As far as dress went he certainly bore no resemblance to Mr. Twoshoes, for he was habited in a suit of blue cloth with gilt buttons, after the fashion of a mate or captain in the merchant service. He sat in silence during the whole time I was there, neither speaking to nor being addressed by any of the company. To make his likeness to the genuine Mr. Twoshoes still more startling, he had the very same slight stoop forward with his head and shoulders, and the same intent look about his eyes—as though he were listening to some imaginary conversation—which I knew so well.

In about ten minutes the hostler announced that my horse was ready. As I quitted the room I cast another long, inquisitive glance at the sea-faring man, sitting so silent and grim; but he never looked up again, and I left him still intent over his newspaper.

When I reached home I found that Mr. Twoshoes was out, and had been for several hours. At whatever hour he might return, I determined to be on the watch for him, and judge from his dress whether it was really he whom I had seen in the roadside inn.

I put out all the lights and stationed myself in a bedroom up-stairs; and after waiting there three more hours, my patience was rewarded by seeing Mr. Twoshoes come down the street. Thanks to a friendly lamp opposite, I had no difficulty in seeing how he was dressed. It was still raining a little, and the first I perceived was that he carried an umbrella; but when he put it down on nearing the door, all I could make out was that he wore his ordinary black hat and a waterproof cape that reached nearly to his heels. He let himself in with his latch-key, and stole up-stairs to bed in his usual stealthy manner.

These mysterious and suspicious proceedings on the part of our lodger naturally became a source of much disquiet to both Annie and myself; indeed, my wife began to get quite nervous on the point, and to imagine all kinds of terible and unlikely things as the results of our harboring such an unaccountable personage in our house. Mr. Twoshoes was, however, as I said before, such a model lodger in every other respect, so kind and considerate in every way, such a punctual and liberal paymaster, that, debate the question as we would, we could by no means make up our minds to part with him. So we decided at last to keep our apprehensions and suspicions to ourselves, and mention them neither to Mr. Twoshoes nor to any prying neighbor, and to put down everything in our lodger's ways of life for which we could not find a natural solution to the score of eccentricity—a term of very wide application, indeed.

Mr. Twoshoes had been with us about five weeks, when Annie's brother, Mr. Dick Dereham, came down from London to spend his holidays with us, for the sake of the fishing for which the neighborhood is celebrated. He was in those days a tall, raw-boned young fellow, with a most excellent opinion of his own acuteness and general abilities, dashed with that slight superciliousness of tone and manner which, especially toward homely country-folk, is such a common characteristic of the middle-class cockney. He had not been three hours in the house before he had wormed out of Annie everything that we knew, surmised and imagined concerning Mr. Twoshoes.

Here was a promising pie ready for an acute young cockney to poke his finger into! No fishing to be done until it was disposed of to his satisfaction. Really the country was not such a dull place after all! He met me that afternoon at the bank door, and, linking his arm in mine, unburdened his mind as we walked home together.

"Nan has been opening her mind to me this afternoon about your lodger, Mr. Twoshoes," he began.

"Indeed," said I, drily; "you were immensely interested, no doubt."

"Oh! you may jest about it if you like, but the question is a serious one. There's something bad about that fellow, you may depend upon it; and if I were you I'd either report him privately to the police, or else give him a week's notice, and so get rid of him altogether."

"Thank you," I replied; "but as I have no particular fault to find with Mr. Twoshoes, I don't feel quite inclined to adopt either of your suggestions."

"But consider, my dear fellow; it's really not safe to have a man like that in your house—who dresses one day as a groom, another day as a merchant seaman, and the next as a curate or private gentleman. It arises from no mere eccentricity, you may depend on it. There's some villainy afloat, and it will be well if you are not implicated in it when the exposé comes—and come it must, some of these fine days."

"Now, see you here, my pert young cockney," I replied; "You always were a tolerable hand at discovering mare's-nests, but please don't try to find any in my house. Whatever may be the little eccentricities of Mr. Twoshoes, they are no business of yours or mine. That he is a very worthy gentleman, and thoroughly honest and upright, I am fully convinced. My advice to you, therefore, is to go back and look after the little fishes and let my estimable lodger alone."

Dick was terribly huffed by my plain speaking, and did not fail to complain to my wife about it; but what annoyed me more was to find that he had contrived to affect her to some extent with his own absurd fears, so that when we went to bed that night she would insist on having the bed room door locked, a precaution she had never cared to exercise before, saying, in her circumlocutory way:

"There's no knowing what may happen with such mysterious people in the house."

A day or two after my conversation with Dick, pressing business required my absence in service of the firm for a few days. Having received my instructions, I hurried home, sent for my aunt Barbara to come and stay with Annie during my absence, and then lingered a moment to give a parting injunction to my wife and Dick respecting Mr. Twoshoes. I would not go till I had received an assurance from both of them that matters should go on as usual during my absence—that Mr. Twoshoes should be allowed to come and go as he might think proper, without notice or comment.

My visit was prolonged to a fortnight; and during the time I was away Markhallow races took place, the great festival of the year at our little town. The last race was over, and Dick had just turned his face homeward, and lighted a cigar to beguile the dusty way, when he was accosted by a fashionably-dressed individual, who politely requested the favor of a light.

Having obtained what he wanted, it was only natural, as they both happened to be going the same way, that the stranger should enter into conversation with Dick respecting the events of the day.

Dick was charmed at once with his new acquaintance, who seemed to be thoroughly at home on all matters connected with the turf, and proved by a single sporting equation how instead of losing his little bet of eight half-crowns, Dick might just as easily have won as many pounds. In ten minutes they were on the footing of old friends; mutually pleased with each other, and each doing his best to impress the other with the extent and variety of his information and the brilliancy of his remarks--a friendly rivalry in which Dick, self-conceited as he was, could not help feeling himself considerably distanced by his affable friend.

When they had reached the town, nothing would suit Captain Julius--for by that name the stranger had introduced himself--but that they must call in at the first hotel and have a bottle of champagne together. One bottle necessitated another; and by the time the second was half empty, Dick had grown very talkative, indeed; and ranging, with a loose and glowing tongue, from one topic to another, found himself at last, almost to his own surprise, for he could not remember by what pleasant but devious path he had reached that point, dilating to his fashionable friend on the whims, eccentricities and unaccountable vagaries of that mysterious Mr. Twoshoes.

Captain Julius seemed mightily interested in the subject, and cross-questioned Dick upon it in a smiling, affable way, and reverted to it again and again whenever Dick felt inclined to wander off into some other mazy streamlet of talk, till there was really nothing more to be learnt.

Having finished their wine, they left the hotel, and strolled arm in arm through the streets, now lighted up and thronged with a busy crowd, till they reached the house of Dick's brother-in law; and then, after a hearty shake of the hand, and an arrangement that Dick should call on the captain at his hotel at eleven the next morning, they separated.

Dick, who was still in a somewhat elevated mood, lingered at the door for a few minutes to finish his cigar. While thus standing he heard the Minster clock strike ten, and put his hand to his pocket to draw out his watch. But there was no watch left for him to find—his pocket had been neatly and dexterously picked of his gold repeater, value twenty-five guineas.

Quite sober by this time, and in a very queer humor, Master Dick walked down to the police-station to give notice of his loss. How Captain Julius would laugh at him in the morning for being such a greenhorn as to allow his pocket to be picked! If he could only induce the captain to go fishing with him, he would let him see that with a rod and line he knew a thing or two—that in matters piscatorial he was not altogether a novice! But when he reached the hotel on the following morning the captain had flown, leaving a message that he had been telegraphed for, and obliged to depart by the six A. M. train; but that he hoped to revisit Markhallow in the course of a few weeks, and would not then fail to hunt up his friend Mr. Dereham.

Dick returned home in a pensive mood, and spent a melancholy day in the manufacture of artificial flies.

The evening found Dick enjoying his cigar as usual on the step outside the door. Mr. Twoshoes was from home on some mysterious errand; my wife and her aunt were drinking tea at a neighbor's in the next street; the servant was supposed to be gone to see her mother, but was in reality taking a pleasant ramble among the lanes with her "young man," so that Dick had the whole establishment to himself.

The shadows were creeping up the street, and Dick was thinking about turning in, when his attention was drawn to the peculiar movements of a stranger on the other side of the way. Dick had noticed him, a minute or two before, staring very earnestly at the house; had then seen him move slowly down the street; then slowly return in a sidling, purposeless sort of way; and now, for the second time, he had planted himself directly opposite the house, and seemed uo be taking a silent mental photograph of it.

While Dick was still looking at him, and wondering what he could possibly be about, the stranger, in a cautious manuer, beckoned him to approach; and on his repeating the movement, Dick quitted the steps and lounged across the street, by no means pleased at receiving so undignified a summons.

The stranger was a burly, whiskerless man, with shifty, quick-glancing eyes, and a mouth that seemed purposely formed for the imbibition of strong waters; his voice being a basso profundo, with a slight chronic wheeze in the lower notes.

"Your name is Richard Dereham, is it not?" he said, seizing Dick by a button as soon as the latter got within arm's-length.

"I have reason to believe that it is," answered Dick, "but would not like to take long odds on the point."

"None of your chaff, young gentleman, if you please. All I want is a few straightforward answers from you. Attend. Is there not living in the same house with you an individual who goes by the name of Mr. James Twoshoes?"

Dick rubbed his nose; he began to feel interested.

"I cannot answer any of your questions," he said, "till I know what your object is in making them; and something more about you."

"If you must know, you must," said the other. "My name is Jibble; I am, in fact, Inspector Jibble, of the Metropolitan Detective Force, and I am not asking these questions without purpose in view."

"Now I can answer you," said Dick. "Mr James Twoshoes does live in the house opposite."

"Good. Have you noticed anything out of the common, anything eccentric or mysterious in the conduct or habits of this Mr. Twoshoes?"

"I have," replied Dick, eagerly. And without further questioning he told all that he knew, suspected and surmised respecting the unhappy Twoshoes.

"Quite coincides with the information I have received from headquarters," remarked the inspector, patronizingly, when Dick had finished. "One or two more questions, and I have done. Is Mr. Twoshoes in his rooms at the present time?"

"He is not. He will probably not be home for several hours; in fact, there's no one in the house at present—and that reminds me that I have left the front door open."

"No one in the house at present, eh?" said the inspector, musingly, as he balanced himself on his heels, and jingled the loose cash in his pocket. "Now, Mr. Dereham, I'll be frank with you. I have in my pocket at the present moment a warrant for the apprehension of Mr. Twoshoes. You may well start. He is one of the cleverest and most thorough-paced rogues going. I have been on his track for a long time, but he is such a slippery customer that I have hitherto had nothing tangible to go upon. I have never been able to take him in the act. But I have got something certain to work on at last, and I should have taken him this morning had I not received a telegram from headquarters requesting me to wait till to-morrow. This little delay will probably enable us to secure the whole gang of forgers with which he is connected, and of which he is the chief. They are all to meet at a certain place at noon to-morrow. At present Twoshoes is out—a fact, by the way, of which I was perfectly aware before I came to see you; and what I now want is to make an investigation of his rooms before he returns, for I have reason to believe that among his papers there is a list of names of which I am exceedingly desirous of having a private view before going on my little expedition to-morrow. Will you, therefore, my good Mr. Dereham, just wait outside the door for a few minutes, while I proceed up-stairs and do my duty? and should Mr. T. arrive in the meantime, you must contrive to detain him for a minute or two, till I have time to get out of the way. I must really compliment you, my young friend, on your powers of discrimination in this matter. You were not deceived by the specious pretenses of this clever rogue!"

They walked across the road together, and Dick stationed himself outside the door, while Jibble went about his little perquisition up-stairs.

He was not away more than five minutes, and Dick was still on the watch when he came down.

"Just as I expected," he said. "Most valuable information. Must say good-by for the present. Shall be happy to take a glass of wine with you when this little affair is over. In the meanwhile, silence--secresy!" and, with an affable wave of the hand, the burly inspector lumbered rapidly down the street, and was quickly lost to view.

In a happy frame of mind, and perfectly satisfied that he had just rendered an important service to society, Dick lighted another cigar, and still maintained his post of observation outside the door. His thoughts had gone wandering off by degrees towards a certain young lady, and he felt himself getting quite sentimental, a most unusual frame of mind for him, when, much to his surprise, he saw the cheery figure of Mr. Twoshoes bearing down on him from the other side of the way.

"How innocent he looks—the cunning old fox!" murmured Dick to himself. "He little thinks how neatly the trap is baited for him. I durst wager five yellow boys that he won't look quite so cheerful to-morrow night at this time."

Mr. Twoshoes was evidently in a hurry, for, without pausing, he bade Dick a pleasant good night, and then passed rapidly up stairs to his own room, where Dick heard him the next minute striking a light.

"Mr. Richard Dereham," called Mr. Twoshoes, gently, over the balusters, a minute or two afterward, "will you oblige me by stepping up-stairs?"

Wondering greatly, Dick complied, though not without some hesitation. Mr. Twoshoes was slowly rubbing his chin with one hand as Dick entered the room. His eyebrows were contracted, and there was a perplexed look on his face, such as Dick had never noticed before.

"Are you aware, Mr. Dereham, that during my absence this afternoon my room has been rifled of various articles belonging to me—among other things, of a set of gold studs, a silver lever watch and a portemonnaie containing two five-pound notes?"

"Rifled!" gasped Dick. "Really I was not aware of it!"

"I don't suppose you were. But are you aware whether any one, not an inmate of the house, has had access, either directly or indirectly, to this room while I have been out?"

"As far as my knowledge goes, there has only been one person here beyond the ordinary inmates of the house."

"And who may that one person have been?"

"Inspector Jibble, of the London police."

"Inspector Jibble! And what might be the fellow's business in my room?"

"Why, to tell the truth, he said he had got a warrant out for your apprehension, and came up to search the room for some document or other which he wanted."

Mr. Twoshoes gave a long, low whistle.

"And where were you, Mr Dereham, during the time this person was in my room?"

He looked very grim as he asked this question, and Dick quaked in his shoes as he replied:

"Outside the door—keeping watch, in fact."

"Just so—to prevent his being disturbed. Neat, by Jove! uncommon neat! Perhaps it will be as well to see how you yourself have fared, Mr. Dereham. Oblige me by taking the light, and leading the way into your own room."

Dick complied in fear and trembling; and on looking round his room, found that a ring and a breastpin had vanished—the only available property there.

"Then you have contrived to save your watch?" said Mr. Twoshoes.

In sorrow and humiliation Dick related the story of his meeting with Captain Julius, and how he had taken more wine than was good for him, and had had his pocket picked as he came home through the crowd.

"And served you right, too!" was the comment of Mr. Twoshoes. "Here comes Mrs. Starling. It will be as well to inquire whether she has lost anything."

Search was made down stairs, which resulted in the discovery that our two silver spoons and forks had been taken; as also—sorrow of sorrows!—the silver teapot, my rich uncle's wedding gift.

"A tolerably clean sweep," remarked Mr. Twoshoes, when the search was ended; "and—I say it again—an uncommon neat stroke of business. As for you, sir," turning to the disconcerted Dick, "like the man in the play, you may ask your friends to write you down an ass. You have been most transparently duped, and if you had been the sole sufferer it would only have taught you a useful lesson. Your particular friend, Captain Julius, was without doubt a member of the swell mob; he it was who took your watch; and the impudent rascal who came here to-night was probably instructed by him, and will hand over to him a fair share of the plunder."

"I see it all now! What a fool I have been!" groaned poor Dick. "But you, sir," turning on Mr. Twoshoes—"had it not been for your mysterious goings-on—had you only acted like any other reasonable man—this would never have happened."

"So long as my good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Starling, are satisfied with their lodger, I do not recognize your right to interfere in my concerns. As, however, my business in this neighborhood will be over in a few days, I will at once give Mrs. Starling that explanation which, under the circumstances, she has a right to expect, and which you, Mr. Dereham, are at liberty to listen to, if you think well to do so. Know, therefore, all persons whom it may concern that I, James Twoshoes (though whether that is my real name or not does not in the least matter), am a member of the Metropolitan Detective Force—not a sham officer like your friend Jibble, Mr. Dereham; that I came down here to hunt out a certain nest of forgers, whose handiwork we had traced to this part of the country, without being exactly able to lay our fingers on the rogues themselves; that, as a natural consequence, a certain amount of secresy and mystery was essential to my plan, which plan, I am happy to say, has proved completely successful. And now, Mr Dereham, you and I had better step down to the police station and furnish the details of the robbery. Perhaps we may succeed in tracing the rascals. Anyhow, we have been charmingly sold."

Mr. Twoshoes had quite recovered his good humor by breakfast time next morning, and could afford to laugh as heartily as any one at his mishap; but Dick was nowhere to be found. He had, in fact, risen with the lark, and set out for London by the train; and from that day to this we have never seen his face in Markhallow.

Of Captain Julius and his confederate, it is only necessary to say that they were captured some three months later, in consequence of a second robbery, in which they again acted as partners, and that they finally met with the reward which their peculiar talents merited so well.

THE sons of men of genius are said to be dull as a rule, and the daughters to inherit the ability of their sires. Curiously enough, two great novelists seem destined to transmit their literary succession in the female line. Miss Thackeray's writings prove that she is endowed with her father's genius, as well as with a womanly power peculiarly her own. Miss Dickens is said to be the author of the story, Aunt Margaret's Troubles, which has recently appeared; and if such is the case, the young authoress may be congratulated on having made an extremely successful debut, and one worthy in every way of her father's reputation.

A GAY duke in Paris, recently deceased, was noted as the possessor of twenty-seven hundred waistcoats.

THE mean level of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans is now found to be the same.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

ARCTIC VOYAGING.

ONE of the most interestiug of recent narratives of travel or discovery is Dr. Hayes's Open Polar Sea, containing the record of the events of au expedition to the Arctic Seas, conducted by the author. Dr. Hayes was Surgeon of the expedition commanded by Dr. Kane, and while acting in that capacity he formed certain theories in regard to the "open sea" at the North Pole, and the best mode of reaching it, which he was anxious to verify. The highest point reached by Dr. Kane with his vessels was Van Renssalaer Harbor, latitnde seventy-eight degrees thirty-seven seconds, on the eastern side of Smith's Sound. Dr. Hayes was of opiuion that a more favorable position could be attained on the western side, for definitely solving the problem of an Open Polar Sea. As long ago as April, 1858, he commenced systematically bringing the subject before the leading scientific associations of the country. Through their aid, and that furnished by public-spirited citizens of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, he succeeded after two years' "agitation" in obtaining the means of purchasing a small schooner of one hundred and thirty-three tons burden, in which, with a party nnmbering fourteen persons, all told, he set out on his venturous expedition on the 6th of July, 1860.

The delay in the appearance of the narrative, which has but just been published, was caused by the fact that after the author's return he was engaged in the public service until after the conclusion of the war, as chief of an army hospital with from three to five thousaud inmates.

The book is written in an agreeable style, the narrative being clear and simple, and the descriptions graphic, and sometimes quite beautiful. We give a few extracts:

THE BEAUTY OF THE ICEBERGS.

"It would be difficult to imagine a sceue more solemnly impressive than that which was disclosed to us by the sudden change in the clouded atmosphere. From my diary I copy the following brief description of it:

"'MIDNIGHT.—I have just come below, lost in the wondrous beauty of the night. The sea is smooth as glass; not a ripple breaks its dead surface, not a breath of air stirring. The sun hangs close upon the northern horizon; the fog has broken up into light clouds; the icebergs lie thick nbout us; the dark headlnnds stand boldly out against the sky; and the clouds aud sea and bergs and monntains are bathed in an atmosphere of crimson and gold nnd purple most singularly beautiful.'

"In all my former experience in this region of startling novelties I had never seen anything to equal what I wituessed that night. The air was warm almost as a Summer's night at home, and yet there were the icebergs and the bleak mountains, with which the fancy, in this land of green hills aud waving forests, can associate nothing but cold repulsiveness. The sky was bright and solt and strangely inspiriug as the sky of Italy. The bergs had wholly lost their chilly aspect, and, glittering in the blaze of the brilliant heavens, seemed, in the distance, like masses of burnished metal or solid flame. Nearer at hand they were huge blocks of Parian marble, inlaid with mnmmoth gems of pearl and opal. One in particular exhibited the perfectiou of the grand. Its form was not unlike that of the Coliseum, and it lay so far away that half its height was buried beneath the line of blood-red waters. The sun, slowly rolling along the horizon, passed behind it, and it seemed as if the old Roman ruin had suddeuly taken fire.

"Nothing indeed but the pencil of the artist could depict the wonderful richness of this sparkling fragment of Nature. Church, in his great picture of "The Icebergs," has grandly exhibited a scene not unlike thut which I would in vain describe.

"In the shadows of the bergs the water was a rich green, and nothing could be more soft and tender than the gradations of color made by the sea shoaling on the sloping tongue of a berg close beside us. The tint increased in intensity where the ice overhung the water, and a deep cavern near by exhibited the solid color of the malachite mingled with the transparency of the emerald; while, in strange contrast, a broad streak of cobalt blue ran diagonally through its body.

"The bewitching character of the scene was heightened by a thousand little cascades which leaped into the sea from these floating masses—the water being discharged from lakes of melted snow and ice which reposed in quietude far up in the valleys separating the high icy hills of their upper surface. From other bergs large pieces were now und then detached—plunging down into the water with deafening roise, while the slow moving swell of the ocean resounded through their broken archways.

"I had been watching this scene for hours, lost in reverie and forgetfulness, when I was brought suddenly to my senses by the master's mate, who came to report, 'Ice close aboard, sir.' We were drifting slowly upon a berg about the height of our topmasts The boats were quickly lowered to pull us off, and, the schooner once more in safety. I went to bed.

"I awoke after a few hours, shivering with the cold. The 'bull's eye' above my head was open, and u chilly log was pouring in npon me. Hurrying on deck, I found the whole scene changed. A dense gray mist had settled over the waters and icebergs aud mountaius, blending them all in chaotic gloom."

THE GREENLAND "KAYAK."

"The kayak of the Greenlauder is the frailest specimen of marine architecture that ever carried human freight. It is eighteen feet long and as many inches wide at its middle, and tapers, with an upward curving line, to a point at either end. The skeleton of the boat is made of light wood; the covering is of tanned seal skiu, sewed together by the native women with sinew threud, and with a strength and dexterity quite astonishing. Not a drop of water finds its way through their seams, and the skin itself is perfectly water-proof. The boat is about nine inches deep, and the top is covered like the bottom. There is no opening into it except a round hole in the centre, which admits the hunter as far as his hips. This hole is surrounded with a wooden rim, over which the kayaker laces the lower edge of his water-tight jacket, and thus fastens himself in and keeps the water out. He propels himself with a single oar about six feet long, which terminates in a blade or paddle at either end. This instrument of locomotion is grasped in the centre, and is dipped in the water alternately to right nnd left. The bont is graceful as a dnck and light as a feather. It has no ballast and no keel, nnd it rides almost on the surface of the water. It is therefore necessarily top-heavy. Long practice is required to manage it, and no tight-rope dancer ever needed more steady nerve and skill of balnnce than this same savage kayaker. Yet, in this frail craft, he does not hesitate to ride seas which would swamp an ordinary boat, or to break through surf which may sweep completely over him. But he is used to hard battles, nnd, in spite of every fortune, he keeps himself upright."

Wonderfully and magnificently beautiful as the bergs are, their beauty can only be contemplated with pleasure, at a safe distance. Their immediate neighborhood is full of strange perils. Great masses, as big as Montgomery Block, often break off from the top or sides and fall thnndering into the sea. Other masses are detached from the portion that is under water, thus changiug the center of gravity, and sometimes causing the entire berg to roll over. The following vivid description, will give the reader an idea of some of the peculiar perils of Arctic voyaging:

THE SCHOONER IN DANGER.

"Giviug too little heed to the currents, we were eagerly watching the indications of the wind which appeared at the south, and hoping for a breeze, when it was discovered that the tide had changed, and was stealthily setting us upon a nest of bergs which lay to the leeward. One of them was of that description known among the crew by the significant title of 'Touch me not,' and presented that jagged, honey-combed appearance indicative of great age. They ure unpleasant neighbors. The least disturbance of their equilibrium may cause the whole mass to crumble to pieces, and woe be unto the unlucky vessel that is caught in the dissolution.

"In such a trap it seemed, however, that we stood a fair chance of being ensnared. The current was carryiug us along at an uncomfortably rapid rate A boat was lowered as quickly as possible, to run out a line to a berg which lay grounded about a hundred yards from us. While this was being done, we grazed the side of a berg which rose a hundred feet above our topmasts, theu slipped past another of smaller dimensions. By pushing against them with our ice-poles we changed somewhat the course of the schooner; but when we thought that we were steering clear of the mass which we so much dreaded, an eddy changed the direction of onr drift, and carried us almost broadside upon it.

"The schooner struck on the starboard quarter, and the shock, slight though it was, diseugaged some fragments of ice that were large enough to have crushed the vessel had they struck her, and also many little lumps which rattled about; us; but fortunately no person was hit. The quarter-deck was quickly cleared, and all hands, crowding forward, anxiously watched the boat. The berg now began to revolve, nnd wns settling slowly over us; the little lumps fell thicker and faster upon the after-deck, and the forecastle was the only place where there was the least chance of safety.

"At length the berg itself saved us from destrnction. An immense mass broke off from that part which was beneath the surface of the sea, and this, a dozen times larger than the schooner, came rushiug up within a few yards of us, sending a vast volnme of foam and water flying from its sides. This rupture arrested the revolution, and the berg began to settle in the opposite direction. And uow came another danger. A long tongue was protruding immediately underneath the schooner; already the keel was slipping and grinding upon it, and it seemed probable that we should be knocked up into the air like a foot-ball, or ut least capsized. The side of our enemy soon leaned from us, and we were in no danger from the worse than hailstone showers which had driven us forward; so we sprang to the ice-poles, aud exerted our strength in endeavoring to push the vessel off. There were uo idle hands. Danger respects not the dignity of the quarter-deck.

"After we had fatigued ourselves at this hurd labor without any useful result, the berg came again to our relief. A loud report startled us; another and another followed in quick succession, until the noise grew deafening, and the whole air seemed a reservoir of frightful sound. The opposite side of the berg had split off, peice after piece, tumbling a vast volume of ice into the sea, and sending the berg revolving back upon us. This time the movement was quicker; fragments began again to fall; and, ulready sufficiently sturtled by the alarming dissolution which had taken place, we were in momentary expectation of seeing the whole side nearest to us break loose aud crash bodily upon the schooner, in which event she would inevitably be carried dowu beneath it; as hopelessly doomed as a shepherd's hut beneath an Alpine avalanche.

"By this time Dodge, who had charge of the boat, had succeeded in planting nu ice-anchor aud attachiug his rope, and greeted us with the welcome signal, 'Haul in.' We pulled for our lives, long uud steadily. Secouds seemed miuutes, and minutes hours. At length we began to move off. Slowly and steadily sank the berg behind us, carrying away the main-boom, and grazing hard against the quarter. But we were safe. Twenty yards away, and the disruption occurred which we had all so much dreaded. The side nearest to us now split off, and came plungiug wildly down into the sea, sending over us u shower of spray, raising a swell which set us rocking to and fro as if in a gale of wiud, and left us grinding in the débris of the crumbling ruin.

"At last we sueceeded in extricating ourselves, and were far enough away to look back calmly upon the object of our terror. It was still rocking and rolling like a thing of life. At each revolutiou fresh masses were disengaged; and, as its sides came up in long sweeps, great cascades tumbled and leaped from them hissing into the foaming sea. After several hours it settled down into quietude, a mere fragment of its former greatness, while the pieces that were brokeu from it floated qnietly away with the tide.

"Whether it was the waves created by the dissolution which I have just described, or the suu's warm rays, or both combined, I cannot pretend to say, but the day was filled with one prolonged series of reports of crumbling icebergs. Scarcely had we been moored in safety when a very large one about two miles distant from us, resembling in its general appearance the British House of Parliament, began to go to pieces. First a lofty tower came plunging into the water, starting from their inhospitable perch an immense flock of gulls, that went screaming up into the air; over went another; then a whole side settled squarely down; then the wreck capsized, and at length after five hours of rolling nnd crashing, there remained of this splendid mass of congelation not a fragment that rose fifty feet above the water. Another, which nppeared to be a mile in length and upwards of a hundred feet in height, split in two with a quick, sharp, and at length rumbling report, which could hardly have been exceeded by a thousand pieces of artillery simultaneously dicharged, and the two fragments kept wallowing in the sea for hours before they came to rest. Eveu the berg to which we were moored chimed in with the infernal concert, and discharged a corner larger than St. Paul's Cathedral.

It is only, however, during Midsummer, that the peril from the breaking up of the ice is very great. July and August are the worst months, and some of the phenomena which are then of common occurrence are extremely curious. Dr. Hayes declares that he has frequently seen fragments shot off from the sunny side of a berg with great force in a nearly horizontal line, and with an explosion like that of a quarryman's blast. At one time the Doctor undertook to count the bergs in sight, but after getting us high as five hundred, which included only a portion of the larger ones, he gave up in despair. In the vicinity of the bergs, the sea is in calm weather so wonderfully transparent that the ice under water can be traced downward to an apparently interminable extent. But the bergs are by no means the only, nor even the chief danger that the daring adventurer has to encounter in the Polar seas. The risks incurred from "floes" and "the pack" are still greater. Except the earthquake and the volcano, Doctor Hayes declares there is not in nature an exhibition of tremendous power at all comparable to what may be witnessed in the Arctic ice-fields.

We do not remember any other book of Arctic voyages in which the local coloriug and "sentiment" of the regiou is so effectively caught, or which leaves upon the mind so vivid an impressiou of the weird beauty of the Arctic landscape. For the results of the expedition we refer the reader to the volnme itself, expecting him to be duly grateful to us for calling his uttentiou to so delighful a narrative. It can be had at Bancroft's.

ALBERT FOLSOM'S WAGON MANUFACTORY—Number 531 California street, just above the present Alta office, is one of the oldest established in San Francisco. Mr. Folsom's proficiency and superior workmanship in his line of business can be testified to by thousands who have practically tested it during the last ten years, which is the best of all recommendations. For years past he has been awarded the repairs of the City Fire Department, work requiring a combination of strength and lightness—a class of work in which he is acknowledged to excel.

MAURICE DORE & CO'S NEXT REAL ESTATE SALE.—It is seldom that such valuable property is offered at auction as that which is to be sold by this firm at their salesroom on Wednesday next. One entire block lying at the junction of Market street and Van Ness Avenue, the two great prospective thoroughfares of the city, will be sold in 32 snbdivisions. Read their advertisement.

WAGON AND CARRIAGE STOCK AND MATERIALS.—We call attention to the advertisement of Meeker, James & Co., on our 16th page. This house has been for years established in its present locality; and all manufacturers of "running-gear," wheelwrights, etc., can find within its spacious walls every article required by their craft at the lowest figures

THE BEST CALIFORNIA WINES are "Hoadley's famed Sonoma wines," to be obtained only at the depot of Hoadley & Co., 533 Merchant street, opposite the office of THE CALIFORNIAN.

BACK AGAIN.—Dr. Blake, dentist, has removed to 645 Clay street, just below Kearny, within a few doors of his former old locality on the corner of Clay and Kearny streets.

DR. BENTON will give his last lecture on Psychology and the kindred sciences, at Congress Hall to night. The pressure of the doctors professional duties necessitates their suspension for a few weeks.

THE LADIES' WATER CURE—in fact the ONLY Water Cure in San Francisco, the Pioneer—Dr. BOURNE, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Cures speedy, pleasant, certain, where all other means have failed, and WITHOUT medicines, bleeding, blistering, excoriating or plastering. The experience of a quarter of a century, and FIFTEENTH year in San Francisco. *

GREAT SUCCESS has attended the practice of the eminent Water-Cure Physician, Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, during his long residence in San Francisco. Fifteenth year. His style of treatment is entirely different from that of the hydropathic colleges, and far superior. *

BATHS FOR THE SICK, with the physician's knowledge and experience, acquired during a practice of more than twenty-five years, (fifteen in San Francisco,) are the best and in the end decidedly the cheapest. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

WATER CURE.—Pioneer and only Water Cure in San Francisco, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street—fifteenth year. Removed twice only in more than twelve years. *

ELECTRICITY.—The use of Dr. Bourne's powerful and superb battery may be had at a charge of only four bits—10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

THE SICK ARE CURED without medicines better than with them, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

AN ODE TO SPRING.

I won't begin, "Hail, jocund Spring"—
"Hail's" only fit for winter—
But—Sunny Spring, thy flowers fling,
With varied colors tiut a
Land, which too soon dried up and browned
By scorching sun of Summer,
Will with its withered look astound
The eyes of each new comer.

Spring is the gay time of the year;
Nature in full new suit is
Now gaily clad; the fields now wear
A thousand varied beauties.
Men take a hint from Nature's dress
And in resplendent raiment
They welcome Spring with joyfulness,
Nor grudge their tailor payment.

As Nature decks the grassy fields
With gay and varied beauties,
So WARD to Nature's laws still yields,
Nor shirks his Spring-tide duties.
His costly show of scarfs and ties,
All suited to the season,
Delight each man of fashion's eyes,
And WARD'S a man of reason.

The price of everything, they say,
Be it shirt or paper collar,—
He has reduced, and in this way
Beats all his rivals hollow.
WARD'S shirts—new fashion for the Spring—
All men of taste admire;
And low prices must custom bring
And satisfy each buyer.

EUCHRE.

BY HARRY POMEROY.

Euchre is a popular game, very much so, and is played in the family circle—at home, not at the theatre—and in many other places, including the "cottage by the sea," in "marble halls," at clubs, on steamboats (very much), in railroad cars to a great extent, and in very many other places, not including churches, singing schools, the Legislature while in session, or Normal schools.

But it is nevertheless played about everywhere, and by about everybody.

It is a popular game with the fair sex. More so than base ball, much more. They like euchre. They frequently order it up, but seldom play it alone. Some of them will go in on small hands, too, though I have seen those whom my gloves would "fit to a T," and I wear number 7.

There is a great difference in players. Some are good natured and jolly, taking a "euchre" as gaily as they would a "strait;" some are very reserved, silent, and watchful; some are continually in a fuss, fret and fidget, if the game goes against them; while some rear, tear and swear if they get beat or euchred.

And these latter are generally the ones who like to "make up a game." Why they ever play, when they are always so confounde dly uncomfortable, is more than I could ever make out.

Some play quick and decided; some never seem to know what card to play, and play the wrong one finally, after making a feint of playing every card in their hand; some play thoughtlessly, hap hazard like, and then exclaim, "there! I declare, I didn't mean to play that card. I meant to have played the 10 of clubs." It takes all kinds of people to make a world, and people of all sorts of dispositions to play euchre.

What is life but a euchre game? With many it is "set back" euchre, or "cut throat," as some call it—and truly. We are all playing euchre, some holding "lone hands," and others without a trump. It's a hard game with the latter—the prospect, bad.

There are a good many of us playing "lone hands" in the little side games of life, and we often get euchred on them—don't we? The grand games are played between governments, and the stakes are apt to be high.

A "quarter a corner" is nowhere.

Max., he took a hand at the game, where the stake was Mexico. Nap., his partner, "assisted," but they have got euchred bad. Uncle Sam claimed a "hand in," and "held over them."

Prussia played a "lone hand" against Austria, made her four points and won the game. Bismarck dealt the cards. Nap. was interested in the game, and tried to get in for a deal, but Bis. was too much for him, and wouldn't let him have a "hand in." The Fenians have got euchred badly—on Stephens. He played a "lone hand" on them, and went through with it.

We are all playing euchre in this world of ours, from high to low—from L. Napoleon down to State Constables, the latter often getting euchred on a "lone hand." We are all trying to euchre one another in all the relations of life, and some do get euchred badly on relations. I was once euchred to the tune of a ten by a cousin-in-law. One party or the other frequently get euchred in the game of matrimony. Sometimes both, in which case they generally change partners if they wish another "rub."

The world is a euchre table, and we mere players. This is coming down to a finer point than did Shakespeare on the "stage" business. The devil euchred Eve badly—holding a "lone hand" against her Eve, in turn, euchred Adam, and the game has been going on ever since.

Such is Euchre—such is Life.—Boston Sunday Times.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 SANSOME ST. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

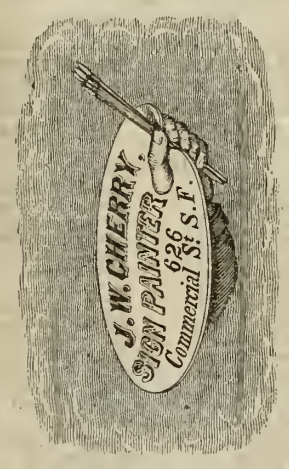
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT



PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE

AND

TELEGRAPH INSTITUTE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE BUILDING,

POST STREET, BETWEEN MONTGOMERY AND KEARNY, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS DESIGNED TO PREPARE Boys and Men

FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,

And to impart a thorough

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,

IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH AND MERCHANDISE,

rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He

COMMENCES SPECULATION,

Carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,

A regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of

ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.

This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph Operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the departments, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,

San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO

WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine

Wines, Liquors and Segars,

NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,

Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

Main street, Petaluma.

WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,

San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS

Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc.

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco, and all Dealers.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

RUNAWAY HORSES.

BY THE FAT CONTRIBUTOR.

It is as natural for some horses to run away as it is for a Kentucky girl when she wants to get married, and it isn't always the result of native viciousness in the one case, any more than it is in the other. Fact is, horses like to run—they were built for it—and when there is nothing particnlar to scare them into it, they will often get np a scare on their own hook, just for the fun of the thing. They have various ways of running away. Some run away on a run, some on a gallop and some on a trot. When they run on a walk it is geuerally on the sidewalk. Some run away under the saddle, some in harness, and some run away to nothing hut a mere shadow.

Some will only rnn for money; others will only run for home. Running away is a hahit nsually acquired when the horse is yonng, although we have known horses whose early days were free from such viciousness take it np in their old age, when they are very liable to "run it in the ground." So we have seen men who were models of propriety in youth and middle age, pnt on a frisky way with gray hairs, drop sedateness and sohriety, and take to "rnnning all night."

A runaway is very exciting, particnlarly to the individual who is being run away with. There is an exhilirating sense of heing jerked ahont without touching anything in particular; a sense of seeing men scatter hefore yon to get out of the way; a sense of hearing them yell "whoa!" hehind you as you dash on; a sense of stopping suddenly—and then yon haven't got any more sense.

The expedients that have heen resorted to for hreaking a horse of this hahit are numerous. Whipping has heen tried with only partial snccess. He has heen hitched hy the side of another horse, and run away with the other horse. Anchors have been rigged to the wagon to he cast out when the horse started to run, stopping almost everything except the horse.

A man whom we once knew claimed that kindness was all that was required to cure any horse of rnnning, no matter how long it had run. "Only prove to your horse that you have confidence in him," said he, "and the native generosity of his disposition will overcome all desire to run away."

Some of his neighhors, being incredulous ahont it, hrought him a horse that wonld run away three hundred and sixty-five times and six hours in one year, if he had an opportnnity. They wanted him to try his system on him, which he accordingly did. He hitched him to a buggy, conversing pleasantly upon every day topics, meanwhile, and then to show the quadruped what confidence he had in him, got in to drive without any reins.

"Here, gentlemen," said he, "I am ahout to give you an illustration of the effects which kindness and a display of confidence will have npon the horse. Once convince him that you are his friend, and that you confide in him, and he will respond with the gratitude of a child. You will perceive that at a word from me he will do as I require."

Then in mild, soothing tones, that fairly overflowed with kindness to animals, he begged the privilege of seeing him move. And he did. The horse gave a bound, struck into a rnn, and was out of sight in a minute. Nothing has since been seen of the horse or his trainer.

We never yet knew a horse that had the hahit of rnnning away secnrely fastened upon him—and once will fasten it securely enough—to ever be satisfactorily cured except by death. Men who have doubted this, and given the horse a second trial, have had the trial go against them with costs.—Cincinnati Times.

THE latest triumph of photography is a plan in which pictures of sunken ships are secured much to the benefit of wreckers.

AN ice-hoat on the Hudson recently run nine miles in ten minutes.

GENESEE county, New York, has had two earthquake shocks.

SPURGEON is ahout to erect an orphan asylum.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Office, No. 408 Montgomery Street,
NEAR CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL (paid np) - - - $1,000,000 00
ASSETS Jan. 1, 1867, - - $1,093,131 92

PRESIDENT.....GEO. W. BEAVER
SECRETARY.....W W. WIGGINS
MARINE OFFICER.....CAPT. AMOS NOYES
SURVEYOR.....E. N. TORREY

Policies Issued and Losses Paid in Gold.

MARINE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Hulls, Cargoes, Treasure, Commissions, Profits and other Subjects of Marine Insurance, to and from all Ports in the World, inclnding Inland Risks.

FIRE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Rents, Vessels in Port, and their Cargoes, and otber Insurable Property, ..AT..

GREATLY REDUCED RATES!

MARINE AGENTS.
NEW YORK. MESSRS. EUGENE KELLY & CO.
HONOLULU....MESSRS C. BREWER & CO.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
JOSEPH A. DONOHOE.....Chairman.
JOHN G. BRAY, ALBERT DIBBLEE,
H. W. HALLECK, ABRAM BLOCK,
WILLIAM PIERCE, JAS. H. DEERING,
JAS. T. DEANE, GEO. F. BRAGG.

DIRECTORS.

J. W. Brittan,	Jos. A. Donohoe,
Albert Dibblee.	George W. Gibbs,
Abner H. Barker,	R. G. Sneath.
James H. Deering,	Henry Barroilbet,
Henry S. Dexter,	Abram Block,
N. Van Bergen,	J. C. Johnson,
George F. Bragg,	J. T. Dean,
C. F. Fargo,	H. W. Halleck,
Henry L. King,	Henry L. Davis,
Charles Clayton,	T. E. Baugh,
Michael Reese,	S. C. Hastings,
George W. Dam,	C. A. Eastman,
Wm. G. Badger,	Benj. Hobart,
James W. Cox,	Levi Strauss,
Daniel Mayer,	Charles Lux,
Hiram Tubbs,	Jas. P. Goodwin,
Lloyd Tevis,	P. Maury, Jr,
Alex. Forbes,	W. W. Montague,
Jos. B. Thomas,	Nicholas Larco,
Morris Speyer,	William Pierce,
John G. Bray,	E. H. Winchester,
H. L. Dodge,	E. V. Hathaway,
Walter N. Hawley,	N. C. Fassett,
Isaac E. Davis,	A. Hayward,
E. L. Goldstein,	Samuel Crim,
Daniel Murphy,	John Ceuter,
Wm. H. Sharp,	Theo. Le Roy,
C. L. Taylor,	George C. Hickox,
J. S. Hutchinson,	O. F. Giffin,
Chas. M. Plum,	W. C. Talbot,
M. F. Jones,	A. J. Bryant,
S. Heydenfeldt,	James Phelan,
Abram Seligman,	Geo. V. Beaver,
Thomas Breeze,	C. C. Knox,
F. P. McMahon,	Jas. P. Pierce,
J. C. Wilmerding,	W. W. Wiggins,
Anthony Chabot,	J. B. Roberts.
John F. Miller,

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, hetween Secoud and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb stroet,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.
A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.
THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE: 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Palo and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA
YELLOW DOCK
AND
IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood urifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

DR. HAYDEN,
Dentist,
653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

REMOVAL—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

[For the Californian.]

STREET CAR RECREATION.

BY PRENTICE.

THE only occupation presented to a person on getting into a street car is to sit and stare at or be stared at. It is generally dull work. The other day to while away the time on such a trip, I made imaginary histories and conjectures concerning my fellow passengers, as one by one they dropped in and dropped out.

Enter first a twelve year old boy carrying a baby. Imagination starts. Poor boy! He has to carry that baby a great deal. I know he does. His attitude adapts itself to the shape and daily increasing weight of the infant, and the expression of his face indicates that the baby has worn itself into his mind, as it were. The two are Siamese twins of unequal age. He must be an orphan, adopted by some practical people for the purpose of going on errands and carrying the baby. Life with him thus far has been food, clothes, sleep, scolding and carrying baby. He likes good things to eat, but I feel that the people with whom he lives are made uncomfortable by his positive and active appetite. Not that they begrudge him what he consumes, exactly, but they dislike to see all his faculties absorbed when he eats pie. They have forgotten how pie tasted at the age of twelve years. He will live with those people a few years longer. That baby will become more and more a plague and a torment to him. There will be private quarrels between him and the infant. He will have the best of the contest out of the house and "get in," as the professionals say, many a sly pinch and cuff in revenge for protracted martyrdom; but the baby will win at home. Finally he will leave these people, only to suffer a change of masters until he becomes old enough to master some one himself. He looks forward to this time with hopeful but vague anticipation, the delight of which is in no small measure increased by the knowledge that he will be served daily at table with a piece of pie as big as anybody's else. Yet when that time comes of how little importance will pie and cake be to him in comparison with some other then unattainable object. Poor boy! poor baby! Sad objects for contemplation. Blow your nose, poor boy—there is much need of it; and apply the necessary instrument to the infant's nasal protuberance, also.

There is a neatly dressed young man in one corner. Black hair, black moustache, ruddy complexion. He is going to see some young woman. He and she think they love each other. They will be married and trudge along in the vast and never-ending procession of Jacks and Jills who live in bired tenements, eat, drink, have children born unto them, and never so much as wonder why and wherefore they were created. He would do much for that young woman now. But two or three years after the magistrate has told them to love each other, he will do about as he pleases, for matrimony is not courtship, and husband and wife are not generally lovers. Had the magistrate not tied the knot so fast he might be a little more careful and not give himself so much tether when in some of his various moods—for he has moods. All men have them. Young woman, you need not lay the flattering unction, the balm of a thousand flowers to your soul that your Charles has no ugly in him. All men have some ugly in them, just as all soil contains worthless weeds. It will come to the surface some time or other. It is only to be eradicated by patient and persistent rooting up. Your Charles knows not how much ugly there is in him. As he sits there now, dreaming of his anticipated tete a-tete with you, he deems himself one of the mildest, best natured creatures in existence. How heavenly we can be when all goes right! How bland we become when our earthly form is outside of a good dinner! How genial are we in the sunshine of our wedding day!

Here is a middle aged man, whiskers slightly tinged with gray, black, bushy eye-brows. He carries a bundle. He is going home to his family. He looks to me like a devil at home. No exclamation of rapturous delight is heard when the door opens for him. I hear a growl—a human growl—because dinner is not ready, or little Sam has left some children's trash, sticks, stones, broken pottery, and the like, on the front gravelled walk. Well, he has a right to grumble, hasn't he? Don't he provide for the family? Are you not willing to allow him a little recreation after returning home fatigued with the cares and perplexities of business? Let the children keep still. Let the cat run with a scared expression out of the back door as he makes an ineffectual kick at her. Let the meek and submissive wife keep silent until this lord of creation, secretly ashamed of his own tantrums, chooses to unbend himself. He is a man, one of the lords who control creation—or imagine they do—all the same so long as they know no better.

The car stops. A man in a new and cheap gray suit, particolored cravat and new felt hat enters. He is from the interior. Car riding is new to him. He imagines it new to all aboard. He is not bound anywhere in particular; just where the car takes him. I would like to enjoy it as he does. That man's partners are to-day piping away at some great bank of dirt up country. Even now shovels long-handled, picks, crowbars, hose and long strings of sluices are pictured in his brain. He is going home on the next steamer, and is trying to enjoy himself the few days previous to his departure.

A miss of sixteen, arrayed in the legitimate uniform of a young lady. Her stiff and ample skirts quite overshadow our friend from the country as she sits beside him. He is awed and abashed. She knows she is "dressed up." That's about all she does know, just at present. There is a difference between being dressed and "dressed up." A large proportion of our women on the street are "dressed up," and look as if they had run a-muck through a dry-goods establishment, coming out with whatever clung to them, without regard to suitableness or color. What business have you to criticise women's dress? Is not that their own especial department? No. Men are what they dress for. As one of the units constituting mankind I am one of the parties dressed for; perhaps it might be said dressed at. I have caught glimpses of a plain calico gown belted neatly round the waist, just the narrowest edge of a linen collar, bright eyes, red cheeks, hair untortured, which would reduce all these tilting frills to nothingness.

A youth from the city college. Two books. Two years more and his education will be finished. So he thinks. So he is taught to believe. Finished? Whose education is finished? Show me the bounds to space and you may begin to speak of educations finished. How little after all do we know.

"Tell me, ye winged winds
That round my pathway roar——"

"Fare, sir." So remarked the conductor. There is, indeed, but one tumble from the sublime to the ridiculous. I deliver my ticket, and ask that conductor, mentally, if he is aware that he has an immortal soul, and, if knowing that he possesses such an article, how can he drag me thus down from the seventh Heaven of reflection to demand a paltry car ticket?

The youth has a copy of Virgil. His parents never read Virgil—never droned year after year through bonus, bona, bonum—and they regard their son's travels through these unknown regions of language with admiration and awe. And he has discovered that he knows more than his parents, and perhaps even now regards his father as the "old man," a sort of necessary evil, being the medium through whom pocket money is procured.

There are many Lears in society.

Wisdom, learning——Who are learned? Thales was one of the wise men of Greece, and he deemed that all warmth was derived from humidity, and that the sun and stars derived their aliment from the sea. But Anaximenes was another wise man who, differing from Thales, contended that air must be the substitute for water as the source of all things. And Pythagoras and Socrates——Ah! We are at North Beach. Let us go and see the lively monkeys, the morose bears, and the garrulous parrots.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

AT Maguire's Opera House The Fast Family, an adaptation of Victor Sardou's play, La Famille Benoiton, was played on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Miss Kate Denin made her reappearance on Monday in the character of "Clotilde" in this play. The head of the "fast family"—"Monsieur Benoiton" (admirably played by Henry Edwards)—is immersed in business cares and allows the members of his family to amuse themselves as best pleases them. The daughters dress like the members of the demi-monde, talk slang and go to places of amusement without a chaperone. The oldest son plunges into dissipation, and glories in getting into disgraceful scrapes, and the youngest, a boy of twelve years of age—tuitioned in "business points" by his father—speculates in postage stamps, organizes a juvenile Board of Brokers, bulls and bears it with the aid of his father's money and experience, smokes, gets drunk and otherwise behaves "as a man." "Blanche," eldest daughter (Mrs. Sophie Edwin,) married to "M. Didier," forms the acquaintance of "M. le Vicomte de Champrose" (J. Wilson) at a gambling table and on his appearance in Paris circumstances lead "M. Didier" to suspect him of undue affection for his wife. After much trouble "Blanche Didier" is cleared from suspicion through the kind offices of "Clotilde," who has set herself to work to reform this "fast family." The character of "M. Didier" affords Mr. McCullough an opportunity of displaying his talent for quiet, and intense acting, and he made many good points. Mrs. Judah as "Adolphine," an old maid, and a poor relation of the family, was extremely good. Harry Jackson filled the part of "Prudent Formichel," a very commercial young gentleman suitor for the hand of "Camille Benoiton," with admirable skill. Miss A. Deaves, the little girl who played "Fanfan Benoiton," the youngest of the family, was nightly the recipient of immense applause for her capital rendition of the part. The Miss Corcorans, who are rapidly improving in their profession, played the roles of "Rose" and "Camille Benoiton" very well. The first act of this play is decidedly slow, and does not evince much artistic skill on the part of its translator: the last two acts are good and the interest is well sustained throughout. On Thursday evening Julius Cæsar was produced on the occasion of the benefit of Henry Edwards. I am sorry to say that the house was not half as well filled as it ought to have been, taking into consideration the merit of Mr. Edwards and the fact that some time has elapsed since Julius Cæsar was last produced at the Opera House. Everyone who has seen Mr. Edwards on the stage admires him; there is no difference of opinion as to his talent; all say he is one of the best actors we have ever had on the San Francisco stage. Everyone "hoped Mr. Edwards would have a good benefit;" but, alas! everyone did not attend. The audience present—and it was a good one though there were many seats vacant—enjoyed the performance thoroughly. "Marc Antony's" oration over the body of "Cæsar" has seldom if ever been so effectively delivered on the San Francisco stage, and the loud applause of the audience on its conclusion attested their thorough appreciation. Mr. Edwards's characterization of "Marc Antony" was a talented effort throughout. John McCullough made many good points in the part of "Brutus," but his anxiety to avoid ranting led him to the other extreme, and he was frequently too tame. He delivered many impassioned speeches in a cold, uncongenial manner, which was scarcely a characteristic of Shakspeare's "Brutus." He was not always happy in his reading—surely,

"I'd rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman."

should be read—

"I'd rather be a dog, and bay the moon." etc.

Mr. McCullough places all the emphasis on "bay" as if to "bay the moon" were a most disreputable occupation for a dog to be engaged in. Harry Thompson read the part of "Cassius" very well indeed; Miss Kate Denin made an admirable "Portia;" Mrs. Sophie Edwin played "Calphurnia" with much feeling, and Mrs. Harry Jackson won much applause for her capital acting in the part of "Lucius." Last night Griffith Gaunt was reproduced. This afternoon the comedy of The Fast Family will be played, and in the evening the new play entitled The Curse of Our Country will be produced. This is an original local drama written by a gentleman of this city. The Chinese question affords material for the plot. On Monday, Miss Olivia Rand will make her first appearance on any stage in the play of The Rustic Prima Donna, in the course of which she will sing a number of operatic gems. Miss Rand is young and attractive, and her friends prophesy for her a most successful debut. The great spectacular play of Cendrillon is in active preparation, and 100 young ladies are wanted immediately, to assist in its production. This play will, I believe, be produced with all the grand effects of the Black Crook.

On Monday evening the experiment of a polyglot performance of Othello was tried at the American Theatre, under the direction of George Pauncefort. It proved a failure both pecuniarily (a very small audience was present) and in an artistic sense. Mr. Pauncefort's "Othello" was by no means worthy of his reputation. Bonnet must study Shakspeare before he again attempts to play "Iago" in French. We doubt whether there are many Frenchmen living who could acceptably present this character on the stage. Mrs. Pauncefort's "Desdemona" and Fraulein Meyer's "Emilia"—in German—were both creditible recitations. We are sorry that Mr. Pauncefort's experiment failed to meet with success, but we are inclined to think that after all the novelty of a "polyglot performance" was not what caused the public of New York to flock to hear Shakspeare in German and English. Edwin Booth, Madame Scbiller and Bogumil Dawison are artistes of great merit; perhaps it was the fact that they could, in a performance in two languages, appear on the same occasion together on the stage, that caused the success of the English-German performances.

Madame Jaffa's first concert took place at Platt's Music Hall on Thursday evening. A pretty fair audience was present. Madame Jaffa's playing is characterized by considerable power, much brilliancy of execution and delicacy of touch. The compositions of Beethoven and Liszt try the capabilities of any artist severely, and though Madame Jaffa and Mr. Buch performed Beethoven's "Kreutza Sanato" very creditably, the former displays her talent to far more advantage in lighter compositions, such as Schuloff's "Carnival de Venise" and Wallace's "Cracovienne," both of which she executed extremely well. Miss Emma Howson sang "Wild Rocky Desert" from William Tell, in a manner which delighted her hearers and gained a unanimous encore. Miss Clelia Howson sang "Oh! Whisper what thou feelest" beautifully. She was rewarded with much applause, and was also encored.

On Wednesday Miss Pauline Conger, who recently made such a successful debut as "Mariana," in the play of The Wife, will essay another of Sheridan Knowles's creations, that of "Julia," in The Hunchback. Miss Conger has proven her possession of good acting qualifications and self-command on her debut, and will doubtless present a most satisfactory "Julia." Mr. Pierpont Thayer will personate "Sir Thomas Clifford" on this occasion.

On Thursday evening M'lle Rosa Celeste will be the recipient of a testimonial tendered by the profession. A grand concert will take place at Platt's Hall. M'lle Rosa Celeste will make her first ascension since the accident which she met with some five months ago and other entertainments will be presented. The following celebrated artistes have kindly volunteered their services: Signora Bianchi, Madame Marzetti, Miss Emma Howson, Miss Clelia Howson, M'lle Louisa Tourney, Mrs. Georgiana Leach, Miss Ella Kemp, Miss Rosa Siegrist, Signor Biancbi, Siguor Mancusi, S. W. Leach, Signor Roncovieri, Frank Howson, John Howson, Charles Schultz, M. W. Willis, Gustave A. Scott, Prof. Siegrist and son, and the Martinetti Trupe. Such an array of talent will doubtless draw one of the largest audiences ever assembled within the walls of Platt's Hall.

At the Metropolitan, Heller still continues the attraction.

There has been no lack of amusement in San Francisco during the week. On Thursday evening the students of the Pacific Business College gave a social reunion at their rooms in the Mechanics' Institute on Post street. All who were invited enjoyed a most pleasant evening. There was no lack of handsome young ladies for partners, and the dance was kept up with much spirit until morning. TOUCHSTONE.

SASH, DOORS, AND BLINDS.—The manufacture of these articles has become, of late years, one of the most important branches of the industry of our city, and one that gives steady employment to hundreds of mechanics. One of the largest and most complete of our sash and door manufactories is that of Messrs. Miller & Haley, at the Empire Steam Mills, No. 29 Fremont street, which alone gives employment, in all its various requirements, to nearly one hundred men. Supplied as it is, with all the improved and labor saving modern machinery, the work turned out from their factory is not only enormous for the force employed, but is noted for its strength, completeness and finish. Messrs. Miller & Haley, who have furnished by contract many of our most prominent buildings with sash, doors and blinds—and most satisfactorily to the contracting parties—have recently been awarded the contracts for supplying the above named articles for the Trinity Church, the Fireman's Fund, and the Mercantile Library Association's buildings, all now in course of construction.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER IX.—MOVING ON.

UNCONSCIOUS of the deep inquietude of her brother and of her son, happy in a reunion which she had never dared to hope for, still sufficiently weakened by her illness to be preserved from any mental investigation of "how things had come about," acquiescent and tranquil, Mrs. Carruthers was rapidly getting well. The indelible alteration which her beauty had sustained—for it was beauty still—the beauty of a decade later than when George had seen his mother through the ball-room window at Poynings—had touched her morally as well as physically; and a great calm had come upon her with the silver streaks in her rich dark hair, and the fading of the color in her cheek.

The relation between George's mother and her husband had undergone an entire change. Mr. Carruthers had been excessively alarmed when he first realized the nature of his wife's illness. He had never come in contact with anything of the kind, and novelty of any description had a tendency to alarm and disconcert Mr. Carruthers of Poynings. But he was not in the least likely to leave any manifest duty undone, and he had devoted himself, with all the intelligence he possessed (which was not much), and all the heart (which was a great deal more than he, or anybody else, suspected), to the care, attention, and "humoring" which the patient required. From the first, Mrs. Carruthers had been able to recognize this without trying to account for it, and she unconsciously adopted the best possible method of dealing with a disposition like that of her husband. She evinced the most absolute dependence on him, and almost fretful eagerness for his presence, an entire forgetfulness of the former supposed immutable law which had decreed that the convenience and pleasure of Mr. Carruthers of Poynings were to take precedence, as a matter of course, of all other sublunary things.

All was changed now. Mr. Carruthers was no longer the first. His hours, his habits, his occupations, had to give way to the exigencies of a misfortune which struck him on the most sensitive point, and which invested him with a responsility not to be trifled with or shared. It was characteristic of him that he became excessively proud of his care of his wife. The pomposity and importance with which he had been wont to "transact his public business" was now transferred to his superintendance of his patient; and the surveillance and fussiness which had made life rather a burdensome possession to the household and retainers of Poynings impressed themselves upon the physicians and attendants promoted to the honor of serving Mrs. Carruthers. As they were, in the nature of things, only temporary inflictions, and were, besides, accompanied by remarkably liberal remuneration, the sufferers supported them uncomplainingly.

It was also characteristic of Mr. Carruthers that, having made up his mind to receive George Dallas well, he had received him very well, and speedily became convinced that the young man's reformation was genuine, and would be lasting. Also, he had not the least suspicion how largely he was influenced in this direction by Mark Felton's estimate of the young man—an estimate not due to ignorance either, for George had hidden nothing in his past career from his uncle, except his acquaintance with Clare Carruthers, and the strange coincidence which connected him with the mysterious murder of the 17th of April. Mr. Carruthers, like all men, who are both weak and obstinate, was largely influenced by the opinions of others, provided they were not forced upon him or too plainly suggested to him, but that he was currently supposed to partake or even to originate them. He had not said much to his wife about her son; he had not referred to the past at all.

It was in his honorable, if narrow, nature to tell her frankly that he had recognized his errors, that he knew now that all his generosity, all the other gifts he had given her, had not availed, and could not have availed, while George's society had been denied; but the consigne was, "Mrs. Carruthers must not be agitated," and the great rule of Mr. Carruthers' life at present was, that the consigne was not to be violated. Hence nothing had been said upon the subject, and after the subsidence of her first agitation, Mrs Carruthers had appeared to take George's presence very quietly, as she took all other things.

The alteration which had taken place in his wife had tended to allay that unacknowledged ill which had troubled Mr. Carruthers' peace, and exacerbated his temper. The old feeling of jealousy died completely out. The pale, delicate, fragile woman, whose mind held by the past now with so very faint a grasp, whose peaceful thoughts were of the present, whose quiet hopes were of the future, had nothing in common with the beautiful young girl whom another than he had wooed and won. As she was now, as alone she wished to be, he was first and chief in her life, and there was not a little exaction or temporary fretfulness, a single little symptom of illness and dependence, which had not in it infinitely more reassuring evidence for Mr. Carruthers than all the observance of his wishes, and submission to his domestic laws, which had formerly made it plainer to Mr. Carruthers of Poynings that his wife feared than that she loved him.

He was not the least jealous of George. He liked him. He was clever, Mr. Carruthers knew; and he rather disapproved of clever people in the abstract. He had heard, and had no reason to doubt—certainly none afforded by his stepson's previous career—that literary people were a bad lot. He supposed, innocent Mr. Carruthers, that, to be literary, people must be clever. The inference was indisputable. But George did not bore him with his cleverness. He never talked about the Piccadilly or the Mercury, reserving his confidences on these points for his mother and uncle. The family party paired off a good deal. Mr. Carruthers and his wife, Mark Felton and his nephew. And then Mr. Carruthers had an opportunity of becoming convinced that the doubts he had allowed to trouble him had all been groundless, and to learn by experience that, happy in her son's society, truly grateful to him for the kindness with which he watched George, she was happier still in his company.

To a person of quicker perception than Mr. Carruthers, the fact that the invalid never spoke of her faithful old servant would have had much significance. It would have implied that she had more entirely lost her memory than other features and circumstances of her condition indicated, or that she had regained sufficient mental firmness and self-control to avoid anything leading directly or indirectly to the origin and source of a state of mental weakness, of which she was distressingly conscious. But Mr. Carruthers lacked quickness and experience, and he did not notice this. He had pondered, in his stately way, over Dr. Merle's words, and he had become convinced that he must have been right. There had been a "shock." But of what nature? How, when, had it occurred? Clearly, these questions could not now, probably could not ever be, referred to Mrs. Carruthers. Who could tell him? Clare? Had anything occurred while he had been absent during the days immediately preceding his wife's illness? He set himself now, seriously, to the task of recalling the circumstances of his return.

He had been met by Clare, who told him Mrs. Carruthers was not quite well. He had gone with her to his wife's room. She was lying in her bed. He remembered that she looked pale and ill. She was in her dressing-gown, but otherwise dressed. Then, she had not been so ill that morning as to have been unable to leave her bed. If anything had occurred, it must have taken place after she had risen as usual. Besides, she had not been seriously ill until a day or two later,—stay, until how many days? It was on the morning after Mr. Dalrymple's visit that he had been summoned to his wife's room; he and Clare were at breakfast together. Yes, to be sure, he remembered it all distinctly. Was the "shock" to be referred to that morning, then? Had it only come in aid of previously threatening indisposition? These points Mr. Carruthers could not solve. He would question Clare on his return, and find out what she knew, or if she knew anything. In the mean time, he would not mention the matter at all, not even to his wife's brother or her son. Mr. Carruthers of Poynings had the "defects of his qualities," and the qualities of his defects, so that his pride, leading to arrogance in one direction, involved much delicacy in another; and this sorrow, this fear, this source of his wife's suffering, whatever it might be, was a sacred thing for him, so far as its concealment from all hitherto unacquainted with it was concerned. Clare might help him to find it out, and then, if the evil was one within his power to remedy, it should be remedied; but, in the mean time, it should not be made the subject of discussion or speculation. Her brother could not possibly throw any light on the cause of his wife's trouble; he was on the other side of the Atlantic when the blow, let it have come from whatever unknown quarter, had struck her. Her son! Where had he been? And asking himself this question, Mr. Carruthers began to feel rather uncomfortably hot about the ears, and went creaking up the stairs to his wife's sitting-room, in order to divert his thoughts as soon as possible. He saw things by a clearer light now, and the recollection of his former conduct to George troubled him.

He found his step-son and Mark Felton in Mrs. Carruthers' room. The day was chilly and gloomy, and eminently suggestive of the advantages possessed by an English country mansion over the most commodious and expensive of foreign lodging-houses. George had just placed a shawl round his mother's shoulders, and was improving the fastenings of the windows, which were in their normal condition in foreign parts.

"Mark Felton has been talking about Poynings," said Mrs. Carruthers, turning to her husband with a smile, "and says he never saw a place he admired more, though he had only a passing glimpse of it."

Mr. Carruthers was pleased, though of course it was only natural that Mr. Felton should never have seen any place more to be admired by persons of well-regulated taste than Poynings.

"Of course," he said, with modest admission, "if you come to talk about the Dukeries, and that kind of thing, there's nothing to be said for Poynings. But it is a nice place, and I am very fond of it, and so is Laura."

He was rather alarmed, when he had said this, to observe his wife's eyes full of tears. Tears indicated recollection, and of a painful kind, he thought, being but little acquainted with the intricate symptoms of feminine human nature, which recollection must be avoided, or turned aside, in a pleasurable direction.

Now George's cleverness was a direction of the required kind, and Mr. Carruthers proceeded to remark that George must make drawings for his mother of all the favorite points of view at Poynings.

"There's the terrace, George," he said, "and the 'Tangle,' where your mother loves to spend the summer afternoons, and there's the beech-wood, from the hill beyond the garden, and the long avenue. There are several spots you will like, George, and,—and," said Mr. Carruthers, magnanimously, and blushing all over his not much withered face, like a woman, "I'm only sorry you are to make acquaintance with them so late in the day."

He put out his hand, with true British awkwardness, as he spoke, and the young man took it respectfully, and with an atoning pang of shame and self-reproach. But for his mother's presence, and the imperative necessity of self-restraint imposed by the consideration of her health and the danger of agitation to her, George would inevitably have told his step-father the truth. He felt all the accumulated meanness of an implied falsehood most deeply and bitterly, and might have been capable of forgetting even his mother, but for a timely warning conveyed to him by the compressed lips and frowning brows of his uncle. As for his mother, neither he nor Mr. Felton could judge for the effect produced upon her by the words of her husband. She had turned away her head as he began to speak.

"I was just going to tell Laura what I thought of doing, if you and she approve," Mr. Felton hastened to say. "You see, I am getting more and more anxious about Arthur, and I don't think he will turn up here. I thought if George and I were to go on to Paris and make some inquiries there—I know pretty well where he went to there, and what he did. We need not make more than a few days' delay, and then go on to London, and join you and Laura there. What do you say?"

"I think it would do nicely," said Mr. Carruthers. "You and George would hardly like our rate of traveling under any circumstances." It would have afforded any individual endowed with good humor and a sense of the ludicrous great amusement to observe the pleasure and importance with which Mr. Carruthers implied the seriousness of his charge, and the immense signification of a journey undertaken by Mrs. Carruthers of Poynings. "We shall stay some time in town," he continued, "for additional medical advice; and then, I hope, we shall all go down to Poynings together."

"I have secured rooms for George and myself in Piccadilly," said Mark Felton, in a skillfully off-hand manner. "It would never do for two jolly young bachelors like him and me to invade Sir Thomas Boldero's house. Even"—and here Mr. Felton's countenance clouded over, and he continued, absently—"even if Arthur did not join us; but I hope he will,—I hope he will."

Mr. Carruthers was singularly unfortunate in any attempt to combine politeness with insincerity. He had a distinct conviction that his wife's nephew was a "good-for-nothing," of a different and more despicable order of good-for-nothingness to that which he had imputed to his step-son in his worst days; and though he would have been unfeignedly pleased had Mr. Felton's inquietude been set at rest by the receipt of a letter from his son, he was candidly of opinion that the longer that young gentleman abstained from joining the family party, the more peaceful and happy that family party would continue to be.

However, he endeavored to rise to the occasion, and said he hoped "Mr. Arthur" would accompany his father to Poynings, with not so very bad a grace, considering.

The diversion had enabled George to recover himself, and he now drew a chair over beside his mother's, and began to discuss the times and distances of their respective journeys, and other cognate topics of conversation. Mr. Carruthers liked everything in the planning and settling line, and it was quite a spectacle to behold him over the incomprehensible pages of Bradshaw, emphasizing his helplessness with his gold spectacles.

"I suppose ten days will see us all in London," he said to Mr. Felton, "if you leave this with George to-morrow, and we leave on Monday. I have written to my niece. Sir Thomas and Lady Boldero never come to town at this season, so I have asked Clare to come up and see that the house is all comfortable for Laura. Clare can stay at her cousin's till we arrive."

"Her cousin's?" asked Mark Felton; and George blessed him for the question, for he did not know who was meant, and had never yet brought himself to make an inquiry in which Clare Carruthers was concerned, even by implication.

"Mrs. Stanhope, Sir Thomas' daughter," said Mr. Carruthers; "she was married just after we left Poynings."

"The young lady of whom Captain Marsh made such appropriate mention," thought George.

"I have no town-house," continued Mr. Carruthers, with more of the old pompous manner than Mr. Felton had yet remarked in him. "Laura prefers Poynings, so do I; and as my niece came down only this spring, and has been detained in the country by several causes, we have not thought it necessary to have one."

"I should think you would find a town-house a decided nuisance," said Mr. Felton, frankly; "and if Mrs. Carruthers has Sir Thomas Boldero's and Mrs. Stanhope's to go to, I don't see that she wants anything more."

"You forget," said Mr. Carruthers, in a quiet tone, which, nevertheless, conveyed to Mr. Felton's quick apprehension that he had made a grave mistake, and implied to perfection the loftiness of rebuke,—"you forget that Miss Carruthers is the heiress of Poynings!"

"Ah, to be sure, so I do," said Mark Felton, heartily, "and I beg her pardon and yours; but at least I shall never forget that she is the most charming girl I ever saw in my life." And then, as if a secret inspiration led him to put the question which George longed to hear and dared not ask, he said,—

"When is Miss Carruthers to arrive in Loudon?"

"Only three or four days before we shall get there, I fancy. My love," turning abruptly to Mrs. Carruthers, as a happy idea struck him, by which her additional comfort might be secured, "what would you think of my desiring Clare to bring Brookes up with her? Should you like to have her with you when you are in town?"

Mrs. Carruthers turned a face full of distress upon her husband in reply to his kind question. It was deeply flushed for a moment, then it grew deadly pale; her eyes rolled toward George with an expression of doubt, of searching, of misty anguish, which filled him with alarm, and she put out her hands with a gesture of avoidance.

"O, no, no," she said, "I cannot see her yet—I am not able—I don't know—there's something, there's something."

It might have struck Mr. Carruthers and Mark Felton too, had they not been too much alarmed to think of anything but Mrs. Carruthers' emotion, that when they both approached her eagerly, George did not attempt to do so. He rose, indeed, but it was to push back his chair and get out of their way. Mr. Carruthers asked her tenderly what was the matter, but she replied only by laying her head upon his breast in a passion of tears.

In the evening, when Dr. Merle had seen Mrs. Carruthers, and said a great deal about absolute quiet, but had not interdicted the purposed return to England, when it had been decided that there was to be no leave-taking between her and her brother and son, who were to commence their journey on the morrow, Mr. Carruthers, sitting by his wife's bed, where she then lay quietly asleep, arrived at the conclusion that the old nurse was connected with the "shock." The idea gave him acute pain. It must have been, then, something which had some reference to his wife's past life, something in which he and the present had no share. Very old, and worn, and troubled Mr. Carruthers looked as the darkness came on and filled the room, and once more the night wind arose, and whistled and shrieked over Taunus. He began to wish ardently, earnestly, to get home. It was very strange to look at his wife, always before his eyes, and know she had a terrible secret grief, which had thus powerfully affected her, and not to dare to question her about it. This fresh confirmation of the fact, this new manifestation of her sufferings, after so peaceful an interval, had in it something awful to the mind of Mr. Carruthers.

The brother and the son, in their different ways, were equally disturbed by the occurrence,—Mark Felton in his ignorance and conjecture, George in the painful fullness of his knowledge and his self-reproach.

And as Mark Felton's look had alone arrested George's impulsive desire to reveal his knowledge of Poynings to Mr. Carruthers, so the remembrance of all Routh and Harriet had said to him of the difficulty, the embarrassment, the probable danger of an acknowledgment, alone arrested his desire to inform his uncle of the dreadful error which had caused his mother's illness.

Mark Felton and George Dallas left Homburg for Paris on the following day. They had separated for the night earlier than usual, and George had employed himself for some hours in writing a long and confidential letter to his friend Cunningham. It was addressed to that gentleman at The Mercury office, and it contained full details of every particular which he had been able to learn connected with his missing cousin. The purpose of the letter was an urgent request that Cunningham would at once communicate with the police on this matter, and it concluded with these words:—

"I cannot conquer my apprehensions, and I will not yet communicate them to my uncle. But mark this, I am convinced we shall learn nothing good at Paris; and we have done very wrong in not putting the police to work long ago. Don't laugh at me, and call me a novelist in action. I never felt so sure of anything I had not seen as I am of Arthur Felton's having come to serious grief."

To be Continued.

VIVA ITALIA.

BY CHARLES DIMITRY.

"HASTE! open the lattice, Giulia,
And wheel me my chair where the sun
May fall on my face while I welcome
The sound of the life-giving gun!
The Austrian leaves with the morning,
And Venice hath freedom to day—
'Viva! Evviva Italia!
Viva il Re!'

"Would God that I only were younger
To stand with the rest on the street,
To fling up my cap on the mola,
And the tri-color banner to greet!
The gondolas, girl—they are passing!
And what do the gondoliers say?
'Viva! Evviva Italia?
Viva il Re?'

"O curst be these years and this weakness
That shackle me here in my chair
When the people's loud clamor is rending
The chains that once made their despair!
So young, when the Corsican sold us!
So old, when the Furies repay!
'Viva! Evviva Italia!
Viva il Re!'

"What! tears in your eyes, my Giulia?
You weep when your country is free?
You mourn for your Austrian lover
Whose face never more you shall see?
Kneel, girl, kneel beside me and whisper
While to heav'n for vengeance you pray,
'Viva! Evviva Italia!
Viva il Re!'

"Shame, shame on the weakness that held you,
And shame on the heart that was won!
No blood of the gonfaloniere
Shall mingle with the blood of the Hun!
Swear hate to the name of the spoiler,
Swear fealty to Venice, and say,
'Viva! Evviva Italia!
Viva il Re!'

"Hark! heard you the gun from the mola!
And hear you the welcoming cheer!
Our army is coming, Giulia,
The friends of our Venice are near!
Ring out from your old Campanile,
Freed bells of San Marco, to day,
'Viva! Evviva Italia!
Viva il Re!'"

—Home Journal.

NOT PARTED.

They are not parted, though their feet
Have wandered far in different ways;
And though they never more may meet
On Winter eves or Summer days.
It matters not though realms divide,
Though boundless seas between them roll;
For still, defying wind and tide,
Heart yearns to heart, and soul to soul.

They are not parted—only those
Are parted whom no love unites;
Their absence breaks not our repose
Who have no share in our delights;
They may be by our side, and still
As far from us as pole from pole,
Who lack the sympathetic thrill
Of heart to heart, and soul to soul.

JUAREZ'S SHAWL DANCE.—In certain Parisian ballets there is introduced a so-called shawl dance, the effects being produced by the graceful wavings of shawls and scarfs. By the late accounts from Mexico, it would appear that President Juarez has participated in a not dissimilar festivity. His recent journey from Chihuahua to Durango led him through a number of the smaller towns of Mexico, where the people, impoverished by war, were unable to find the means to build triumphal arches and extensive drapery by way of expressing their enthusiasm at his arrival, so the women of the town collected all their gaily-colored shawls, and with them adorned their houses and balconies, somewhat in the old Venetian style. A similar incident was witnessed in our own country at the time of President Lincoln's death, when black veils and shawls served in the poorer country districts as mourning drapery. Juarez passed along these shawl-decked streets like a triumphal conqueror. In every village banquets were prepared and genuine welcome was ready. His whole party comprised less than a hundred people, and he could have been easily captured by imperial troops had any been in that vicinity. It seems highly probable that the Mexican President will continue his shawl dance unmolested until he gracefully pirouettes into Mexico City itself.

PORTRAIT OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

ELIZABETH condescended to discuss with Quadra, the Spanish Ambassador, the scandalous reports prevalent, not only on the continent, but in her own court, regarding her intimacy with Dudley. She even forgot the diguity of a gentlewoman and a sovereign so far as to demonstrate the improbability of what was said, by showing him the situation of her sleeping apartment and that of the favorite. Subsequently, however, she found that her favorite's health was likely to be impaired by the dampness of the room he occupied in the lower story of the palace, and consigned him a chamber contiguous to her own. The Earl of Arundel, who had been for many years a suitor for the hand of Queen Elizabeth, made no scruple of declaring that the intimacy between her and the Earl of Leicester was the reason for her refusing all her suitors, whether they were foreign princes or English peers. The great noble, according to the report of the French Ambassador, instigated his son-in-law, the Duke of Norfolk, to call Leicester to a sharp account for familiarities with the queen, which they affirmed disgraced them all, as Englishmen, as well as the crown she wore, and that neither the English nobility, nor her subjects in general, would permit the continuance of such proceedings. They then taxed Leicester with using his privilege of entrance into the queen's bed-chamber unbecomingly, affirming that he went there before she rose, and that he took upon himself the office of her lady in waiting, by handing to her a garment which ought never to have been seen in the hands of her master of the horse. They also charged him with "kissing her majesty when he was not invited thereto." And here is another pretty anecdote of the queen who gave a name to the American State styled "Virginia." Towards night on Tuesday, the queen chose to walk on foot over the bridge, and listened to a delectable concert of music from a barge on the pool. The queen hunted the hart on Wednesday, in the chase; the hart took to the pool, where he was caught alive, and her majesty granted him his life on condition that he "lost his ears" for a ransom. This useless crulety aptly preceded the bear-baiting of the next day, when the queen had the satisfaction of seeing a great sort of dogs, which had been tied in the outer court, let loose on thirteen bears, which were baited in the inner; "where," says Lancham, "there was plucking and tugging, scratching and biting, and such an expense of blood and leather between them, as a month's licking, I ween, will not recover." This refined diversion took place in the daytime; but the Thursday evening concluded with strange and sundry kinds of fireworks, and discharge of great guns for two hours; and during the din, her majesty was entertained by an Indian tumbler, of such extraordinary agility in twisting and turning that the court considered him to be more of a sprite than a man, and that his backbone must have been like a lamprey.

A NEW CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.—A recent letter from Paris to the New York Evening Post says: M. Baleguer addresses a communicaton to M. Plorry, in Le Courrier Medical, describing the properties of a new oil, that seems endowed with a marvelous facility for traveling animal membranes. If a few drops are poured into the palm of the hand, and the palm rubbed with the finger, the oil is soon seen oozing through the back of the hand. The same experiment tried on the forearm produces the same result. When the oil is saturated by a foreign substance it loses none of this remarkable power for absorption, and can therefore serve as a vehicle par excellence for the administration of drugs. The experiment has been tried with copaiba and with iodine, and with very satisfactory results. When the oil, saturated with iodine, was rubbed upon the palm of the hand, and the back of the hand wiped with a piece of muslin, the muslin was tinged with violet. M. Baleguer believes that the efficacy of iodine, if administered in this oil, would be so immensely increased that a rational hope might be entertained of its power to arrest tuberculization in the lungs and prevent hemorrhage. Among the patients upon whom he has tried this method, in the first stages of consumption, he has found the physical signs of tubercular deposit diminish, the respiration become freer, embonpoint succeed to emaciation, and a general feeling of well-being to which the unfortunates had long been unaccustomed, begins to establish itself.

M. Baleguer conceals the name of this wonderful oil, but he invites M. Plorry to experiment upon it, and offers him his assistance in the further elucidation of its characteristics.

DR. OSGOOD'S new volume, entitled American Leaves, is selling so well that the Harpers are obliged to issue a new edition to supply the demand. A benevolent lady has offered to supply the funds for bringing out a cheap edition of the two essays on American Boys and Girls for general distribution.

A WAY has just been discovered by which persons may wear ear-rings without having the ears pierced.

THE Home Journal gives the whisper of the approachin marriage of H. W. Longfellow.

TEN million yards of cotton prints were made at the Cocheco mill at Dover, last year.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. P. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1867.

THE IGNORANCE OF OUR LEGISLATORS.

It may seem a singular assertion, but it is nevertheless true, that American legislators are, as a class, an ignorant body of men, not only destitute of culture themselves, but incapable of appreciating or sympathizing with it. To anything like scholarship in the true sense of the word, not one in a hundred of them can make the slenderest pretensions, and an average Congressman has no other idea of what constitutes "learning" than that it is such a smattering of science and languages as may be picked up during the four years' curriculum of an American College. History and poetry have no value for him, except to supply allusion and quotation suitable for the purpose of popular oratory; for science, he has a profound respect—just so far as he can perceive its direct connection with steamboats and telegraphs, the working of coal-mines, or the invention of yeast powders. As to studies and investigations of an abstract or purely scientific character, such as occupy savans like Agassiz, or thinkers like Hamilton, Spencer and Mill, he regards them with a wondering contempt which he is not always intelligent enough to care to conceal. He has a suspicion, or rather a settled conviction, that there is no use for more scholarship than will enable him to teach a district school, or for more literature than is to be found in the newspapers. In short, his one infallible and sufficient standard for estimating the value of intellectual discipline or culture is its capacity for aiding a man in the struggle for wealth or office.

Now, we do not speak in this way because we regard it as a desirable thing that either our National or State Legislatures should be made up mainly, or in large proportion, of scholars and men of learning. It would be unreasonable to complain because Congress has no members who can produce histories like Macaulay's, profound treatises on government or philosophy, like those of Gladstone and Mill, novels like Bulwer's and Disraeli's, or translations of Greek poets like Lord Derby's new version of the Iliad. But we do consider it not only desirable, but reasonable, that the majority of our legislatures should not consist of men so ignorant as to have no intelligent appreciation of the higher grades of culture, and no preception of their uses. There is no reason why at least one-half of the members of a California Legislature should not be capable of taking a somewhat wider view of the aims of a State Geological Survey, than one which assumes that it can have no use or value except for the purpose of discovering gold mines, or why the Senate of the United States should not contain enough of the enlightened and scholarly element to render the passage of so heathenish a bill as the recent one providing a large ad valorem duty on English books, a moral impossibility.

The melancholy but undeniable fact established by such legislation as this, and by such debates as those in our own Legislature in reference to the work of Professor Whitney and his assistants, is that our politicians and popular leaders are as a body, "smart" utilitarians, of the most ignorant and vulgar type, utterly unfit to legislate thoughtfully and wisely for a great State or a great Nation, except upon a certain class of practical subjects. They are destitute of thorough knowledge or thorough training of any kind. They know facts and statistics, but do not grasp principles. They have the sharpness of a speculator or a pettifogger, but not the insight and comprehension of a statesman. Hence, being utterly incapable of broad or philosophical views, they are quite bewildered when they are called upon to deal with subjects involving considerations of ethics, political economy, the province of government, etc. Even questions of finance are often discussed by them in the spirit of a small country banker, rather than of a political economist: and we can call to mind more than one elaborate speech on "currency," delivered at the Capitol and duly reported in the Union, which exhibited an unsuspecting ignorance of axioms and first principles that was delightful in its simplicity and unconsciousness.

As to the new Tariff Act, it contains numerous provisions that could never have met with the approbation of men sufficiently educated to know what education is. The embargo laid upon foreign intellect for the benefit of a few thousands of our publishers, paper-makers and authorlings, is not the only provision which shows how little an American Congress understands or cares for the interests of culture, though the others of a similar character shrink into comparative insignificance beside this vandal edict, the tendency of which is to make books scarce and dear and deprive the mind of the nation of the benefits to be derived from contact with the freshest and most advanced thoughts of the world.

But how is such legislation to be accounted for, in a country where it is an axiom that popular education is an indispensable condition to the permanence of its institutions, and where even orators whose own syntax and rhetoric were far from immaculate have for half a century reiterated patriotic platitudes on the subject from innumerable stumps—how is it that in the chief legislature of such a nation this disregard of the interests of education is evinced? The explanation of the apparent paradox is to be found, not in any blindness on the part of our legislators to the value and necessity of popular education, but in a misconception natural to illiterate men, as to the kind of education needed. The whole secret lies in the fact, that the majority of American politicians do not conceive that any higher education than they themselves possesses is desirable for anybody. "Learning" enough to write a plausible and superficial newspaper article, to make a plausible speech, and, perhaps, on occasion, quote a scrap or two of Latin, is all that is needed. More is superfluous, and commands neither admiration nor respect, unless associated with tangible results in the shape of political or business success. In the minds of men of the average intellectual grade of those who make our laws, there is always a lurking suspicion of something hollow and partaking of the nature of humbug in such reputations as those of an Agassiz or a Humboldt, and in that kind of learning that does not lend itself to the purposes of the merchant, the politician, or the professional man as an aid in his business or his career. Men of this stamp are convinced that the common schools and the newspapers furnish all the education requisite for the people, and they would not understand one who should undertake to explain to them the fact that even a low grade of culture among the masses cannot be maintained without a higher grade in a few, and that without the considerable class of scholars and thinkers and men of science in every European nation, civilization would come to a stand-still, as it has in Asia, notwithstanding that the bulk of the population might have a good "common school education." A little knowledge is perhaps better than none, but a community of smatterers, with none to hold up a higher standard, would speedily degenerate into a condition of ignorance, rendered tenfold deplorable by the dogmatism and conceit of superficial knowledge. The interests of science and art, even in their most utilitarian applications, require that there should be "specialists" who know a great deal that it is not possible or necessary for the masses of well-educated people to know, and specialists are almost entirely dependent upon foreign books for the prosecution of their studies.

These, however, are considerations quite incomprehensible, we fear, to the majority of our politicians. In the zeal of their patriotism they are probably of opinion that American books, like all other American productions, are superior to the imported commodity—or if not, that the protective policy will impart such a stimulus to native production, that a crop of savans and philosophers will be the speedy result. Then, we shall doubtless rejoice in "a genuine American literature," with a thoroughly Democratic theology, philosophy, and science, including, perhaps, a new system of gravitation and of the solar system, more in harmony with the "genius of our people" and "the spirit of popular institutions" than any that can be derived from the monarchists and aristocrats of the old world.

The Georgetown (D. C.) election, which occurred near the close of last month, may be considered quite important, as indicating how "impartial suffrage" is likely to work, though the experiment was on a small scale, occurring in a community of 1,350 white to 971 negro voters. In the first place, the freedmen voted with the white Republicans, who by their aid elected the Mayor and a minority of the Common Council—which could not have been done without this alliance. In the next place, innovation was so disagreeable to the white majority that extraordinary precautions had to be taken to protect the blacks who dared come to the polls; and in the third place, the unpleasantness and risk of violence attending the exercise of the newly conferred privilege, did not deter the freedmen from asserting it. The New York Nation thinks the result of the election "has two lessons: that the natural affinity between the black and white loyalists, if allowed expression, is sufficient to outvote the disaffected and rebellious; and that for some time to come, the exercise of suffrage by the freedmen must be supported by a national police." The second of these "lessons" we scarcely required the Georgetown election to teach us, and the first, as it seems to us can scarcely be inferred from a single and somewhat exceptional case

---

New Books.—We have on our book-table quite a number of recent publications which will receive due notice next week. Several interesting extracts from Dr. Hayes's new and eminently readable volume of Arctic exploration, will be found in the Literary Gleanings on the 4th page of our present issue.

One grove in Augustine, Florida, will yield 60,000 oranges this season

[For the Californian.]

TROUBLE AT MY NEW LODGIGS.

The trite old adage that "it never rains but it pours" is especially true of ill-luck. I have observed it in many instances. I have more especially observed it in my own case When that "fickle jade, Fortune," once entertains a spite toward a man or woman, she seems to take a malicious delight in persecuting her hapless victim to the uttermost, allowing the poor wretch neither rest nor happiness on this side of the grave—nor yet on the other side, if they are really disembodied spirits whom Mrs. Foye and other "mediums" compel to dance nightly attendance on promiscuous crowds, and rattle rickety tables for the edification of "inquirers after the terewth," at the moderate rate of twenty-five cents to one dollar per capitem. (I have been a humble inquirer after the "terewth" upon such sordid terms more than once; but if I was ever vouchsafed a glimpse of the object I was in quest of it was presented to me in such a dubious shape that I failed to recognize it. I have on several occasions held animated, conversations with disembodied friends and relatives, who undertook to impart to me a varied and extensive fund of information concerning matters I knew all about, and they succeeded in convincing me that they were not so well informed about those matters as I was. They never hit the truth a single rap, even by accident. The mediums always told me that I couldn't perceive the truth and beauty of their new religion because I hadn't faith. Very likely I hadn't. It was my luck to be out of that indispensable article at the very time when I most needed it. If I had had a quantity of it equivalent to a grain of mustard seed, I might now have been a devout follower of Mrs. Cuppy, instead of a case-hardened scoffer at things Spiritual.)

I did not mean to digress. I dislike digression in others, and don't often indulge in it myself. I sat down intending to give a plain, straight-forward account of recent occurrences at my new lodgings (Mrs. Peablossom's, No. 4.253 Powell street), and to that disagreeable task I will address myself with as little further prelocution as I can conveniently get along with.

I informed the reader confidentially, a few weeks since, that I expected the jealous rivalry of Podson and Gigsby for the affections of the pretty schoolma'am, Miss Crickett, to culminate in something serious. I did not, however, anticipate that I would become a party to the affair, and that, while honestly endeavoring to preserve the peace between them, I should suddenly find them sworn friends and allies in vengeful hostility to me.

For several days the rivals met as usual, and treated each other with cold and studied politeness. Podson, deeply mortified on account of the injury which he had unintentionally caused to Miss Crickett's eye through his ill-temper, put himself upon his best behavior. He was exceedingly deferential toward the ladies, tolerant of Gigsby, and manifested a disposition to cultivate Tom. Gigsby, fancying that he had Podson at a disadvantage on account of his awkward mishap, flattered himself into such a good humor that he had not the heart seriously to quarrel with any one, although he occasionally treated Podson rather superciliously, just to let him know that he felt and appreciated his advantage. Only to me did they unbosom themselves freely. I was their common confidant and the depository of their mutual hate. They warned me against each other as scoundrels, villains, knaves, rascals—in short, all the opprobrious epithets in the dictionary—and each often inquired how I could possibly endure the society of the other for the briefest imaginable period. I tried to convince them that they were not such bad fellows as they represented each other to be, but as I found that this only added fuel to the flame of their jealousy, I at last contented myself with listening to what they had to say, and tactily acquiescing in their estimates of each other.

Gigsby, observing that Podson was making a good deal of Tom, and fancying, probably, that something was to be gained by making interest in that quarter, began himself to pay attention to the young scamp, and took him on several nights to see Heller. (The schoolma'am could not visit the theater on account of her still discolored eye, and Polly magnanimously declined going until Miss Crickett could accompany her, and her mother should get her a new cloak.) Tom became deeply interested in the magic art. He purchased a book on "Parlor Magic," and practised feats of legerdemain with a degree of success which he had never attained in analyzing sentences in Quackenbos's Grammar, or solving problems in Davies's Legendre. Some of his tricks with cards were really astonishing, beating anything I ever saw, except three-card monte—I have yet to see the man or boy who can beat that. Well, the other evening Tom proposed to amuse us for a little while in the parlor with some tricks he had mastered, and of course we were all anxious to witness his experiments. He introduced an assistant, in the shape of a tall, ungainly youth with red hair and uncongenial eyes. They rigged up a curtained table at one end of the parlor, produced some simple apparatus, and succeeded in performing some tricks in a quite creditable manner. Then Tom announced his intention of making on the spot, a hasty pudding in a gentleman's hat, if some gentleman would be kind enough to lend him a hat for the purpose.

"That is easy enough done," said Gigsby, turning around to me, and speaking in a low tone, yet loud enough to be heard by Podson and the schoolma'am, who were seated near us. "He takes somebody's hat for a blind, you know; but he's got an imitation hat, made of tin and painted black, to cook the pudding in. Tom," he continued, raising his voice, "you can take my hat."

"It won't do," replied Tom; "it isn't quite deep enough."

"You can have mine if you will go after it," said I, "but it is up stairs, in my room."

"Perhaps mine will do," said Podson; "it is on the rack in the hall."

"Thank you," said Tom; "it is just the thing;" and as he went after it he and Gigsby exchanged meaning glances. Yet I did not then suspect that Gigsby was a confidant of Tom's.

After some preliminary manipulations, Tom proceeded to business. He produced a box with a circular opening in the top, under which he placed a spirit lamp; then he poured water into the hat and set it upon the opening over the lamp. After a short time steam began to ascend from the hat, and Tom stirred in corn meal and salt in due proportion, and allowed the mess to cook for a short time; then took it from the fire and showed it to us at a respectful distance. As the rogue had taken the precaution to turn down the gas pretty low, the deception would have been tolerably complete, if Gigsby had not carelessly (?) betrayed the secret. Podson enjoyed it very much.

After we had seen the pudding in the hat, Tom returned to the table, and after a little manipulation held up the hat minus the pudding, and looking, inside and out, as bright and new as if it had never been used for culinary purposes. Pretty soon Tom returned the hat to the rack, cleared off his conjuring apparatus, and retired in company with his chum and assistant, amid the plaudits of the audience.

By this time the moon had got pretty well up, and outdoors the night was so bright and beautiful that when Podson proposed a walk a general assent was given. I ran up stairs for my hat, and as I came down the girls appeared in the dimly lighted hall, equipped for the promenade.

"All ready?" said Podson, as he took his hat from the rack and clapped it on his head. "D—istraction!" he exclaimed, as he hastily pulled it off again. "What does this mean?"

We looked, and lo! Podson's cranium appeared to have been poulticed, as if to draw his brains to a head!

Apparently, the hasty pudding had been cooked in his hat, after all, and left there.

Gigsby gave expression to his feelings in an outburst of boisterous, scornful, insulting laughter. Podson, with something very like an oath, rushed upon him with uplifted arm; but I interposed (I know it is unprofessional to spoil a possible news item by interference in a quarrel, but my good nature will sometimes get the better of my esprit du corps) and prevented them from coming to blows. I could not, however, tis their tongues; and so there ensued between them a war of words, in which finally Miss Crickett's name got so badly mixed up with disparaging expletives and personal declarations of love until death and war to the knife, that the young lady became utterly confused as to her own right to her individual appellation, and in her bewilderment rushed weeping from the scene, accompanied by Polly. At length, the two belligerents having vituperated each other out of breath, I succeeded, by representing their conduct in a forcible light, in making them sufficiently ashamed of themselves to retire to their rooms, I soon after following their example.

As I sat musing upon the strange fatality which seemed to pursue me, depriving me of the peace and comfort which I had hoped to find in a well-regulated household, I heard a gentle knock at my door. I opened it, expecting to see one of the rivals, and beheld, instead, the schoolma'am.

"Pardon me," she said, "for this intrusion; but you are such an obliging gentleman, and I have no one else at hand to counsel with, and I am so persecuted and annoyed by those two—"

The doors of Podson's and Gigsby's rooms opened almost simultaneously. With a frightened look Miss Crickett darted past me, into my room. I instinctively shut the door. In justice both to myself and my visitor I must say, however, I did not lock it. I placed two chairs near the fire, and we sat down. We heard the voices of Podson and Gigsby in conversation in the hall. They spoke in a low tone; evidently they were no longer quarreling; and, although we could not make out the substance of their conversation, we heard our names mentioned more than once. At length all was quiet again. Miss Crickett was the first to speak.

"Oh, those horrible men!" said she. "They have annoyed me so I don't know what to do; and that is the reason I wanted to speak to you. I suppose they saw me coming in here, and I don't know what they'll say about it, but I was so frightened I couldn't help it. I suppose they will talk about t to Mrs. Peablossom, and she is such a particular lady! I must make a confidant of you, for I haven't any one else to confide in. You will befriend me, won't you, Mr. Clerk?"

"Certainly I will," said I. "If I can assist you in any way, or do anything for you, just mention it, Miss Crickett, and I am at your service."

"You are a dear, good man," said the little schoolma'am, blushing, "and I thank you. Well—you mustn't mention it, will you?—but I am engaged to be married to a young man up at You Bet—"

The door opened, and in walked Mrs. Peablossom, Podson and Gigsby. Those mean-spirited curs had concluded that I was the favored rival of them both, and by way of revenge had brought Mrs. Peablossom to surprise the schoolma'am and myself in my room.

They did surprise us, rather.

We were not sitting at an inconvenient distance apart, and, as we were conversing in a low tone, our heads were necessarily close together.

In short, under the circumstances, our position was a rather embarrassing one.

However, I flatter myself that we met the issue with a commendable degree of fortitude. I arose, and with my most majestic voice and manner said, addressing Mrs. Peablossom: "Will you be so good as to inform me, madam, what is the cause of this intrusion?"

"Oh, you wicked man!" responded the old lady, fairly sobbing with agitation. "To think that there should be such carryings on in my house! I couldn't believe it when Mr. Podson and Mr. Gigsby told me, but now I have seen it with my own eyes. And Kate Crickett so intimate with my Polly, too—oh dear!" and she began to cry.

"Leave this instant, you cowardly, prowling dogs," I exclaimed, turning fiercely toward the rivals in love and meanness, "before I break every bone in your vile bodies!" They left, without waiting for a second invitation. "And now, Mrs. Peablossom," I continued, "let me assure you that your suspicions of Miss Crickett are most unworthy. She came to my room door to speak to me upon a matter of importance, and only entered to escape interruption from the unmannerly spies who brought you here. I will wring their necks for this!" said I, striking a high tragedy attitude.

"That is the truth, Mrs. Peablossom," said Miss Crickett, sobbing. "I had something to say to Mr. Clerk, and I only intended to come to his door; but I heard those wretches coming, and they quarreled and talked so dreadfully down stairs that I was afraid of them, and so I came in to escape them."

"I don't believe it," said the old lady, who evidently had the usual amount of charity of women toward their own sex, and no more. "You didn't come here at this time of night with any good intention, I'm sure. I won't have the reputation of my house ruined in any such way, and I'll thank you both to find other quarters just as soon as you can make it convenient." And without giving an opportunity for a reply, with an injured air she walked majestically out of the room.

It has often astonished me to observe how cruelly, unjustly and meanly very well intentioned persons will act, when they undertake to pass judgment upon the conduct of others without carefully scrutinizing all the circumstances.

Miss Crickett was so overwhelmed with mingled feelings of shame and indignation that (as women generally do in such cases) she went into hysterics. Throwing her arms about my neck, she wept piteously and laughed scornfully by turns, meanwhile murmuring incoherent sentences, in which I could only distinguish the names of the landlady, Gigsby, Podson, myself and "George Albert," whom I supposed to be the young man at You Bet to whom she was affianced.

Now, under ordinary circumstances, I don't object to having my neck encircled by a pair of plump arms belonging to a fascinating young lady; but, to be almost garroted by a frantically distressed woman is not exactly a pleasant sensation. At least I did not find it so.

The agonizing performance was still on when the door was again unceremoniously opened, and Mrs. Peablossom put in a second appearance.

"If you two intend to stay here all night," said she, in a sharply sarcastic tone, "I think you had better let me send Tom for a minister—there's one lives only three blocks off, up the street."

Miss Crickett raised her head, gave the landlady one reproachful look, shrieked, and fell to the floor in a swoon.

"See what you have done, rash woman," said I, again striking a high tragedy attitude. "You have mur-r-r-dered her!"

Mrs. Peablossom was alarmed. Her feminine pity was touched. She knelt down beside the unconscious girl and took her head tenderly in her lap, while I procured some water and sprinkled the pale face. Gradually Miss Crickett opened her eyes, looked up, exclaimed "Oh, Mrs. Peablossom!" and was going to swoon again, but thought better of it, and began to cry. The landlady was about to reassume the severely virtuous; but before she could get herself cooled to the freezing point I asked her to sit down and listen to an explanation. She did so, and was convinced. I told her the whole story.

"My dear Miss Crickett, and Mr. Clerk," said the kind-hearted woman, "I have wronged you, and I'm sorry for it. I hope you will pardon me. As for those pitiful fellows Gigsby and Podson, they shan't stay here a day longer than I can help it."

So we interchanged regrets, and forgiveness and compliments, and the ladies departed, leaving me alone.

Presently there was a knock at my door. Wondering what new infliction I was to undergo, I said, in a not very inviting tone, "Come in."

Tom entered, his face beaming with a mischievous expression. "Gigsby's down at the front door," said he, coming close and speaking in a low tone; "and he asked me to come and tell you that there's a gentleman down there that wants to see you, but not to tell you the gentleman's name. He's got a big stick, and I guess he means to bust your head with it. I know what it's about, and I wish you'd just go down and clean him out; you can do it easy."

"Thank you, Tom," said I, "I don't care about 'cleaning out' Mr. Gigsby, although he deserves it. I am not a fighting man."

"Well," said Tom, "I know what I'll do. I'll send old Podson down, and as soon as he opens the door Gigsby'll think it's you and hit him, and then there'll be a jolly fight! I hope they'll half kill each other."

I am sorry to say that at the moment I was so well pleased with Tom's wicked design that I offered no objection to it. It turned out as he expected. Having notified Podson that a gentleman was waiting for him below, Tom hastened down to Gigsby, saying "He'll be down right away." Gigsby inferred that "he" was I, grasped a tighter hold of his stick, and stepped aside into the shade. As Podson opened the door and stepped out, "There he is!" exclaimed Tom, and the stick descended heavily upon the head of the unsuspecting victim. His hat, which he had fortunately put on before he came down, checked the force of the blow, and probably saved him from a fractured crown. Turning around he saw Gigsby with the stick in his hand, and immediately rushed upon him. The assailant had now discovered his mistake, and tried to stammer out an excuse, but Podson's onset was so quick and fierce that there was nothing for it but to fight. They clinched, and after a brief struggle tumbled together down the steps, continuing the contest in the front yard, rolling over, scratching, biting, pulling hair and kicking in the "rough-and-tumble" style of combatants who are strangers to the "manly art of self-defense" and the rules of the P. R. They played sad havoc with the plants and shrubbery and the Third Commandment. The noise of the battle brought out the female portion of the household (I had been a looker-on from the beginning, having quietly followed Podson down stairs), and their screams finally attracted the attention of a policeman, who by some inexplicable chance happened for that once to be near at hand when he was wanted. By the time he reached the spot the combatants were so nearly exhausted that it was an easy matter to separate them, which done the officer marched them off, with bloody faces, disheveled hair and torn clothes, to the station-house. I have not seen them since; but I learned that they were released from custody on bail, which they forfeited. They did not return to the house, but sent for their personal effects. I have received two anonymous threatening letters, written in different hands; I suppose they came from Gigsby and Podson. They do not alarm me, because I do not fear men who have behaved so contemptibly.

Everything is lovely and serene now at Mrs. Peablossom's. The schoolma'am is as radiant, Polly and her mother as good-natured and Tom as full of mischief as ever, and I am once more quiet and contented, with nothing to distract my attention from my literary labors. How long this condition of bliss will continue I know not—Mrs. Peablossom has advertised for two gentlemen lodgers.

JOHN CLERK.

POETRY AND THE PRESS.—Our city dailies have but a slender appreciation of poets or poetry—unless for imported commodity, and recognze the fact that we, in the main, are an intensely practical people, with "no nonsense about us," and don't believe much in poetry, or in talent (except business talent) unless it is imported. On Tuesday evening, the inauguration ceremonies of the Mechanics' Institute took place. Nathan Porter, Esq., delivered the oration, and the Hon. Frank Soulé contributed a fine poem on "Labor"—neither of which productions our city dailies have thought it worth while to publish. Probably the pressure upon their columns resulting from the voluminous character of the testimony in the Clark-Reese case rendered it impracticable to occupy such valuable space with such comparatively tame matter as a poem—more especially an indigenous production.

IN an article on the McCracken-Motley affair, in last week's CALIFORNIAN, we suggested the possibility that the disgraceful letter to Mr. Motley from the State Department was not written by Mr. Seward of his own motion, but in deference to the wishes of the President. Eastern papers received by the last steamer state that the authorship of the letter is positively denied by Mr. Seward's friends, and that it was written by the President himself, and signed by the Secretary on the day of his daughter's funeral, without reading it. If this is true, it goes far to relieve Mr. Seward from the odium of the affair. Much allowance should be made for a man who, under such circumstances, commits even so indiscreet and hazardous an act as putting his name to anything written by President Johnson without the most careful scrutiny.

AN INTERESTING EVENT.

"On the 14th day of November, 1866, at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, London, the wife of Polar Bear, Esq., of a son and daughter."

THE receipt of this important intelligence induced me to start at once from my residence, situate in the southern part of the metropolis, for the "Zoo." Why do I employ the abbreviation? Because the heaviest of heavy swells always say they are going to "do the Zoo," and I like to follow the example of my betters. It may be as well to state, that I possess a lawful right and privilege to append three important letters to my otherwise unobtrusive name. F. Z. S. gives to it an outward show of importance, not to be lightly estimated. I deem it expedient to state this fact, because it will in some measure account for my anxiety to see the twins, to which I have a sort of paternal right. More than this, I cannot visit the nursery of a Lady Polar Bear in her home amidst the bergs and floes, so I do the next best thing within my reach, which is to get a peep at the infant bruins in their snug room at the Zoological Gardens, a plan by the way in every respect much safer and immeasurably more comfortable.

As very few persons are admitted to the domestic sanctuary wherein the babies of Madam Bear are deposited, I am induced to believe there are many readers of Science Gossip who will feel interested in hearing about them. Assuming this desire for information concerning the bear babies to exist,—and I see no reason why Polar bears' infants should not obtain a share of public attention,—I shall commence by stating that having discovered Mr. Bartlett, the intelligent superintendent, the next item in the programme was to proceed to a small room behind the Aquarium House. The door being securely locked, we had to await the advent of the keeper, who, as he let me pass in, confidently whispered into my ear, "they (meaning the infant bears) are a sleeping quite comfortable;" and so they were, nevertheless there was nothing cherub-like about the slumbers, neither did I feel at all impressed with any very exalted ideas of the beauty of infantile bruins.

Before giving a more detailed description of the young bears, I had better put the reader in possession of a few links in their brief history. Immediately each infant appeared in the world it was taken out of the den, rolled in flannel, and carried as rapidly as possible to the house I am now visiting. Here a small rough-haired terrier was in waiting to become their foster-mother. She took kindly to the strange children, although it was very evident her instincts were sorely tried to comprehend the change. The Mamma Bear is a badly disposed, unnatural old parent; twice before she has had cubs whilst a resident in the Gardens, and on both occasions they were lost. I am told when her children become fat and substantial she devours them. In order to frustrate such Saturnine propensities this time, the cubs are to be reared, if possible, by a less savage mother.

Now the reader will the better comprehend how it came about that I saw on entering the room a terrier, small in size, coiled up in a box before the fire, and nestling close to her, two young white bears and a black puppy. What completely staggered me, was the tiny size of the bear-cubs. The terrier was a remarkably small one, and her pup more than usually diminutive, even for that class of mongrel; nevertheless, the puppy was considerably larger than either of the cubs, notwithstanding the age of each was about the same. I measured the cubs, and the extreme length from the nose to the root of the tail was barely nine inches, whereas the mother is over six feet; and, roughly speaking, the young bears would not weigh more than a few ounces, while the parent would turn the scale at seven hundred weight; there are instances recorded of Polar bears weighing sixteen hundred pounds. In color the infants were of a pinkish white, the pink cast being attributable to the thinness of the hair permitting the skin to show through; the ears were quite bare. The only thing about these quaint little creatures that in the remotest degree suggested their bear descent was, that all four feet were armed with well-developed claws, and the foot itself had the wide flat look of that belonging to a plantigrade animal. The eyes firmly closed, will not be opened, if the creatures live, for fifteen days. Not the least singular part of these singular little cubs was discoverable in the construction of their mouths, the gape of which for such small animals appeared to be preposterous. Like babies higher in the scale of creation, they grew clamorous if their tiny foster-mother moved, or in any way disturbed them; and it seemed to me these baby bruins proved, even at this early stage of their existence, that "cross as a bear" is an adage having in it a good slice of truth, and I shall adopt it for the future with a firmer confidence in the aptness of its application to un-amiable human kind from babies upward, than I have been wont to do heretofore. The curious noise the little bears make sorely bothers the terrier, and in some degree frightens her into the bargain; what she thinks about it is more than I can tell, but this I know, she dislikes to hear them, and I feel sure it is often an open question with mamma-terrier whether to abandon or bite the noisy chits is the better plan of proceeding.

Why the cubs of the Bear family (for the same fact holds good in its application to the entire race as it does to the Polar Bear) should be so remarkably diminutive in proportion to the parent is a matter worthy of serious consideration. At or near to the time of birth the female bear hides, and does not reappear until from two to three months after the cubs are born, during which time she neither eats nor drinks, but suckles her cubs whilst in a quasi state of hybernation. She lives during that period upon the material supplied her by the absorption of her own fat and tissues.

The habits of the Polar Bear, apart from its aquatic and carnivorous propensities, differ entirely from those of the North American, Brown, and Black Bears. The latter hybernate during the colder months of Winter; the former, confined to perpetual Arctic cold, never does. The female Polar Bear when in cub retires about the month of November, and hides in a cave, or in some secure retreat deep beneath the snow; in December, so say the Esquimaux, she brings forth two cubs. This, as far as dates are concerned, tallies nearly with the birth I have just recorded in the Zoological Gardens. Thus concealed, and without tasting food of any description, the Mamma Bear carries on her maternal duties until April in the year following; she then quits her nursery, thin, savage, and terribly exhausted, but running at her heels are two cubs, by this time as large as good-sized dogs. These, her children, she teaches to feed on seal and fish, to swim, to hunt, and to become fitted for and presentable to the best society in bear-land. This duty accomplished, the mother drives them off to live by their own claws and teeth as best they can.

Papa Polar Bear, during the retirement of his wife, leads that disreputable, roaming, ne'er-do-well sort of life the lord of creation is always accused of indulging in—whether deservedly or not, let him so stigmatized answer—when cast loose upon the world, freed from the protecting guidance of the fair. He keeps no regular hours, sleeps anywhere, dines when it suits his humor, flirts with unmarried lady Polars, indulges in a fight now and again, just as the Hibernian says, to keep his hand in, and altogether does the unbridled bachelor—mind, I do not say husband. I tremble to think what might befall me were I to commit myself to so rash a statement.

Now if these tiny bears came into the world larger and more fully developed, would it not probably happen that, with erratic and disobedient habits, always inherent in young animals, they would incautiously quit their nursery too soon, and get starved to death by cold and hunger? More than this, the most pressing desire for food would hardly tempt the female bear to quit them whilst in a helpless condition; but if she found her cubs could follow her before the snow was gone or food obtainable, might she not be tempted to sally forth from her snug den too soon, and by so doing imperil the safety of her offspring? But being so small at birth, and withal so utterly helpless, it becomes absolutely necessary that many months should pass away before the possibility arrives of their being able to follow the mother.

Twice only in my long experience as hunter and trapper has it fallen to my lot to see a bear killed in cub. So rarely does it happen even to Indians who are always bear-hunting to destroy a female in cub, that they hold doing it in superstitious dread, and firmly believe and maintain that he who so destroys a pregnant female bear will die before the end of a year. Once during the marking of the boundary line in Northwest America, it occurred that a bear was killed in cub; and in this case the hunter who shot Madame Bear was an Indian in the employ of the Commission. Of course his comrades thought him doomed; but as it was not very clear in what manner harm could befall him the matter passed away, and I had almost forgotten it, when, strange to say, the very Indian who killed the bear was shot dead in a fray with some gold-washers—a coincidence that the more firmly established in the red-skins' mind the truth of their belief.

The time a she-bear carries her young is about seven months, and I have never seen a bear with more than two cubs. I am indebted to Mr. Bartlett, the able superintendent of the Zoological Gardens, for the knowledge of the singular arrangement observable in the mammæ of the female bear.

Fear of occupying space that can be more profitably employed forbids my writing a tithe of what I should like to write concerning this, to me, most interesting subject. I have however, been tempted to offer these somewhat crude speculations in the pages of Science Gossip, in the hope of inducing some other naturalists or hunters to give us theories or experiences—which is much better—about bears and their cubs.

I left the baby Polars with a hearty wish that, during their babyhood, "good digestion might wait on appetite, and health on both."

STEWART MEETS WITH A LOSS.—Stewart, the dry-goods millionaire, knowing that a certain article was rising, sent to a Boston merchant to buy up everything of the kind at the hub. He overlooked the putting up of his own prices, however, to correspond with the rise; the Bostonian found it out, and bought half of Stewart's own stock at two cents a yard less than the market rates before the merchant prince marked them up. Stewart had to buy his own goods at an advance.

RACE FOR A BRIDE.

THE maiden has a certain start given which she avails herself of to gain a sufficient distance from the crowd to enable her to manage her steed with freedom, so as to assist in the pursuit of the suitor whom she prefers. On a signal from the father, all the horses gallop after the fair one, and whichever firsts succeeds in encircling her waist with his arm, no matter whether disagreeable or not to her choice, is entitled to claim her as his wife. After the usual delay incident upon such occasions, the maiden quits the circle of her relations, and putting her steed into a hand gallop darts into an open plain. When satisfied with her position, she turns round to the impatient youths, and stretches out her arms toward them as if to woo their approaches. This is the moment for giving the signal to commence the chase, and each of the impatient youths, dashing his pointed heels into his courser's side, darts like the unhooded hawk in pursuit of his fugitive dove. The savanna was extensive, full twelve miles long and three in width, and as the horsemen sped across the plain the favored lover became apparent by the efforts of the maiden to avoid all others who might approach her. At length, after near two hours racing, the number of pursuers are reduced to four, who are all together, and gradually gaining on the pursued. With them is the favorite; but alas! his horse suddenly fails in his speed; and, as she anxiously turns her head, she perceives with dismay the hapless position of her lover. Each of the fortunate leaders, eager with anticipated triumph bending his head on his horse's mane, shouts at the top of his voice, "I come, my Peri! I'm your lover." But she, making a sudden turn, and lashing her horse almost to fury, darts across their path, and makes for that of the plain where her lover is vainly endeavoring to goad on his weary steed. The others instantly checked their career; but in the hurry to turn back, two of the horses are dashed furiously against each other, so that both steeds and riders roll over the plain. The maiden laughed (for she knew that she could elude the single horseman), and flew to the point where her lover was. But her only pursuer was rarely mounted, and not so easily shaken off. Making a last and desperate effort, he dashed alongside the maiden, and stretching out his arm he almost won his unwilling prize; but she, bending her head to the horse's neck, eluded his grasp, and wheeled off. Ere the discomfited horseman could again approach her, her lover's arm was around her waist, and, amidst the shouts of the spectators, they turned towards the fort.—Life in Circassia.

BEAUTY OF THE FRENCH EMPRESS.—A former ambassador from this country to the Court of Spain, thus speaks of the Empress Eugenie when she visited Madrid: "She is beautiful, and more than this word can express. And in the evening at the gala dinner, how did she surpass each and everybody. I did not sit just opposite her, for there sat the Queen of Spain. Still, I could observe her very well. My neighbor, the lady of an ambassador, the mother of grown children, a native of England, and of pure, stern morals, who had often seen the Empress five or six years ago, remarked: 'She is now handsomer than she ever was.' She was quite captivated and said, with sincere admiration, 'Don't she deserve a throne for her beauty?'

"Eugenie unites the most handsome features of the German and the Latin—I may even say of the Arabian races. The forehead high and free; the eyes splendidly blue, but not very large; the hair of a lightly darkened hue; the form of her face small, oval; the nose fine, in beautiful symmetry, not too high; the mouth a little bit too large, and especially when she smiles, a little jewish. Her complexion is admirable—that means, admirably painted—for nobody of the aristocracy will show her natural complexion, be it ever so fine. But after the first rounds, and after she had taken some Bordeaux, her cheeks began to redden, and heighten her beauty; ears of exceedingly beautiful form—and then her whole figure! She is of medium size, not so large as pictures suggest; slim, flexible, and still full. Her appearance is that of a virgin, the most splendid model for a Hebe—breast, neck, shoulders, arms, and above all, her hand beautifully shaped, combined with the grace of an Andalusian danseuse.

MR. A. J. GARVEY, of New York, has completed a design for a coat-of-arms for the base ball clubs of the United States. It is an alto-relievo in plaster of Paris, five feet six inches in height, and presents two figures in full playing costume upon the right and left, respectively holding a ball and bat. In the centre is an American eagle, and the whole is interspersed with the emblems of the fraternity.

CREDIT.—The most trifling actions that affect a man's credit are to be regarded. Business application at five in the morning, or nine at night, heard of by a creditor, makes him easy for six months longer; but if he sees you at a billiard table, or hears your voice at a tavern, when you should be at work, he sends for his money the next day; demands it before he can receive it in a lump.

THE first man who ever carried a mail from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh on horseback, died a few days since.

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!

PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities large and small can be supplied at low figures, on application to

L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.

☞All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

D. J. OLIVER,

101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.

ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,

Where he offers for sale the largest stock of

Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of

PIANO-FORTES.

FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.

☞PIANOS TO RENT.☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S

Piano Manufactory

Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.

THE FAMOUS

PIANOS

OF

Chickering & Son

Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's'.

Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

HAT OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices

536

In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

A POINT

ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.

Out of ten thousand regular physicians you cannot find one who will not say that STIMULANTS and INVIGORANTS are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet, in bygone years, humane practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fiendish ingenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so polluted and deteriorated them, that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians know, because the first analytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact that

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Are absolutely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, whereon the testimony of the wise, the intelligent, and the philanthropic is rated at its just value, as the best protective against and cure for all diseases arising from impurity in the air or other unhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded my self very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

THE FAMILY NEWSPAPER.—Dr. Franklin remarks, that a man as often gets two dollars for the one he spends in forming his mind, as he does for a dollar he lays out in any other way. A man eats a pound of sugar and it is gone, and the pleasure he has enjoyed is ended, but the information he gets from a newspaper is treasured up to be enjoyed anew, and to be used whenever occasion or inclination calls for it. A newspaper is not the wisdom of one man or two men; it is the wisdom of the age, and of past ages, too. A family without a newspaper is always a year behind the times in general information; besides, they can never think much nor find much to think about. And then there are the little ones growing up without any taste for reading. Who, then, would be without a newspaper—and who would read one regularly without paying for it?

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

D. J. OLIVER,
101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.
ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,
Where he offers for sale the largest stock of
Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.
ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!
PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities large and small can be supplied at low figures, on application to
L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.
☞ All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

DRY GOODS
FROM AUCTION!
MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
HAVE JUST RECEIVED FROM THE GREAT AUCTION SALE OF H. M. NEWHALL & CO., THE FOLLOWING LARGE LINES OF SUPERIOR FRENCH, ENGLISH AND AMERICAN DRY GOODS, ALL OF WHICH ARE WARRANTED SOUND AND OF SUPERIOR QUALITY, AND WILL BE OFFERED ON MONDAY, MARCH 18TH,
AT PRICES LOWER THAN EVER BEFORE SOLD AT IN THIS CITY.

SILKS.
0pieces Black Silks, from $1 to $1 60 per yard.
75 pieces Bischoff's Black Silks, from $1 60 to $3 per yard.
90 pieces Bonnet's superior Black Silks, from $2 to $4 50 per yard.
40 pieces Bonnet's Extra Black Silks, from $3 to $8 per yard.
500 pieces Plain, Brocade and Plaid Silks, in all colors and designs.

DRESS GOODS.
200 pieces super. Scotch Ginghams.
300 pieces super. French Ginghams.
600 pieces Empress Cloth, in new designs.
200 pieces plain Cballys, in new designs.
300 pieces Black Alpacas.
200 pieces Colored Alpacas.
2000 pieces super. Barnesly and Scotch Towels.
600 dozen super English Hose and Half Hose.
100 dozen super. Linen Shirts, at $2 75, $3, $3 50 and $4.
200 dozen super. Cotton Shirts.
Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings, Flanuels, Quilts, Blankets, Linen Sheetings, Table Cloths, Napkins, etc. etc.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET, LICK HOUSE.
WHOLESALE HOUSE,
NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE STREET.

THE GREAT
New England Remedy!
DR. J. W. POLAND'S
White-Pine Compound,
IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.
THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:
Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.
Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.
It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.
Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.
10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

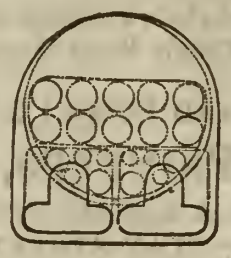
MRS. WINSHIP,
Fashionable Milliner.

NO. 23 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.
All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.
Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.
☞ Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,
Portland Boiler Works,
311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,
Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.
Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.
All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.
T. J. MOYNIHAN, JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.


Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.
MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.
The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.
All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.
D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,
Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.
STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.
Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.
MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Belt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.
DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.
CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.
ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.
AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.
BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.
BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.
BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pins and Montgomery, (Russ House.
BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine
CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.
CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 646, 647, and 649 Washington street.
COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.
DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.
DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.
DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.
EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.
FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 610 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.
GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets
HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.
HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.
INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.
LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.
LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market
MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.
NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.
PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.
PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.
PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.
RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 620 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.
SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.
SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento
STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.
TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.
WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery
WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, conuecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each moutn that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acnpulco.

Departure of 19th connects with Frencb Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MARCH.

March 30—GOLDEN AGE, Captain James T. Watkins, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positivcly leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their haggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool hy the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 31, for Hongkong via Kanngawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company'e office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

THE CALIFORNIA Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, hy Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

TO ALL SUFFERING HUMANITY

WHO

VALUE HEALTH AND CHERISH LIFE.

Healey's Rheumatic Liniment

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

Price Fifty Cents and One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents — CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

HOUSEKEEPERS' Protection & Relief Society.

HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,

And all the innumerablee required hy Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET,

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up staire for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

HAGAN & HORGAN, Marble - Workers,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, hetwecn Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - - PROPRIETOR

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,

NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND MATERIALS

☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches

AT

The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, hut in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOSE A. FELIZ, decensed.—Notice is hereby given hy the undereigned, Administrator of the estate of JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said decensed, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchere, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at the office of Haight & Pierson, No. 510 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, February 19, 1867.

ROBERT HAIGHT, Administrator of the Estate of Jose A. Feliz, dec'd. mh9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MICHAEL HINES, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased, to the creditore of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM, Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased. mh9 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NAYLOR C. DAVIS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not he made.

On reading and filing the petition of John H. Madison, Administrator of the Estate of Naylor C. Davis, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to he divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 15th day of April, A. D 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs at law of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order he published for four successive weeks before the said fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 11th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
m16 5t By WM. LEDLIE, Deputy Clerk.
CHAS WITTRAM, Esq., Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHERT. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brougbt in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Fraucisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered hy said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs ot suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASUCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN NERAC, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not he made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the Will annexed of the Estate of Ellen Nerac, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisee named in the Will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate to the party entitled thereto:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not he made of the residue of said estate to the devisee of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order he published for four successive weeks, before the said sixteenth day of April A D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 14th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss.

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitionor. m16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchere, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES, Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Caroline Huebner, deceased. mh2-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS KEENAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchere within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, northwest corner of Sacramento and Sansome streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, March 2d, A. D. 1867.

mh2-5t THOMAS BREEZE, Administrator of Estate of Thomas Keenan, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purebasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may he barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and he put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of BENJAMIN P. GREEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed hy Thomas Courtis, Administrator of the estate of Benjamin P. Green, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the claims against the estate, and the expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered hy the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the twenty-second day of April A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administor to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order he published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 22d day of March, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
F. A. Fabens, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
mar39 4t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of J. C. BEIDEMAN, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of the Judge of said Court, made this day, notice is hereby given that Monday, the 22d day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, being a day of a regular term of said Court, to-wit: of the April Term, A. D. 1867, at the Court-room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, has been appointed for hearing the petition, this day filed, of Bernard Kennedy, praying for a decree authorizing and directing John W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate left unadministered of J. C. Beideman, deceased, to convey to the said petitioner certain real estate situated in said city and county, and particularly described in said petition, upon the payment to said Administrator of the balance of the purchase money of said real estate; at which time and place all persons interested in said estate may appear and contest said petition hy filing their objections in writing.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
Messrs. Drake & Hent, Attys. for Petitioner.
mar23-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSEN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George C Petersen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES, Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Petersen, deceased. mh2-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES, Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased. mh2-5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. THEBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MISS KATE DENIN,
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, MARCH 30TH,
THE FAST FAMILY.

THIS EVENING, MARCH 30TH,
First Night of an Original Local Drama, entitled
THE CURSE OF OUR COUNTRY!

MONDAY EVENING,
First Appearance on any Stage of
MISS OLIVIA RAND,
In the Musical Drama,
RUSTIC PRIMA DONNA,
In which she will sing gems from La Sonnambula, Don Giovanni, Il Barbiere del' Sevigla, etc.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle	$1 00	Orchestra	$1 00
Parquette	50	Upper Circle	25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

SECOND APPEARANCE ON ANY STAGE OF PAULINE CONGER!

Wednesday Evening, April 3d, 1867,
Will be presented Sheridan Knowles's great Play in Five Acts, entitled
THE HUNCHBACK!

JULIA.....MISS PAULINE CONGER
Master Walter.....Mr. Henry Edwards.
Sir Thomas Clifford.....Pierpont Thayer.
Helen.....Mrs. Harry Jackson.

The balance of the cast embracing the entire strength of the company.

WITH OTHER ATTRACTIONS
Which will be announced on the bills of the day.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra,	$1 00
Parquet,	50
Gallery,	25

PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

GRAND TESTIMONIAL,
Tendered by the Entire Profession to
M'LLE ROSA CELESTE!
To take place Thursday Evening, April 4,
On which occasion M'LLE ROSA CELESTE will make her FIRST ASCENSION since the accident she met with some five months ago.

The following talented Artistes have kindly volunteered their services:

Signora Bianchi,	Signor Mancusi,
Madame Marzetti,	S. W. Leach,
Miss Emma Howson,	Signor Roncovieri,
Miss Clelia Howson,	Frank Howson,
M'lle Louisa Tourney,	John Howson,
Mrs. Georgiana Leach,	Charles Schultz,
Miss Ella Kemp,	M. W. Willis,
Miss Rosa Siegrist,	Gustave A. Scott,
Signor Bianchi,	Prof. Siegriet and Son,

And the MARTINETTI TROUPE!

DR. BENTON'S LAST LECTURE (of the present season) will be given at Congress Hall this evening, March 30th. Admission 50 cents. Ladies and children free. These lectures will be resumed as soon as professional engagements will permit.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,
NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,
San Francisco.
SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.
OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.
W. A. QUARLES, Auctioneer.

ENTIRE BLOCK OF
MARKET STREET PROPERTY,
IN 32 LARGE SUBDIVISIONS.

ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL THIRD, 1867, AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON, AT OUR SALESROOMS, WE WILL SELL, ON A LIBERAL CREDIT, AND WITHOUT RESERVE,

Block No. 71, on Market street, nearly opposite Eleventh street, and fronting on Market street, Van Ness Avenue, Oak, Franklin and Page streets.

☞The sale of this magnificent block presents an opportunity for investment NEVER BEFORE OFFERED, on a portion of Market street which, from its peculiarly advantageous location, is sure, at no distant day, to become the MOST VALUABLE portion of that grand business avenue; and, from its proximity to the Depot of the San Jose Railroad, which will doubtless be the terminus of the great Pacific Railroad, this property is not only valuable for business purposes NOW, but has the prospect of a MORE RAPID AND GREATER ENHANCEMENT than any other locality in the city.

The corner of Market street and Van Ness Avenue is the most COMMANDING CORNER in the whole city, Van Ness Avenue having a Width of 125 FEET.

The whole block lies EXACTLY ON THE GRADE, the streets are macadamized and sidewalked in the most thorough and substantial manner, and the lots are ready for IMMEDIATE IMPROVEMENT, without a single dollar of outlay.

TITLE PERFECT.

☞A diagram, showing the subdivisions, will be found on the premises, and maps will be ready for distribution in a few days.

TERMS—One-half Cash; balance in two years, at one per cent. per month interest.

☞Go and look at this splendid property.

MAURICE DORE & CO, Auctioneers

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!
Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA,
EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on
MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.

For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches' from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instruments, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE
HAT OR CAP,
AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of
LAMOTT'S HATS!
CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)
NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,
515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

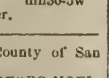
MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

THE NEW BRANCH

OF THE
CLIPPER RESTAURANT,
No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,
WILL BE OPENED ON
MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.



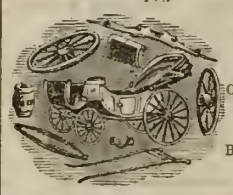
MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBLIC that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J. STOCK, Proprietor.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COSBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
Wagon & Carriage Materials,
NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, Etc.
Also, Importers of
GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,
Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips, Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & Co.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Michael Lynch, the Administrator of the estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w
R. W. HENT, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHANN GEORG MOELLER, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 27th day of March, A. D. 1867, Notice is hereby given, that TUESDAY, the eighteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, in the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said Johann Georg Moeller, deceased, and for hearing the application of Louise Moeller, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters Testamentary, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
Dated at San Francisco, this 29th March, A. D. 1867.
J. F. FINN, Attorney for petitioner. mh30-3w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY A. WALSH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at at the office of Crane & Boyd, Attorneys at Law, in the city and county of San Francisco, the place of his transaction of business.

Dated at San Francisco, March 25th, 1867.
JOHN TOWNSEND,
Administrator of Estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased.
Crane & Boyd, Att'ys, S. W. cor. Clay and Montgomery streets. mh30-5w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als, Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY HREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. HISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on the 10th day of September, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the estate of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on TUESDAY, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors, David Whipple and William Whipple, of, in and to all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the southerly line of Pine street 111½ feet easterly from the south-east corner of Pine and Taylor streets; running thence easterly along said line of Pine street 26 feet; thence at a right angle southerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet; thence at a right angle westerly 26 feet, and thence at a right angle northerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, No. 6 Montgomery Block, in said city and county, from this date till Tuesday, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned. ROBERT L. HARRIS,

Guardian of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-4w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Breeze, the Administrator of the estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, praying for an order for the sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts of the deceased and the charges and expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Adm'r. mh30 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion, and would be most for the interest of all concerned to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the family allowance, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned. Executors of the Last Will and Testament of JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the store of A. Crawford, No. 27 Market street, San Francisco, that being the place of the transaction of business by said Executors of said estate.

A. CRAWFORD, D. N LUNDT, } Executors.
Dated March 30th, 1867. mh30-4w

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 20
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 6, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Turkey-Herding in California, by "Trem;" African Travels and Adventures, by Prentice; The "Kingdom" of Canada; The Study of the Classics; Literary Gossip and Gleanings. LION'S MOUTH: A Bar-room Oracle on Our Local Press; Symptoms of Insanity; The Unhappy Fitz-Smythe; An Accommodating Boarder; Warm Friends; A Hint to the Editor. Paragraphs, Poetry, Dramatic Affairs, etc, SELECTED: Tete-a-teto with a Lion; The Last of the Brigands; "Black Sheep;" Poetry, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

A Bar-Room Oracle on our Local Press.

MR. EDITOR:—On Thursday evening, having dropped into the Faust Cellar, after the theatre, to refesh myself with a glass of lager and a caviare sandwich, I found the "Oracle" seated at the table he usually occupies, with the Sacramento Union and a glass of hot Santa Croix before him, holding forth to an attentive circle on the subject of the papers published in this city.

"What's the reason now, I should like to know," said he, with a certain judicial sternness of voice and manner—"What's the reason that we can't have a paper like this in San Francisco? It's a long way the best paper in the State. And why is it the best? I'll tell you why it's the best; it's because the men that own it understand their business, and they know enough to hire men to do the writing that understand their business. That's the secret of it. Old Anthony can't write ten lines himself—but he's a judge of good writing all the same, besides being h—ll on poker—a game that requires more brains by odds than it does to run half a dozen newspapers. And there's some of the proprietors—I don't like to mention names, gentlemen—but there's some of 'em whose spelling is raythor queer. I could show you a letter I got from one of 'em—if it wouldn't be a breach of confidence that no gentleman would be guilty of—I could show you a letter from one of 'em that you'd consider in the light of a decided curiosity. You see there was a time when I was about as handy with a pen as the next man, and used to do something in the way of ink-slinging, and old —— wanted me to come up to Sacramento as "local," and we had almost come to a bargain when the thing was broke off, because they wanted me to agree to stop drinking and to wear a stove pipe around town! They said there was a certain amount of dignity which every one connected with the concern ought to keep up. Of course I told 'em to go to the d—l, not that I had any particular hankering after drink, or any constitutional objection to stove-pipes, which I've worn now and again—but I wasn't going to be dictated to. But all that's neither here nor there. As a newspaper there's nothing in the United States that's ahead of the Union. I don't go much on its editorials—but what's editorials? What do you suppose I want to read politikle editorials for, that are written by green young men who don't know how to engineer a primary? What can they teach me, do you suppose? What I want is the news. I want to be posted as to what's going on in the world; and that's what I read the Union for. If I go to bed of a night without scanning it over I can't sleep. Why, gentlemen,—George can tell you if what I say's true or not—one night when the paper didn't come because an accident had happened to the boat, I had to take sixteen hot drinks before I could get sleepy enough to go to bed. (Here George, thus appealed to, put in —"Fact, gentlemens, and he'd have taken two or three more if I hadn't told him I had to shut up.) "And now," resumed the speaker, 'just look at the Press of this city! There's the Alta for instance. It has a good deal of reading matter to be sure, and a good deal that's interesting. That's because it's so big, and holds so much, that if the staff was throwed into it with a pitchfork, they couldn't help getting in a heap of news. It seems to me sometimes as if the way that paper's got up, was by giving a blind man a heap of exchanges and a pair of scissors, and telling him just to clip out wherever was next his thumb! As to the Times, what's the use of talking about that? It's a big paper. And a well-printed paper as any man need wish to see. But it's got no character, and no more life or spirit than a Dashaway cocktail or a tract for a Sunday-School infant class. The Bulletin's got character enough—but in my opinion it's a d—d bad character. Its always a belying and persecuting the class of gentlemen who interest themselves in local politics and look after the municipal elections—and what would become of American institutions, I'd like to know, without that class? How the devil would the offices be filled, and the combinations be made, and the boys got into training, and the people that don't know how to vote or don't care how they vote fetched up to the polls on the right side, without the class of gentlemen in question? I'm not ashamed to say that I'm one of 'em, and I expect to do my country some service next election. Whether I'm for Pixley, or Fay, or Gorham, or Bidwell, I'm not prepared to say; that depends upon contingencies. But I shall go for one of 'em, and as they're all good men, I can't go astray whichever I give my support to. Then there's the Call, gentlemen"—Here the Oracle paused to respond to an invitation to "take something," and I did not remain to hear the conclusion of the harangue. CAPTAIN WRAGGE.

The Unhappy-Fitz-Smythe.

The public do not need to be informed that Fitz Smythe, the imbecile humorist of the Pacific Coast, no longer acts as local items for the Alta. In spite of the efforts of the present incumbent in the way of revamping venerable puns, funoily distorting the English language, and otherwise humbly attempting to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor, his fooling has not been accepted by the public as being equally amusing as that of Fitz-Smythe. A man who plays the fool will occasionally raise a laugh, but a born fool is always amusing. We miss Fitz Smythe. The fact of the matter is that Fitz-Smythe has gone to Arizona, and the Alta, in order to enliven its columns, on Tuesday published a letter from its late local-items. The letter is dated "La Paz, Arizona, March 20th." It contains an item of intelligence which must be of interest to everyone who read "Mark Twain's" amusing and truthful description of the habits of Fitz-Smythe's horse. The exiled correspondent writes as follows:

"I made my bed last night within ten feet of the post to which was tied my bay mare, which I brought from San Francisco, and always prized so highly, and three other men lay between her and myself. Before daybreak I awoke and missed her. We found the tracks made by a barefooted thief, whether Indian or white man—probably a Chimahuevis Indian—and followed them back to where they struck into the sand desert leading towards the Chimahuevis Mountains. Having no animal with the party capable of catching her (we saw where the thief mounted her and rode off at full speed) we abandoned the pursuit, and I am here looking for another animal."

"Mark Twain" made public many interesting particulars concerning the bay mare, which may explain why she left Fitz-Smythe. We do not believe that she was stolen; she strayed away in search of food. This horse—or mare—was, during the period of Fitz-Smythe's residence in this city, fed entirely on newspapers—so Mark Twain says—and used to devour on an average five hundred old exchanges a day. It is evident that Fitz-Smythe's supply of newspaper forage ran out, and that his mare—which, although "highly prized" by him, was not an animal likely to be stolen—wandered off in search of a hospitable newspaper office, where it could assuage its hunger. Fitz Smythe, following out his instincts, prefers to tell a story about a "barefooted thief." The pathos of the following passage of his letter is heart-rending, though at the same time he shows himself a philosopher:

"Crying will not help matters, or I would cry all night; I never felt more like it."

What an admirable suggestion for an historical painting might the above simple words afford one of our local artists! "Fitz-Smythe, Crying all Night for the Loss of his Horse!" The man who paints that picture will gain immortality, and a good notice in the local columns of the Alta, if Fitz-Smythe should ever again be employed on that paper.

Symptoms of Insanity.

The Times quotes from a recent medical work the following symptoms, all characteristic of disease having commenced in the brain:

An apparent unimportant knitting of the brows, a trifling sensation of numbness in some part of the body, a condition of local or general muscular weakness, a state of ennui, mental peevishness, irritability and physical restlessness, an almost unappreciable depression or exaltation of the animal spirits; an impairment or disorder of the sense of sight, loss, aberration or confusion of memory; defect in or acute manifestation of the sense of hearing; an inaptitude for mental work; an inability to concentrate the attention continuously on any subject; a state of sleeplessness, or condition of lethargy; a trivial deviation from the usual mode of talking—such as suddenly pausing in the conversation, as if to regain a lost train of ideas, a slight defect in the articulation, associated with a transposition of words, and inability to pronounce certain letters.

Pleasant reading matter this for nervous people. "A state of ennui." Nine out of ten suffer more or less from this. All going crazy, "Exaltation of the animal spirits." So, then, it is a frightful symptom to be jolly. "An inaptitude for work." This lets in numerous blockheads and numskulls. All going crazy. "Pausing in the conversation as if to regain a lost train of ideas." This includes many reflective and consequently at times absent-minded people. "Inability to pronounce certain letters." Harrowing to the feelings of a large portion of our foreign population, who cannot speak plain English. There is but little chance, it seems, for escaping insanity.

Did He?

Speaker Colfax said he resolved to lead a temperate life, after seeing a companion die of delirium tremens thirty years ago. Now since his resolving is such an easy every day affair, what we wish to know is, did he carry out this resolution?

Important Discovery.

The Sacramento Bee has been overhauling the Pacific Coast telegrams in the Baltimore and St. Louis papers, and discovers that the editors of those papers are as ignorant of California geography as our local journalists!

A Hint to the Editor.

EDITOR CALIFORNIAN:—You will doubtless be gratified to learn that we are about to bring out the Italian Opera in this city. We have engaged the following distinguished artistes, viz: Miss Eugenia Bell, Mrs. Anna Carroll, Lew Daniels, Jesse Peters, and Eugene Bell, who have been playing Opera in Gautemala with great success. To catch the popular ear we have Italianized the names of the artistes, and you will speak of them as Signorina Bellini, Prima Donna Soprano; Signor L. Danieli, Primo Tenor; Signor Egisto Petrilli, Primo Baritone; Signor Eugenio Bellini, Basso Profundo and Buffo Comico; Signora Anneta Garoli, Contralto. You will refer to them collectively as the Gautemala Opera Troupe. These artistes are expected to arrive from Gautemala on the next steamer. If you have not heard of them, call upon us and we will post you as to the high reputation they have achieved as musicians not only in Gautemala, but in Patagonia, Tahiti, San Juan Fernandez and other parts of the world where musical talents of the first order are duly appreciated and rewarded. In Gnatemala, especially, they created an intense furor, insomuch that the torreadores with tears in their eyes besought them to leave the country, as few greasers, greasoras or greaseritas could be induced to attend the bull-fights while they had an opportunity of listening to this ravishing Italian Opera Troupe. One of our firm, who is an eloquent "buzzer," will immediately wait upon the citizens of San Francisco for the subscriptions to the forthcoming Opera Season. We expect you to puff this Italian Opera Troupe quite liberally; and, should you fail to do so, we will instruct them to introduce in their performances some "gags" a la Heller, abusing the CALIFORNIAN, both in Italian and English.

Hoping that this hint will be sufficient, we remain

Your Obedient Servants,

MANAGERS OF —— THEATER.

An Accommodating Boarder.

Reciprocal accommodation in business matters is as rare as it is delightful to contemplate. This charming virtue was, however, carried to an extraordinary extent in an instance which we are about to relate. A young "man about town" has for some time past patronized a respectable boarding-house in the upper part of the city, appearing at the table at meal-time with commendable punctuality, and pocketing with imperturbable politeness the "little bill" presented to him weekly by his hostess. The landlady, at length, seeing on the part of her boarder no disposition to pay his bill, and finding it rather unprofitable to keep a boarding-house on such terms, one day cornered him up and put the case to him plainly, as follows: "You have boarded with me now for ten weeks, and have not paid me a cent. I am sorry to be obliged to say it, but I cannot afford to keep you any longer unless you settle your bill. I am in debt now for the victuals you have eaten; the butcher, to whom I owe upwards of fifty dollars, told me this morning that I cannot have another pound of meat unless I settle for what I have had; and how can I pay him unless you pay me?" The young man's countenance assumed a grave expression, and he looked thoughtfully for a moment at the toe of his boot; but presently his face brightened, as he exclaimed with gushing ardor: "Well, now, Mrs Brown, don't let that butcher's bill trouble you in the least. Just feed us on bread and butter and vegetables; I'll be perfectly satisfied, and I guess if I can stand it the rest of the boarders can." With a deep-drawn sigh the landlady retired, and our hero walked down street, jauntily twirling his natty little cane and gaily whistling "Kitty from Cork." He is still punctual at meals, and the landlady has not yet ventured upon the vegetarian experiment—she had not the heart to put so accommodating a gentleman upon low diet.

Warm Friends.

At about 1 o'clock Tuesday morning the house of Mr. Carroll at the corner of Geary and Laguna streets, north of Hayes's Valley, was discovered to be on fire. The Evening Dispatch says:

"The house was set on fire, a quantity of brushwood being piled under the floor immediately beneath the room occupied by the family as a sleeping apartment."

The Times gives much the same account of this disastrous affair, but says:

"The house was set on fire from below by some friends, and Mr. Carroll and his wife barely escaped with their lives."

Mr. Carroll might have been obliged to the friends who placed the wood under his house had they refrained from setting it on fire, but under the circumstances he does not, in spite of the Times, regard the parties who burnt him out of house and home as friends. The Times is, we observe, inclined to be excessively charitable on all occasions, and it cannot be wondered at that it (for fear of giving offense) should term local and also political incendiaries "friends."

The Beverage of Hell.

A tectotallor of the name of Weaver has published a "pome" in which he stigmatizes Hocheimer, Veuve Clicquot, good Bourbon whisky and other good drinks as "the beverage of hell." Mr. Weaver may be right, but we are inclined to believe that he is wrong, in making use of the expression "beverage of hell." We don't think that there is any "beverage of hell." Dives would not have been so anxious for Lazarus to bring him some water if there had been any beverage of hell.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER X.—PAUL WARD.

THE Autumn tiuts were rich und beautiful upon the Kent woods, and nowhere more rich or more beautiful than in Sir Thomas Boldero's domain. The soft grass beneath the noble bceches was strewn with the russet leaves a little eurlier than usnal that year, and somewhat more plentifully, for the storm had shaken them down, and had even rent away a branch here and there from some of the less sturdy trees. And then the forester mado his inspection, and the fallen branches were removed, and duly cut and housed for winter firewood, and it chanced that the hitherto forgotten log on which George Dallas had sat one spring morning was carried away with them.

Clare Carruthers missed it from its accustomed place as she rode down the glade which she still loved, though it had a painful association for her now. Every day her eyes had rested on the rugged log, and every day she had turned them away with a sigh. To-day it was there no longer, and its absence was a relief. She reined Sir Lancelot up for a moment, und looked at the vacant space. The earth lay bare and brown where the log had been ; there was no grass there.

"It won't be hidden until the spring," she thought, impatiently. "I wish—I wish I could forget the place in which I saw him first! I wish I could forget that I ever hud seen him!"

Then she turned her head away with an effort and a sigh, and rode on.

Clare was going over from the Sycamores to Poynings. She had occasion to see the housekeeper, started early, and, as usual, nnattended, save by Cæsar, who bounded along, now by the side of Sir Lancelot, anon a considerable way in advance, doing the distance twice over, after the fashion of dogs, and evidently compassionating the leisnrely pace to which his equine friend and comrade was condemned.

The months which had elasped since her inauspicious meeting among the beeches with Paul Ward had had much inquietude and mysterious trouble in them for the girl whose graces they had but ripened and perfected, on whose fair face they had impressed a permature but very beautiful thoughtfulness.

To one so young, so innocent, so carefully shielded from evil, living in so pure and calm an atmosphere of home, and yet around whom the inevitable solitude of orphanhood dwelt, the presence of a secret cause of sorrow, doubt, perplexity, was in itself a burden grievous to be borne. Clare could not help dwelling perpetually on the only mystery which had ever come into her tranquil conventional life, and the more she shrank from the contemplation, the more it pressed itself upon her. Sometimes for days and weeks together, the remembrance of it would be vague and formless, then it would take shape again and substance, and thrill her with fresh horror, distract her with new perplexity. Sometimes she would address herself with all the force of her intelligence to this mysterious remembrance, she would arrange the circumstances in order and question them, and then she would turn away from the investigation cold and trembling, with all the terrible conviction of the first moment of revelation forcibly restored.

The dreadful truth haunted her. When Sir Thomas Boldero asked her ladyship if there was any news in the Times each morning, (for the Sycamores was governed by other laws than those which ruled Poynings, and Lady Boldero, who was interested in politics after her preserves and her linen-presses, always read the papers first), Clare had listened with horrid sickening fear for many and many a day. But suspense of this sort cannot last in its first vitality, and it has lessened, but it was not wholly dead even yet. One subject of speculation frequently occupied her. Had he seen the warning she had ventured to send him? No, she would sometimes say to herself, decisively, no, he had not seen it. His safety must have been otherwise secured ; if he had seen it, he would know that the terrible truth was known to her, and he would never have dared to recall himself to her memory. For he did so recall himself, and this was the most terrible part of it all for Clare. On the first day of each month she received the current number of The Piccadilly, and there was always written on the fly-leaf, "From Paul Ward." No, her attempt had failed ; such madness, such audacity, could not otherwise be accounted for.

For some time Clare had not looked at the books which reached her with this terribly significant imprint. She had not destroyed them, but she had put them away out of her sight. One day, after her cousin's marriage, and when her thoughts—forcibly distracted for some time by the preparations, the hospitalities, and the rejoicings attendant on that event—had flown back to the subject which had such tormenting attraction for her, a sudden impulse of utter incredulity seized her. Nothing was changed in the facts, nothing in the circumstances ; but Clare laid aside reason under the suddenly exerted power of feeling, and refused to believe that Paul Ward had murdered the unknown man in whose company he had been, and who undoubtedly had been murdered.

"I won't believe it! I don't believe it!"

These words have often been uttered by the human will, when tortured by the terrible impotence of human despair, as obstinately as Clare Carruthers spoke them, and with infinitely more suffering implied in the inevitable reaction. But they can seldom have brought greater relief. A generous, reckless impulse of youth, partly against the terrible knowledge of evil, partly against her own suffering, which wearied and oppressed her spirit—distant, vague, even chimerical as she told herself it was—animated her resolution. She rose, and stretched her arms out, and shook her golden head, as though she discarded a baleful vision by a strong act of her will.

"I shall never see him again," she thought. "I shall never know his fate, unless, indeed, he becomes famous, and the voice of his renown reaches me. I shall never know the truth of this dreadful story ; but, strong as the evidence is, I never will believe it more. Never! never!"

Clare Carruthers was too young, too little accustomed to the sad science of self-examination, too candidly persuadable by the natural abhorrence of youth for grief, to ask herself how much of this resolution came from the gradual influence of time—how much from the longing she felt to escape from the constant pressure of the first misery she had ever known. The impulse, the resolution, had come to her with her first waking thoughts, one glorious morning in the early Autumn, the morning which saw George Dallas and his uncle arrive at Homburg, and witnessed Mr. Carruthers's reception of his stepson. This resolution she never abandoned. That day she had taken the books out of their hiding-place, and had set herself to read the serial story which she knew was written by him. Something of his mind, something of his disposition, would thus reveal itself to her. It was strange that he remembered to send her the books so punctually, but that might mean nothing ; they might be sent by the publisher by his order ; he might have forgotten her existence by this time. Clare Carruthers was sensible, and not vain, and she saw nothing more than a simple politeness in the circumstance.

So she read the serial novel, and thought over it ; but it revealed nothing to her. There was one description, indeed, which reminded her, vaguely, of Mrs. Carruthers, as she had been before her illness, as Clare remembered her when she had first seen her, years ago. Clare liked the story. She was not enthusiastically delighted with it. A change which her newly formed resolution to believe him innocent, to change from her all that had tormented her, could never undo, had passed upon Clare, since her girlish imagination had been ready to exalt Paul Ward, "the author," Paul Ward, "the artist," as she called him, with all the reverence her innocent heart accorded to such designations, into a hero ; she had less impulse in her now ; she had suffered, in her silent, unsuspected way, and suffering is a sovereign remedy for all enthusiasm, except that of religion. But she discerned in the story something which made her reason second her resolution. And from that day Clare grieved no more. She waited, she did not know for what ; she hoped, she did not know why ; she was pensive, but not unhappy. She was very young, very innocent, very trustful ; and the story of the murder was six months old. So was that of the meeting, and that of the myrtle sprig ; and all three were growing vague.

The young girl's thoughts were very busy as she rode from the Sycamores to Poynings, but not exclusively with Paul Ward.

Her life presented itself in a more serious aspect to her than it had ever before worn. All things seemed changed. Her uncle's letters to her had undergone a strange alteration. He wrote now to her as to one whom he trusted, to whom he looked for aid, on whom he purposed to impose a responsible duty. The pompousness of Mr. Carruthers's nature was absolutely inseparable from his style of writing as from his manner of speech; but the matter of his letters atoned for their faults of manner. He wrote with such anxious affection of his wife, he wrote with such kindly interest of Mr. Dallas, the hitherto proscribed stepson, whose name Clare had never heard pronounced by his lips or in his presence. Above all, he seemed to expect very much from Clare. Evidently her life was not to be empty of interest for the future, if responsibility could fill it ; for Clare was to be intrusted with all the necessary arrangements for Mrs. Carruthers's comfort, and Mrs. Carruthers was very anxious to get back to England, to Poynings and to Clare! The girl learned this with inexpressible gladness, but some surprise. She was wholly unaware of the feelings with which Mrs. Carruthers had regarded her, and the intentions of maternal care and tenderness which she had formed—feelings she had hidden, intentions she had abandoned from motives of prudence, founded on her thorough comprehension of the besetting weakness of her husband's character.

Clare had not the word of the enigma, and it puzzled her. But it delighted her also. Instinctively she felt there was something of Mark Felton's doing in this. He had impressed her as favorably as she had impressed him. She had recognized his possession of the two great qualities, feeling and intelligence, and her own kindred endowments had answered to them at once.

Was she going to be happy and useful? Was she going to be something more than the rich Miss Carruthers, the heiress of Poynings, who had every luxury life could supply except that of feeling herself of active individual importance to any living creature? Was Poynings going to be as pleasant as the Sycamores, and for a more worthy reason? Clare felt in her honest young heart that the superiority of the Sycamores consisted principally in the fact that the uncle who inhabited that abode was never in her way, whereas the uncle who ruled at Poynings was generally otherwise, and unpleasant. It was very ungrateful of her to feel this ; but she did feel it. Was all this going to be altered? Was she going to have the sort of feeling that might have been hers if she had not been the heiress of Poynings, but the real, own daughter of a kind lady, who needed and would accept all her girlish love and eager, if unskilful, care? It must be so, Clare thought, now Mrs. Carruthers had her son with her, and she no longer felt that there was injustice done to her, for which Clare was made the reason or the pretext, she would allow her to be all she had always desired to be.

How much uselessness, unreality, weariness, fell away from Clare Carruthers as she rode on, the beautiful healthful color rising higher in her cheeks as the glad thoughts, the vague, sweet, unselfish hopes of the future, expanded in her young heart. She would tell Mrs. Carruthers some day when she was quite well, when there should be no longer any danger of doing her harm by the revelation, about the mystery which had caused her so much suffering, and then, when there should be perfect confidence between them, she would tell her how she had discovered that she, too, was acquainted with Paul Ward.

Clare had never speculated seriously upon the cause of Mrs. Carruthers's illness. Her first convictions were, that it had originated in some trouble about her son. The old housekeeper's manner, the removal of the portrait, had sufficed for Clare. This was a sacred sorrow, sacred from Clare's curiosity, even in her thoughts. And now it was at an end, probably, thanks to Mark Felton ; but, at all events, it was quite over. In the time to come, that future which Clare's fancy was painting so brightly, as her horse carried her swiftly over the familiar road, Mrs. Carruthers might even love her well enough to tell her the story of the past, and what that terrible grief had been.

"I am to take Thomas up to town with me, Mrs. Brookes, and I only wish you were coming, too," said Clare to the housekeeper at Poynings, as a concluding item of the budget of news she had to tell. Clare was in high spirits by this time. Mrs. Brookes was much more friendly than usual to the young lady whom she, too, had always regarded with jealousy, and almost dislike, as an enemy of George.

"I am better here, Miss Carruthers," said Mrs. Brookes. "I dare say there won't be much delay in London,—for Mrs. Carruthers and master, I mean. You'll stay awhile with Mrs. Stanhope, belike?"

"O dear no,—I certainly shall not," replied Clare, with the prettiest air of importance. "I shall come down with my uncle and aunt. My uncle says we are to come as soon as the doctors will let us go."

"And Mr. Felton, also, you say, Miss Carruthers?"

"Yes, and Mr. Dallas. How delighted I am, Mrs. Brookes,—how delighted you must be." The girl's face flushed deeply. She was all glowing with the generous ardor of her feelings. She had taken off her hat, and was standing before the open window in the morning-room, her habit gathered up in one hand, her slight figure trembling, her beautiful face radiant.

"I am sure it has been almost as hard for you as for his mother. I could not say anything about it before, Nurse Ellen,"—it was the first time Clare had ever called the old woman by this name,—"because I knew nothing,—no one ever told me anything, and I must have seemed to blame my uncle. But, indeed, it pained me very much, and now—now I am so happy!"

Bright swift tears sparkled in her golden-brown eyes. She dashed them away, and, taking the old woman's hands in hers, she said, with girlish archness,—

"You must not hate me any more, Nurse Ellen, for 'Master George' and I are going to be very good friends."

"Hate you, my dear young lady!" said Mrs. Brookes, who was too old to blush externally, but who certainly felt like blushing. "How can you have such fancies? Who could hate you?"

"You,—you dear, faithful old thing! But it's all right now ; and, Nurse Ellen," she said seriously, "I am sure we owe all this happy change to Mr. Felton. The moment I saw that man, I felt he had come to do good. By the by, my uncle tells me there is no news of Mr. Felton's son yet. I suppose you never saw him, nurse?"

"La, bless you, no, my dear. I never saw his father till the day he came here. Mr. Arthur was born in America.

"Did he ever come to England before? Did Mrs. Carruthers ever see him?"

"Never. He told his father that he would see his aunt the first thing he did, and he never came anigh the place. I doubt he's a black shaep, Miss Carruthers."

"I hope not, for his father's sake, nurse."

And then Clare proceeded to make various arrangements with Mrs. Brookes, thinking the while: "Arthur Felton never was here. Mrs. Carruthers never saw him. For a moment I fancied he might have been Paul Ward."

"I wonder what I shall think of George Dallas?" thought Clare, as she rode away from Poynings in the afternoon, having given Thomas the necessary orders. "I wonder what he will think of me? I dare say he does not like the idea of me much. Perhaps I should not like the idea of him, if he were in my place and I in his; but, as it is, I decidedly do."

Attended by her maid and Thomas, Miss Carruthers went to London on the following day. Mrs. Stanhope met her at the railway station, and took her home with her. The footman was despatched to Sir Thomas Boldero's house in Chesham Place. In the course of the evening he went to Mrs. Stanhope's house, and asked to see Clare. His errand was to inform her that Mr. Felton and Mr. Dallas had arrived in London, and were particularly desirous of seeing Miss Carruthers. He (Thomas) had Mr. Felton's orders to ascertain from Miss Carruthers whether she would see them, on the following day, at Chesham Place, and, if so, at what hour. He was to take her answer to Mr. Felton's lodgings in Piccadilly.

"When did the gentlemen arrive?" Miss Carruthers asked.

Thomas could not exactly say, but he thought they had only just reached London. They had overcoats on, and looked "travelers-like."

Clare sent word to Mr. Felton that she would be at Chesham Place at noon on the next day, and would be very happy to see him. She did not mention Mr. Dallas, but it was by no means necessary that she should do so.

Punctually at twelve on the following day, Mrs. Stanhope's brougham deposited Clare Carruthers at Sir Thomas Boldero's house. It was in process of preparation for the expected guests; but had not quite thrown off the drowsy, unoccupied look of a house whose owners are absent. Its appearance bore the same relation to the state it would assume by and by as that of an individual who has just persuaded himself to rise, and is yawning and shivering in the process, bears to that of the same individual in his tubbed, dressed, shaved, breakfasted, newspaper-read, hatted, gloved and ready-for-the-day condition.

Clare got out of the carriage, gave the coachman some directions, stood at the door until he had driven off, and made a remark or two (ever reminiscent of Poynings punctiliousness) relative to the area-railings and door-steps to Thomas before she entered the house. He listened gravely, promised to attend to these matters, and then said:

"Mr. Dallas has been here some time, ma'am."

"Indeed?" said Clare, pausing just inside the hall door. "Is Mr. Felton not here?"

"He will be here directly, ma'am. He came with Mr. Dallas, but he went away again. I showed Mr. Dallas into the study, ma'am."

Clare felt rather embarrassed. She wished Mrs. Stanhope had been with her—she wished Mr. Felton had remained until she came, or had taken his nephew with him. It was so awkward to have to introduce herself to George Dallas, a stranger, and yet not exactly a stranger. She hesitated; her color rose. What should she do? What was not the easiest or pleasantest thing to do—for that would be to go to the drawing-room and remain there until Mr. Felton should come, leaving Mr. Dallas to a similar vigil in the study—but the kindest. Clearly, to give Mrs. Carruthers's son the friendliest greeting in her power, to show him, in her little way, how pleased she was at the family reunion, how much she desired to be numbered among his friends.

The study windows faced the street; he had probably seen the carraage, and heard her voice. He might be even now hurt by her tarrying.

Clare delayed no longer. She crossed the hall, opened the door of Sir Thomas Boldero's study, saw a man's figure close to one of the windows, shut the door, took two or three steps, and said, in the sweet, gentle tone which was one of her peculiar charms—

"Mr. Dallas, I am so much pleased."

Then the figure turned away from the window, and Clare found herself in the presence of Paul Ward.

(To be Continued.)

A couple in Richmond got married, and while engaged in "chasing the golden hours with flying feet," a most elegant supper including confectionaries and wedding-cake, which had been prepared, was stolen by thieves, who left the table completely bare.

New York's internal revenue is thirty-five millions of dollars.

NEW FASHIONS—BEEF-TEA AND THE "GERMAN."

THE only sensible novelty of fashion that strikes the visitor to Washington, is the new custom of handing round beef-tea in little cups to all over-wearied and over-heated dancers of the interminable "German"—which, by the way, is here a much more elaborate dance than I have seen it elsewhere, with an amount of gilded sceptres, strings of parti-colored ribbons, flags passing from hand to hand, and rules for selecting partners by similarity of colored badges,—such as invariably proves bewildering to all "people from Pike County" and the remainder of our outside heathen. The beef-tea, however, is good, and might be certified by Dr. Wm. W. Sanger of Broadway, as "administered on soundly hygienic principles." It recuperates the energies, supplies the carbon necessary to meet the unusual fuel drafts of such protracted exercise; and is certainly less hurtful to the system then champagne—which might dangerously inflame the pulses beyond the control of Madame Prudence; or those pernicious ices which are of no chemical value to the juices employed in sustaining life, while rapidly destructive to the enamel of the teeth—as may be tested by suddenly dropping any warm piece of enameled porcelain into a basin of freezing water. The hot porelain will suddenly contract, its enamel chipping off as it does so; and the same process will take place with the human teeth when eating ices.

At the "German" given by Miss Kate Chase—let me beg her pardon, by the wife of Senator Sprague of Rhode Island—all the young ladies who intended to join the "German" were invited to come with hair powdered after the fashion of hooped and furbelowed great grandmothers. The effect was pretty, and the fashion thus set by Mrs. Sprague is rapidly spreading; but fancy what would be the feelings of any young lady who did go with powdered hair, thereby announcing herself a candidate for the "German," yet found no bearded and bifurcated "waltzable" in the room with sufficient taste to ask her for his partner! Our only advice to young ladies must be in such a case: Be very sure of having a cavalier devoted to your glove and breast-ribbon, before allowing your hair to be powdered, when attending one of these Teutonic dancing nights. All other dances but the "German" are rapidly going out of date here—insomuch that an old-fashioned set of quadrilles, or such round-dances as the polka, schottische, or varsovienne, would excite as much curiosity and amusement as the evolutions of a dozen Mastodons or ancient Saurians, suddenly emerging from the red sandstone of the primary formation and commencing to pirouette in affectionate awkwardness to a fiddle played by Captain Noah, of the good ship "Ark." The redowa, deux temps, and gallope, are not so entirely antiquarianized and ostracised; but even they are not considered much more modern than would be the Dodo, Hippopotamus or Rhinoceros, in a modern treatise on the animal creation—things yet living and to be seen, it is true; but chiefly valuble as connecting links between the antediluvian world of the quadrille and the nineteenth century with its "German."—Washington Correspondence N. Y. Citizen.

GOOD NIGHT.

Good-night! I have to say good-night
To such a host of peerless things!
Good-night unto that fraglie hand
All queenly with its weight of rings;
Good-night to fond uplifted eyes,
Good-night to chestnut braids of hair,
Good-night unto the perfect mouth,
And all the sweetness nestled there.
The snowy band detains me, then,
I'll have to say good-night again!

But there will come a time, my love,
When, if I read our stars aright,
I shall not linger by the porch
With my adieus. Till then good-night!
You wish the time were now? And I.
You do not blush to wish it so?
You would have blushed yourself to death
To own so much a year ago.
What! both the snowy hands? ah, then
I'll have to say good-night again!

—T. B. Aldrich.

Promised Novels.—Concerning coming novels we learn that Mrs. Stowe's, for the Atlantic Monthly, is completed in manuscript, and that it is a story of New England life in the last generation. Miss Olive Logan is writing a long serial, to be shortly begun in Harper's Magazine. A Boston correspondent mysteriously says that a "very distinguished literary lady" of the city has the skeleton of a novel constructed. Mrs. James Austin of Concord has one ready for the press, and Fitz-Hugh Ludlow, who has written very little lately, is completing one. In England Mr. W. G. Willis has a novel in press called "The Love that Kills;" John Ruffini one entitled "A Quiet Nook;" Percy Fitzgerald one styled "Seventy-One Brook Street;" and Charles Lever is engaged on a tale in the style of "Charles O'Malley."

Two of Brigham Young's daughters are actresses at the Salt Lake theater.

COQUETTE.

Shimmering satins and billowy laces,
Dreamily sweet doth the music fall,
Scores upon scores of beautiful faces,
More beautiful hers, than all.

See where by yon sculptured vase she stands,
Tropical blooms in her bronze-brown hair,
Jewels ablaze on her bosom and hands—
Oh, but she is royally fair!

Look at her now as she languidly sways
Through the maddening German waltz;
There's the smile that she wore in the old, old days—
Would you ever dream she was false?

No, by the gods you'd swear she was true;
False! with those shy, soft, timid ways?
False! with those handsome eyes of blue?
Faith! 'tis a deep game she plays!

What though her smiles are as sunny as May,
What though her eyes are so tender and sweet?
Would she scruple to steal men's hearts away,
Then trample them under her feet?

Some trusting fool by her side will kneel,
Thinking her saintly and half divine,
Perchance she will swear, "Come woe, come weal,"
Then break his heart like mine.

Look well to her ways—be wise, poor fools!
Put no trust in her innocent eyes;
She'd flatter the very elect of Heaven,
And feed their souls with sweet lies!

Well, let her trifle—deceive as she will,
But as God liveth, there'll come a day
When remorse, like a vulture, will gnaw at her heart,
And she'll sigh for the love cast away.

—Wide World.

CHARLES FARRAR BROWNE.

THE cable despatches of yesterday announce the death, at Southampton, England, on Wednesday last, the 6th day of March, of Charles F. Browne, better known by his pseudonym of "Artemus Ward."

Mr. Browne was born at Waterford, Maine, and at the time of his death was thirty-three years of age. He came to Boston in 1851, having previously had some experience at type-setting at Lancaster in New Hampshire, and entered the office of the Carpet-Bag, then under the management of Mr. B. P. Shillaber. He here began his literary labors, writing for the Carpet-Bag a number of humorous articles over the signature of "Lieutenant Chubb." In 1853 he went to Toledo, Ohio, and thence to Cleveland, and while acting as local editor of the Plaindealer he created the immortal showman, whose quaint letters have made a world-wide fame and an ample fortune for their writer. In 1860 he went to New York, and at once joined Mr. Charles G. Leland in the editorial management of Vanity Fair, and became the intimate friend and associate of George Arnold, Frank Wood, Fitz James O'Brien and E. G. P. Wilkins, all of whom have since died.

Mr Browne went to California in 1863, and on his return to the East in the year following, he commenced the delivery of the best, the most popular and most profitable of his lectures entitled "Among the Mormons."

Last year he went to London, and was immediately engaged by Punch as a contributor, and his description of a visit to Shakspeare's grave, contributed to that journal, is the best of his later productions; the expression of a "boss poit" being peculiarly happy and thoroughly representative of its author's peculiar humor. He was equally successful as a writer and as a lecturer, and both his letters and his lectures are entitled to an eminent place in American humorous literature. All that he said or wrote was the product of his own brain. He never cheapened his productions by borrowing from his contemporaries. His wit was always his, in which respect, if in no other, he was the superior of his old associate, Petroleum V. Nasby. His method of orthography was never deviated from, but always scrupulously conformed to his peculiar style, as did that of Mr. Thackeray in "Jeems's Diary."

Mr. Browne was a gentleman of fine social qualities, possessing a warm and generous heart, and loved the most by those who knew him best. He has a mother living in Waterford, to whom during his lifetime he was always kind and dutiful—a model son, who sought his greatest pleasure in his mother's happiness. His name will long be familiar to Americans, and the sorrow caused by his death will be sincere and universal.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

The Germans.—It is noticed that Germans have settled in almost every part of the world. Besides being found in all parts of Europe, and forming a large and valuable portion of the population of every State of the Union, a large German society is flourishing in Hong-Kong, in China; and Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil, has a population of 50,000 Germans. They have penetrated to the most remote regions of Africa, and in Abyssinia have a flourishing colony, which controls the manufacture of gunpowder, and is regarded by the king of that country as a valuable addition to his people. Industrious and energetic wherever they go, the Germans, in all parts of the world, are held up as examples of thrift and prosperity.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

THE TRUE WAY TO PERFECT MANKIND.

WE do not know of a more striking illustation of the strong materialistic tendencies of the age—we do uot use the word in any offensive sense—than is to be found in the doctrines laid down by Dr. Youmans on "The Scientific Study of Human Nature," in a very remarkable lecture delivered before the Loudon College of Preceptors, and receutly published by A. Roman & Co., of this city.

The mottoes prefixed to the lecture significantly indicate the philosophy embodied in it. The first, quoted from Sir Henry Holland, declares that, "No system or rule of practice in education can safely be admitted which does not associate itself with this part of scieuce (physiology)." The second, from Descartes, says more explicity, "If it he possible to perfect mankind, the means of doing so will be found in the medical sciences." The third, of like import, consists of Dr. Heury Maudsley's dogma, that, "Of old it was the fashion to try to explain nature from a very incomplete knowledge of man; but it is the certaiu tendecy of advancing science to explain man on the basis of a perfecting knowledge of nature."

Dr. Youmans considers such knowledge of human natnre as we now possess imperfect and empirical, because it has not been expanded into "rational principles and general laws," but he believes it is gradually becoming more perfect, and he cherishes the hope that the continuance of the process will result in the formation of "something like a definite Science of Human Nature." Vague as this may sound to most readers, the students and admirers of Mr. Buckle will have no difficulty in uuderstanding what Dr. Youmans means by it.

After attacking the prevalent notion that man in the various spheres of action and character cannot be studied hy a scientific method, and that science pertains only to the material world, the lecturer assigns what he regards as the reason of the scanty and inexact knowledge of human nature hitherto attained, in the following significant passage:

"The method of regarding a man which tradition has transmitted to us from the earliest ages, is, at the outset, to cleave him asunder, and substitute the idea of two beings for the reality of one. Having thus introduced the notion of his double nature—mind and body as separate, independent existences—there grew up a series of moral contrasts between the disjointed products. The mind was ranked as the higher, or spiritual nature, the body as the lower, or material nature. The mind was said to be pure, aspiring, immaterial; the body gross, corrupt, and perishable: and thus the feelings became enlisted to widen the breach and perpetuate the antagonism. Having divided him into two alien entities, and sought all terms of applause to celebrate the one, while exhausting the vocabulary of reproach upon the other, the fragments were given over to two parties—the body to the doctors of medicine, and the spirit to the doctors of philosophy; who seem to have agreed in but one thing—that the partition shall be eternal, and that neither shall ever intrude into the domain of the other.

"As a necessary consequence of this rupture, the living reality, as a subject of study, disappeared from view, and the dignified fraction was substituted in its place. Not man but mind, became the object of inquiry. With the disappearance of the actual being, went also the conception of individuality, and there remained only mind as an abstraction, to be considered as literally out of all true relations as if the material universe had never existed. The method thus begun has been closely pursued, and for thousands of years the chief occupation of philosophic thought has been to speculate upon the nature and operations of mind as manifested in consciousness. Admitting the legitimacy of the inquiry, and that it has to a certain extent yielded valid results, it is clear that the effect of the divorce was fatally to narrow the course of investigation and to prevent all free and thorough research into the reality of the case; thus justifying the charge of emptiness and fruitlessness which is now so extensively made against metaphysical studies. From Plato to Sir William Hamilton, who inscribed upon the wall of his lecture-room, "On earth there is nothing great but man; in man there is nothing great but mind," a method has been pursued so confessedly vacant of valuable results, that its partisans have actually denied the attainment of truth to be their object; declaring that the supreme aim of philosophy is nothing more than to serve as a means of intellectual gymnastics.

"In pointed contrast with this view is the method of modern science. In a spirit of reverence for the order and harmony of nature where all factitious distinctions of great and small disappear; striving to dispossess herself of prejudice, and to aim only at the attainment of truth; rejecting all assumptions which can show no better warrant than that they were made in the infancy of the race, she begins with the simple examination of facts, and rises patiently and cautiously to the knowledge of principles. The study of man is entered upon in the same temper, and by the same methods, that have conducted to truth in other departments of investigation. Finding the notion of his duality, as interpreted in the past, with its resulting double series of independent inquiries, to be erroneous, science proceeds at the outset to reunite the dissevered fragments of humanity, and to reconstitute the individual in thought as he is in life, a concrete unit—the living, thinking, acting being which we encounter in daily experience. It is now established that the dependence of thought upon organic conditions is so intimate and absolute, that they can no longer be considered except as unity. Man, as a prblem of study, is simply an organism of varied powers and activities; and the true office of scientific inquiry is to determine the mechanism, modes, and laws of its action."

It would not be fair to infer from the two concludiug sentences quoted, that Dr. Youmans is a materialist of the Buchner school. That the body influences the mind (if we may be permitted still to employ the old-fashioned phraseology) is universally conceded, and one may admit, in a certain sense, the "intimate and absolute dependence of thought upon organic conditions," without accepting the dogma of the German Professor who declares that "thought is a secretion of the brain, just as bile is a secretion of the liver," or any of the extreme directions of the Moleschott and Buchner philosophy. To those extreme views, such as the non-existence of any spiritual principle in man or external to him, the consequent extinction of being at physical dissolution, and the like, Dr. Youmans makes no allusion whatever. His object is a purely practical one, namely, to advocate a kind of education which shall take due account of the bodily organism as the first and fundamental thing to be considered in dealing practically with human beings. His materialism is not presented in the theoretical form in which it is urged when it is designed to bear upon abstract philosophical or religious questions. But believing that, as a matter of fact, mental operations and bodily ones are inextricably interwoven, and perceiving that what we call mind grows with the body, changes with it, sympathizes with its vigor and its weakness, and finally decays with it, he insists that the two (if they are two) "depend upon common laws, which must be investigated by a common method"—a proposition which, so far as its practical aspects are concerned, few intelligent persons will at the present day feel inclined to dispute.

"Education," insists the lecturer, "is an art, like mining or bleaching;" science can do for it what, it has done for the other arts. Our teachers at present "belong mostly to the old dispensation;" all their art is "a mechanical routine;" our general education is "in a deplorably chaotic state." Science shows that "mental operations are corporeally conditioned, and that large regions of our nature are beyond direct control. Inherited organization is a factor of destiny never to be cancelled." But there is another factor in "that culture which rests upon a knowledge of the laws of life and character." True education does not consist in the acquisition of knowledge to be "siphoned into the intellectual receivers of school-room," but is rather, an attempt "to direct the working of a mechanism over which neither its owner nor his teacher is omnipotent—a mechanism in which effects follow causes, and which always operates according to law." The teacher must "take his pupil as he finds him; not a mental abstraction to be clossed with other 'minds' and worked by a universal formula, but a personal reality—a part of the order of nature which never repeats itself—a being with individual attributes which are inexorably bound within the limits of his organization."

The doctor thinks that the time has arrived when the curriculum of liberal education should be reconstructed, so that its course of study should include more science and less literature. He has but little respect for "the lore that is glorified by tradition," and we suspect from one or two allusions to the poets and metaphysicians and theologians, that he does not regard their labors as largely contributing to the benefit of mankind. The lecture is exceedingly able, and will amply repay perusal, by all thoughtful men—who will, of course, judge for themselves in what points the author's opinions are extreme. We have marked numerous passages for quotation, but have space for the following only, which we commend to the attention of all Californian students, writers and business men:

OVERWORKED BRAINS.

"We live in an age of intense mental activity, and ever increasing cerebral strain. Steam and electricity are tasked to bring daily tidings of what is happening all over the world, and impressions pour in upon the brain at a rate with which nothing in the past is comparable. The fierce competitions of business, fashion, study, and political ambition are at work to sap the vigor and ruck the integrity of the mental fabric, and there can be no doubt that there is, in consequence, an immense amount of latent brain disease, productive of much secret suffering and slight aberrations of conduct, and which is liable, in any sudden stress of circumstances, to brake out into permanent mental derangement. The price we pay for our high-pressure civilization is a fearful increase of cerebral exhaustion and disorder, and an augmenting ratio of shattered intellects. We are startled when some conspicuous mind, strained beyond endurance, as in the cases of Hugh Miller, or Admiral Fitzroy, crashes into insanity and suicide; yet these are but symptoms of the prevailing tendencies of modern life.

"Men admire the steam-engine of Watt and the calculating engine of Babbage; but how little do they care for the thinking engine of the Infinite Artificer! They venerate days, and dogmas, and ceremonials; but where is the reverence that is due to that most sacred of the things of time, the organism of the soul! We speak of the glories of the stellar universe; but is not the miniature duplicate of that universe in the living brain a more transcendent marvel? We admire the vast fabric of society and government, and that complicated scheme of duties, responsibilities. usages and laws which constitutes social order; but how few remember that all this has its deep foundation in the measured march of cerebral transformations. We point to the inventions, arts, sciences and literatures which form the swelling tide of civilization; but were they not all originated in that laboratory of wonders, the human brain? Geological revelations carry us back through durations so boundless that imagination is bewildered, and reason reels under the grandeur of the demonstration; but through the measureless series of advancing periods, we discover a stupendous plan. Infinite Power, working through infinite time converges the mighty lines of causality to the fulfillment of an eternal design—the birth of an intellectual and moral era through the development of the brain of man, which thus appears as the final term of an unfolding world—an institution of God for working out the destiny of a planet!"

MISCELLANEOUS.

G. W. Carleton & Co. have published a book of considerable value to Protestant theologians, in the Abbe Guettee's Historic Origin of the Papacy, translated from the French by A. Cleavelaud Cox, Bishop of Western New York. The Abbé incurred the hostility of the Ultramontane party in the Roman Catholic Church, in consequence of his views of the extent of the Papal authority, and he afterwards joined the communion of the Greek Church. The present work is designed to prove that the Papacy "first arose in the Ninth Century as an outgrowth of ecclesiastical ambition," and that the legitimate opposition of the Eastern Church to its pretensions was the first and true cause of the schism between the two churches.

Cheap editions, "Diamond editions," and illustrated editions of standard poets and novelists seem to be the order of the day. The cheapness of English publications of this kind has, not unnaturally, caused great consternation among American publishers, who are utterly unable to compete with their foreign rivals, unless relieved from taxation, or protected by a duty on imported books. Messrs. Blackwood, of Edinburgh, publishers of all the novels by the author of "Adam Bede," announce an illustrated edition of all her works—the first number, price sixpence, to appear on March 1st. Mr. J. D. Cooper, an eminent artist, will have charge of the engravings. Mr. Dicks, of London, has also commenced the issue in penny numbers, of Byron's works, as a companion to the "Shilling Shakspeare." The first number of the "Byron" is 64 pages crown 8 vo., and six illustrations—all for a penny. The publication of Cooper's entire works has been commenced by another London firm, at sixpence per novel

The American Literary Gazette says, that the political writings of Richard Cobden, by whose perseverance and ability the repeal of the Corn Laws was largely effected, have just been collected and published in London, in two volumes, inscribed by his friends to his widow. The name of an English editor does not appear on the title-page, but William Cullen Bryant, the poet, is announced as American editor. The Gazette states that that trashy novel "St Elmo," is selling so rapidly that Carleton & Co. the publishers, are compelled to request, by advertisement, the indulgence of the trade for a few days until a new and larger edition can be prepared to meet the increasing orders. A curious comment on the taste of the novel-reading public.

SPRING DRESS GOODS.—Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street, are now opening their Spring goods, just received from the manufactories of France and England—and most beautiful and tasty they are in style and pattern. Everyone is aware of the enormous extent of business that this house does, and the immense amount of capital they have engaged in it. By having the command of trade, and using only the ready cash in their purchases, this firm is enabled to replenish the great inroads their weekly sales make in their stock on hand, at lower rates than any other house on the Pacific coast. Their system is to retail their goods at only a small percentage above the cost of importation, and at cheaper rates than any other store in San Francisco can afford to do, and by this means add to their extended trade. We refer to their advertisement to-day, on the sixteenth page of our paper, for a full catalogue of the new style Spring goods they have recently received. Besides those there enumerated they have also received large invoices of Laces, Llama Point and Square Shawls, Talmas, French Cashmere and Embroidered Cashmere Shawls, the latter trimmed with Guipure and Chantilly. House and hotel-keepers will find there an immense stock of Sheeting, Linens, Towels, Shirtings, Blankets, etc., recently received from auction sales at a remarkably low figure.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

EDITORS OF THE CALIFORNIAN—Gentlemen: Permit me to acquaint my friends, through the medium of your paper, that the amount received for Premiums by the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY for the month of March was eleven thousand and sixty-eight dollars and five cents..... $11,068 05

The Losses during the same period amounted to six hundred and ninety dollars..... 690 00

The Number of Policies issued for the month of March was seven hundred and forty (740). The average amount of each risk was..... 882 14

As these facts indicate the progress of the Builders' Insurance Company (only six months old) I think it a pleasing duty to present them to the public. Respectfully, THOS. MOONEY, President.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY.—This is the name of an association with a capital of $200,000, formed for the purpose of brewing a superior quality of Stock Ale and Porter, and Lager Beer. The company have transformed that large brick flour-mill, located near the foot of Powell street, North Beach, into a first class brewery, with all the modern brewing improvements attached. Mr. Theodore Meetz, Secretary of the German Mutual Fire Insurance Co., is President, and Mr. Erzgraber, for many years past in business on Davis street, is Vice President of the company. There is an ample field in San Francisco alone for the complete success of this enterprise, if the Stock Brewery Company will but manufacture a really meritorious beverage of Stock Ale—a desideratum much needed.

WATER CURE.—Pioneer and only Water Cure in San Francisco, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street—fifteenth year. Removed twice only in more than twelve years.

AFRICAN TRAVELS AND ADVENTURES.

BY PRENTICE.

CHAPTER ONE.—INTRODUCTION.

THE vast and unexplored regions of Africa are still subjects of great interest in the eyes of the civilized world. There is a degree of mystery hanging over this strange country which renders almost any yarn concerning it credible, or, if not credible, interesting. Our yarn is peculiarly interesting, because no European ever before explored the region in question. Its accuracy is beyond dispute, since, no one else having explored it, none can dispute my narrative. I have as good a right to publish my travels in Africa as any one else.

CHAPTER SECOND.—PREPARATIONS.

On the First of April, 18— we landed at Umbug, on the Zanzibar coast. There we spent three days in acquiring a knowledge of the Mmpitzorang tongue, without which no taveler can undertake African exploration with any expectation of success. My fellow traveler, Spook, an Irishman by birth, was obliged to submit to an operation of the palate, performed by a native African, a Gwiak horse-doctor, with an oyster shell, before he could master some of the more difficult Mmpitzorang consonant combinations. I acquired the language quite readily, having always been affected with a tendency toward stammering, which for once was of some service to me. The perfect pronunciation of this language requires, however, great command of jaw and flexibility of tongue. At a little distance the conversation of the natives might by an American be mistaken for the noise occasioned by the overturning of a pile of bricks.

Our caravan consisted of thirty-two Bedouins, forty-two camels, fifty-two Jinglewanky natives of Skowgut. We were armed with sixty-two revolvers, Henry's and Sharp's rifles, and double barreled shotguns. We also provided ourselves with seventy-two compasses, in order not to get lost on the desert.

CHAPTER THIRD.—THE DESERT.

We crossed the great desert on a camel. I thought of Pharaoh and his host. No country is more appropriate for thinking of Pharaoh than Africa. The desert is very sandy, although I have seen quite as much in San Francisco. It was a solemn and monotonous journey. There were no way-houses at the oases where we stopped to feed our mules—I mean our camels—and of course no whisky. I have always heard that the desert was very hot, but there are places on the Placerville road in Summer which can discount the Great Desert for heat any day.

I saw some gravel hills one day which looked as if they held the "color." Had there been any water within a hundred and seventy miles I would have had the caravan stopped and gone to prospecting.

CHAPTER FOURTH.—INSECTS, ANIMALS AND NATIVES.

At length we bid farewell to the caravan and entered the Jowjib country on "our own hook." The Arabs were clamorous for backsheesh and more presents. They were about making off with nine of our Henry's repeating rifles, but Spook and myself kept them at bay with our six shooters, and finally upon Spook's swearing at them in Mmpitzorang they turned in abject terror and fled. These Arabs would like to "crowd the mourners."

All that day and the next we traveled through a rolling woody country covered with Wumwum trees. We were much annoyed by Squibob flies, which lay over any California fleas I ever met. These flies are about a foot in length, with bat-like wings covered with a greasy black substance of the consistency of soot. They are teetotally blind, and in flying always make straight for a man's face. They weigh sixteen or eighteen kilogrammes, and as they propel themselves through the air with great velocity the sensation resulting from the collision with these nasty brutes, or rather insects, is far from pleasing. Their jaws are furnished with a double row of molars, and they sting with a snout about four inches in length. Their bite is very poisonous, causing swellings of the size of a common wash basin, and their sting is venomous. The natives protect themselves by covering their faces with tar a few inches in depth. They annoyed us sorely, and we were at length obliged to have recourse to the same method for protection, which on the first night was the occasion of Spook's getting off a vile joke about our sticking together till death. We shot several, one of which I stuffed, intending to bring it home, but it was eaten from under my head one afternoon by a stray hippopotamus, who regard them when stuffed as a great delicacy. On the evening of the third day we came in sight of Jwizzomp, the capital of the Jowjib country, on the Nyraganboneset river. Being uncertain as to the reception we might receive from the Jowjibs, Spook and myself got in readiness nine double-barrelled shot-guns and seven repeating rifles. When within seven miles of the city we suddenly encountered a naked native in a burn grove, making shingles. He fled at our approach, shouting: "Wa ru gan ta bo gus yank," which means, "The devil's to pay and no pitch hot." I quickly drew a bead on him, and put a ball through his head from one of my Sharp's rifles. I did not mean to kill him. It was my intention only to wing him. Before we could reach the body it was seized by an enormous lion who bore it off in triumph to an impenetrable thicket of Mimosa trees. Just as he was about entering the grove we saw what appeared to be an enormous cable suddenly untwist and drop itself from the limb of a lofty Pugnose tree about one hundred feet high. The cable dropped itself like a flash of lightning on the lion, and wound itself in numerous folds about his body. It was a gigantic boa. Then ensued a most terrific conflict between the king of reptiles and the king of beasts, in which of course the deceased Jowjib took a negative part. There was for about a half hour some of the tallest cavorting around and roaring that Spook and I ever heard. It was equal to a dozen ten stamp quartz-mills. Finally the lion seized the boa by the waist, and the boa the lion by the tail. In the struggle which ensued the serpent wrenched the lion's tail off, and swallowing it in too much of a hurry choked himself to death with it. The grief of the king of the forest at discovering the loss of his tail was terrible, and his cries and lamentations awakened the forest for miles around. He at last lay down, apparently broken-hearted, and died.

CHAPTER FIFTH.—RHINOCEROSES.

Old Skidicodink, the chief of the Jowjibs, received us in a most hospitable manner. His first act was to send us two female rhinoceroses. This is the highest honor which can be bestowed upon a stranger. It is also considered a gross insult to refuse the rhinoceroses. These animals require to be fed with the choicest fruit and vegtables. They were also accompanied each by four keepers, and the expense of the whole devolved upon us. They were ferocious brutes, too, and in three hours after entering our camp had ripped open four of our best camels, and "hoisted" poor Spook many feet in the air, while he was endeavoring to persuade one to eat some candy (calling him by the appellation of Johnny).

Our stay in Skidicodink's country was limited. He seemed at first a well disposed chief, but as Spook remarked on leaving, was "too devilish free with his rhinoceroses." We returned the animals. This gave him mortal offense. Fearing some treacherous demonstration we left in the night.

CHAPTER SIXTH.—THE NYANZES.

The Nyanzi country, which we next entered, is the country of the Nyanzes. We were greatly inconvenienced here by the blue ant, an insect possessed of many disagreeable qualities. The story of the termites or white ants living in houses has no foundation. We saw none in our travels, consequently there are none in Africa.

The Nyanzes maintain a constant war with the Kutnamuazis. They wear a simple mbisu about the toes, and are very fond of pombe, an intoxicating liquor, which lays over any tangleleg I ever got outside of in California. About the middle of the Nyanzi country is lake Mbugut. The waters of this lake are strongly impregnated with some sort of gas, and its taste and effect is very much like that of champagne.

Spook was very fond of bathing in it, and would have staid by its borders and soaked until the Day of Judgment had I not made him "git up and git." The king of the Nyanzes, old Upsissiway, is an extremely cruel and despotic sovereign. In honor of our arrival he cut off the left legs of fourteen men, the right legs of six of his council of state, and hung three of his favorite wives. Even this is counted no great honor, since when the Nyanzi court receives visitors of extraordinary distinction hundreds are frequently sacrificed. There is a great demand for counsellors and wives, for old Upsissiway. The people seem singularly devoid of political distinction.

CONCLUSION.

Africa on the whole is hot. The natives being generally black, their origin and views on the great problem of existence are veiled in much obscurity. It will probably always occupy a conspicuous place on the maps. White people intending to travel or settle in Africa had better stay at home. Black people intending to emigrate from Africa will do well to observe the same caution.

A colored man was fined one dollar and costs in New London for "groaning like a 'possum in meeting."

DIAMONDS IN BRAZIL.—We have been gratified by a visit from H. M. Lane, Esq., the agent for Ayer's Pills, Sarsaparilla and Cherry Pectoral, in South America, who has just visited the mines with his medicines, and described to us the process of taking gems from the earth. A driver places his gang of slaves in a mud hole, where the gems are found, and pans out the earth in the water, like gold washers. The negroes are naked, to prevent their secreting the diamonds in their clothes. They are required to work facing their overseer, and forbidden to raise a hand to the face, lest they should swallow the jewels when found. Yet they do carry them away, by becoming so expert that they can snap them with their fingers from the pan to their mouth, without detection. Ayer's medicines are the talismans for their diseases, and it was not difficult to exchange, with the negroes, Ayer's Pills in about even weight, for the rough stones in which the brilliants are holden.—[Boston Leader.

ELECTRICITY.—The use of Dr. Bourne's powerful and superb battery may be had at a charge of only four bits—10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

THE SICK ARE CURED without medicines better than with them, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

The Curse of Our Country, produced on Saturday last at Maguire's Opera House, was a very funny affair. It was one of those pieces which are described as "bad enough to be good." Everyone laughed immensely at the pathetic passages, and speedily recovered from the gloom cast over their spirits by the little bits of fun occasionally introduced.

On Monday Miss Olivia Rand made a most successful debut—perhaps the most successful ever accomplished in this city. This new aspirant for public favor possesses many qualifications which should insure success. Her self-possession was remarkable; she had evidently bestowed much intelligent study on her part, and her voice was pronounced by all who heard it to be of a very fine quality. The play chosen by Miss Rand for the purpose of making her debut was the Rustic Prima Donna; she played "Snsette" very well, and displayed her rich contralto voice with great effect in the snatches of opera which occur in the piece. The performance commenced with Tom Taylor's fine comedy of A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing. In this Mrs. Harry Jackson and Henry Edwards acted splendidly. On Tuesday the bill was repeated. On Wednesday evening Miss Pauline Conger made her second appearance in public, in the play of The Hunchback, and acquitted herself very creditably in the character of "Julia," though she is very much at fault in her style of reading. A few years' experience on the stage may do much towards developing Miss Conger's natural abilities for the profession. Henry Edwards's "Master Walter" was a very clever impersonation. Pierpont Thayer played "Clifford" very cleverly, and Willie Edouin, the young comedian who has just joined the company at this house, caused much laughter by his enaction of the part of "Fathom." On Thursday night the performance commenced with Jocrisse the Juggler, which afforded Mr. Edwards an opportunity to display the versatility of his talent by appearing in the character of "Jocrisse," and terminated with The Rustic Prima Donna. Last night, after The Dowager, the comedietta of The Rustic Prima Donna was again produced. Miss Rand has gained immensely in the estimation of the public since her first appearance, and has a most promising future before her if—as we are led to understand is the case—she intends to follow the profession of the stage. This afternoon The Rustic Prima Donna will be presented once more. To-night the present season at the Opera House closes with The Streets of New York. On Monday the Opera House company will open at the Academy of Music in the new comedy of Society, which Mr. Maguire purchased in New York of Lester Wallack. The Opera House in the meanwhile will remain closed for a week, to give due preparation for the bringing out of the Black Crook with gorgeous splendor on Monday week. Sallie Hinckley and other new attractions, with a portion of the late Matinetti ballet troupe, have been engaged for the Black Crook at the Opera House. At the Academy on Friday evening next, Augustus Bilfinger, the attentive and obliging usher, will take his benefit, when he hopes to have seat occupied.

On Thursday evening a large audience participated in the complimentary testimonial tendered to M'lle Rosa Celeste, the young funambuliste, at Platt's Hall. The programme offered was a splendid one, and was excellently well performed. The "Grande Tio Concertante" by F. A. Howson, with which the concert commenced, is a very fine composition, and was admirably performed by Messrs. Frank A. and John Howson and Miss Clelia Howson, whose performance on the piano forte was extremely good. Henri Herberte sang "Will o' the Wisp" beautifully, and brought down the house The Bianchis sang with their usual skill. Miss Emma Howson sang "Flow on, Silver Rhine." Miss Ella Kemp, the young soprano, gained immense applause for her "Swiss Song," and was encored. The programme was well carried out. M'lle Rosa Celeste on making her appearance received a most hearty greeting from the audience. She performed the ascension on a wire stretched from the stage to the gallery with much grace, kneeling and posturing on the wire with as much confidence as ever.

Heller will remain one week longer at the Metropolitan Theater, and then visit the interior towns. His feat of "Second Sight" is undeniably a wonder and a puzzle, and constitutes his chief attraction. His programme, with the exception of "Second Sight," during the past week has been rather weak.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy, having terminated a successful series of lectures in Sacramento, has returned to this city, and will to-morrow evening deliver the first of a course of popular lectures in the new hall of the Mechanics' Institute, on Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny. To-morrow evening's lecture will be devoted to the dedication of the hall.

TOUCHSTONE.

ITALIAN OPERA.—The daily papers have announced the anticipated arrival of an Italian Opera Troupe from Guatemala, and have gently hinted that subscription books will shortly be opened for for a season at the American Theater—that Dead Sea of Theaterdom. We are fully aware of the gullibility of the dear public with regard to foreign artists, but we doubt if even a Guatemala Italian Opera Troupe can prove successful at the American Theater.

THE LAST OF THE BRIGANDS.

BY ANNIE T. WILBUR.

I WAS on the point of leaving Italy without having seen the face of a brigand; they were for me an extinct race, another mythology expired in the land of fictions. Nevertheless, it was reserved to me to see the last of these, as Cooper saw the last of the Mohicans.

At Civita Vecchia, we were seated at the table d'hote, and conversing to beguile our appetites. I had asked twenty times for any dish whatever, in all the idioms of the Roman States—nothing came. I asked for my bill; it was brought me; it mentioned only the price. I paid six pauls for the right of having waited for my dinner with my napkin on my knees. The master of the inn told me that all the provisions had been carried off by a dozen English families, who had invaded the house. I prayed him to give me a chamber and a bed; the last bed had just been given to an English admiral. This contretemps disarranged all my projects of staying there.

"Then I will take a walk about your city," said I to the innkeeper. "What is there to be seen at Civita Vecchia?"

"Nothing at all, sir, unless you obtain permission to visit the citadel; then you will see the celebrated Antonio Gasperoni, the bandit of Terracina and the Pontine marshes."

"Why did you not tell me this before? To whom must I address myself to procure this permission?"

"Go to your consul; he will procure it for you."

I easily obtained a card of entrance, and an officer of the Pope to accompany me.

The citadel of Civita Vecchia was built by Michael Angelo, who was an engineer, because he was everything; it is of the style of his frescoes and his statues; it bears his signet on every stone; its bastions are solidly founded; its walls are of adamant. The citadel defends itself; it has for its protection neither soldiers nor cannons, and opposes to its enemies only the pontificial escutcheon incrusted in the gate—this takes the place of batteries and a garrison. On the way, the officer who accompanied me spoke of Antonio Gasperoni and his forty-five assassins.

"One may well tremble in the presence of this terrible bandit," said he. "He ravaged for seventeen years the whole Roman country. The most frightful of his crimes was this: On the road to Naples, he stopped the postchaise of an Englishman, who was traveling with his daughter. He took away all the gold of the Englishman; but he detained the young girl—she was extremely beautiful. He carried her to his mountains. The unfortunate father, on arriving at Rome, set a price on the head of the brigand. The pride of Gasperoni revolted at this aristocratic pretension in the nobleman; a simple English citizen setting a price on the head of an illustrious chief, who had declared war against popes, and fought twenty battles with the pontifical dragoons! This was an insolence which wounded the pride of the brigand. One morning the Englishman received at Rome a box to his address; he hastened to open it—the unhappy father found in it the head of his daughter!"

At this denouement I recoiled ten paces; I even regretted having entered the citadel—the monument of Michael Angelo was no longer in my eyes anything but a menagerie of tigers. Meanwhile, curiosity quickly prevailed over my impressions of horror; I strengthened myself in my resolution, and caused to be opened to me the terrible door of the prison.

A wall, pierced with twenty cells, was on my left; on my right were long casements opening on a court; in this gallery twenty brigands were promenading; they stopped short at my entrance. I could not help smiling at the thought that I had thus arrested the band of Gasperoni. They saluted me politely, which re-assured me a little, for I was not much at my ease, surrounded by these formidable prisoners. I hastened to ask for Antonio Gasperoni; every hand pointed to him; he was standing in the door of his cell. He did not deign to advance toward me; he contented himself with saluting me with an air of tranquil benevolence. It was difficult to commence a conversation. I said, hastily:

"Well, Gasperoni, are you comfortably situated here?"

"One is never comfortable without his freedom," replied he shrugging his shoulders.

This movement was habitual to him.

"You suffered yourself to be taken by the dragoons, then?"

"I! no person could have taken me; I surrendered with all my troop. The holy father promised me liberty; he gave me only life—the holy father broke his word."

The officer, my cicerone, drew me apart, into the corner o the gallery, and said to me:

"I will explain to you, sir, how this happened. Gasperoni was weary of the life he had led for fifteen years. One day he confessed to the curate of the village his desire to abandon his profession of brigand. The priest promised to write to the holy father to procure his pardon and the right to re-enter society. Gasperoni added, as an express condition, that his companions should also be included in these favors. Negotiations were therefore commenced. Our government was greatly interested to rid itself of these bandits; they desolated the road to Naples, assassinated travelers, levied contributions, committed a thousand excesses. Soldiers were sent against them, but the soldiers drank with them instead of fighting them. Besides, the peasantry took the part of the baudits, because they always received a share of the booty taken from travelers. The pontificial dragoons alone were not to be trifled with; but the mountains seemed to shelter the brigands against these terrible horsemen. So there was no hesitation in treating with Gasperoni through the medium of the curate.

"This was the decision conveyed to the leader of the band by his confessor: The holy father grants Gasperoni his life; let the sinner hasten to perform the act of Christian submission, and all will be forgiven him; but he must first be imprisoned in the citadel of Civita Vecchia. The cunning Gasperoni hesitated for a long time; the curate used his influence; it is said, even, that he promised to intercede more efficaciously, to obtain an entire pardon, if he would obey the holy father, and that the doors of the prison should certainly be reopened to him as soon as he had become a submissive and respectful Christian. Gasperoni, urged by the priest, and more and more weary of his criminal life, at last consented to give himself up. His companions, long accustomed to obey him, followed him gayly into imprisonment. For several years they have been awaiting pardon; but I think it will never be granted them. Besides, the holy father has given what he promised; he will limit himself to that, I hope; these men are too dangerous."

I advanced again toward Gasperoni, who had not changed his position. He bore no resemblance to the brigands of our theatres. His face was mild, his features regular, and his smile amiable and pleasant; his hair was black and braided, long behind, and carelessly knotted with cord. He talked with good nature; his speech was indolent; he was sparing of gesture, unlike most Italians, who are lavish of them; but when a bold question wrested from him a reply, which he gave reluctantly, then alone the superiority of the man betrayed itself; his countenance became threatening, his eye stormy, his lip convulsive; his language vivid, dry, picturesque; one recognized the brigand leader of forty-five assassins.

"What is your real name?" asked I. "I have been told you call yourself Barbonne."

"That was my surname in the mountains; my name is Antonio Gasperoni."

"You have acquired for yourself an extensive notoriety. You are spoken of in Italy as Catiline, Spartacus, and other of your illustrious countrymen who declared war against Rome."

He smiled, and bowed modestly.

"What motive, Gasperoni, led you to adopt this profession?"

"A brawl at Naples."

"A brawl! that was a trifle; a very slight inducement for declaring war against society."

"Yes; but in that brawl I killed my enemy."

"Ah! that is a different thing. How long did you practise your profession?"

"Seventeen years."

"Have you been wounded?"

"Everywhere."

"You have then fought often?"

"Very often."

"With the soldiers of the pope?"

"No; with the dragoons."

"I have heard of your adventure with the colliers" (a gleam flashed from his eye, and his countenance was overshadowed). "Will you have the goodness to relate it to me? I shall be very grateful."

Gasperoni made a sign of acquiescence. The whole band surrounded us, to listen to this terrible recital from the lips of their leader.

"There were seventeen of the colliers," said Gasperoni; "they had sold me to the soldiers of the pope. I thought them my friends; we were quietly eating and drinking in their cabin. I had not stationed any sentinel—a great mistake, sir; but I thought these colliers honest people. You shall see. At midnight I heard the steps of soldiers; my ear recognized them at a distance. Betrayed! betrayed! my comrades! We seized our arms. The papal soldiers were at twenty paces from the cabin; there were twelve of us, and thirty of them. We fired repeatedly; I killed four for my share; I was wounded in the arm—there, look at the scar. The soldiers are bad shots. If it had been dragoons, we should have lost. This was nothing; listen. Three days afterwards we descended the mountain by night; I conducted my troop to the cabin of the colliers. The wretches were asleep. A voice from within exclaimed:

"'Who knocks?'

"'Open,' we replied; 'open to your friends, the soldiers.'

"One soldier cried:

"'Do not open it; it is Gasperoni!'

"I broke open the door with the butt of my gun. We entered and massacred all. Was it not just? It was necessary to kill them all, for their treason. Afterwards I counted the corpses; there were only fourteen! I searched the cabin: I looked everywhere; nothing—three had escaped. I will find them! I will find them! cried I to my comrades. I would have searched all Italy. Two years afterwards, we entered an isolated cabin near the sea, to get something to drink. We were acquainted with the place. There were peasants seated around the table. I have a keen eye to discover an enemy; I perceived the three colliers concealed in a corner. How pleased I was! Here they are at last, said I to myself. Here, here, approach; let us see your faces. You are afraid? The three bandits were pale and trembling. I have sought you for a long time, said I, laughing. They threw themselves at my feet, to ask pardon. I beckoned to my executioner; he fired three pistol shots. As for me, I shed blood only in combat; elsewhere, I have killed no one, not even the miserable colliers who sold me."

All the brigands attested the fact by a sign with their heads and hands; it was a certificate of morality, in pantomime, given to their respectable chief.

"Many things are related in the world respecting you," said I.

"Yes, yes, I know it; they will tell you a hundred fables."

"The daughter of the Englishman who set a price on your head—"

"It is not true," said he, interrupting me with vivacity. "I have never killed a woman."

"You must sometimes regret the independent life which you quitted voluntarily? If the holy father should pardon you, what would you do with your liberty?"

"I would be an honest man; I would go to Naples and work."

"That would be difficult for you, Gasperoni; your habits—"

"No, no, sir; the life of the mountains wearies me. I have tried it seventeen years. I was young, and fatigue was pleasant to me; but I am growing old; I suffer from my wounds; I have need of repose."

"Do you answer for all your comrades?"

"All."

"Is your executioner present?"

"Yes; here he is."

A serpent gliding into my hand would not have inspired me with greater terror. This hideous executioner was at my left, pressing my arm with his. Absorbed until then in the words of Gasperoni, I had not noticed him before. He never left his master; he watched and slept beside him, as on the mountains, as if still awaiting some irrevocable order of execution. Nothing more horrible could be imagined; the stupidity of crime was imprinted on his long and meagre face; his eyes was covered with the cadaverous epidermis of the eye of the ospray; the habitual contraction of a false smile played on his cheeks, but his look was icy. While I examined him, he was looking with singular attention at the buttons of my coat, as if he was never weary of counting them slowly.

"What is your name?" asked I, to distract him from this singular examination.

He remained stooping; his glance did not meet mine; his lips did not seem to part; a voice from his chest replied. "Geronimo."

"It was then you who were the executioner?" I remarked.

"Yes sir," still with his eye on my buttons.

"And have you killed many, Geronimo?"

"Yes, many; every time I was told to kill."

"I suspect you will not obtain pardon from the holy father."

A noisy burst of laughter from the whole band received my remark. Geronimo made a sign of indifference, and continued to count the buttons upon my coat.

I addressed myself to the company:

"It seems," said I, "that you are very gay, and that you do not grow poor in prison."

One bandit replied that the holy father fed them very well.

"We eat fish, meat, good vegetables," said he, "whenever we please; we have an allowance of two pauls per day. With that one can have good cheer."

"But you are more fortunate here than half Italy, than all the mendicants of the Roman States! So they give you two pauls per day?"

"Yes sir," replied Gasperoni; "it is good policy in the government. Those who practise our profession, or who intend to do so, know that in becoming prisoners they eat well, sleep in good beds, and are well paid; we do not always find it so in the life of the mountains. That induces us to give ourselves up when we are weary of highway robbing. And then we receive something from visitors."

"I am glad to see you all so happy," said I, on leaving him.

My guide confirmed what had just been said respecting the generosity of the pope.

Before leaving, I examined the band of Gasperoni, long and in detail. There was no face worthy of a painter, with the exception of the chief and his executioner: all the others were so prosaic, that they might have been taken for honest citizens, the victims of a mistake of the police. I do not know whether they ever wore the picturesque costume which artists give to Neapolitan bandits; their prison garments were those of Italian laborers—the gray pantaloons, brown vests, blue stockings, destroyed all the poetry of their profession. They had none of those picturesque features which we admire in lithograph; they contemplated without the slightest expression the luminous sky, the Roman atmosphere, the mild sun of Spring, which gilded the arches, and glided, like a friend from the mountains, beneath the vaults of the cells. The sea, which murmured at the foot of the citadel, did not awaken emotion; they seemed indifferent to everything, but without humiliation, with no visible expression of hope or despair; they smoked, with smiles on their lips, folded arms, and serene brows.

At last I had found the brigand whom I thought lost; but I must confess that many illusions were dispelled by this visit to the citadel of Civita Vecchia. Such is the band which desolated for fifteen years the Pontine marshes, which made the soldiers of the pope tremble, fought the dragoons, and despoiled so many rich Englishmen. Probably they will die in the citadel, awaiting their pardon.

TETE-A-TETE WITH A LION.

I SET out from King William's Town, in British Caffraria, in company with a brother officer, on a shooting expedition in quest of "big game"—a name given at the Cape to elephants, elands, giraffes, hartebeests, and the larger species of antelopes. The excursion had been long planned and looked forward to; and, at last, the leave of absence "on urgent private affairs" having been granted, one fine Spring morning we set out.

The party consisted of C—— and myself, who traveled on horseback; our English servant, who had charge of our two led horses, and two Hottentots; one of them drove the wagon, and the other acted as conductor to the leading pair out of the fourteen oxen by which it was drawn. In the wagon were stowed away some necessary cooking utensils of the roughest description, a bell-tent, some biscuit and flour for ourselves and a small supply of oats for the horses, to be reserved for a bonne bouche after extra hard work. Our party was completed by six pointers, destined to assist in the capture of small game; for the more solid parts of our daily meals we trusted to our guns, which kept us pretty well supplied; and at evening we always looked out for some spot well supplied with wood and water, where we could encamp for the night.

Perhaps those evening halts were the pleasantest hours of the expedition, when the wagon was out-spanned, as the Cape phrase goes, the fire lighted, the game cooked and eaten, and our party drew around the fire of acacia-wood to discuss the day's adventures over a cup of coffee and a pipe of cavendish. Sometimes, when our way lay through inhabited districts, our impromptu soirée was attended by Bushmen, Hottentots, or friendly Caffres, who had accompanied us during the day, pointing out the likeliest places for game, or "spooring" an eland or a hartebeest, over ground where no European eye could discover the slightest trace of the footprints of any living creature. They were most useful to us, and thought themselves amply recompensed by a share in our supper and a place by our fire. They often proved most entertaining companions, and as C —— spoke a little Caffre, and several of them spoke broken Dutch, we were able to make out their stories. Told as they were in those strange, lonely places by the wood fire, which cast its weird shadows on the tawny face of the narrator, with the darkness all around us, and the strange noises breaking now and then on that vast silence and solitude, every tale of peril and adventure, of doing and daring, sounded terribly real, far more so than I can make them appear, when read in a drawing-room so many thousand miles from the great wilds to which they belong.

Nevertheless, one of these stories made such an impression on me that I am tempted to record it here, hoping to convey to others some faint degree of the breathless interest with which it was listened to by C—— and myself, as it was narrated by one of these chance acquaintances, a wiry little Hottentot, who sat crouching over the fire, helping out the story by graceful gesticulation, which increased in energy as our absorbed attention flattered and pleased him.

Some years back, he told us, when he was a mere lad, he was in the service of a Dutch farmer in the Orange River territory, a part of the country much infested by lions. It was his duty to drive his master's cattle to pasture every morning, and to bring them back to the farm at night, an employment which left a good many idle hours on his hands; and what boy, Hottentot or European, could, under such circumstances, have resisted an occasional ramble after the decoying honey bird, or in search of ostrich eggs, or of some of the other numerous treasures so congenial to boy-nature with which those regions abound?

The cattle which, during their keeper's absence, were, of course, left to their own devices, generally proved quite capable of taking care of themselves; but on one occasion, when the Hottentot counted them over before driving them home, he perceived that a fine milch-cow was missing, having, doubtless, availed herself of one of his truant absences to wander away from the rest. To search for her before driving the herd home was impossible, and he could only trust to the carelessness of the upper servants, who often neglected to count over the animals as they entered the kraal.

In this hope he was not deceived; the loss passed unnoticed, and he resolved that it should be replaced, if possible, before he had again to risk the chance of discovery. Animated by the remembrance of former punishments, he immediately set out alone, and without telling any one, in quest of the missing cow. He took with him a little dried meat, and a gourd containing water, and started at a pace which few of his countrymen could have equaled, fleet of foot as they are; the immediate dread of the "samboch," or whip of rhinoceros hide, quite putting the more remote dangers of his lonely journey out of his head.

An hour or two of daylight still remained, and he had no difficulty in finding the "spoor," or track, of the lost animal, which the unerring instinct of his race enabled him to distinguish from that of any other of the herd, and he followed it steadily until the failing light made it undistinguishable from the footmarks of the wildebeest or gnu which crossed and recrossed it perpetually.

It became necessary to halt and give up the pursuit for that night, and he did so, though feeling thoroughly disheartened at the non-appearance of the cow, for whose safety he now felt the most serious uneasiness. His own situation also became a matter of anxiety as night closed in, with the sudden darkness of a tropical climate, and found him alone in that desolate country, far from all human help, and without any means of defense.

He was not long in resolving what to do; he was determined at all hazards to find his lost charge, and would almost have preferred dying where he was to returning without her; besides which, it would have been madness to attempt to retrace his steps in the dark; so, after marking with his stick the spot where he had left the "spoor," he looked about for some tree in which he could pass the night. He soon selected an acacia tree which grew close by, and lost no time in climbing up and settling himself in a fork of the branches. He ate and drank sparingly, keeping a supply for the necessities of the morrow, and then, completing his preparations by lashing himself to the main branch with his waist-belt, he drew his sheepskin blanket over his head, and composed himself to sleep.

It was still night; the silence only broken at intervals by the shrill notes of the screech-owl, the howl of the jackal or the dreary laugh of the hyena—sounds to which our friend was too well accustomed to be kept awake by them.

How long he slept he did not know, but he was awakened by a noise far different from any of those which had been mixing with his dreams—a noise which, once heard, could never be forgotten. Full, deep, and ominously near, rose the dreadful sound, waking all the echoes for miles round, yet seeming to come from under his very feet—the terrible roar of a hungry lion.

Loud as it was, it failed to rouse the tired boy into full consciousness, though it made him start till he strained the belt which fastened him to the tree. Scared and bewildered, and still only half awake, he fancied for a moment that he was actually falling into the jaws of a lion; then he asked himself was the terrible sound a dream, conjured up by his unwonted sleeping-place? A second roar thoroughly awakened him, and looking down, he saw in the moonlight a large black-maned lion, seated at the foot of the tree, his eyes fixed on himself, and his body motionless, save for an occasional angry lash of of his tail.

It was a dreadful moment; and the hours which followed were more dreadful still. All through that terrible night the savage beast sat watching his intended victim, and the terrified boy sat motionless also, afraid to stir and almost to breathe lest he should exasperate the lion.

Once his cramped attitude became unbearable; come what might, he felt that he must stretch his stiffened limbs for a moment, and as noiselessly as possible, he shifted his position; but he paid dearly for a momentary relief, for at his first cautious movement the lion rose with a roar and sprang at the tree, high enough to make the Hottentot's blood run cold, though not high enough to reach him. As he drew himself back, and coiled his limbs into a more cramped position, he could hear the deadly claws scraping down the tree with a sound which might well make his heart die within him.

Again the disappointed animal took up his post at the foot of the tree. The moon began to wane, and again the darkness came down on the face of the earth and brought a little respite to the prisoner in the acacia-tree. Under its friendly shelter, he could, at least, stretch his stiff legs, and in spite of the horror of his situation he dozed from time to time, always waking with a start to the same bewildered wonder as to whether all this was a reality or a dream. He was finally wakened by the raw cold air which precedes the dawn and by the rushing by of a herd of antelopes fleeing before the face of the common enemy.

It may be imagined in what breathless suspense he watched for the day, which would, probably, decide his fate; how eagerly he listened for some sound which might show him whether or not the lion had abandoned his post. Once the cry of a springbok fawn calling its mother gave him hope: if the lion was still there would not the creature's instinct warn it to flee? All too soon, however, the light grew stronger, and by degrees showed him the grim form at the foot of the tree—first in outline only, then the gleaming white teeth became visible, the cruel eyes still glaring up at him, the black mane, the savage face. Through all that long night the lion had not stirred.

More wretched hours, and then the sun rose hot and scorching, darting its unsparing rays on the poor Hottentot, till his brain throbbed painfully. The lion, too, was evidently distressed; his tongue was lolling out of his mouth, his tail lashed his flanks uneasily.

At last, toward noon, heat and thirst seemed to overcome him, and with throbbing heart the lad saw him moving slowly off. But he was mistaken if he supposed that the relentless animal would abandon his prey so easily; he stalked away a few paces and then stopped, looking back with a low growl, a precaution which he repeated every minute or two until he reached a pool of water about two hundred yards from the tree, where he quenched his thirst and hurried back to his post. All hope seemed gone now: and almost in despair the Hottentot saw the day fade into evening and evening into night.

It is useless to describe the second night; it was worse than the first, inasmuch as the terrible end seemed more certain, and the mind and body were alike worn out with terror and utter weariness; but on the other hand, he was somwehat reassured by the failure of the lion's repeated attempts to reach him with a spring; and when daylight returned, he ventured, after refreshing himself with a little food and water, to climb higher up to a post whence he could look in the direction of his master's farm.

His last hope now was, that the farmer or some of his fellow-servants might discover his absence and come in search of him; and long and wearily did he strain his eyes in that direction.

The rage of the lion when he saw his prisoner move was fearful to witness: he tore up the ground, bit the tree, and furrowed it with his claws; but the Hottentot felt more secure in his position than he had done at first, and, besides, the very despair of his situation gave him courage. Through all the long hot hours of another day he remaind at the look-out, often fancying that the indistinct forms of the hartebeests or gnus were those of his master, or some of his stalwart sons with their long rifles, coming to the rescue.

But every hope ended in disappointment; and at last, late in the afternoon, he gave it up in utter despair, and prepared, with a sinking heart, to return to his former place, the only one in which he could fasten himself securely.

As he began his cautious descent his eye was caught by four dark objects in the distance coming toward him. His strained and dizzy eyes could hardly distinguish them, but surely, surely they were advancing; did his longing hope deceive him again, or was their line too even, their advance too regular, for that of a troop of wild animals? This time he was not mistaken; they came on slowly but surely, and presently he could distinguish their forms, could see that they were four men on horseback.

A slight rising ground hid the lion from any one coming from that direction until within fifty yards of him. In all the tumult of his sudden relief the Hottentot could perceive that; and taking off his sheepskin he waved it over his head, shouting with all his strength, "A lion! a lion!" long before his voice could reach his deliverers. They, meanwhile, came steadily on, and now he could recognize them, the old farmer himself leading the party, two of his tall sons rifle in hand—a welcome sight—and a Hottentot servant carrying a flint-lock musket.

The lion was raging furiously, maddened by the cries and gestures of his prisoner, who only thought of warning the advancing party of their danger before they came upon the animal unawares.

Suddenly the Hottentot, who had dismounted, and was following the "spoor" on foot, stopped and looked up. Either the boy's cries had reached his ear, or his quick eye had caught sight of his figure, for he pointed toward the tree, and then, in an instant, he was on his horse, and the whole party advanced at a brisk gallop.

This was a moment of great suspense to the poor worn-out Hottentot, who could hardly find voice to send out his warning cry—"A lion! a lion!" He saw the advancing party gallop on, till, on gaining the rising ground, they suddenly halted—they had seen the lion.

The magnificent beast became aware of their presence at the same moment, and with leisurely pace advanced to meet them—then stood still, moving his tail slowly from side to side and uttering a suppressed growl. His rage was a splendid sight; but it may be believed that his adversaries did not lose much time in contemplating it.

They had hastily dismounted and tied their horses together, with their heads turned away from the lion, lest terror should render them unmanageable, and now they advanced on foot. The old Boor, who had shot many a lion in his day, headed the party, close behind followed his eldest son, and the remaining two brought up the rear, all moving slowly and cautiously, each with a finger on his trigger.

The lion moved a step or two to meet them, then suddenly crouched, with his head resting on his fore-paws, and remained so till, when his enemies had approached within twenty paces of him he began, slowly and noiselessly, to rise to his feet. As slowly, as noiselessly, did the old farmer drop on his knee, the others following his example: at the same moment all four raised their guns to their shoulders, and as the lion was in the act of springing, the sharp crack of the three rifles and the dead report of the flint musket were heard at once.

There was a terrible roar of pain and baffled rage, and the noble animal bounded forward in his agony, and fell at the feet of the farmer and his sons. How the Hottentot got down from the tree he never knew: he remembered nothing afterward until he stood by the dying lion and saw him receive his coup de grace by a ball through the head.

The farmer pronounced him the finest lion he had ever seen, and was so rejoiced at his death and at the safety of his servant, that our friend escaped the punishment, from dread of which he had nearly run on so horrible a fate. Of the truant cow, less fortunate than her keeper, only the larger bones were found, not far from the scene of this adventure.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1867.

THE "KINGDOM" OF CANADA.

THOUGH we do not share in the alarm of Representative Raymond at the prospect of the consolidation of the British North American Provinces under a monarchical form of government, nor see in that measure any immediate "menace to the safety of this Republic," it is nevertheless one that is very naturally contemplated with no ordinary degree of interest in the United States, and with some little excitement in several of the States occupying a frontier position with reference to the proposed "kingdom," or "Dominion."

The joint Standing Committee on Federal Relations in the Maine Senate, to which was referred that portion of the Governor's Message relating to the British American Confederation, has reported certain resolutions, in which the United States Government is asked to interpose, and remonstrate "with the British Government against establishing any system of government in North America, the influence of which would endanger the friendly relations of the people of the British Provinces with the people of the United States." The report that prefaces these resolutions, is able, and dignified in tone. It concedes the right of the people of the several Provinces to adopt whatever form of government they prefer, but alleges that no movement has been made among the people in favor of the new project and that monarchy is to be forced upon them by the Imperial Parliament without regard to their wishes, "crushing out existing Provincial governments with the same disregard of popular right exhibited in that 'act of union' by which Lower Canada in 1840 was placed under the control of Canada West." The remonstrance of the Maine Committee, in short, instead of proceeding upon the ground of the absurd resolution which the Hon. Mr. Raymond asked leave to offer in the House of Representatives, namely, "that the establishment in the immediate vicinity of the United States of a powerful monarchy, under the support of a foreign nation, cannot be regarded otherwise than as being hostile to the peace, and menacing the safety of this Republic," is dictated, ostensibly at least, by a regard for the rights and liberties of the people of the Provinces themselves, who, it is assumed, are threatened by the British Parliament with the imposition of a government against which they protest. Hence the Committee calls upon the United States to take measures, not to protect themselves against the dangerous monarchy that has struck such terror to the soul of Mr. Raymond, but "to interpose in behalf of free institutions, and the rights of the people of British North America," arguing that any invasion of those rights "made in the interest of monarchical governments and against the wishes of the people, is as clearly a violation of the principles of the Monroe Doctrine as was the invasion of Mexico by France;" and we confess that we are unable to see where the analogy between the two cases fails, or why the argument is not sound—assuming it to be true, as alleged in the Report, that the people of the Provinces are opposed to the adoption of the scheme of government devised for them by the British Parliament.

And upon this fact depends the whole question in regard to the propriety of any interference on the part of the United States. If the people of the Provinces want a king to govern them, they have an undoubted right to gratify their taste in that particular, and also to select one of the King Log or of the King Stork pattern, as they may prefer. It is no business of ours, even were the new monarchy, with its four millions of subjects, likely to prove as terrible a neighbor as Mr. Raymond imagines. The true idea of the Monroe Doctrine is not dictation to our neighbors as to how they shall govern themselves, but the prevention of all foreign dictation which shall interfere with their governing themselves. The question of fact then is, whether this new kingdom is the work of British schemers, to be imposed by force or management upon the people of the Provinces, or whether the latter are really in favor of it—and this is a question which, with our present limited means of information, it is by no means easy to decide. It is evident, however, that the feeling in regard to the project differs greatly in the different Provinces. In Canada the politicians, if not the people are in favor of it. But when the proposition of Confederation was agitated in the Winter of 1866 the lower Provinces opposed it bitterly. These—Nova Scotia the most prosperous of them all—have always gloried in their independence of Canada, and hitherto they have been consistently averse to confederation in any shape. They accordingly sent delegates to England to oppose it, and induce Parliament to allow them to remain separate and distinct, as formerly. Earl Derby, in his speech in the House of Lords on the 19th February last, says: "It was only in the Autumn of last year that delegates from the several provinces came to England to negotiate with her Majesty's government as to the frame of this bill. These negotiations have now happily been completed." What influences have been brought to bear upon these delegates since "Autumn of last year" we can only conjecture—at least until a list of the officers and dignitaries of the "kingdom of Canada" shall have been given to the public; but there are not wanting those who charge that the majority of the delegates betrayed their trust, so far at least as to permit themselves to be persuaded to acquiesce in a measure even more offensive to their constituents than the one they had been sent to oppose; unless indeed they imagined that a "kingdom" or "Dominion" with a Prince of the blood as regent, would prove less distasteful to the provincial mind than a plain confederation.

That Nova Scotia still remains hostile to the scheme, there can be little doubt. There are passages in Lord Derby's speech that clearly indicate as much. "I am willing to assume," he says, "that a certain proportion of the population of Nova Scotia are disinclined to the Union; but what have they on the other hand?"—a truly significant question! There had also, he submitted, been a memorial addressed to himself, by "a small minority of the Canadian Parliament," in which they complained that the measure "was not remitted to the provinces to be criticized in detail"—a complaint which the noble Lord summarily disposes of in five words—"But the objection is worthless"—that being perhaps as much notice as a provincial objection is considered entitled to receive in the Imperial Parliament.

Upon the whole, we are, with the present amount of information accessible on the subject, inclined to the opinion that the people of the provinces are not in favor of this measure, though the politicians, especially of Canada, are. Our theory is that the scheme originated with Lord Palmerston, with the view of establishing a monarchical government on our northern frontier, as a counterpoise to the influence of the United States, and that it had some connection with Louis Napoleon's Mexican project. Notwithstanding the guarded and judiciously chosen language of Lord Derby's speech, there are several passages in it that tend to confirm this theory. He congratulates the Provinces upon their wisdom in making "the monarchical principles under which they have lived so long, and which they desire to transmit to their descendants, the foundation of their confederation," and he most significantly adds, as reporter in the third person:

"The federation which was about to be formed would, he hoped, be worthy to take its place side by side with the United States of America. The time might come when it would rank second in size to Russia only. In revenue, in trade, and in shipping it already exceeded the thirteen colonies which eighty years ago, at the time of the Declaration of Independence, became the United States. We were now laying the foundation of a great State, perhaps greater than that of England."

If this scheme is ever carried out to a successful consummation, we shall witness the remarkable spectacle of the British North American Colonies accepting monarchical institutions at the very time when a majority of the British people at home seem anxious to overthrow them, or at least to modify them in close imitation of our own. To one who has watched the course of the recent reform agitation, who reads the organs of radical opinion in England, and the speeches of its leaders in and out of Parliament, who remembers that only a few weeks since a great and orderly procession marched through the streets of London carrying the American flag and cheering vociferously in front of the U. S. Consulate, while it passed by the heir apparent of the throne in stern silence—to such, it cannot but seem eminently judicious in those who would provide for the perpetuation of British institutions, to hasten to plant them in another soil, before they either perish in that which gave them birth, or are transformed past all recognition.

"HE sleeps like a top," we say in familiar language of a person completely under the influence of Morpheus; and we generally imagine the simile taken from the momentary pause of a peg-top, or humming top when its rotatory motion is at its height. But no such thing; the word top is Italian. Topo in that language signifies a mouse; it is the general name, and applied indiscriminately to the common house, field-mouse and dormouse, from which the Italian proverb, "Ei dorme come un topo" is derived—Anglice, "He sleeps like a top."

WOODWARD'S GARDEN is now blooming, fresh and beautiful with its Springtime life. No other place in California can boast of so many natural beauties, and accessories of art and culture. The grounds are daily visited by hundreds of pleasure seekers every pleasant Spring day.

THE United States has a greater length of railways than all other countries together.

THE STUDY OF THE CLASSICS.

THE question of the entire reconstruction of the curriculum of collegiate education, which has been recently discussed both in England and the United States with steadily increasing interest, seems now to be attracting more general and more earnest attention than ever.

The popular objections urged against giving so much prominence to the Greek and Latin languages in the scheme of modern education, are familiar to all. They are "dead languages;" no one speaks them; for all practical purposes they are useless; the study of them may train certain mental faculties, but the study of modern languages would do that, besides furnishing the key to extensive fields of contemporaneous literature. The intellectual discipline and training involved in the process of acquiring Greek and Latin are not, it is urged, in any respect more valuable than would result from the study of French and German. The former have no special tendency, not possessed by the latter, to exercise and develop any particular power of the mind. The popular argument also denies the immense superiority claimed for ancient over modern literature, insists that much of the former is absolutely worthless, and much absolutely debasing in its tendency, while all that is really valuable has been incorporated in modern thought, and reproduced over and over again in new forms, in every modern language.

The opposition to the study of the ancient classics, which assumes this shape, comes, of course, for the most part from those who are either utterly ignorant of them, or who at least have never drank very deeply at the spring from which shallow draughts are pronounced by Pope "dangerous" rather than salutary. But there has arisen quite recently another and a very different class of objectors, themselves not unfurnished in "the lore glorified by tradition," nor blind to its beauties and excellencies, who in the name of science demand, not the exclusion of classical studies from the scheme of education, but such a reconstruction of it as shall deprive those studies of the undue prominence they have hitherto enjoyed. These do not care to dispute the literary superiority claimed for the classics over modern compositions; they rather challenge for science a superior value and importance over any and all literature. They ask that less time shall be devoted to the laborious idleness of composing Latin and Greek verses, and more to acquiring at least an elementary knowledge of physical science. Never before has this demand been so imperious, nor has it ever come from sources so influential. Evidently it must be complied with; but what we have to fear in the United States is that the reform will be too radical, and that the new curriculum of our colleges will be dictated, not by men of liberal culture, like those who will have control of the similar movement in England, but by a class of pompous dunces who cherish a jealous hatred of all culture, except such as is showy or directly utilitarian, and on whom the mention of a "dead language" produces the effect of the exhibition of a red rag to a vicious bull.

[For the Californian.]

TWO WOMEN.

Kate sat folding her yellow hair,
Where the Summer winds swept by,
While Blanche tossed out her ebon locks
With many a blush and sigh.

For both were fair, and the world was wide
Where they sought to reap and win
A harvest of joys, like golden sheaves,
With many a heart within.

Kate like a queen would conquer and reign,
With a kingdom of men at her feet:
But Blanche like a lily would bend and sway,
Where the waters of love should meet.

And each had the wish her thought had made;
But their paths were wide apart,
For one ruled a host of fools at her beck,
And the other ruled only—a heart.

And Time the toiler, when fleeting by,
Found Blanche as bright and fair
As in the days of the Summer winds
That waved Kate's yellow hair.

But the yellow hair was thin and gray,
And the heart of Kate grown old;
For the hearts of women must love or die,
And they never thrive on gold.

San Francisco, March, 1867. X—X.

THE Grass Valley National, edited by John R. Ridge, the poet, commenting on a paragraph in last week's CALIFORNIAN, in reference to Mr. Soulé's poem delivered before the Mechanics' Institute, says: "Everybody in the interior who visits 'the great metropolis, can seen at once that there is but little taste for poetry there, and but little taste for anything, unless it be for snobbery, and all its diluted imitations. The 'aristocracy' of that city would be called the 'vulgar mass' in any of the old, enlightened communities of the world.'

New York has twenty thousand more school children than there are inhabitants in Boston.

[For the Californian.]

TURKEY-HERDING IN CALIFORNIA.

BY TREM.

I HAD always admired—at a distance—the pleasures attendant on bucolic pursuits, but it was not till I came to California that I made experience of the delights of Arcadian life. I arrived in Sacramento in the Spring of 1860. I became tired of seeking for a situation as book-keeper in a commercial house. I became tired of seeking for the aforesaid position for the reason that the chances were considerably in favor of my failing to obtain it. Then I despised Sacramento, and I said to myself, "I will fly this dull and slothful city, and will, when an opportunity offers, betake myself to the rich and verdant country which surrounds this abode of frogs and mosquitoes." I requested my friends to bring me tidings of any situation in the country which they thought might be likely to suit me. Some time after I had resolved to shake off the dust of my feet against Sacramento, a friend—one of the friends whom I had requested to procure me a situation in the country—knocked at my door, and, on my inviting him in, introduced a friend of his who, he said, owned a ranch on Dry Creek. My friend's name was Bowers; his friend's name was Grinder. Bowers said:

"You know you told me you were tired of the city, and wished to get an easy job in the country."

I replied that such was the case.

"Then," said Bowers, "I think I've found a job that will just suit you. This is Mr. Grinder. He wants a man to go out on Dry Creek to look after his turkeys."

"What am I to do to the turkeys?" I asked.

Grinder replied: "Oh, you'll have to drive them out every morning to a valley about two miles from the house; look after them while they are feeding, and then in the evening drive them home."

I accepted the engagement immediately. Here, I thought, is indeed a realization of my ideas of Arcadian happiness. I reflected on the delights of a shepherd's life, "and," said I to myself, "even if 'turkey-herd' does not sound so romantic as 'shepherd,' probably turkeys are even more pleasant to manage than sheep, when one gets used to them." I fancied myself lying on the grass in the lovely country, with my beautiful flock grazing around me, and I longed to fly from the noisy cares and vices of the city, and become an innocent turkey-herd. Grinder was to start the next day for Dry Creek, and I was to ride out with him. Before leaving Sacramento I laid in a stock of the latest novels and a large supply of tobacco. I also thought of purchasing a flute, as being an instrument well adapted to bucolic regions. As I could not play the flute, and I doubted whether or no turkeys appreciated music of any kind, I bought a pipe instead. Oh! what a happy life I pictured to myself! After driving—or rather leading—my happy flock to the green pastures, I could lie on my back, with my pipe in my mouth and a novel in my hand, until the falling shadows of night warned me to drive my charges homeward. The beautiful birds would circle round me, cropping the green, luxuriant grass, and in the course of time would learn to understand their pastor's signals. I thought, when I have become tired of one spot, and have read until I wish for change of scene, I will give three shrill whistles, and my flock will follow me to pastures new, where I shall again lie down and commence a new chapter of a novel. Dreams!—dreams! But I must not anticipate.

I went with Grinder to Dry Creek.

Grinder was a thoroughly good fellow. Far be it from me to say that Grinder deceived me willfully; no; but my knowledge of ornithology (or the branch of that science which relates to the habits of the turkey tribe) was small. I don't blame Grinder. I have told this turkey story to one of my dearest friends, but he cannot accuse me of having reproached Grinder. I arrived at Grinder's ranch—I think he called it a ranch—late in the evening. He (after I had partaken of a supper of beefsteak, which I am sure cost only five cents a pound in Sacramento) said:

"Your flock rise early in the morning. At about four o'clock you will hear them calling out for water, and you must then fill their troughs."

This was pleasant intelligence to me, fatigued by a ride of thirty miles. I had no idea that the turkey was the proverbial early bird which gathered the worm. However, as I had insisted that no hardships could daunt me I determined to rise at four o'clock though firmly impressed with the idea that those who rise early die young, and that the habitual early riser in course of time becomes misanthropic, selfish, dishonest, dissolute and otherwise demoralized. I indeed considered it by no means a praiseworthy custom of my turkeys that they required a drink at four o'clock in the morning. Most of the early risers whom I have known were so because they wanted a drink.

At four o'clock A. M. my turkeys commenced to shriek for drink. I dressed and hurried out to fill the troughs. Fifteen hundred dissipated looking turkeys immediately flew down off the trees on which they lodged and struck me for drinks. I satisfied the wants of these degraded bipeds and went in to breakfast. After a meal consisting of tough beefsteak and bad bread, Grinder said:

"Now we'll drive the turkeys out."

"Can't I do it alone?" I asked.

"No," said Grinder; "We generally want five to do that, but to-day we are only four: you, me, my brother and the boy. It is pretty hard work to keep them together at first; they are wild in the morning and they have to be driven three miles."

I insisted that I could lead my flock to pasture without any assistance.

Grinder replied: "Wait awhile. You'll have work enough by and by."

I could not understand Grinder very well at first, but afterwards I perfectly appreciated the force of his remarks.

I asked: "What are the turkeys to be driven out three miles for? Is there better grass for them to graze on out there?"

Grinder answered: "No, not grass, but grasshoppers. That's what fattens turkeys."

Of course, I laughed; I was not to be caught by such chaff as that, although I was green in the country, and inexperienced in the turkey-herding business.

After breakfast the Grinder brothers, the boy and myself turned out to drive the turkeys out to their grazing ground, that is, after I had given the beautiful birds a sack of wheat for breakfast.

After much trouble we four—the two Grinders, the boy and myself—got all the turkeys together and drove them through the dry, yellow grass where their red wattles looked like scarlet flowers.

I was instructed by my employer, before starting, to tie a piece of rag to a stick and thus form a whip with which to drive the flock. I, resolved, if I had to become a turkey-herd, to make the turkeys respect me, fastened my best scarlet silk pocket-handkerchief to my swell gold-headed cane, and proceeded to fulfill my duties.

During the first two miles of our journey all four of us had to continuously run around the flock to keep them together. The first two miles accomplished, I was left alone to drive the flock to graze in the valley a mile distant. My assistants having gone away, then did I run around fifteen hundred turkeys for the space of an hour and a half. I consoled myself with the reflection that when I got the dear birds on the luxuriant grassy plain for which we—I and fifteen hundred turkeys—were bound, our troubles would be over, the turkeys would graze peacefully, and I should be able to enjoy my pipe and read the novel which I had in my pocket. All pleasure is comparative, I thought; I should not appreciate the delightful dolce far niente which I shall enjoy this afternoon half so much, were it not for the exertion I have been forced to display this morning.

So I reflected as I ran round fifteen hundred turkeys. I observed that my beautiful flock became gradually less erratic as they approached the termination of their journey, and I began to admire, respect, nay, almost to love them. I was in sight of the open plain, which spread out its broad expanse of about five square miles. "Here," thought I, "I can rest." Soon, too soon, we reached the plain, and in an instant, one of the fifteen hundred turkeys committed to my charge rushed frantically, at the rate of seven miles an hour, due north. This bird was immediately followed by some three hundred turkeys in Indian file. Another started east, and drew with it a train of a hundred or more followers, and others behaved in the same manner. My duty as a turkey-herd was of course to prevent the turkeys from straying, and I immediately started in chase of the first turkey who started off in this idiotic manner. "Why," I thought, "cannot these wretched feathered bipeds peacefully graze on the withered weeds which represent grass in Summer time in this Golden State? Why need they, after having been driven three miles for the purpose of affording them the advantage of this pasture, behave like feathered maniacs?

I had not, however, much time for reflection, far less for smoking or novel-reading. For five hours I ran like a race horse round a circuit of five miles, driving in errant turkeys by flourishing a red silk handkerchief fastened to a gold headed cane. After a time the hideous truth broke upon me. All my visions of bucolic ease vanished. I became aware of the awful truth that I was employed at the rate of $15 a month to drive daily fifteen hundred turkeys a distance of three miles, not to graze on the herbs of the field, but to eat grasshoppers; and that I was required, when each particular turkey out of the fifteen hundred started in pursuit of an individual grass-hopper, to arrest him and bring him back. I found it impossible with fifteen hundred turkeys, to do this, and I trust no one will accuse me of lack of energy when I confess that on the expiration of my week's engagement I resigned my office as turkey-herd.

TWENTY years ago the Pacific Mail Steamship Company began business with a capital of $200,000 and two small steamers. They have now a fleet of 30 steamships all paid for, and have, during their existence, divided over $10,000,000 to the shareholders.

YOUNG IN HER WEEDS.

Her shawl was as sable as night;
And her gloves were as dark as her shawl;
And her jewels—that flashed in the night—
Were black as a funeral pall;
Her robe had the hue of the rest,
(How nicely it fitted her shape!)
And the grief that was heaving her breast
Boiled over the billows of crape.
I couldn't help thinking the beauty,
In mourning the loved and the lost,
Was doing her conjugal duty
Entirely regardless of cost.

THE Southern Relief Meeting on Thursday evening was largely attended, and it was addressed by citizens of every shade of political opinion. Among the speakers were Arch-Alemany, Dr. Cohn, Dr. Eells, and the Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald of the Methodist Church South. Letters were read from the President of the San Francisco and San Jose Railroad Company; the President of the California Steam Navagation Company; the President of the Central Pacific Railroad; and from the Presidents of the Alameda Railroad and the San Francisco and Oakland Railroad, offering to transmit contributions free. A circular letter was also read by Mr. Selby from Charles E. McLane, requesting all agents of Wells, Fargo & Co. to aid the Committee in their work. and transmit all funds free of charge. The sum of $11,000 was contributed before the adjournment of the meeting as "a nucleus" for the relieff und.

THE New York Herald has hit upon an original plan of reconstruction, which will, if adopted, speedily restore a good understanding between the North and the South, and effect a thorough reconciliation of sections and parties. This novel plan is, for the Southern people at once to nominate a Presidential ticket with Gen. Grant for President and Gen. Lee for Vice President. The Herald is sanguine that such a movement would put an end to all heartburnings, and make the people of the entire country as harmonious as Barnum's happy family. One rather serious objection to this pleasant and promising scheme, which will be likely to render it unpalatable to the Southern mind, is that it would involve the necessity of an unconditional acceptance of the Congressional policy in opposition to that of the President, as a preliminary.

THE BANNER OF PROGRESS, the organ of the Spiritualists on this coast, is quite eloquent in maintaining the immense superiority of "our beautiful and philosophical faith" over "the old theology." We should infer from the coarse, vituperative style—partaking at times of the spirit of low vulgarity—in which this organ assails the clergy and the believers in Christianity, that courtesy toward opponents is one of those "graces" that are not inculcated by "our beautiful and philosophical faith."

DR. JORDAN'S Anatomical Museum, at the Eureka Hall, Montgomery street, is visited by nearly every stranger who visits our city. This institution is thronged with anatomical and pathological wonders.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.—The tariff of prices for admission to the forthcoming Paris Exposition has been published. There are to be three separate enclosures—the park, containing the Exhibition building itself, the Horticultural Gardens, and the Billancourt enclosure, which is especially devoted to agricultural matters. The prices for the first week of the Exhibition are exceptional, and are to be $4 in gold on the opening day, and $1 80 the subsequent days. After the 8th of April, 20 cents admission will be charged to the park, and 30 cents to the Horticultural Garden. The Billancourt enclosure will have a special tariff of entrance fees, not yet decided upon. For a season ticket to the exhibition $20 will be charged for a gentleman, and $12 for a lady. Season tickets are to bear the photographs of their holders.

A SAN FRANCISCO STABLE.—There is an imposing brick building on Ellis street, near Powell, some 60 feet front by 137 feet deep, three stories in hight, with a mansard roof and a handsome ornamental front—a building that in style and appearance casts Platt's Hall and our other public Halls entirely in the shade—and yet this building is but a "horse hotel," a livery and boarding stable. The first floor is devoted to the storage of vehicles, harness room, etc; the second floor to 100 stalls for horses—these stalls are large, roomy, well lighted and each provided with an ample ventilator. This story is 14 feet in hight, and is lighted by north and south windows, and by a skylight 14 feet square. The upper story is set apart for the preparation and storage of the food for the various "fast goers" that board at this hotel, which is properly prepared and measured according to the best approved horse sanitary regulations, and served to each boarder seperately in the French fashion. A large yard is attached to the establishment for the animals to exercise in, and everything in detail is in a corresponding degree of perfectness. The owners of valuable horses must be worse than Arabs if they do not fully appreciate the care and watchfullness here bestowed on their animals. This building was erected for Mr. P. A. Finigan, formerly of White's stables on California street, especially for the business to which he has devoted it. The whole business is under his personal care and supervision. To Messrs. Marquis & McDougal, architects, should be awarded the credit of designing and erecting one of the most perfect establishments of its kind in the United States.

BARBARA.

ON the Sabbath day,
Through the churchyard old and gray,
Over the crisp and yellow leaves, I held my rnstling way;
And amiu the words of mercy, falling on my soul like balms,
'Mid the gorgeous storms of music,—in tbe mellow organ-calms,
'Mid the upward streaming prayers, and the ricb and solemn psalms,
I stood careless, Barbara.

My heart was otherwhere
While the organ shook the air,
And the priest, with ontspread bands, blessed tbe people with a prayer;
But, when rising to go homeward, with a mild and saintlike sbine
Gleamed a face of airy beanty with its heavenly eyes on mine,—
Gleamed and vanished in a momeut,—O that face was surely tbine
Out of heaven, Barbara!

O pallid, pallid face!
O earnest eyes of grace!
When last I saw thee, dearest, it was in another place.
Yon came rnnning forth to meet me with my love-gift on yonr wrist;
The flutter of a long white dress, then all was lost in mist,—
A pnrple stain of agony was on the moutb I kissed
That wild morning, Barbara.

I searched in my despair,
Snnny uoon and miduight air;
I could not drive away the thought that you were lingering there.
O many and many a winter night I sat when yon were gone,
My worn face buried in my hands, beside the fire alone,
Within the dripping churchyard, the rain plashing on your stone,
You were sleeping, Barbara.

'Mong angels, do you thiuk
Of the precious golden link
I clasped aronnd yonr happy arm, wbile sitting hy yon hrink?
Or when that night of gliding dance, of langhter and guitars,
Was emptied of its music, and we watched, throngh latticed bars,
The silent midnight heaven creeping o'er us witb its stars,
Till the day hroke, Barbara?

In the years I've changed,
Wild and far my heart hath ranged,
And many sins and errors now have heen on me aveuged;
But to you I have heen faithful, whatsoever good I lacked:
I loved you, and above my life still hangs that love intact,—
Your love the tremhling rainhow, I the reckless cataract,—
Still I love yon, Barhara.

Yet, love, I am nnblest;
With many doubts opprest,
I wander like a desert wind, without a place of rest.
Could I hnt win yon for an hour from off that starry shore,
The hunger of my soul were stilled, for Death hath told you more
Than the melancholy world dotb know; things deeper than all lore
You could teacb me, Barbara.

In vain, in vain, in vain!
There droops upon the dreary bills a mournful fringe of rain;
The gloaming closes slowly round, loud winds are in the tree,
Round selfish shores forever moans the hurt and wounded sea,
There is no rest upon the earth, peace is with Death and thee,
Barhara! —ALEXANDER SMITH.

A TERRIBLE ICE-TRAP.

THE following description, from Dr. Hayes's Open Polar Sea, of an exhibition of polar dynamics on a vast scale, is very striking. The schooner having got into the midst of the drifting ice, with great fields of it closing in upon her from every side, is in danger of being crushed:

"We had worked ourselves into a triangular space formed by the contact of three fields. At first there was plenty of room to turn round, though no chance to escape. We were nicely docked, and vainly hoped that we were safe; but the corners of the protectiug floes were slowly crushed off, the space narrowed little by little, and we listened to the crackling and crunching of the ice, and watched its progress with consternation.

"At length the ice touched the schooner, and it appeared as if her destiny was sealed. She groaned like a conscious thing in pain, and writhed and twisted as if to escape her adversary, trembling in every timber from truck to kelson. Her sides seemed to be giving way. Her deck timbers were bowed up, and the seams of the deck planks were opened. I gave up for lost the little craft which had gallantly carried us through so many scenes of peril; but her sides were solid and her ribs strong; and the ice on the port side, working gradually under the bilge, at length, with a jerk which sent us all reeling, lifted her out of the water; and the floes, still pressing on and breaking, as they were crowded together, a vast ridge was piling up beneath and around us; aud, as if with the elevating power of a thousand jack-screws, we found ourselves going slowly up into the air.

"My fear now was that the schooner would fall over on her side, or that the masses which rose above the bulwarks would topple over upon the deck, and bury us beneath them.

"We lay in this position during eight anxious hours.

"At length the crash ceased with a change of wind and tide. The ice exhibited signs of relaxing. The course of the monster floes which were crowding down the Sound was changed more to the westward. We beheld the prospect of release with joy.

"Small patches of open water were here and there exhibited among the hitherto closely impacted ice. The change of scene, though less fearful, was not less magical than before. By and by the movement extended to the floes which bound us so uncomfortably, and with the first cessation of the pressure the blocks of ice which snpported the forward part of the schooner gave way, and, the bows following them, left the stern high in the air."

A cemetery near Pittsburg is advertised as a "beautiful snmmer resort."

THE NEW DANCE—THE "GERMAN."

THE following is a description of the comparatively new and fashionable dance known as the "German." It is customary when a lady contemplates giving a large "German," to invite a gentleman friend, known to be a good dancer, some days previous, to lead; and he, having accepted the invitation, can introduce his own figures in the dance. Some figures are danced with flowers, flags, bells, etc. Gentlemen who go out a great deal in society usually have their own flags, bells and badges, which they lend when invited to lead.

To dance the "German" every gentleman chooses a partner, and they sit in couples, until forming a large ring around the room. Every figure is commenced by the leading couple at the head of the set, and at a signal from the leader, one, two or three other couples start at the same time. The couple called up usually dance a short gallop or waltz, and then form the figure as the leader directs, each figure being closed by another gallop or waltz, lasting about a minute. The first figure may be thus described:

The leading conple start with a few turns of the gallop, They then separate in the middle of the floor. The gentleman chooses two ladies from the ring, and the lady two gentlemen. They then place themselves opposite each other, in the center of the room; on one side the gentleman between two ladies, aud on the other the lady between two gentlemen. The next movement is "forward and back," twice. The leader then elevates his hands, holding those of the ladies on each side, thus forming two arches, through which the opposite two ladies pass. In this way all "balance," then the hands are let go, the leading lady stepping between the two ladies, aud the leader betweeu the two gentlemen. Then follows the "grand chain," and at a sign from the leader each gentleman dances a gallop with the lady whom he holds by the right hand, at the close of which all return to their seats. This figure is repeated by all the couples in turn.

If the "German" be a large one, three couples may be started at the same time. The step in the figure is a choix, more persous walking than dancing it, the time of the music being almost entirely disregarded. Not so, however, with the gallop or waltz which precedes and terminates it. After each couple in the room have danced the figure, the leader stops the music. An intermission of five minutes takes place, when the signal for the second figure is given. Each figure is generally so contrived that no one knows with whom he is going to close it, and, in some cases, there is a regular scramble for partners. In choosing them, the inclinations of the parties become pretty clearly developed, the young ladies always managing to place themselves in the way of the partner they prefer above all others. Anxious match-making mothers usually watch this part of the dance with interest. After a season of the "German" there is no difficulty in deciding what more serious engagements are in prospect.—New York Home Journal.

DRESSED FOR THE BALL.

She stood in her touching loveliness,
All dressed for the coming hall,
With her pure white dress and pure wbite face,
Waiting for us in the hall.

A diamond star on her bosom lay,
And starry gems were her eyes.
Eyes knowing no shade of thought or care,
Winsomely, sweetly unwise.

Roses glowed ardent red on her dress,
Glowed ardent red on her lips;
Roses fainted and drooped on her hair,
And died on her finger tips.

Gold clasped the marble curve of her arms,
It would round her throat so fair;
It crooking drooped from her pearly ears,
And rippling gold was her hair.

I spoke to a friend who gazed with me,
I uttered my rising fears;
"Oh! that Grief would ne'er that flower-face fade,
And those star-eyes cloud in tears."

"Your words are men's words," the lady said;
Yon know not that Pain and Pride
Are stronger than joy and Bloom, or Youth,
Or Reason, or aught beside.

"She will look up, sbould ber peace be fled,
As peacefully sweet as now;
Sobs in the heart send smiles to the lips;
Oh! women alone know how.

"Pain shines like joy in the weary eyes,
More brilliant than joy percha
It oft dyes the cheek and sharply spnrs
The tired feet in the dance."

AN IRISH BULL.—An Irishman passing through a field of cattle, the other day, said to a friend, "Whenever you see a herd of cows all lying down, and one of them only standing up, that one is sure to be the bull."

The London Telegraph thinks Charles Dickens would be the chief actor of the day if he were not the first of popular writers.

MRS. PARTINGTON ON SUSPENSION.—"They hadn't ought to do it," said Mrs. Partington, as she read in print the question regarding the suspensiou of the President in case he was impeached; "'twill be downright arson to hang a man before he is tried, and suspending him would be so much agin his constitution that he never could be reconstructed." "Why, what are you driving at?" said Ike, in an impertinent tone; "they aint gwine to suspend him by the neck—they only snspend him figuratively, yon know—make b'leve, like." "Well, he would cut a figure if hung in apogee, and it don't make much difference; but I've always noticed that a man snspended in this way lived a good while longer than the ones that were suspended the other way"—"Upside down?" interrupted Ike. She looked at him with a solemn rebnke in her eyes, that crushed the young reprobate, paragorically speaking, and he retired in confusion to the cupboard, where he tried to lorget his mortification by filling his pockets with cookies.

MEN WANTED.—The great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from cen ter to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or foe. Men whose consciences are steady as the needle to the pole Men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth. Men who neither brag nor run. Men who neither swagger nor flinch. Men who can have courage without whistling for it. Men careless of man's applause. Men too large for sectarian limits, and too strong for sectarian bands. Men who do not strive, nor cry, nor cause their voices to be heard in the streets, and who will not fail nor be discouraged. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their place aud fill it.

OUR FUTURE.—In how great a measure one's fnture is made up of one's past; how we understand things by all those which have preceded them; how it is yesterday which makes to-morrow! The future is never so strange as we picture it to ourselves. A hnndred golden threads bind us to it already. It is all one's whole past life which claims the future and draws it into itself. The lesson given long, long ago by the love which foresaw, teaches in after years when the occasion has come. One thing recalls another, as one thing forebodes another, and sometimes the two together make a full chord of happiness, or, may be, of sadness, so grateful and so sweet, that it seems as if it must be happiness.

THE largest room in the world under a single roof, and unbroken by pillars or other obstnctions, is at St. Petersburg, Russia. It is 650 feet in length, and 150 in breadth. By daylight it is used for military displays, and a battalion can conveniently manœnver in it. In the evening it is often converted into a vast ball-room, when it is warmed by sixteen prodigious stoves, and twenty thonsand wax-tapers are required to light it properly. The roof of this great structnre is a single arch of iron, the bars on which it rests weighing 12,830,000 pounds.

PAPER PANTALETTES.—Among the new devices for the day are paper pantalettes for the ladies. A company has been organized at Mechanics Falls, Me., to mannfacture borders to ladies' drawers and children's pantalettes—an ornamental appurtenance to be buttoned to the garment, which may be readily replaced when soiled.

AN elderly gentleman was traveling lately while afflicted with a bad cough, which greatly annoyed his fellow-travelers, and at last one of them remarked, in a displeased tone:

"Sir, that is a very bad cough of yours."

"True, Sir," replied the gentleman. "But you will excuse me; it's the best I've got."

THE EFFECTS OF HARD TIMES.—Such is the pressure of the times in Birmingham, that good workmen get np the inside of a watch for eighteen shillings, and get up the inside of a chimney for a sixpence!

A PRACTICAL OPINION.—Mrs. H. N. Farnsworth, No. 4 Carroll place, Bleecker street, New York, testifies:

Q—What is your business?

A—Dress-maker.

Q—Do you employ Sewing Machines in your business, what ones, and how long?

A—I employ Grover & Baker's for two years.

Q—Are you, or not, acqnainted with the work of other machines?

A—I am.

Q—What machine do you prefer in your business, and why?

A—I prefer Grover & Baker's; I can only say because it is thorough in everything. I can make an entire dress with the Grover & Baker Machine, every part of it except the sewing on of hooks and eyes, buttons and button-holes. It used to take me fourteen hours to make a dress handsomely; I can now do it in five.

Q—Do you, or not, find the work of the Grover & Baker preferred to other machine work by your customers?

A—I do.

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

A POINT

ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.

Out of ten thousand regular physicians you cannot find one who will not say that STIMULANTS and INVIGORANTS are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet, in bygone years, humane practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fiendish ingenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so polluted and deteriorated them, that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians know, because the first analytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact that

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Are absolutely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, whereon the testimony of the wise, the intelligent, and the philanthropic is rated at its just value, as the best protective against and cure for all diseases arising from impurity in the air or other unhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with low high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instruments, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,

Have the Largest Office,

Do the most work,

And do it better

Than other offices

536 In this City,

Try them

With a Job,

And you will be

Satisfied the above

Statements are facts.

Their office is at 536

Clay St., below Montgom'y,

Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

D. J. OLIVER,

101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.

ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,

Where he offers for sale the largest stock of

Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,

CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

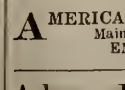
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by

M. BONNET,

Office—Express Building (up stairs),

N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

WALTER S. PIERCE,



Manufacturer and Importer of

PIANO-FORTES.

FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.

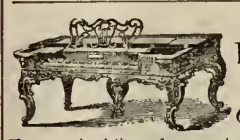
PIANOS TO RENT.

WALTER S. PIERCE'S

Piano Manufactory

Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.



THE FAMOUS

PIANOS

OF

Chickering & Son

Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's'.

Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,

No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - - Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,

515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

THE NEW BRANCH

OF THE

CLIPPER RESTAURANT,

No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,

WILL BE OPENED ON

MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.

MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBlic that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J. STOCK, Proprietor.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,

NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,

San Francisco.

SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

HAT OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

AT CHURCH.

BY THACKERAY.

Although I enter not,
Yet round the spot
Sometimes I hover,
And at the sacred gate
With lingering eyes I wait,
Expectant of her.

The minister bells toll out
Above the city's rout,
And noise and humming;
They've stopped the chiming bell,
I hear the organ's swell—
She's coming—coming.

My lady comes at last,
Timid and stepping fast,
And hastening thither,
With modest eyes downcast;
She comes—she's here—she's past;
May Heaven go with her!

Kneel undisturbed, fair saint,
Pour out your praise or plaint,
Meekly and duly:
I will not enter there
To sully your pure prayer
With thoughts unruly.

But suffer me to pace
Round the forbidden place,
Lingering a minute,
Like outcast spirits who wait
And see through Heaven's gate
Angels within it.

A BLACK SNAKE IN A STOVE AT HANOVER—A MODERN "FIERY SERPENT."—The following singular, but truthful statement, we copy from the Hanover (Pa.) Spectator:

A gentleman residing in our town, some few weeks ago purchased a lot of old, condemned sleepers from the railroad company, for the purpose of using them as fire wood. They were accordingly conveyed to his residence and sawed in suitable lengths for the stove, and were used for fuel, and as such gave great satisfaction, until one evening the good wife placed one of the pieces on the stove, when a very strange and remarkable occurrence happened. Shortly after placing the wood in the stove her attention was attracted by a singular noise in the room, not unlike the crying of a child or the moaning of a person in distress, and upon searching for the cause of it, ascertained that the noise proceeded from the stove, and becoming somewhat alarmed, called in her husband and acquainted him of the matter. The gentleman at once advanced to the stove, and upon opening the door a strange and fearful sight met his astonished gaze. Right in the very midst of the blazing flames was a large black snake, writhing in agony, and uttering the piteous noise which had attracted the attention of the lady. The snake slowly crawled out of the stove and dropped on the floor, a veritable "fiery serpent," and in a few seconds expired. The snake had, doubtless, entered a hollow cavity in the sleeper in the fall, and lapsing into a torpid state, was only aroused when encompassed by the flames.

A DISAPPOINTED AUDIENCE.—A few days since the inhabitants of a town on the Pennsylvania Railroad were startled by an announcement that on the following night a learned gentleman would give a grand exhibition in the public hall, in which he would show the complete control he exercised over the feline and canine family, by making a number of cats and dogs do everything he desired them. He requested the people to bring their own "household pets." A very large audience, made up of bipeds and quadrupeds in about equal proportions, assembled and waited patiently before a green curtain till nine o'clock, when it was discovered that the stage was empty, and that the treasurer, doorkeeper, and lecturer had left on the half-past eight train.

ONE year after marriage comes the paper wedding; five years after marriage the wooden wedding; ten years, the tin wedding; twenty-five years, the silver wedding; fifty years, the golden wedding; and seventy-five years, the diamond wedding.

HOWEVER sharp-eyed and shrewd a man may be, he has always a little mote at that corner of the mind's eye, which should be directed towards his own failings.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

AMERICA,

EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞ The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE CALIFORNIA Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN, Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

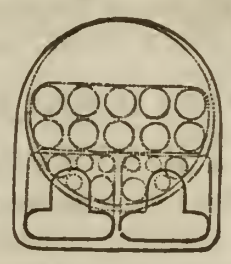
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN,
JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Belt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COBBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

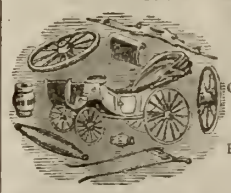
MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the Supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, ETC.

Also, Importers of

GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,

Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & CO.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt'a, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second
C. Wedderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 420 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Speeth, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Bessen, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

ABOUT GRAVESTONES.

Men in the gravestone business have a rare opportunity to observe and study human nature. They are familiar with the gradations of woe.

"Once upon a time," says the tomb-stone man, "a gentleman came to me utterly bowed by the weight of his affliction. A greatly loved father had died, whose virtues and worth the afflicted son could not extol too highly. He desired to have those virtues commemorated by a monument that all connected with the good man should be proud of. He intended to pay the entire expense himself—he was abundantly able—and he wasn't particular what the expense was. A couple of weeks after he called again. His grief had moderated. He wasn't cheerful, exactly, but there was a calm about him. He spoke in a low, quiet tone of his departed sire. He hoped and believed that he had gone to the land of the blest." (A lifting of his eyes, a sigh and a pause.)

"Oh," said he at length, "about that monument. I think the expense of the one we were talking about is a little too heavy. Now, a plain monument, like that, for instance (pointing to one costing about half the amount of the one he had talked about on his first interview), would be more appropriate to place over his grave. It is plain and simple, like the life and virtues of him who may sleep beneath it."

He didn't quite decide, but said he would call again. Weeks passed, and I met him one day bustling through the street on his way to his business. With the exception of a weed upon his hat, all traces of his affliction had passed away.

"Ah, how do you do," said he, "been wanting to see you—too busy, though—want to talk to you about putting up a gravestone on father's grave—see you again;" and on he went.

I met him several times afterwards, but he made no allusion to the "gravestone." A day or two ago I met him, and asked him when he wanted the stone erected.

"Stone!" said he, reflectively, "stone! oh! yes—I remember—gravestone for the old man. Well, fact is, I had a very nice pine slab painted and put up for the present, so I guess I shan't want any gravestone this year!

A good book and a good woman are excellent things to those who know how justly to appreciate their value. But there are men who judge of both only by their covering.

How mortified one ought to feel at being told a tale of scandal; because it proves the relator believes one capable of enjoying it.

Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of our friends upon them.

The heart, too often, like the cement of the ancient Romans, acquires hardness by time.

Whoever peeps through a hole will see trouble.

A LOVE SONG.

[The following beautiful love song was found in the dining room of the Occidental Hotel. It is supposed to have fallen from the pocket of the handsome and accomplished T—— D—— Esq.]

TO ——

I loved you once, I must confess,
And I might love you once again,
If you would but what's wrong redress
And cease to give my eye-sight pain.

Your eyes flash with an eagle's glance,
Your figure's good—the mould of form—
Your gloves are neat—direct from France—
Your temper's good, your heart is warm.

But, oh! one grievous fault appears,
Oh, why not wear a handsome tile?
One made by Meussdorffer so famed—
His latest Spring and Summer style.

JACOB SHEW,

Pioneer Photographer

612 CLAY STREET,

North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 Sansome St. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,

NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches

AT

The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE

AND

TELEGRAPH INSTITUTE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE BUILDING,

POST STREET, BETWEEN MONTGOMERY AND KEARNY, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS DESIGNED TO PREPARE Boys and Men

FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,

And to impart a thorough

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,

IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH AND MERCHANDISE,

rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He

COMMENCES SPECULATION,

Carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,

A regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of

ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.

This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph Operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the department, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

THE BEST FAMILY WINES IN THE CITY

—Are to be found at—

HOADLEY & CO.'S

533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,

San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO

WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine

Wines, Liquors and Segars,

NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,

Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets, San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

Main street, Petaluma.

WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,

San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS

Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc.

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

GIGANTIC R. R. ENTERPRISE. THE GREAT "SHARPSBURG CUT-OFF!"

The terminations are Sharpsburg on the east and Cheviot on the west. The distance is seven miles and a quarter, and as cars make it in six hours and thirty-two minutes, passengers over that road save eleven hours and fifty cents, no matter where they wish to go, besides nine miles of travel! So stupendous a railroad enterprise as this was never before undertaken in this country, nor in any other, so far as the business of discovering countries has yet been carried.

Last week there was a formal opening of the route, a grand excursion party from New York passing over the Great Cut-off, on their way to San Francisco and China. The principal newspapers of the world were represented, the Cincinnati Times being present in the person of our "Fat Contributor," who has furnished us with the following account of this great route, which he avers hardly does justice to it:

HOW THE ROAD IS LAID.

The road is laid on a gutta percha embankment all the way, with a patent adjustable track, so constructed that broad or narrow gauge cars can run over it with equal facility, even in the same train.

HOW STREAMS ARE CROSSED.

There have been so many accidents from railroad bridges giving way, that the "Sharpsburg Cut-off" does away with them altogether, substituting balloons, which lift the trains across the creeks and chasms. No delay whatever is occasioned by this arrangement, the balloons hitching on to the trains and unhitching while they are in motion. Only one accident has happened so far. They had a light load of passengers one day, and the balloon being charged rather heavily with gas, shot into the air, taking the train and passengers with it. Nothing has been seen of them since. An inquest was held, and the jury brought in a verdict censuring the balloon! Passengers holding Accident Insurance policies will be permitted to draw $25 a week until they come down again.

TUNNELS.

There are several mountains on the road, which the passengers, by an ingenious arrangement, are led to suppose are tunneled, although they are not. While going over these mountains the train is enclosed in a portable tunnel. You think all the time that you are passing through a tunnel, which answers the same purpose as though you were. It is less a bore to the mountains than tunneling.

THE PASSENGER COACHES.

The coaches are the most comfortable and luxuriant of any in the world. They are lighted with gas and have the Nicholson pavement. Each passenger is entitled to a parlor and bedroom, with bath-room attached (with or without board), hall and side entrance, front and back yard, with use of a hydrant and cistern water. They have billiard tables on the roof and a ball alley in the basement. Cars designed expressly for Sunday school celebrations are provided with euchre tables.

VENTILATION.

Great attention is paid to proper ventilation. The process is simple and effective; little boys being stationed along the road at frequent intervals to throw stones through the windows as the trains pass.

REFRESHMENTS ALONG THE ROUTE.

Instead of having eating houses, necessitating delays, refreshments of all kinds are strung along on the telegraph wires the entire length of the road, so that the passenger, when hungry, has only to reach out his hand and help himself. The refreshment display to which the excursionists were treated was of the most enticing description. There were festoons of cold sausage, literally reaching "from pole to pole;" ham sandwiches, suspended by red, white and blue ribbons; legs of mutton, hanging by one leg; wreaths of celery (plain); stuffed lobsters, suspended by their claws, wearing necklaces of fried oysters; fillet of beef; fillet of pork; fillet of venison; fill it with any thing you like; cod fish balls suspended by India rubber strings, a-la return-ball; string beans, hung by the strings; apple dumplings, hung on hinges; duck, hung by the bills (very heavy); dried beef, on hooks; and beautifully ornamented cornucopias filled with hash.

At intervals by the side of the road were beautiful marble fountains, sending up jets of soda water and columns of hot coffee, green and black tea, and Lager Beer.

PRINCIPAL CONNECTIONS.

The "Sharpsburg Cut-off" makes connections with the principal railroads in the United States and Canadas, besides the Camden and Amboy, which is in New Jersey.

NEW REGULATIONS, etc.

1. No talking to the locomotive.

2. Passengers failing to purchase tickets previous to getting aboard, (particularly if the ticket office isn't open), will be charged from $1 to $10 extra, according to the necessities of the conductor.

3. Passengers are urgently requested to ask some questions of the man in the ticket office, he likes it.

4. Dead heads will please report any inattention on the part of the locomotive.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

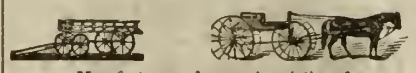
JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

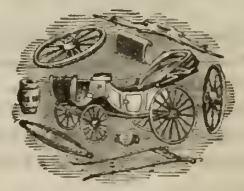
Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.
A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.
THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicines, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the best, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

DR. HAYDEN,
Dentist,
653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

REMOVAL—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description. All goods sold are warranted.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candles sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK.

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

AMERICA,

EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

THE CALIFORNIA

Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

HOUSEKEEPERS'

Protection & Relief Society.

HARDWARE,

CUTLERY,

TINWARE,

WOODENWARE,

WILLOW-WARE,

And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,

131 Kearny street,

Between Sutter and Post.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET,

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Michael Lynch, the Administrator of the estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w

R. W. HENT, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of J. C. BEIDEMAN, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of the Judge of said Court, made this day, notice is hereby given that Monday, the 22d day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, being a day of a regular term of said Court, to-wit: of the April Term, A. D. 1867, at the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, has been appointed for hearing the petition, this day filed, of Bernard Kennedy, praying for a decree authorizing and directing John W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate left unadministered of J. C. Beideman, deceased, to convey to the said petitioner certain real estate situated in said city and county, and particularly described in said petition, upon the payment to said Administrator of the balance of the purchase money of said real estate; at which time and place all persons interested in said estate may appear and contest said petition by filing their objections in writing.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Drake & Hent, Attys. for Petitioner.

mar23-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MICHAEL HINES, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM, Administrator of the Estate of Michael Hines, deceased. mh9 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM LOEWY, Clerk,

[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.

THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on the 10th day of September, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on TUESDAY, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors, David Whipple and William Whipple, of, in and to all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the southerly line of Pine street, 111½ feet easterly from the south-east corner of Pine and Taylor streets; running thence easterly along said line of Pine street 26 feet; thence at a right angle southerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet; thence at a right angle westerly 26 feet, and thence at a right angle northerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, No. 6 Montgomery Block, in said city and county, from this date till Tuesday, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned. ROBERT L. HARRIS,

Guardian of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors

Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-4w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Breeze, the Administrator of the estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, praying for an order for the sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts of the deceased and the charges and expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Adm'r. mh30 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion, and would be most for the interest of all concerned to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the family allowance, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executors of the Last Will and Testament of JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the store of A. Crawford, No. 27 Market street, San Francisco, that being the place of the transaction of business by said Executors of said estate.

A. CRAWFORD, } Executors.
D. N LUNDT, }

Dated March 30th, 1867. mb30-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NAYLOR C. DAVIS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John H. Madison, Administrator of the Estate of Naylor C. Davis, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 15th day of April, A. D 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs at law of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 11th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

m16 5t By WM. LEHLE, Deputy Clerk.

CHAS WITTRAM, Esq., Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHERT. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHANN GEORG MOELLER, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 27th day of March, A. D. 1867, Notice is hereby given, that TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, in the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said Johann Georg Moeller, deceased, and for hearing the application of Louise Moeller, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters Testamentary, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Dated at San Francisco, this 29th March, A. D. 1867.

J. F. FINN, Attorney for petitioner. mh30-3w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY A. WALSH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at at the office of Crane & Boyd, Attorneys at Law, in the city and county of San Francisco, the place of his transaction of business.

Dated at San Francisco, March 25th, 1867.

JOHN TOWNSEND,

Administrator of Estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased.

Crane & Buyd, Att'ys, S. W. cor. Clay and Montgomery streets. mh30-5w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the aboveuamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchasor at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of BENJAMIN P. GREEN deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Courtis, Administrator of the estate of Benjamin P. Green, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the claims against the estate, and the expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the twenty-second day of April A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 22d day of March, A. D 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp 50 cts., canceled.]

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

F. A. Fahens, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

mar23 4t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN NERAC, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the Will annexed of the Estate of Ellen Nerac, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisee named in the Will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate to the party entitled thereto:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the devisee of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said sixteenth day of April A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 14th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco,

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[Seal and stamp.] By A. J JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

J. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner m16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JOSE A. FELIZ, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at the office of Haight & Piers, No. 513 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, February 19, 1867.

ROBERT HAIGHT, Administrator of the Estate of Jose A. Feliz, dec'd. mh9 5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIBBETTS, ...Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MISS OLIVIA RAND,
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, APRIL 6TH,
THE RUSTIC PRIMA DONNA.

THIS EVENING, APRIL 6TH,
First Night of the Sensation Drama, entitled
THE STREETS OF NEW YORK!

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The public is respectfully informed that this company will appear at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, April 8th, 1867, in the successful Comedy of "SOCIETY;" recently purchased by Mr. Thomas Maguire of Lester Wallack, Jr.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....,$1 00		Orchestra $1 00
Parquette.....	50	Upper Circle.....	25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between lifornia and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S STEAMSHIPS FOR NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR APRIL.

April 10th—MONTANA, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
April 18th—SACRAMENTO, Capt. H. Cavarly, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
April 30th—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

HOUSEKEEPERS'

HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,

And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

DRY GOODS AT POPULAR PRICES!

MEAG ER, TAAFFE & CO.
ARE OFFERING

Large Line of Plaid Delaines, at 12½ cents per yard.
Fonlard Delaines, at 25 cents per yard.
Empress Cloths, at 30, 35, 40, 50 and 60 cents per yard.
Alpacas at 30, 35, 40, 50 and 60 cents per yard.

ALSO,

Large Lots of Scotch and French Ginghams, Prints, Organdies, Lawns, Grenadines, Hosiery, Linen and Cotton Shirts, Flannels, Blankets, Quilts, etc., etc.,

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

BLACK SILKS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

ARE OFFERING AT A

REDUCTION

OF

FROM 20 TO 40 PER CENT.,

THEIR

LARGE STOCK

OF

SUPERIOR BLACK SILKS,

SUITABLE FOR

DRESSES, CLOAKS AND MANTILLAS.

9 Montgomery Street, Lick House.
WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

IF there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used by the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world. It can be thrown a distance of three hundred feet, and will return and fall at the feet of the thrower. As the Australian boomerang is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever invented, so is the San Francisco BOOMERANG, at the corner of Washington and Dupont streets, acknowledged to be one of the greatest institutions of the city. The snug bar, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot punches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum—in fact, everything about the Boomerang is perfect.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whose husband supposed she had absconded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, and get one dozen of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you want to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 and 27 Third street, east side, near Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,

HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.

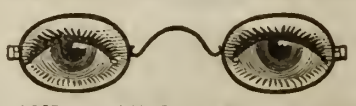
DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham,	William Smith,
Marysville.

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Lawrence & Houseworth,



317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,

OPTICIANS

THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined.

SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.

Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.

Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.

N. B—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HORACE COLE, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of HORACE COLE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within nine months and twenty-one days after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator with the will annexed, at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 4th, 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Horace Cole, deceased. ap6-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, JOHN G. HODGE, at Nos. 418 and 420 Clay street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 6th, 1867.

JOHN G. HODGE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Francis S. Wood, deceased. ap6-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 5th, 1867. ap6-5w

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 4th day of April, A. D. 1867, notice is hereby given that Tuesday, the 23d day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, and the Court-room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased, and for hearing the application of Wm. A. Quarles, Public Administrator, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters of Administration with the will annexed, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JEGHENS, Deputy Clerk.

Dated at San Francisco, this April 5th, A. D. 1867.
J. F. FINN, Esq., Att'y for Petitioner. ap6 3w

JOHN HAGAN,

Marble - Worker,

MARKET ST., OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,

ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.

Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES
Executed in a Superior Style, at
GEO. D. MORSE'S
NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,
No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

MRS. WINSHIP,

Fashionable Milliner.

NO. 23 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.

Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.

☞Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

The California

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 21
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 13, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: The First Cruise of the Avitor, by John Clerk; The Newspaper Mania, by John Clerk · Physical Education. LION'S MOUTH: Spirited Opposition to the Literary Weeklies; A Good Word for Beecher: A Hint to the Supervisors; How it Shocks Us, Measuring Charity. Literary Gleanings and Gossip; Book Notices; Dramatic Affairs; Paragraphs, etc. Poetry—Springtime, by Dennar Stewart. SELECTED: The London O. P. (Old Price) Riots; Yankee Humor; Alexander Smith; "Black Sheep," etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Unassuming Charity.

Californians are, as a rule, very modest in the manner in which they bestow charity Many follow out the scriptnal precept, "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand giveth." Many old Californians do nn immense amount of good in secret, and would not only "blush to find it fame," but would punch the head of any one who mentioned it. There are others who are young in this State, who are inclined to proclaim their charity on the house-tops, and to set an extraordinary value on its extent. While the majority of the offers of assistance to the Southern Relief Fund were couched in modest terms, nnd evinced a heartfelt desire to nssist this good cause, others savored too much of the shop. One gentleman advertised that the proceeds for one day of his shaving establishment, or something of that kind, would he devoted to this fund, and heads his advertisement "Charity nnd Cleanliness." Another gentleman inclined to advertise himself nt the smallest possible cost, offers to allow persons to open his place of business, the Metropolitan Music Store, and sell on Sunday as much stock as they choose to put into it at their own cost. Another gentleman wrote as follows: "I know that numbers of persons desire to hear my performance on the banjo. I will allow them to do so. I will play for an hour on the banjo. They shall hear me. Issue your tickets. I know the thing will cause a furore." Somewhat of the same species is the charity of the tobacconist who is too much of a Christian to call the conduct of the Southerners "more than indiscreet," and "indorses the movement to the extent of a quarter-eagle." He writes to the Times and Bulletin a snd story of a wounded Union soldier who has a famine in his house, and thus gets a gratuitous advertisement of his name and plnce of business in two papers. He might have laid this case before the Snn Francisco Benevolent Association and it would have been attended to, but had he done so, he wonld not have gained the advertisement of himself and his cigars in two newspapers, nnd the public might not have been generally aware that he had "indorsed" the Southern Relief Fund to the extent of a quarter-eagle.

A New Field for Emigrants.

It is gratifying to learn that although Supevisor Clement did not succeed in passing his resolution in the Board last Monday, the purchase of the Russian Territory has been ratified. Although the Supervisors of San Francisco did not express their willingness to consent to this purchase, it has been made. As the United States is now a larger country than it was before, there will be more room for its terribly crowded inhabitants to move about in. No doubt an immense emigration will take place from California to this fertile region. The telegraph brings the intelligence that "The soil is excellent and produces barley, turnips and cabbages. There is also gold, copper, iron and coal, the latter being abundant." This is a chance not often presented. There is certainly gold in the Russian Territory—the telegraph has brought the news Let some of our unfortunate half-starved inhabitants of California, who cnunot make more than $2 50 a day, and who require at least half of that for whisky emigrate to this land, and luxuriate on barley, turnips and cabbages, while they prospect for gold. It is a long way off, and this is a great recommendation in the eyes of Californians.

Cheap Pills.

Beef is very high at present, mutton also, but—thanks to the great Law of Compensation, which ordains that every evil sent on the world shall he accompained by a blessing!—pills are cheap. In behalf of suffering humanity we publish the following advertisement which we find in the Bulletin, free of charge:

NOTICE.—Wright's, Brandreth's, Moffatt's, Jayne's, Lee's, Ayer's, Bristol's, Mott's, Hooper's, McLane's and Spalding's Headache Pills—only 20 cents a box, or 6 boxes for a dollar.

A man can thus indulge in Wright's, Brandreth's, Moffatt's, Jayne's, Lee's, Bristol's, Mott's, Hooper's, McLane's, and Spalding's Headache pills for the small sum of two dollars. Wha a glorious assortment of pills! What disease could remain in the system after taking say even one box of each? Only 20 cents a box. These are happy times we live in; eleven varieties of pills may be obtained for two dollars, and a burial lot in Lone Mountain Cemetery now costs only five dollars. Out upon the croakers who complain of "hard times."

Spirited opposition to the Literary Weeklies.

The daily papers of San Francisco have been for some time past engaged in attempting to drive the literary weekly papers from their field, and leave it to be occupied by the newspapers in addition to their own. They have been publishing supplements filled with pretty stories derived from ancient English magazines and other sources, and have given these supplements to their subscribers without extra charge. We don't object to this. We should offer no remonstrance did the Alta advertise that its daily issue for one week and the first three nnmbers of "Claude Duval, the Dashing Highwayman," could he obtained on the payment of four bits. But when this paper publishes an original story, such as that which appeared in its supplement of Sundsy last, we feel the opposition. "Reminiscences of the War, written for the Alta California by a Union Soldier," is the sort of thing which any literary paper wonld be happy to pay handsomely for. The following extract will give an idea of the beauty of this thrilling sketch:

"Having arrived at Annapolis, we were duly quartered in the 'Square' of the Naval Academy and bivouacked in the open air. As I lay that night on the young grass, how strange my thoughts were; my first time from home; the fact of armed legions approaching with deadly intent, in a land, heretofore, for many years at peace; that brother was about to imbrue his hands in his brother's blood; my own indefinite fate—all crowded on my mind and gradually mixed in confusion with the misty stars, until the reveille."

We have no hesitation in pronouncing the above to be one of the finest pieces of composition which has ever appeared in the Alta. What a touching picture is drawn of the young soldier "lying on the grass," and how vividly are the thoughts which crowded on his mind portrayed! What a splended climax is presented in the image of the aforesaid thoughts having "gradnally mixed in confusion with the misty stars until the reveille!" No wonder that the young soldier "dropped into poetry" after his thoughts had been all night "gradually mixing in confusion with the misty stars." He says that he wrote the following lines as he stood on the bridge over the Potomac, between Georgetown and Arlington Heights; but it was, we are sure, that first night on the young grass which made him a poet. We regret that we can only afford space for two verses of this beautiful patriotic poem:

"The calm round moon on that still May night,
Fringed all with its silvery sheen,
As we left our fort on the Georgetown Height,
And marched down the college green.

No sound broke in on the stilly air,
Save the wave of the tramp, tramp, tramp,
And a hushed suspense was along the line,
As it surged from rank to rank."

We hoped when the Alta shut up its Poet's Corner that it would henceforth leave the literary weeklies in undisturbed possession of their own proper field; but alas! we now perceive that this unscrupulous sheet intends, engaging descriptive talent such as "A Union Soldier's," critical talent such as that of its dramatic critic, and reviewers like those who write its criticisms of new books, to force the weekly papers to publish daily or quit the field entirely.

Education for the Young.

Public schools have long been established in California, and our rising generation is well instructed. The Banner of Progress is affording most valuable aid to the cause of education. It has on its fourth page a "Lyceum Department," which will, we are sure, do much towards training up children in the way in which they should go. A beautiful Spiritual hymn, which was, if we mistake not, written by King James I since his passing away into the Spirit World, expressly for the "Lyceum," is published in its last issue. We extract the following verses:

"I'll never use tobacco, no;
It is a filthy weed;
I'll never put it in my mouth,'
Said little Robert Reid.

'Why, there was idle Jerry Brown,
As dirty as a pig,
Who smoked when only ten years old,
And thought it made him big.

'O, no, I'll never smoke or chew;
'Tis very wrong, indeed;
It hurts the health, it makes bad breath,'
Said little Robert Reid."

It may he wondered at, hy those who remember His Majesty's famous "Counterblast against Tobacco," that he should write in so much milder a manner at present, but just reflect what mild verses Poe, Shelly and others send from the Spirit World!

Caudal Grafting.

A few miles out of Sacramento, an industrious, persevering and ingenious man has been successful in grafting a coon's tail on the stump of a dog's vertebral column. This description of grafting may become fashionable yet, and we may then see all sorts of cnudal amalgamations.

The Avitor.

There is a mistaken idea prevalent as to the appearance of the Avitor. Many suppose it is something like a bird; we are assured by a gentleman who has seen it that it is "very like a whale."

How it Shocks Us.

O! it's disgusting, atrocious, horrible, beastly—a blemish and a disgrace to our boasted civilization." "A brutal exhibition." "It is time that such exhibitions were put n stop to in civilized communities," says the Bulletin. And yet that respectable sheet devotes nearly a fourth of a column in giving quite a lively and graphic description of the manner in which the combatants have been trained, how Chandler has blackened the eyes and pummelled into raw beef the countenances of innumerable of his fellows, how "both have been fed on raw meat as bull dogs are to make them savage," how "if one fell short in weight he was compelled to eat raw beefsteak and other bull dog food."

The unction with which the individual dwells on the "raw beef" is a little suspicious. So he speaks of the "pulling," the "banging," "eyes puffed up like India rubber balls," etc. All this description is quite a help to a vivid imagination, and might create a little of the bloody, raw beef taste where none was felt before.

It's very shocking and disgusting, yet after all it seems to be rathe interesting. Onr two boys have private "mills" in the back yard, and have actually been dieting on rare beef. The young ladies have been heard to ask if any of their sex were ever present at these nineteenth century outrages. It is not such an easy matter to find anything which can outrage this nineteenth century, and when found we are all apt to make a note of it; nnd after being sufficiently shocked we go and see the monster.

"Shied his castor in the ring," read Matilda Ann in the morning paper; "what does that mean?" "That," said we, gratified nt being able to display our knowledge, "that means, in pugilistic parlance throwing his hat into the ring."

"The combatants were scaled yesterday." Sarah Jane read this.

"Scaled?" said she, with rising inflection denoting inquiry, and "Scaled? Why——"

Sarah Jane had visions of Dooney Harris being scraped like a big sea bass.

"That means being weighed," we remarked.

"I think it's shameful, Pray how came you to know so much nbout it?" said Matilda.

We said we had been to several affairs of this description. And for that we were condemned and temporarily put under an extinguisher, Bnt the young ladies read all the shocking details notwithstanding.

A Good Word for Beecher.

"Mark Twain" having said in one of his letters:

"Beecher is a remarkably handsome man when he is in the full tide of sermonizing and his face is lit up with animation, but he is as homely as a singed cat when he isn't doing anything."

The editor of the Grass Valley National, a Democratic paper, comes thus valiantly to the defense of the libelled divine:

"We disagree with Mark Twain as to the 'singed cat' assertion. We saw Mr. Beecher in a railroad street car, when he was utterly at random in everything he said or did, and he was a noble looking man all the time. We are sorry that he was driven back into the rear of his nobility, by the radical, uncompromising, malignant, and unchristian spirit of his congregation, to say nothing of that runt of the Beecher family, Henry Ward's brother, who published a vehement, shallow, tailend protestation against the views of the head of the Beecher family, in reference to the policy of President Johnson."

The editor of the National no doubt thought Mr Beecher was much handsomer when he was "utterly at random in everything he said or did" than when he was preaching horrid blood-thirsty "political sermons" with a direct object. "Handsome is as handsome does." We think we remember the time when the editor of the National would have thought he insulted the worst singed cat that ever was seen in saying it looked as hideous as the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Beecher does appear to have got a little singed, and as a burnt child—or a singed cat—dreads the fire, and has not of late been very earnest in his support of President Johnson's policy.

A Hint to the Supervisors.

Don't the honorable members of the Board of Supervisors think it is about time to put a stop to the slaughter of dogs which has been for some time past going on in this city? Three hundred and sixty-two dogs were killed last month, and probably not half that number had ever bitten a human being. No children have been torn to pieces lately by ravenous poodles or bloodthirsty terriers; no weak-minded men have been frightened into convulsions in consequence of being barked at The dogs are evidently reforming. Let n few dogs remain alive. Begin on the cats. The cats of San Francisco are notoriously dissolute in their habits, have the worst voices of any cats in the Union, and scratch terribly. If a war is once commenced on these dangerous animals, we are sure that the newspapers will within a week be full of well-authenticated accounts of children who have died in consequence of being scratched by rabid cats. If the Poundkeeper must be provided with occupation, let him be empowered to catch all the cats found at large with their claws uncut. The dogs have had their day of tribulation, let it cease, and give the cats a turn.

False Hair.

Late London papers contain terrible disclosures concerning chignons and water-falls. We have had many reports of the state of the false hair market. We regret to state—it is a positive fact, no joke about it—the last report ran thus: "False hair is lively!"

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XI.—ANOTHER RECOGNITION.

THE same day which had witnessed the departure from Homburg of Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers, and the commencement of the journey which had London for its destination, beheld that city in an unusually agreeable aspect in point of weather. The sun was warm and bright; the sadness and sweetness of Autumn filled the air, and lent their poetical charm to the prosaic streets, and impressed themselves sensibly and unacknowledged upon the prosaic dwellers therein. People who had no business or pleasure, or combination of both, to call them abroad, went out on that day, and rode or drove, or walked, because the rare beauty and charm of the day imperatively required such homage. Women and children were out in the parks, and, but for the fallen leaves upon the ground, and the peculiar sigh which made itself heard now and again among the trees,—a sound which the ear that has once learned to distinguish it never fails to catch when the Summer is dead,—the Summer might be supposed to be still living.

The brightest thoroughfare in London, Piccadilly, was looking very bright that Autumn day, with all the windows of the few houses which can lay claim to anything of the beauty of grandeur glittering in the sun, and an astounding display of carriages, considering the season, enlivening the broad sloping road. The Green Park was dotted over with groups of people, as in the Summertime, and along the broad path beyond the iron railings, solitary pedestrians walked or loitered, unmolested by weather, just as it suited their fancy. The few and far-between benches had their occupants, of whom some had books, some cigars, and some babies. Perambulators were not wanting, neither were irascible elderly gentlemen to swear at them. It was happily too hot for hoops.

This exceptional day was at its best and brightest when Harriet Routh came down the street in which she lived, crossed Piccadilly, and entered the Park. She was, as usual, very plainly dressed, and her manner had lost none of its ordinary quietude. Nevertheless, a close observer would have seen that she looked and breathed like a person in need of free, fresh air, of movement, of freedom; that though the scene, the place in which she found herself, was indifferent to her, perhaps wholly unobserved by her, the influence upon her physical condition was salutary.

Her face bore an expression of intense thought,—the look of one who had brought a subject out with her in her mind, which subject she was resolved to think out, to look at in every aspect, to bring to a final decision. She kept a straight, clear course in her walk, looking neither to the right nor to the left, pondering deeply, as might been seen by the steady tension of her low white forehead and the firm set of her lips. At last she paused, when she had traversed the entire length of the walk several times, and looked about her for an unoccupied seat. She descried one, with no nearer neighbor than the figure of a boy, not exactly ragged, but very shabby, extended on the grass beside it, resting on his elbows, with a fur cap pulled down over his eyes, leaving the greater portion of a tangled head exposed to view, and a penny illustrated journal, whose contents, judging by the intentness with which he was devouring them, must have been of a highly sensational character, stretched out on the ground before him. Harriet took no notice of the boy, nor did he perceive her, when she seated herself on the bench by which he lay. She sat down noiselessly, folded her hands, and let her head fall forward, looking out with the distant absorbed gaze which had become habitual to her. She sat very still, and never for a moment did the purpose in her face relax. She was thinking, she was not dreaming.

After a while she looked at her watch, and rose. At the first step which she made on the grass, and toward the railings, her silk dress rustled over the outspread paper from which the boy was reading. She looked down apologetically; the boy looked up angrily, and then Mr. James Swain jumped up, and made the movement which in his code of manners passed for a bow to Harriet.

"Ah, is it you, Jim?" she said. "Are you not busy to-day?"

"No, mum, I ain't," said Jim. "Mr. Routh hadn't no messages this mornin', and I ain't been lucky since."

"It's a nice day for you to have a little time to yourself," said Harriet. "I hope you got all the commissions I left for you."

"I did, mum, and thank'ee," said Jim. Harriet had remembered the street-boy when she was leaving home, and had charged her servants to employ him. She had not the slightest suspicion of the extensive use which Routh was in the habit of making of his services.

"The windows is to be cleaned," said Jim, suggestively. "There warn't time, mum, you come home so unexpected."

"Very well," said Harriet. "I suppose you can clean them, can't you?"

"Mr. Harris said as I might try," returned Jim. Mr. Harris was the irreproachable man servant attached to Routh's modest establishment in Mayfair.

Harriet moved on, and Jim Swain stood still, looking after her. She was a puzzle to him, and an object of constant interest. By little and little Jim had become to know a good deal about Stewart Routh and his daily life, and he had abandoned the first theory which had presented itself to his mind, and which had owed its inspiration to the illustrated penny literature which formed his intellectual food. He no longer believed Harriet a persecuted victim of her husband's groundless jealousy. For reasons of his own, equally strong and secret, Mr. James Swain had taken a lively interest in George Dallas, had experienced certain emotions on seeing him, and had taken very kindly to the business of espionage in which Routh had engaged his services, without affording him any indication of its purpose. At first the boy had conceived an idea that Dallas was the object of Harriet's supposed preference and Routh's supposed jealousy; but he abandoned that notion very speedily, and since then he had not succeeded in forming any new theory to his satisfaction. From the conversation of the servants, Jim had learned that Mr. Dallas and Mr. Felton, with whose personal appearance the boy was equally familiar, had gone to the same place in foreign parts as that to which Mr. and Mrs. Routh had gone, a little later, and, knowing this, Jim thought more and more frequently over certain circumstances which he had kept to himself with extraordinary discretion, discretion indeed, which nothing but the strongest possible sense of self-interest, as inseparable from its observance, could have enabled him to preserve.

"He don't like him," Jim would say to himself, with frequent repetition, "he don't like him, can't bear him; I know that precious well. And he can't be afraid of him, as I can see, for he certainly warn't neither in nor near that business, and I'm blest if he knows anythin' about it. Wotever can he want to know all about him for, and keep a-follerin' him about? It ain't for no good as he follers anybody, I'll take my davy." And Mr. James Swain's daily reflections invariably terminated with that formula, which was indeed a simple and accurate statement of the boy's belief.

His abandonment of his theories concerning Harriet had worked no change in his mind concerning Routh. His familiarity with Routh's servants, his being in a manner free of the house—free, but under the due amount of inspection and suspicion justified by his low estate—enlightened him as to Harriet's domestic position, and made him wonder exceedingly, in his half-simple half-knowing way, how "the like of her could be spoony on sich a cove as him," which was Mr. James Swain's fashion of expressing his sense of the moral disparity between the husband and wife.

This was the second time that Jim had seen Mrs. Routh since her return from the trip which he had been told was specially undertaken for the benefit of her health. The first time was on the day of her arrival, when Jim had fortunately been "handy," and had helped with the luggage. He had made his observations then upon Harriet's appearance with all his native impudence: for though the element of suspicion, which lent his interest in Harriet something tragic, had died out of it, that interest continued lively, but he had admitted that it was pardonable that she should look "precious blue and funky" after a journey.

But looking at her more attentively on this second occasion, and when there was no journey in the case, Jim arrived at the conclusion that whatever had "ailed" Mrs. Routh before she left home ailed her still.

"Uncommon ill she do look, to be sure," he said to himself, as he crumpled up the exciting fiction which he had been reading, and which "let off" at a peculiarly thrilling crisis, and wedged the illustrated journal into his cap: "uncommon ill. Wot's the good of all them baths and things, if she's to come back lookin' like this—a deal worse, I call it, and much miserabler in her mind? Wotever ails her?"

At this point in his cogitations Jim began to move on, slowly indeed, and keeping his eye on Harriet, who had reached one of the gates of the Park opening into Piccadilly, had passed through it, and was just about to cross to the opposite side. She stood for a moment irresolute, then turned came through the gate again, and rapidly approached Jim, beckoning him toward her as she came.

She stood still as the boy ran up to her, and pointed to one of the smaller but much decorated houses on the opposite side of the way.

"Jim," she said, "you see that house, where the wide windows are, all one pane, and the bright balconies there, the house with the wide door, and the heavy carved railings?"

"Yes, mum, I see," said Jim.

"Go to that house, and ask if anything has been heard from Mr. Felton. Ask when he is expected—he has taken lodgings there—whether any other gentleman is expected to come with him—and, Jim, be sure to ask in particular whether any letters have been received for Mr. Felton and sent on to him."

Jim Swain looked at Harriet. There was something strange as well as intelligent in the look, but she saw only the intelligence. It harmonized with the thought in her own mind, and she replied to it—

"You think, perhaps, they may not like to tell you," she said. "Perhaps they may not. But you may tell whoever answers you that Mr. Felton's sister wishes to know——" Jim still looked at her, and Harriet felt that he did so, but this time she did not catch his eye. "Be quick," she said, "and bring me the answer yonder." She pointed to the bench on which she had been sitting, and was beyond the reach of observation from the house she had indicated, and walked away toward it as she ceased speaking. "It cannot be helped," she said. "The risk is a trifling one at worst, and must be run. I could not put Harris in communication with any one on a false pretext, and I can trust this boy so far not to say he has asked this question for me. I cannot bear it any longer. I must know how much time there is before me. I must have so much certainty; if not, I shall go mad."

She had reached the bench now, and sat down in the former attitude.

"Once before I asked myself," she muttered, "if I was going mad. I did not feel more like it then than now—not so like it, indeed. I knew what he was doing then, I had found him out. But I don't know now—I don't know now. I am in the dark, and the tide is rising."

Jim came back from his errand. He had been civilly answered by a woman-servant. Mr. Felton was expected in a few days; the exact day was not yet named. No letters had been received for him. He had sent no orders relative to the forwarding of any. Having delivered the message so far, Jim Swain hesitated. Harriet understood the reticence, and spared a momentary thought for passing wonderment at this little touch of delicacy in so unpromising a subject for the exhibition of the finer emotions.

"Did the person who answered you ask you any question?" she said.

"No, mum," said Jim, relieved. Harriet said no more; she knew he had not made the false statement which had proved needless, and something assured her that there was no necessity that she could caution Jim to say nothing concerning this communication. Now she went away in reality—went home. She ascended the stairs to her room, and looked at her face in a glass as she took her bonnet off, and thought, "I wonder if people can see in my face that I am turning into a coward, and am going mad? I could not knock at that door and ask that simple, natural question for myself—I could not; and a little while ago, since—ay, long since—I could have done anything. But not now—not now. When the time comes, when the waiting is over, when the suspense is ended, then I may be strong again, if indeed I am not quite mad by then; but now—now I cannot do anything—I cannot even wait."

The fixed look had left her face, and was succeeded by a painful wildness, and an expression almost like that of some present physical terror. She pressed her hands upon her temples and rocked herself to and fro, but there was no wild abandonment of grief in the gesture. Presently she began to moan, but all unconsciously; for catching the sound after a little she checked it angrily. Then she took up some needlework, but it dropped from her hands after a few minutes. She started up, and said, quite aloud, "it's no use—it's no use; I must have rest! Then she unlocked her dressing-case, took out a bottle of laudanum, poured some of its contents into a glass of water, drank the mixture, and lay down upon her bed. She was soon in a deep sleep, which seemed peaceful and undisturbed. A servant came into the room, but did not arouse her, and it was understood in the house that "master" would probably not return to dinner.

Mr. James Swain turned his steps in the direction of the delectable region in which his home was situated. He was in so far more fortunate than many of his class that he had a home, though a wretched one. It consisted of a dingy little room at the back of the third story in a rickety house in Stretton-Ground, and was shared with a decrepit female, the elder sister of the boy's dead mother, who earned a frightfully insufficient subsistence by shoe-binding. More precarious than ever was this fragile means of living now, for her sight was failing, as her strength had failed. But things had been looking up with Jim of late, odd jobs had been plenty, his services had reached in certain quarters the status of recognized facts, and the street-boy was kind to his old relative. They were queer people, but not altogether uninteresting, and, strange to say, by no means unhappy. Old Sally had never been taught anything herself but shoe binding, or she would have imparted instruction to Jim. Now Jim had learned to read in his mother's lifetime, and before his father had "come to grief" and been no more heard of, and it was consequently he who imparted instruction to his aunt. She was as fond of penny romances as the boy himself, and was wonderfully quick at discovering the impenetrable mysteries and unwinding the labyrinthine webs of those amazing productions. So Jim, cheered by the prospect of a lucrative job for the morrow, purchased a fresh and intensely horrible pennyworth by the way, and devoted himself for the evening to the delectation of old Sally, who liked her murders, as she liked her tea and her snuff, strongly flavored.

The pennyworth lasted a good while, for Jim read slowly and elaboratcly, and conversational digressions occurred frequently. The heroine of the story, a proud and peerless peeress, was peculiarly fascinating to the reader and the listener.

"Lor, Jim," said old Sally, when the last line had been spelled over, and Jim was reluctantly obliged to confess that that was "all on it"—"lor, Jim, to think of that sweet pretty creetur, Rorer,"—the angelic victim of the story was known to mortals as Aurora—"knowing as how her ladyship 'ad been and done it all, and dyin' all alone in the moonshine, along o thinkin' on her mother's villainy."

Ordinarily, when Jim Swain lay down on his flock bed, in the corner, he went to sleep with enviable rapidity; but the old woman's words had touched some chord of association or wonder in his clumsily arranged but not unintelligent mind; so that long after old Sally, in her corner of her little room, was sound asleep, Jim sat up hastily, ran his hand through his tangled hair, and said, aloud—

"Good Lord! that's it! She's sure she knows it, she knows he did it, and she hidin' on it, and kiverin' of it up, and it's killing her."

The stipulated hour in the morning beheld Jim Swain engaged in the task of window cleaning, not very unpleasant in such weather. He pursued his occupation with unusual seriousness; the impression of the previous night remained upon him.

The back parlor, called, of course, the "study" in Routh's house, deserved the name as much or as little as such rooms ordinarily merit it. The master of the house, at least, used the room habitually, reading there a little, and writing a great deal. He had been sitting before a bureau, which occupied a space to the right of the only window in the apartment, for some time, when Harriet came to ask him if the boy, who was cleaning the windows, might go on with that one.

"Certainly," said Routh, absently; "he won't disturb me."

It would have required something of more importance than the presence of a boy on the other side of the window to disturb Routh. He was arranging papers with the utmost intentness. The drawers of the bureau were open; on either side, the turned-down desk was covered with papers, some tied up in packets, others open; a large sheet, on which lines of figures were traced, lay on the blotting-pad. The dark expression most familiar to it was upon Stewart Routh's face that morning, and the tightly compressed lips never unclosed for a moment as he pursued his task. Jim Swain, on the outside of the window, which was defended by a narrow balcony and railing, could see him distinctly, and looked at him with much eagerness while he polished the panes. It was a fixed belief with Jim that Routh was always "up to" something, and the boy was apt to discover confirmation in the simplest actions of his patron. Had another observer of Routh's demeanor been present, he might, probably, have shared Jim's impression; for the man's manner was intensely preoccupied. He read and wrote, sorted papers, tied them up, and put them away, with unremitting industry.

Presently he stretched his hand up to a small drawer in the upper compartment of the bureau; but, instead of taking a paper or a packet from it, he took down the drawer itself, placed it on the desk before him, and began to turn over its contents with a still more darkly frowning face. Jim, at the corner of the window farthest from him, watched him so closely that he suspended the process of polishing; but Routh did not notice the cessation,

Presently he came upon the papers which he had looked for, and was putting them into the breast pocket of his coat, when he struck the drawer with his elbow, and knocked it off the desk. It fell on the floor, and its contents were scattered over the carpet. Among them was an object which rolled away into the window, and immediately caught the attention of Jim Swain. The boy looked at it, through the glass, with eyes in which amazement and fear contended. Routh picked up the contents of the drawer, all but this one object, and looked impatiently about in search of it. Then Jim, desperately anxious to see this thing nearer, took a resolution. He tapped at the window, and signed to Routh to open it and let him in. Routh, surprised, did so.

"Here it is, sir," said Jim, not entering the room, but sprawling over the window-sill, and groping with his long hands along the border of a rug which sheltered the object of Routh's search from his observation—"here it is, sir. I see it when it fell, and I knowed you couldn't see it from where you was."

The boy looked greedily at the object in his hand, and rolled it about once or twice before he handed it to Routh, who took it from him with a careless "Thank you." His preoccupied manner was still upon him. Then Jim shut down the window again from the outside, and resumed his polishing. Routh replaced the drawer. Jim tried very hard to see where he placed the object he had held for a moment in his hand, but he could not succeed. Then Routh locked the bureau, and, opening a door of communication with the dining-room, Jim caught a momentary sight of Harriet sitting at the table, and went to his breakfast.

The seriousness of the previous night had grown and deepened over the boy. Abandoning the pursuit of odd jobs precisely at the hour of the day when he usually found them most plentiful, Jim took his way homewards with headlong speed. Arrived within sight of the wretched houses, he paused. He did not wish any one to see what he was going to do. Fortune favored him. As he stood irresolute at one end of the narrow street, his aunt came out of the door. She was going, he knew, to do her humble shopping, which consisted, for the most part, in haggling with costermongers by the side of their carts, and cheapening poor vegetables at the stalls. She would not be coming back just yet. He waited until she had turned the opposite corner, and then plunged into the open doorway and up the dark staircase. Arrived at the room which formed his sole habitation, Jim shut the door, and unceremoniously pulled away his flock bed, rolled up neatly enough in a corner, from the wall. This wall was covered with a paper once gaudy, now dreary with the utter dreariness of dirt charged on bright color, and had a wooden surbase about a foot in depth. Above the surbase there was a hole, not so large as to be easily remarked in a place where dilapidation of every sort was the usual state of things, and into this hole Jim insinuated his hand.

There was suggestive dexterity in the way he did this; the lithe fingers had suppleness and readiness, swiftness and accuracy of touch, which, if there had been any one to care for the boy, that one would doubtless have noticed with regret. If he were not already a thief, Jim Swain possessed some of the physical requisites of that profession. Presently he withdrew the lithe hand, and looked steadfastly at the object which it had extracted from the hole in the wall. He turned it over and over, he examined it within and without, then he put it back again in the hiding-place, and replaced his bed.

Old Sally was much surprised, when she returned from her "marketing," to find her nephew at home. The apparition of Jim in the daytime, except on stray occasions, when, fortune being unpropitious, he would come home to see what his aunt could do for him in the way of dinner, was exceedingly rare. But he explained it now by saying he was tired, and had been well paid for a job he had done that morning. He proposed that he should get something choice that day for dinner, and stay "in" until evening.

"There's a new play at the 'Delphi to-night," said Jim, "and there'll be plenty of jobs down that way, callin' cabs, and helpin' visitors to the hupper circle, as can't afford 'em, across the street. They're awful bewildered, mostly, when they come out of the theayter, and dreadful timid of the 'busses."

Very silent, and apparently sleepy, was Mr. James Swain all day; and as his old aunt sat patiently toiling by the window, he lay upon his bed, with his knees up, and his hands crossed on the top of his tousled head. Allowing for the difference created by refinement, education, and the habit of thinking on a system, only possible to the educated, there was some resemblance in the expression of the boy's face to that which Harriet Routh's had worn yesterday, when she had carried the burden of her thoughts, under the clear sky and the sunshine, in the Green Park. Jim Swain, too, looked as if he alone, unaided as she, was thinking it out.

The new play at the Adelphi was very successful. The theatre was crowded; the autumnal venture had turned out admirably; and though the audience could not be called fashionable, it was perhaps rather more animated and satisfactory in consequence. Jim Swain's most sanguine hopes were realized. The night was fine; people did not mind waiting a few minutes; good humor and threepenny-pieces were abundant. A tolerable sprinkling of private carriages relieved the plebeian plenitude of cabs, and these vehicles were called up with an energy to which, in the season, human nature would hardly have been equal. Jim was extremely active in summoning them, and had just returned breathless to the portico of the theater to catch another name, and rush away again to proclaim it to the listening flunkies, when he was arrested by the sight of a gentleman whose face he knew, who was standing under the garish light of the entry with a lady, whose hand rested on his arm, and whose face was turned upward towards him, so that the full glare of the light fell upon it.

Her tall figure, the splendor of her dress, the careless grace of her attitude, the appearance of unconsciousness of the general observation she was attracting, even in that self-engrossed crowd,—pardonably self-engrossed, considering that it was occupied with the care of getting home as soon as possible,—would have made her a sufficiently remarkable object to attract Jim's attention; but there was more than preception of all these things in the look which he fixed upon her. He stood still, a little in the shade. Routh did not see him. The lady was looking at him, and he saw nothing but her face,—nothing but he brilliant dark eyes, so bright for all the world, so soft for only him; nothing but the crimson lips, which trembled; the rose-tinted cheek, which paled only at his words,—only under his glance.

Her carriage was called. She walked towards it with her dress sweeping round her, and the other people fell back, and let her pass, naturally, and not by the urgency of the dingy officials who brawl and fight on such occasions. When she had taken her seat in the carriage, Routh followed her, and then Jim started forward. There was no footman, so the man with the badge and the lantern, well known and prized of unprotected females with a taste for theater-going, asked, "Where to?" Jim, quite close, and totally unobserved, listened eagerly. The lady's voice replied, "Home."

"Home," said the man with the lantern, and instantly turned his attention to the next departures. Jim Swain glanced at the carriage; it had no rumble, only a footboard. As it drove off slowly, for the Strand was crowded, he dashed into the jumble of cabs and omnibuses and followed it, running desperately, but dexterously too, and succeeded in keeping up with it until, at a point of comparative obscurity, he clambered up on the footboard.

"The carriage rolled westward, and carried Jim Swain with it, until it reached one of the small so-called squares which are situated between Brompton proper and Chelsea. Then it stopped before a house with a heavy stone portico and a heavy stone balcony. Jim slid lightly to the ground, and hid himself in the shelter of the heavy stone portico of the adjoining house. Routh got out of the carriage; and when the house-door was opened, and a flood of light issued from it, he handed out the lady. She stood breathing the sweet air a moment, and the light once more touched her face and her dress with a rich radiance.

"It's her," said Jim. "It's her—her and him."

"What a lovely night," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, and then the door closed on her and Routh, and Jim stood still in his hiding-place until the carriage had slowly departed to the adjacent mews. Then he emerged from the portico, went up the steps of the house the lady and her companion had entered, and looked at the number on the door, distinctly visible by the light of the gas-jet within.

"Number four," said Jim; "now for the name of the square;" and he crossed the road, skirted the railings of the enclosed patch of brown ground and stunted shrubs, and took the opposite side of the way. The night was clear and bright, and the name of the square was distinctly legible.

"Hollington Square," said Jim. "They called Mrs. Bembridge's carriage. I have not a bad head for names, but I'll get Teddy Smith to write these down. And I can't stand it any longer; I must do something. I'll try and get Mr. Dallas to let me speak to him when he comes from abroad, and then I'll tell him all about it. I suppose," said Jim very ruefully, "if he thinks right to tell, they'll lag me; but it can't be helped. Almost every one as I've knowed gets lagged some time or other."

To be Continued.

SOME DAY.

You smooth the tangles from my hair
With gentle touch and tenderest care,
And count the years ere you shall mark
Bright silver threads among the dark—
Smiling the while to hear me say,
"You'll think of this again some day—
Some day!"

I do not scorn the power of time,
Nor count on years of fadeless prime;
But no white gleams will ever shine
Among these heavy locks of mine.
Ay! laugh as gaily as you may,
You'll think of this again some day—
Some day!

I know how long your loving hands
Will linger with these glossy bands—
When you shall weave my latest crown
Of their thick masses, long and brown.
But you will see no touch of gray
Adorn their shining length that day—
Some day!

And while your tears are falling hot
Upon the lips which answer not,
You'll take from these one treasured tress,
And leave the rest to silentness;
Remember that I used to say,
"You'll think of this again some day—
Some day!"

A Michigander and a Michigoose were joined in wedlock last month, who had not seen each other until the day they were married. The courting was done entirely by mail. There seemed (after the wedding) to be a probability of their liking each other as soon as they become acquainted.

Good temper, like a sunny day, sheds a brightness over everything.

He who speaks, sows. He who listens, reaps.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

THE BRADDON CONTROVERSY.

THE question as to whether the novel entitled Nobody's Daughter, now in course of publication in the New York Sunday Mercury, is, or is not by Miss Braddon. does not seem to be yet settled. The London Athenæum "respectfully counsels" Miss Braddon herself to come forward and put an end to the squabble. Says the Athenæum:

"At this present time the proprietors of the New York Sunday Mercury are publishing in their paper a novel, entitled Nobody's Daughter; or The Ballad Singer of Wapping, which they announce in highly sensational advertisements as an original work from the pen of Miss Braddon, of whom they observe, with characteristic magniloquence and capitals—'Two Worlds have indorsed Miss E. Braddon as a novelist of transcendent power—the Old World and the New. The English reviewers have carped at her works—probably because they had not soul enough to appreciate them; but the very magazines in which their pettifogging criticisms are published have since found it to their interest to beg for stories from her pen, paying her such price therefor as she thought fit to demand, and she queens it to-day in the department of Sensational Romance wherever the English language is spoken.' Whilst they thus proclaim Miss Braddon's royal status, these same masters of sensational advertisements speak tall words about their own merits, stating very distinctly that they are citizens of whom the Union has every reason to be proud, and that their Sunday Mercury is 'the newspaper that occupies the throne of Sunday journalism.' Next to personal possession of a throne, the sole and unlimited possession of that which occupies a throne may be regarded as the highest object of mere worldly ambition; and we congratulate their Majesties one-degree-removed of the Sunday Mercury on their tenure of royal rank—although their throne is nothing more splendid than the editorial chair of a Sunday newspaper. Nor do we warmly censure the enthusiasm, though we may question the judgment, which they display in fighting for Miss Braddon's crown. Since they have 'soul enough' to admire her novels, by all means let them put to shame those English reviews 'which carped at her works, probably because they had not soul enough to appreciate them." But if upon inquiry it should be ascertained either that they have been induced to regard as Miss Braddon's work a story of which she never wrote a line, or that they have conspired to hoax the public for their own private advantage, what will be thought of these several occupants of thrones?"

SAINTE-BEUVE ON COUSIN.

The estrangement between those two illustrious Academicians, Victor Cousin and Sainte-Beuve, originated in Cousin's invasion of a literary field which his colleagues considered that he had appropriated. Sainte-Beuve looked upon the reign of Louis XIV as exclusively his own domain, and when Cousin, in his Duchess de Longueville, showed that he had discovered new treasures in what was supposed to be an exhausted field, and brought to light hitherto unpublished documents, the former was naturally annoyed. "Mutual friends" reported to Cousin the sharp and witty comments of Sainte-Beuve upon his work, and did not fail to carry back the retorts they elicited. Thus an estrangement was produced between them. Happily, these two eminent men were reconciled before Cousin's death, of which we have recently received intelligence. The following remarks of Sainte-Beuve on the mental characteristics of the philosopher, derive the greater interest from the relations that existed between the two. We extract from the Paris correspondence of the Philadelphia Literary Gazette:

"But what a singular organization was that individuality named Cousin; what an original colleague! Did you ever see and hear him? He remains for me, and, I am persuaded, for a great many of them who know him best, a problem and an enigma. But you will say to me, what man is not an enigma? In him 'twas with eclat everything was produced, and with a temporary sincerity which looked like enthusiasm, and which, when one was warned and accustomed to it, admitted something comic, but comic of the highest character. In his youth he for a long time produced a complete illusion upon his first friends and disciples. He reigned over them, he pushed them towards grand things, grand works, noble thoughts, nay, even generous conspiracies. When I entered the literary world (1825) my masters were some of these first friends of Cousin. I in the beginning learnt from them to judge him, and I must say they were even then half-undeceived, but only half, and they still bore him noble vestiges of admiration and respect. As you have indicated, he oscillated a little in philosophy in those days; he embraced more clouds than he subsequently kept in possession; he did not seem clear to everybody, and was not absolutely anxious to appear so. The great literary man veiled himself a little, and hid under the hierophant. It would be curious then to see him judged by his peers. He was so judged in secret by Maine de Biran. The latter's Journal contained at first a good many of his opinions about Cousin, who belonged to the small circle formed by Ampère, Roger Collard, etc. But these passages were prudently suppressed, when the Journal was in press, by the editor (M. Naville), who thought it would be wrong on his part to publish them. If I except four or five survivors, we have only seen Cousin, the philosopher, of the second epoch; the Cousin who was more of an orator than a philosopher, and who was at last an accomplished writer. He was under these last forms sufficiently prolific and inexhaustible. We had been so intimate from a time, even then very distant, that despite our rupture, in consequence of incidents which it is best to bury, whenever we met—and the Academy made our meetings frequent—we irresistibly began to talk almost as we used to do, to discuss, to appeal to each other for a witness on common grounds. He knew my admiration at bottom for the talented nature, and that with him, while sometimes taking the liberty of contradicting him, I observed the difference in our ranks." M. Sainte-Beuve has given in another place a sketch of M. Cousin in the Academy: "I have never heard literature better treated in our private meetings of the Academy, no matter what might be the question suddenly raised; but this was during the first half hour; the monologue was spoiled as it lengthened. It was entirely too intemperate. This sweeping speech could prevent itself from going too far, from exaggerating in one sense or another. M. Guizot said: 'No mind more needs an embankment.' But when it consented to receive an embankment the river flowed admirably."

HOW LAMARTINE USED TO "EXTEMPORIZE" LANDSCAPES.

The same correspondent, in another letter, tells the following amusing, but rather extravagant story of M. De Lamartine:

"While M de Lamartine was in life's sunny hours he was accustomed to issue weekly an invitation somewhat in these terms: 'M. de Lamartine begs Mons. N. or M. to do him the honor to spend the morning of the —— inst. with him. M. de Lamartine will extemporize a landscape.' His large drawing-room, beautifully furnished and decorated, was rather sombre. The guests were seated in chairs placed in parallel lines. M. de Lamartine sat on an arm-chair under a sort of velvet canopy, and was wrapped in meditation. Near him was a black ebony easel and a painter. When all the guests were in their places, a servant carefully and noiselessly closed the doors, and M. de Lamartine rose. The painter likewise rose and stood in front of his canvas. M. de Lamartine fixed his eyes on an imaginary horizon, and began to say: 'On the right of the landscape a series of small hills—as it were waves of sand—planted with vines—crowned with nothing but some wild peach-tress, which throw no shade upon the vines.' The poor painter's hand went as fast as a stenographer's, while perspiration rolled down his forehead. On M. de Lamartine went, throwing in the sun here, a rock there—yonder a waterfall, hard-by a cottage; beyond it the full moon—clouds all around. At last, almost breathless, M. de Lamartine exclaimed, 'Look on this landscape, and tell me if it does not invite thought to spread its wings, and bear the soul as far as hope can fly, imagination soar!' The landscape was shown to the guests. They all poured holy water on it One vowed Raphael had never painted anything half so beautiful; another declared no museum possessed anything like it (which was true); this one begged for it: another said 'twas worth its weight in gold. M. de Lamartine strutted backwards and forwards, bowing, in his stately way, to the compliments paid him. It turned out afterwards that the artist, who so greatly exceeded Raphael, was a poor wretch of a house-painter, who received a dollar and a quarter for his pains, and who has, since M. de Lamartine discontinued his excursions into the realms of art, earned his living by painting signs. Is not all this French and funny?"

AMERICAN HUMOR.

The New York Tribune, in an article on American Humor, briefly alludes to several Californian writers, scarcely doing justice to Mark Twain, and making no mention whatever of Frank Bret Harte, some of whose sketches evince as much genuine humor as anything ever written in California. The vein, however, is delicate, with just a tinge of sentiment held in severe restraint lest it should verge upon sentimentality, and a dash of subtle satire, that occasionally reminds one of the inimitable touch of Thackeray. This, of course, is not the style of humor to be appreciated in a backwoods settlement or on a Mississippi flatboat; it is not droll or whimsical, or rollicking, but we are sure that if Mr. Young, the writer of the Tribune article, had read "Bret's" "Venerable Impostor," or his "My Newfoundland Dog," he would not have made allusion to Californian humorist, without honorable mention of Mr. Harte. Mr. Young thinks that at the West is more prolific in humorists than any other section of the country. He says:

"The humor of to-day is not that of Irving, nor is the humor of America like that of England. The English are fond of Artemus Ward. Mr. Lowell's most ardent admirers are in England, just as Mr. Dickens and Mr. Thackeray find the most enthusiastic admiration in America. When the negro minstrels went to London, with their blackened faces and crisp, curly wigs, and quaint, humorous song, they drew crowds. We have no humor more sweet and natural than that which came from the poor slave, and we trust that some writer will do it justice. With the exception of Hosea Biglow, our humorists are Western. Artemus Ward comes from Ohio. (?) The writer called "Mark Twain," who has not done much beyond showing promise, is from California. Mr. Webb, who did some clever things when in New York, and from whom we expect much cleverness again, is from the West, we believe. Mr. Nasby, although professing to have come from New Jersey, is a resident of Ohio. The humor of the West is larger and broader than that of the East. We might say it was coarser; but this would imply an injustice we are far from intending. Perhaps we may say that in the West it is natural, in the East it is artificial. The writer known as John Phœnix had, perhaps, more natural power as a humorist than any other American. Had he lived, we might have had one writer who would have been, as a humorist, what Poe is in our poetry, and Irving in our prose. The few things he wrote were crude, hasty, exaggerated, but with genius. We know few things so intensely, wildly humorous as the account of the young man who was accidetally shot on the banks of the Pecus river. The very wildness of that writer's humor tended so strongly to the burlesque that it became unnatural, a fault which we see in Mr. Nasby at times, for instance, when he gives us his 'dreams,' which are the least meritorious letters of his collection."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE London Athenæum is manifesting an unusually conciliatory spirit toward this country. It says:

"Two nations like Great Britian and the United States, speaking a common language, and each possessing a copious literature, have no excuse for not knowing one another, and ought to be preserved from many of the misunderstandings which are likely to disturb the intercourse of countries that have not the same means for arriving at a state of intimacy and mutual confidence." It adds: "There is an imposing roll of American authors who have been thoroughly adopted as captains of thought by the intellectual rank and file of this country. Longfellow is not less popular in London than Tennyson in New York or Boston; Cooper is read in Old almost as widely as Walter Scott in New England; the novels of Washington Irving are as much works of universal and permanent interest in the cities and villages of Great Britian as the tales of Charles Dickens are affairs of familiar conversation throughout the Union; Prescott, Bancroft, and Holmes are names that glitter on the shelves of every well-furnished library on this side of the Atlantic.'

The Spectator says: "It seems within the region of the probable that, in the vexed question of literary copywright, an author's name will have to be registered, as well as that of his production, to keep him safe from pirates. As matters now stand, there is nothing to prevent a second, but pseudo, Mr. Dickens or Mr. Tennyson from appending their names to any trash, and getting it published as 'the new novel by Mr. Dickens,' or 'the new poem by Mr. Tennyson,' and, on the strength of the name alone, disposing of some hundreds of copies to unwary and credulous purchasers. Even when no fraud is intended, two similar names often lead to confusion, as in the cases of the novels by the two Kingsleys and the two Trollopes. And it now appears that there are two Mrs. Woods who produce three-volume novels; for Mrs. Henry Wood writes to all the daily papers that she must not be confounded with that other Mrs. Wood who appears in public without her Henry—and Mr. Bentley advertises to the effect that a new Mrs. Wood has arisen who knows not Bentley, and that the publisher of this second 'Mrs. Wood's new novel' has never published any work by the author of 'East Lynne.' Furthermore, Mr. T. C. Newby writes to say that Mrs. Henry Hastings Wood is equally anxious with Mrs. Henry Wood that the public should not be misled as to the authorship of 'Sir Cyrus of Stoneycleft.'"

ROBERTS BROTHERS are about to publish a work which is likely to excite some comment. The title is "Ecce Deus: Essays on the Life and Doctrine of Jesus Christ." With Controversial Notes on "Ecce Homo." The style of "Ecce Deus" is said to be like that of "Ecce Homo," and such readers as accept the doctrine of one book will like that of the other. The anonymous author of "Ecce Deus" states in his preface that it is not an answer to "Ecce Homo." It is hinted, by those who ought to know, that both books are by the same author, one being published in London, and the other, "Ecce Deus," having just appeared with the imprint of an Edinburgh firm, perhaps the better to disguise the ruse.

TWELVE copies of a volume entitled the "Hundred Guinea Bible" have been printed by Mr. Mackenzie, of Glasgow. The "Bookseller" says: "It is the most sumptuous and best printed Bible ever produced in this country. The size is atlas folio, the type used is beautiful, sharp-cut great primer, set up in two columns, with two narrow central columns of references; a thick red border line is printed outside the text; the paper made use of is very thick, made specially by Dickenson, costing, we believe, as much as fourteen pence [British] a pound.

RARE COLLECTION OF AMERICAN COINS.—Messrs. Repiton & Bumpus, of No. 626 Montgomery street, have perhaps the only complete set of American coins in the hands of private individuals in the United States. They have the American silver dollar for every year, from 1794 to 1866, half dollars from 1794 to 1867, quarter dollars from 1796 to 1867; dimes from 1796 to 1861, half dimes from 1794 to 1867; cents from 1723 to 1867; three-cent pieces from 1851 to 1867; two cent pieces from 1863 to 1867, and half-cents from 1793 to 1857. This collection has occupied more than fifteen years of Mr. Repiton's time, and cost about twenty thousand dollars. As an instance of the rarity of some of the coins, we will state that the silver dollar of 1804 costs $950, and Mr. R. had, before he succeeded in finding one he could purchase, made an unsuccessful tender of fifteen hundred dollars for one in the possession of a gentleman residing in Salem, Massachusetts. Of the silver dollar of 1838 only eighteen were minted, and consequently they are very rare. The silver dollar of 1852 is also very rare, and is rated by numismatologists at from $300 to $500. Besides this collection of American coins, Messrs. R. & B. have specimens of the coins of nearly all nations, and some coins over two thousand years old. The coins are a great curiosity, and their owners could readily sell them for fifty thousand dollars.—Morning Call.

B. C. HORN & CO.—The name of this old firm must mingle with every California pioneer's oldest recollections, and must unevitably be allied with that of the choicest brands of Tobacco and Cigars, most of which they have been for many years the sole agents for. With the opening anew of the Virginia Tobacco trade and the increase of business facilities at Havana, Messrs. B. C. Horn & Co. come again proudly before the public with a full columned catalogue of old Virginia and Havana's best productions—known and varied brands of the choicest fluvor of "the weed." Turn to their advertisement in to-day's CALIFORNIAN and see the list of the good old familiar brands once more in market.

ÆTNA IRON WORKS.—This establishment is one of the most complete of our numerous foundries and machine shops, and is doing a very extensive business not only in engines, mill and quartz machinery, but in the especial line of ornamental iron work for stores public edifices, etc. Messrs. Hanscom & Co., the proprietors, are punctual workmen, who are proficient in and pay especial attention to this class of work. The Ætna Iron Works are located on Freemont street, corner Tehama.

ELECTRICITY.—The use of Dr. Bourne's powerful and superb battery may be had at a charge of only four bits—10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

THE SICK ARE CURED without medicines better and quicker than with them, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

[For the Californian.]

THE NEWSPAPER MANIA.

A FRENCH writer, enumerating the achievements of the representative American man before attaining middle age, states, among other things, that he (the American—not the writer) "has run for Congress and away with another man's wife, and published a newspaper." We suspect that our Gallic friend formed his estimate of the versatility of Yankee genius and enterprise from observations made in California; for, although our countrymen everywhere are prone to run for Congress, and are too apt, upon serious provocation, to run away with other men's wives (an exploit which would be entirely unnecessary and only provoke ridicule in France), it is in this State alone, and especially in San Francisco, that the cacoethes publicandi has been developed into an epidemic, afflicting all classes of people. In the Eastern States journalism is recognized as a distinct profession, and few engage in it without the preparatory training which is considered essential to the successful conduct of every legitimate pursuit. Here, everybody considers himself capable of conducting a newspaper, and nearly everybody expects at some time or other—or has expected, or will expect, if he does not happen to die suddenly—to be connected with a newspaper, either as editor, publisher, or proprietor. He may not have the remotest conception of the duties of an editor, or the responsibilities of a publisher, or the expensiveness usually attending the condition of newspaper proprietorship—it matters not; with the proverbial recklessness of the true Californian he embraces the first opportunity to sport his name at the head of a newspaper. He may have been raised to the honorable occupation of a shoemaker, or pursued the luerative voeation of a corner-groceryman, or acted as constable for a wooden-headed justice of the peace, or professed law or medicine, or preached, or mended dilapidated tinware, or extracted corns, or blown the bass viol in a melodeon orchestra, or even groomed horses in a livery stable—whatever his calling may have been, his experience in it has eminently qualified him, in his own opinion, to conduct a newspaper. Men who have been successful in any kind of honorable but unaristocratic business—men whose fashionable garments and splendid equipages are not free from the odor of the distillery, the soap factory or the leather store, and who are therefore looked down upon by their neighbors who have become rich and respected through courses of legalized knavery—combine together to publish a newspaper, hoping through the "power of the press" to obtain that position and influence which they could not otherwise. It is so easy to publish a newspaper! Types cost but little more than a dollar per pound, paper only ten or twelve dollars per ream, composition but seventy-five cents per thousand ems, and editorial labor—why that will cost but a mere trifle; reporters can be hired at ten to twelve dollars per week, and an experienced publisher of this city has been heard to boast that he "can hire the best editorial talent for fifteen dollars per week!" There will be something to pay for office rent, clerk hire, gas-light, etc.; but the receipts from subscriptions and advertising must be large in proportion to the expenses. "The new candidate for public favor" is always "designed to supply a want which has long been felt in this community," and its "success is not problematical"—never; there is no such case on record. It is creditable to the modesty of the wealthy projectors of "first-class" daily papers, that they do not expect to make any clear money from such an enterprise for the first four or five months: expenses are always so heavy at starting, and it will take some little time to get the paper fairly before the public and secure for it the patronage it deserves. Of course, with the trifling exception of the necessary outlay incident to the commencement of a new enterprise, newspapers always pay a handsome dividend on the capital invested in them; everybody knows that. The reason why so many journals have expired in this city is, that their publishers were too easily discouraged, and did not continue them long enough. Otherwise those papers might have been published at this day.

The man who has been unsuccessful in everything else he has undertaken finds at last his true vocation in publishing a newspaper. It is an easy enough business—as easy as keeping a hotel. We never yet saw a man who was not prepared to volunteer some advice concerning not only the editorial conduct but also the business management of a newspaper. Every man has a novel, unique and entirely original plan of his own for "making people subscribe," and another for "making them advertise." Briefless lawyers are particularly happy in devices of this kind. They know just what is wanted in a good newspaper though they do not always know what is essential to a good case. They can supply at short notice the very style of article that will take with the public, though they are often unable to prepare the style of argument that will take with the court and jury. They have an eternal longing to "wield the tripod," as one of our country contemporaries has happily expressed it; but their energy does not keep pace with their aspirations wherefore we are deprived of the daily perusal of a large number of first class papers, conceived in fertile brains, but never brought forth. We fear the world will never know what it has lost from this cause. Sometimes young men have abandoned the law for the profession of journalism with astonishing results, to wit: some thirty or forty newspapers added to the bills of journalistic mortality.

The form of newspaper mania most prevalent in this latitude is that which is developed in the direction of specialties. The number of journals started in this city to "advocate the rights and dignity of labor" and "repel the encroachments of capital" is almost incredible. Considering the extremely liberal manner in which our laboring population as a class support daily newspapers, it is not astonishing that they have had so many volunteer organs, but it is a little singular that so few of them have survived. The same remark will apply to journals devoted to blarneying our fellow-citizens of Celtic birth, of which there have been three or four published in this city at once, though two only survive out of a large number that have been ushered into existence. Ministers have a mania for publishing church organs, and they generally succeed better in sustaining their specialties than other publishers, since it is considered a part of a church-member's Christian duty to contribute to the support of his denominational organ, and contributions for the same purpose are pretty extensively levied upon "publicans and sinners," who are willing to compound for their daily transgressions by aiding in the dissemination of religious literature. If our temperance friends could induce the liquor dealers to make a similar compromise with conscience, they also would be able to maintain an organ. By the way, it is strange that no one has thought of publishing an organ of the liquor dealers—a numerous class on this coast, and generally very liberal. It would probably pay quite as well as some other newspaper specialties.

We have three or four "anti-coolie" organs in this city—a large number, considering that there are no coolies. One would think that the anti-coolie newspaper mania had reached its limit; but it appears that it has not. There are rumors of a new daily and goodness knows how many weeklies to be devoted to this specialty.

Some individuals betray a morbid propensity to publish "commercial" and "business" papers. These require no particular talent in their management, being composed of a single page of advertisements, with a list of fire-alarm boxes in one corner, and a broad alley-way down the middle in which, under six-line pica date lines, the hour of sailing of the Sacramento and Stockton steamers is announced. This type of the mania seems to be quite profitable, there being a large class of persons in this city who are interested in knowing that the aforesaid steamers sail every day, Sundays excepted, at four o'clock P. M., and that the fire alarm boxes remain undisturbed at their respective corners.

There are some men so resolutely bent on publishing newspapers and periodicals, to advocate certain favorite ideas or subserve peculiar interests, that they are willing to pay a large share of the expenses out of their own pockets. To this insane liberality are owing several political newspapers and a number of professional organs, which will probably survive as long as their proprietors' money holds out, or printers will work for nothing.

It is a characteristic feature of the prevailing mania, that even a successful newspaper is a standing object of feeble rivalry. The Bulletin and the Alta have not maintained their enviable position at the head of our city press without some difficulty. The Call has had a host of rivals, and is threatened with yet others. No "new field" is discovered by an enterprising explorer in the domain of journalism, but that half a dozen publishers are ready to contend for its occupancy. It is curious to reckon up the number of utterly worthless newspapers—unprofitable to both publishers and patrons—which have been ushered into existence under the insane delusion that "the public demands just such a paper," or that "the public is disgusted with the Bulletin"—or the Alta, or the Call, as the case may be—"and must have another and more reliable organ." It is amusing to note the number of papers which were "going to get the auctioneers' advertisements," and failed to get them, and died of disappointment, because, the auctioneers' advertisements being withheld, existence had for them no further object. Auctioneers have proved ungrateful—cruelly and persistently so—to the enterprising maniacs who have started nowspapers expressly to serve them.

On Thursday last, when this article was put in type, the number of newspapers and periodicals published in this city was fifty-one. How many have been commenced or discontinued in the meantime we have not ascertained; but the mania is unabated. Several new journals are announced shortly to appear.

JOHN CLERK.

THE disastrous effects of quinine, and all other vegetable and mineral medicines (poisons), in daily use by the medicine doctors, eradicated by the use of DR. BOURNE'S BATHS, 10 Masonic Temple, Post st. *

MERCURY, and all other mineral and vegetable poisons removed from the system: and at the same time, rheumatism, neuralgia, etc., are cured by DR BOURNE, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

RHEUMATISM CURED.—Cures warranted for a definite fee, and at the same time mercury and all mineral poisons removed from the system, by DR. BOURNE, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday the Opera House company was translated to the Academy of Music, in consequence of the scenic artists and carpenters requiring full possession of the Opera House, in order to make the preparations necessary for the grand event of Monday, and the comedy of Society was produced. This is a decidedly clever play; and had it had full justice done it at the Academy of Music might have attracted good houses, even in San Francisco where modern English comedy is not the popular kind of dramatic diet. Mr. Edwards, who plays everything well, was quite at home in the part of "Sydney Daryl," though his love-making is always a little heavy. Mrs. Sophie Edwin, as "Maud Hetherington," had but few opportunities afforded her of displaying her pathetic power. Mrs. Harry Jackson was absolutely perfect in her Jackson, whose forte is low comedy, made people laugh by his rendition of the character of "Lady Ptarmigant." Harry impersonation of the high comedy part of "Tom Stylus," but failed to give the true idea of the character, as might have been expected. Willie Edouin played the snobbish "John Todd, Jr.," very well, with the exception that he rather overacted it; the contortions of the body which he indulges in are funny sometimes, but he exhibits them too often. H. D. Thompson, as "John Todd, Sr.," acted very well. In a comedy such as Society it is absolutely necessary that every character be well played, and as there are not twenty-three clever comedians in this company, many of the parts in which there was not much talking to do were committed to incompetent persons. Pierpont Thayer's "O Sullivan" was a very clever piece of acting, and E. Russell's "McUsquebaugh" did him credit. This piece was played every evening during the week. On Wednesday the proceeds of the entertainment were given to the Famine Relief Fund, Mr. Charles Tibbets having offered the house and the services of the company on that occasion to the committee. This evening the Academy of Music will remain closed in order to afford the company more time to rehearse the famous Black Crook, which will be produced in gorgeous style on Monday. The most extraordinary preparations have been made for this piece. Innumerable bewildering effects will be produced, and Heller's "wonders" will sink into insignificance when compared with the supernatural appearances in the scene of the "Devil's Glen." At the back of the stage rushes a torrent of real water which in an instant turns to blood, the air is filled with phantoms, and Death and the Devil hold high carnival. The scene of the "Grotto of Stalacta" is as beautiful as that of the "Devil's Glen" is horrifying, and the transformation scene is the most splendid ever produced on the Stage. Miss Sallie Hinckley will make her reappearance in this piece. Miss Rosa Siegrist and Miss Emma Miles will appear with an immense corps de ballet, and the cast will be filled by members of the Opera House Company.

The exhibitions given by the San Francisco Olympic Club at their rooms have always been attended by the beauty and fashion of the city, and thousands of the uninvited have envied those who had received tickets of admission. The Olympic Club have at length yielded to outside pressure, and have consented to give a grand public exhibition of their skill on Tuesday evening, April 16th, at the Metropolitan Theater. Many of the members of this club are equal in gymnastic and acrobatic talent to the most experienced professionals. The feats of the Japanese gymnasts, which were thought so astonishing, are performed with the utmost ease and grace by members of the Olympic Club. The box office is now open for the sale of tickets. A large and fashionable audience may be expected to attend.

To-morrow evening a grand sacred concert will be given at the Metropolitan Theater, in aid of the Southern Relief Fund, the Management having in the most generous manner tendered the use of the theater free of charge to the committee, provided that they could get up a concert. A place to sing in was all that our generous musical artistes required. They immediately set to work to get up a concert, and volunteered their services. The concert had to be a sacred one, as the theater brought in rent on any other day except Sunday. A glorious programme has been prepared, comprising some of the finest compositions of the great masters of music; and all our leading operatic and vocal artistes and a full orchestra, together with the U. S. Artillery Band, have volunteered and will participate in the holy service of charity.

On Monday evening Mr. E. G. Bert, of the Olympic Theater, will be the recipient of a complimentary benefit, at the Metropolitan Theater, in which the Olympic and Metropolitan Companies will combine. On this occasion Miss Grace Darley, who is far too good an actress for the Olympic, will make her first appearance at this theater. Miss Charlotte Crampton, who has been for some time past in retirement, will appear. Harry Courtaine will put in an appearance; Miss Kathleen O'Neil, the favorite Irish ballad singer, will make his first appearance on the Metropolitan boards. Joe Murphy, Lew Rattler and a host of volunteers will assist in this testimonial to Mr. Bert. The chief members of the ballet of the Martinetti Troupe will execute some of their favorite dances.

Heller closes his engagement at the Metropolitan Theater, to-night, and next week goes on a professional tour through the interior.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy's first lecture at the Mechanics' Institute Hall, last Sunday evening, was quite a success. To-morrow evening Mrs. Cuppy will reply to the sermon preached against Spiritualism, by the Rev. Mr. Dwinelle, of Sacramento.

TOUCHSTONE.

THE LONDON O. P. (OLD PRICE) RIOTS.

THEATRICAL riots have not been unfreqnent in English theaters.

There was a great riot at the Portugal-street Theater in 1721, in Rich's time, when Quin and his brother actors flashed out their swords and drove out the wild young rakes who had threatened to pink the manager. There was a great scuffle before this at the same house when, wishing to insult the brazen Duchess of Portsmouth, some tipsy gentlemen drew their blades in the pit, and flung blazing flambeaux among the actors on the stage.

There was the Footman's Riot in 1737, and the prodigious mutiny, too, in Garrick's Drury Lane. in 1854, about those foreign dancers. The pit thrashed the boxes, jumped on the harpsichord, broke up benches, slashed the scenery, and pelted poor Davy's windows in Southampton street. And that terrible evening, also, at the Haymarket, when thousands of enraged tailors threatened to surge into the theater to prevent old Dowton playing "The Tailors, or a Tragedy for Warm Weather." One of them was actually bold enough, without even the help of his eight partners, to fling a pair of heavy shears at the great comedian. But as the minuow is to the whale, so were all these popular effervescences compared with those tremendous yet ludicrous disturbances in 1809, which, for no less than sixty-one nights, under the name of the O. P. Riots, agitated London, divided society, and convulsed Covent Garden.

The old Covent Garden Theater had been burnt down September 20, 1808, by the wadding of the musket of one of the Spanish soldiers in Pizarro. Twenty persons perished in trying to save the building. Handel's organ, Munden's wardrobe and Miss Bolton's jewels were all consumed. The new building cost fifty thousand pounds, besides the forty four thousand five hundred pounds insurance. The Duke of Northumberland generously lent Kemble ten thousand pounds, and sent him the receipt to burn on the day when the first stone was laid by the Prince of Wales and the Freemasons, of whom the "ne'er-do-weel" was Grand Master. Mr. Robert Smirke, jun., built the new theater to resemble the great Doric Temple of Minerva on the Acropolis. The roof was one hundred feet long and one hundred and thirty feet wide. The pit had its old twenty benches. The chief obnoxious novelty was that the third tier of boxes, letting for twelve thousand pounds a year, had small ante-rooms opening into a saloon reserved at three hundred pounds a year each for annual renters only. This especially exasperated the democratic town. A person seated in the back row of the two-shilling gallery was eighty-six feet from the stage door; in the upper gallery the spectator was one hundred and four feet distant. The house was lit by glass chandeliers in front of each circle, two hundred and seventy wax candles a night being consumed, while the stage and scenery had their three hundred patent lamps. The prevailing color of the house was white; the ornaments gold on a light pink ground. So far so good, but no further.

The season of 1808 had been a specially interesting one. Miss Pope, the "chambermaid" par excellence for fifty years, had retired. In the same month, Madame Storace, the unapproachable buffa of English opera and musical farce, had also taken her leave; and soon after Mrs. Mattocks, for nearly sixty years the gayest of stage widows, and the most inimitable of M'Tabs, had made her final curtsey. In the meantime the management had not been idle. They had got Liston, that fine farceur, as a comic dancer, and Young for nervous tragedy; Incledon for noble sea-songs; Munden for extravagant drollery, and Fawcett for harsh comic force. Mrs. Dickons was also a favorite with the Covent Garden public for good sound acting; and, above all, not to mention the grace and majesty of Mrs. Siddons, there was that cheval de bataille, that beautiful Roman lady, Madame Catalani, whose voice could follow a flute through all its ripplings, and a flute through all its windings.

John Philip Kemble, the son of a Staffordshire manager, was born in 1757, and has made his first appearance on the London boards as Hamlet, in 1783. He had been the sovereign idol of the public, and hitherto had reigned supreme in their favor. Age had not yet made him hard, dry, cold nor pedantic, as that fine critic, Hazlitt, afterward thought him. Kean's thunder-storm of passionate genius had not yet shaken old Drury to its center.

The town was menacingly silent. The young men in the public offices (great theater-goers) alone openly denounced the new prices, the boxes being raised from six shillings to seven shillings, the pit from three shillings and sixpence to four shillings, the galleries alone being left at their former rates of two shillings and one shilling. The extension of aristocratic and exclusive privileges, the new ante-rooms where the Phrynes, Chloes and Aspasias of the day would flaunt their newly-acquired finery, especially irritated the virtuous town. The Tory papers advocated the new prices, the Whig papers, without exception, the old. Advertisements, letters and paragraphs, urging combination and resistance, had appeared long before the fatal day of opening. London was ripe for a theatrical mutiny.

Mr. Kemble, proud as Coriolanus, and conscious of the enormous outlay of the proprietors that had compelled the temporary high prices, was defiant and confident. On the morning of the opening, he was seen walking like a Cæsar down Bow street on his way to the newspaper offices with letters and paragraphs to influence and direct the public mind in the way it should go, and to assure theater-goers that it was not by any means the engagement of Madame Catalani that had induced the obnoxious alteration.

It was Monday, the 18th of September, 1809. The new theater, which had been built in nine months, opened with Macbeth—not one of Kemble's finest performances—and the musical farce of the Quaker. The house was crowded, and a great and suspiciously expectant crowd collected also around the street doors. The people in the pit shook down into their places, but were wrangling, argumentative, jostling and restless. The pretty but rather high colored faces in the obnoxious upper tiers looked down anxious and alarmed; and among the rustling silks and glossy satins there were rough, angry-looking men, determinately buttoned up in great, uncouth box coats. The turbulent democracy in the galleries complained bitterly that the "rake" of their seats was so steep that of the actors at the back of the stage they could see only the legs. Still, quite unconscious of their doom, the little victims played. The apparitions behind the curtain took their pots of beer quite cheerfully with the army in Macduff. Liston joked; Munden twisted his mouth in extravagant drollery; and "black Jack," as the greatest Roman of them all was irreverently called in the green-room, remained imperturbable, statuesque and imperial.

The bell rang—"Hear it not, Duncan, for it is a knell" The musicians advanced to the attack in their unmoved mechanical way, and the music began. The audience rose and took off their hats, as the whole vocal power of the house appeared and sang—"God save the King." All went well. Kemble was right—there was nothing in it after all.

The music ceased, and Mr. Kemble, with his fine heroic face, strode forward in that strange Macbeth attire of his to speak the poetical address for the reopening. Then broke forth the storm—chaos had come again, chaos and old night. It was like Prospero's island, when Ariel's pack came hurrying to chase, in their wild hunt, Trinculo, Caliban and Stephano. The men in the drab coats turned their broad backs to the stage, or jammed their hats and leaped upon seats. They barked like dogs at the full of the moon; they groaned, they shouted, they screeched through excruciating cat calls; they roared, "Off, off—old prices!" They yelled execrations; they foamed like the people of Ephesus when the worship of Diana, hat brought them all their money, was denounced by St. Paul. They showed, in fact, violently and loudly, what absence from the theater would better have shown, their dislike to the new prices and the new constitution of the house. There is no gratitude in the populace. The public has many pockets, but no heart.

Those strong, black brows of Kemble's compressed, those dark luminous eyes clouded; but the proud actor, valuing the "sweet voices" no more than the "reek of the fen," went on reciting, in his thoughtful, deliberate way, a prosaic address that claimed the credit of illustrating Shakespeare better than of old, by finer scenery:

> Thus Shakspeare's fire burns brighter than before,
> And may the stage that boasts him burn no more.

The play went on in dumb show; the witches' thunder was drowned by John Bull's. But whether Macbeth planned Banquo's murder, presided at the banquet, listened to the knocking at the south entry, put harness on his back, slashed desperately at the pertinacious Macduff, or fell dead on his face, no one listened, no one cared. When Mrs. Siddons exulted cruelly in the proposed murder of the royal guest, or glided on in her ghastly sleep-walk, the malcontents hooted and clamored louder than before; nothing could pacify them.

In vain, too, Munden distorted his irresistible face in the afterpiece; the cat calls grew shriller, the yells for old prices still fiercer. When the dark curtain fell, two magistrates from Bow street came forward to the footlights as if they had been engaged for a lecture, and tried to catch the ear of the house. One of them drew out a paper supposed to be the Riot Act, but retired before the threatening hisses of the enraged hydra. Once or twice the police made raids into the upper gallery, and took up outrageous democrats, who were held to bail for appearance at the next sessions. Hours after the curtain fell, the rioters continued in the house, calling in vain on the obdurate manager to return to old prices. In vain fifty soldiers, on duty at the doors or in the lobby, stormed violently into the upper gallery to capture the humbler and more demonstrative rioters; but the "gods" foiled Mars by clambering down into the lower gallery, where they were cordially received by friends mad as bulls at the sight of the scarlet cloth.

The Times next morning was patriotic and indignant. "It was a noble sight," it said, "to see so much just indignation in the public mind," and it derided the idea that prices were to be raised to flatter the vanity of Mrs. Siddons and John Kemble, who must, forsooth, swagger and strut on the boards "with clothes on their backs worth five hundred pounds." The club critics, the men about town, the idle quidnuncs of all ranks, followed suit. Cruel catalogues of the great actor's faults were bandied from mouth to mouth, and one or two really clever men barbed the arrows that were shot at the inflexible manager. Any fool can shoot the arrow, but it takes clever malice to shape the arrow-head and to poison the barb. Kemble was no genius, the ingrates shouted over their wine and grog; he was artificial, formal, slow, self-conscious, self-approving. He was always throwing himself into Roman statues, There was no spontaneity, ardor, or generous impulse. His Sir Giles Overreach was tame and insipid, his King John studied, his Hamlet severe and inflexible, his Macbeth iron-bound, his Richard the Third deliberate, his Brutus dry. Faithless herd, they chose to forget the grand dignity of his Cato, the dark rancor of his Pierre, the intense despair of his Stranger, the dignified melancholy of his Penruddock, the heroic fervor of his Rolla, the inspired energy of his Coriolanus—in a word, his energetic and elaborate art, his unrivaled concentration and intensity. Actors are often vain. Kemble was proud as Coriolanus. Surely no proud man was ever so tortured by butterfly wits and mosquito critics. For once industrious, these satirists, with the malice of Red Indians, collected into one bantering dialogue all John Philip's oddities and obstinacies of pronunciation. The terrible list included the following eccentricities, acquired from superficial studies in old books, cognate languages and etymology.

First and foremost, aitches for aches. marchant for merchant, innoc*int* for innocent, cons*chince* for conscience, tar-chue for virtue, furse for fierce, bird for beard, the for thy, ojus for odious, kijus for hideous, per*fijus* for perfidious, m*airc*y for mercy, airth for earth, quellity for quality, sent*imint* for sentiment, *etair*nally for eternally.

The conspiracy grew so fast that Kemble's friends began to believe that Sheridan and the rival house (three hundred thousand pounds and more in debt) were at the bottom of it. "A plague on both your houses," thought the quiet play-goers, who only wanted to be allowed to tranquilly enjoy Fawcett's chatter, Liston's wonderful unctuous face, Munden's inimitable grimaces, and Dowton's full-blown irritability. Hot and fast as the lava on Pompeii fell showers of epigrams.

The third night the riot grew more systematic; the rioters had now organized themselves. The moment the curtain rose on the witches and the foul night, the hissing, whispering, and cat-calling broke out in a perfect hurricane. People in the boxes screamed in trumpets and roared through bugles. The performers took it calmly, feeling the storm must rage itself out. "They did not," says a contemporary newspaper, "seem to feel in the slightest degree disconcerted or offended, but rather, indeed, relieved, as there was no necessity for speaking. Occasionally different persons among the audience addressed them, with the assurance that there was no intention to offer them any offense; and this we were happy to hear, particularly with respect to the ladies, some of whom, upon their entrance, exhibited signs of timidity. So little did the performers feel it necessary to attend to dialogue or ordinary forms, that the whole of the performance, both play and farce, had terminated by half-after nine o'clock. Throughout the night every box on the first and second tier presented placards of "'Old prices.' 'Opposition—persevere and you must succeed.' 'John Bull against John Kemble.' 'No foreigners to tax us; we have taxes enough already.'" etc., etc.

Soon after the farce concluded, Mr. Kemble, in consequence of reiterated calls for the manager, made his appearance upon the stage, and, after some uproar, obtained a hearing. He said that he came forward to assure the audience of the anxious solicitude of the proprietors to accommodate themselves to their wishes, which declaration was received with applause; but when he added the following sentence, "Ladies and gentlemen, I wait here to know what you want," the hissing was universal, mixed with cries of "What ridiculous and insulting affectation." The house, indeed, became stormily indignant, and Mr. Kemble felt it convenient to retire. The audience was then addressed by two gentlemen—a Mr. Leigh and a Mr. Smyth, a barrister—then Mr. Kemble again appeared, and attempted to justify the new prices. He retired amidst hissing and some slight applause. The latter, however, soon subsided, and after about an hour spent in venting their discontent, the audience gradually dispersed. The managers of Covent Garden Theater asserted that the average profits for the last ten years had not exceeded six per cent on the whole capital employed. It would be candid in them to state the whole truth. Did they separate the actual expenses from the annuities and other payments for incumbrances laid at different times on the establishment?

All was in vain. Nothing moved the man whom friends called "firm," and enemies "obstinate." Caius Marcius all over, he remained "whole as the marble, founded as the rock." Better to die, better to starve, than beg Hob with the cat-call, and Dick with the horrible watchman's rattle, for their "sweet voices." "The night is long that never finds the day," he said to himself, and thought,

> I am half through;
> The one part suffer'd, the other I will quite forgetting, on the other hand, that

Things bad begun make themselves strong by ill.

(Are there not aphorisms in Shakspeare for every moment of life and for all possible conditions of events?) The Coriolanus of Drury Lane was not entirely on the defensive; he sent orders to all his partisans and friends, (and they bled freely at the nose for him;) he hired tough-armed fighting watermen to repress the pit; he made the stage machinery rumble to frighten the bugle-players, and, as a fine theatrical coup d'état, he opened all the trap-doors on the stage suddenly when the pittites seemed prepared to storm it and tear the scenery into shreds.

On the fourth night, a gentleman, after the close of the farce, observed, from one of the boxes, "That this was the fourth night on which the most obstinate perseverance was made in these most obnoxious charges; yet neither the staves of constables, the arms of fighting watermen, the riot act, the presence of magistrates, the menacing noise of engines, nor the odious exposure of secret trap-doors, could intimidate the audience to comply with the manager's unjustifiable demand. One proprietor, who was also an actor, had passed by the voice of the audience with more insult and more contumacy than was ever shown by a minister to the voice of the people."

The rioters boasted loudly that that night they were not insulted by constables, riot acts, or threats of the Bastille, and that they had obtained an apology at the bottom of the bill the night before. This announcement was succeeded by the usual concord of sweet sounds proceeding from shrill penny whistles, squeaking trumpets, raving watchmen's rattles, etc., interrupted by frequent calls for "Managers! managers!" and "Kemble! Kemble! come forth.

Several placards were, as usual, suspended from the boxes and held up in the pit. One of them had inscribed on it, in large letters:

"Old prices, without any further insult or evasion." "No Catalani. Native talents," etc.

After a considerable interval Mr. Kemble came forward. A great tumult then took place. The placards were more conspicuously waved and shaken, and some time elapsed before silence could be obtained. Mr. Kemble was still stiff-necked, and his speech was drowned in fresh surges of noise. He had hoped previous explanations would have satisfied the public.

On the 22d, the audience were more numerous and, if possible, more clamorous than on any preceding night.

Appropriate and pungent placards were exhibited, which, joined with the material tempestuous music of trumpets and bugle-horns, and the frequently repeated challenge of the great belligerent power, rendered it at last necessary, on the part of their opponents, to make an overture of negotiation.

Mr. Kemble appeared upon the stage: there was instant silence. He proposed that the affairs of the theater should be submitted to a committee of gentlemen; and this proposition, which appeared to the audience to have the complexion of a trick, was very ill received by them.

On the 23d, Mr. Kemble came forward and stated that a committee of gentlemen was appointed to inspect the accounts, and to decide if the old or the new prices were the most fit and reasonable, and that, till that report was sent in, the theater would be closed. The whole audience rose at this triumph, and shouted and hurraed for Kemble. He announced that Madame Catalani had relinquished her engagement, and retired amid counter-storms of applause and disapprobation.

The new sensational placard that night was one with a coffin and cross bones on it, and the words, "Here lies the body of New Prices, who died 23d September, 1809, aged 6 days."

The following epigram appeared a few days after:

John Bull has gained one point, that's flat;
For Kemble has whipt out the CAT,—
Shut up his house and gone to bed,
With fewer AITCHES in his head.

The enraged and stubborn English public had no mercy for its dogged opponents.

The report of the committee stated that they were fully satisfied that the future profits of the new theatre at the proposed advance in the prices of admission would amount to no more than three and a half per cent per annum upon the capital expended upon the theater, if the same were insured; and that upon the supposition of insurance, at the former prices of admission, the proprietors would, in the judgment of the committee, annually sustain a loss of three-quarters per cent per annum on their capital.

Notwithstanding, however, the commissioners were men of business, used to accounts, and hence not likely to be deceived themselves, and of a respectability which seemed to preclude the presumption of their deceiving others, their report was very far from proving satisfactory to the public. On re-opening the theater on the 10th of October, therefore, the same discordant and hideous noises were resumed, with cries of "Old prices." "Items." "Imposition." "You don't hoax us." "No garbled extracts to humbug John Bull." Placards were exhibited inscribed with:

Mr. Kemble, lower your prices; for no evasion
Will suit John Bull on this occasion.

No private boxes for intriguing.

A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether for old prices.

John Bull, be very bold and resolute! Never depart from your resolution, but firmly keep your noisy station.

For the first two or three nights after the reopening, these disturbances began at the commencement of the play; but afterwards the rioters, becoming tired of paying the full price, and more wary, did not begin till the half price. The "wild waters" were still in a roar. The rioters now began to clang dustmen's bells, blow coachmen's horns, hiss, and clack watchmen's rattles. The mob had grown stark staring mad upon the O. P. question. All the herds of Circe were let loose, and the mob ran riot in their partisanship with the Whigs and the Reformers. The O. P. rioters laughed, sang, groaned, and wore the letters O. P. in their hats and on their waistcoats. They formed rings and got up mock fights in the pit, which terminated in roars and shouts of laughter. The special moment of the evening was when a simultaneous rush was made from the back of the pit down upon the orchestra. "Artillery whistles" screeched in the air. The placards and banners (a hint from pantomimes) broke out again a hundred strong and turned the boxes into booths. The inscriptions now were:

Mountain and Dickons,
No cat, no kittens.

"Britons who have humbled a prince, will not be conquered by a manager."

The O. P. dance, the rioters' favorite nightly diversion, was a performance as noisy and almost as demoniacal as the Carmagnole of the French revolutionists. It consisted of an alternate stamping of the feet, accompanied with the cry of "O. P." in regular and monotonous cadence. It began calmly, and increased in violence and rapidity till it ended in frenzied leaping, maddened confusion, and Bedlam broke loose.

The races up and down the pit benches were also very popular, while ruffians with false noses, or dressed as women, grimaced about the house or insulted the ladies in the obnoxious private boxes. Kemble and the managers at last lost their temper at all this, and took a false step. They got the Bow-street magistrates to lend them old Townsend and a band of runners armed with bludgeons. Mendoza, the prize-fighter, rallied a crowd to help him against the O. P. party, and beat them into submission. Another pugilist led also into the arena a threatening regiment of gallows' birds, broken-nosed, bull-necked, and scarred rowdies, with low bumpy foreheads and pig-like eyes; fellows with arms like Hercules and backs like Atlas. Lord Yarmouth, conspicuous by his flaming red whiskers, and Berkely Craven proved their Norman descent by fighting side by side with these greasy, large-nosed, black-haired bruisers.

The pit bore this and the constables' staves pretty well till half-price time the second night, when, with an Indian yell of rage, a hundred fists were at once clenched, and the rioters fell dauntlessly upon the hired legions, felling them and drubbing them on every side. Eyes grew black, mouths puffed and noses bled.

Everybody exulted when Charles Kemble fell by accident in the very height of a mortal combat with George Frederick Cooke as Richard Crookback. A gentleman in the boxes played "Colleen" on the flute all through the piece; bitten apples were thrown at Mrs. Charles Kemble when she was playing Lucy, in the Beggar's Opera. Mr. O'Reilly denounced the sort of ladies who frequented the privileged boxes. In vain Townsend and his myrmidons dashed into the pit and galleries, tore off the placards and banners, or arrested the ringleaders of the evening, while the indefatigable Brandon had men taken up for continually coughing or even crying "Silence" in an aggravating way.

Hard-lined, high-colored, gross caricatures represented Sarah, John, and Charles Kemble as sturdy, impudent beggars, with John Philip in front exclaiming, "Pity our ach-es, and our want-es." The O. P. dance grew so popular, that even princes of the blood came to see it. One night a lady who was seen lending a pin to fasten an O. P. placard in front of the boxes received an ovation from the whole house.

Kemble was a man of temper, nerve, and firmness. His speeches reached the ears of the crowd, and were often reasonable, and full of common sense. He told them the proprietors for ten years past had not received six per cent on their fluctuating and precarious investment. He assured them that actors did benefit by the receipts, and that their salaries were three times as large as their predecessors'. He ended by a generous outburst that ought to have touched the English heart:

"This," he added, "I declare to you upon my honor—I, who would not tell a lie for all that this theater is worth!"

The tumult and riots still went on. The O. P. rioter had now reduced things to a system. In his enormous seven-caped great-coat he had nightly to squeeze himself through the iron hatch under the jealous scrutiny of Brandon and the money and cheque takers, his dozen feet of placards wound round his body, a rattle, a dustman's bell, a post-horn, drum, or a trombone, and his white nightcap, and short bludgeon pent in his pocket. He had to "roar himself as hoarse as a night coachman in winter," to stamp the fierce O. P. dance, to join in real and sham combats, and to risk his limbs in the rushes down to the orchestra. To reward such arduous service, four hundred and forty-five pounds were collected.

The chief rioters usually left the theater in procession, howling at the offices of the opposition newspapers, or shouting Horace Smith's song of "Heigh ho, says Kemble," under the very windows of the unbending manager. On one occasion, when the mob had threatened a visit to the manager's house, the magistrates ambushed soldiers close at hand, and gave orders what to do in case the doors were forced or set on fire.

A fresh cause of offense occurred. Brandon, the box keeper got Mr. Clifford apprehended outside the theater as a rioter, and carried before a magistrate at Bowstreet, by whom, however, he was immediately discharged. Mr. Clifford then indicted Brandon for an assault and false imprisonment, in which indictment Brandon was cast for five pounds. When the jury came in with their verdict for the plaintiff, a burst of applause and uproar broke forth in such a manner as to entirely destroy the decorum of a court of justice. Cries of "Huzza!" by hundreds at once were communicated like electricity to the multitude in the open hall, and echoed on the instant in Palace-yard.

In consequence of the issue of this trial, a dinner of about three hundred people took place on the 14th of December, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Mr. Clifford in the chair, and a committee was formed to defend the persons then under prosecution for the like conduct. The symptoms of a regularly organized opposition, added to the late decision of the jury, showed the proprietors the necessity of an immediate compromise. Mr. Kemble requested admission to the meeting, and striding in like Coriolanus into the house of Aufidus, the following resolutions were amicably agreed upon; "That the boxes should continue at seven shillings; that the pit should be lowered to the old price, three shillings and sixpence; that the tier of private boxes, in the front of the house, should be thrown open and restored to the public at the end of the season; and that all prosecutions on both sides should be stopped."

The night of the Strand dinner they performed at Covent Garden the Provoked Husband and Tom Thumb. At half-price, as usual, the O. P.s poured in, with bugles, bells, and rattans, and began their charivari as usual, till Mr. Kemble appeared in his walking-dress, half-boots, great-coat, round hat, and cane, just as he had come from the tavern. After half an hour's endeavors to obtain silence, he acquainted the house with the treaty he had just signed. He retired amid incessant cries of "Dismiss Brandon!" "No private boxes."

In vain Mr. Munden, as the King, bowed and scraped, made the most conciliatory grimaces, and talked confidentially to the nearest rows of the pit. The rioters called out, "It is from your master we want an answer." At last some one flung a paper on the stage, Munden took it up, read it, bowed, and retired. He returned, leading in the abashed, humbled, and penitent Brandon, who tried to read an apology; but the storm grew to a whirlwind, and oranges and sticks were thrown at the over-zealous box-keeper till he withdrew, disconsolate enough. It was in vain that Mr. Harris came forward, scratching his crop uneasily, and pleaded for his faithful servant. The howl still was, "He must be dismissed. It's a sine qua non."

On the following night, Kemble, as Penruddock, surrendered, and poor Brandon retired from office. He also apologized for the introduction of the fighting men. He was sorry for what had passed. It would be his first pride to prevent anything of the kind occurring again. Then broke forth a thunder-burst of cheers, and the O. P.s in the pit hoisted their final placard three times. It was inscribed:

"We are satisfied."

Looking calmly back, there can be no doubt that Kemble, although stiff necked, arrogant, and imprudent in his way of treating the rioters, was in the main right. If the public objected to the new prices, they had their remedy in their own hands; they could have stopped away. According to the opinion laid down by Lord Mansfield, the riot was a distinct conspiracy, and should have been punished as such.

Can we doubt that Kemble went home from the reconciliation dinner still, in his inner soul, inflexible as Coriolanus, and muttering in his grand academic manner, and in his asthmatic voice, those bitter words of Caius Marius:

It is a proposed thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the will of the nobility;
Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be ruled.

—All the Year Round.

THE TESTIMONY OF EXPERIENCE.—Miss Hannah D. Grinnell, 523 Spruce street, Philadelphia, who has used a Grover & Baker Machine for eight years, and is familiar with the Wheeler & Wilson, Florence, and Singer Machines, says of the Grover and Baker: "I have used it on all kinds of work, and my customers prefer it to any other. I like it better than any other; the stitch is more elastic and more perfect than any other; and after washing, it presents a better appearance than the work of any other machine. The tension adapts itself immediately to every varying thickness of fabric, and the cotton can be used without rewinding. In quilting, it makes a perfect stitch, and no other machine embroiders but this."

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1867.

"PHYSICAL EDUCATION."

THE prize-fight which was to have taken place in an adjoining county a few days since, but which, owing to the timely interference of the officers of the law, has been postponed to a more convenient time and place, excited a degree of friendly interest among those who have hitherto been regarded as moral, law-loving, intelligent and refined citizens, for which we cannot account on any received principle of philosophy. We are at a loss to reconcile the finer feelings of a gentleman with the bloodthirsty instincts of a bulldog. We cannot conceive of any gratification which a well-bred man can derive from witnessing a contest the disgusting brutality of which is aggravated rather than mitigated by the ferocious pluck and pertinacity of the combatants. We cannot perceive any moral difference between a low street brawl, which every respectable citizen denounces as an outrage, and a ring fight, which many respectable citizens patronize, except that the former often involves some real or fancied point of honor, which invests it on the part of one if not both the combatants with some degree of true manliness, while the latter is a cold-blooded degradation of manhood, without worthy motive—thoroughly base and brutal from its inception to its denouement. There is some excuse for men who give and take blows in hot blood; but for those who, without even the shadow of a cause of quarrel, deliberately match themselves for a ring fight, and train themselves for it, in order that each may be able to inflict and endure a great deal of bodily punishment before one, beaten to a jelly and defaced beyond the recognition of his most intimate friends—perhaps crippled for life—is forced to acknowledge that he can bear no more, there is only the palliation of bestial instincts and vicious education.

The respectable patrons of the prize-ring contend that the cultivation of the science of pugilism promotes the general physical education of our young men, which, physiologists say, has of late been too much neglected. The old Roman boxers, and after them the British pugilists, were supposed by their patrons, noble and plebeian, to be somehow instrumental in preserving and cherishing the national spirit and pluck. Yet Rome never declined more rapidly from virtue, courage, truth, energy and all manly attributes than during the time when her vast amphitheaters were thronged by her citizens eagerly watching the combats of the gladiators and the boxers, who belabored each other bravely, and usually fought it out to the death. Even the employment by the pugiles of brass knuckles to give greater force to their blows and enhance the effect upon the noble Romans of the moral spectacle which they were privileged to witness, failed to arrest the decadence of Roman greatness. England has fared no better. British pluck and energy have not received any stimulus from the national pastime of boxing and the national institution of ring-fighting; but, on the contrary, British manners have deteriorated, British morals have decayed, and British energy is flagging. Pugilism infallibly begets dissoluteness, and dissoluteness is the inevitable parent of effeminate degeneracy. Long ago our English cousins ceased to regard the prize-ring as the conservator of the national spirit, and dropped it to the lower dignity of "the manly art of self-defense." They contended that a knowledge of boxing was necessary to complete the education of a gentleman, to enable him to defend himself against assault and that the maintenance of the combats of the prize-ring was essential to the production of competent professors of the noble science. But it has come to be admitted, even in England, that the gentlemanly proficients with the gloves often prove themselves notable blackguards, and that the tendency of pugilism is demoralizing and degrading in the extreme. It is also no longer considered an indication of gentle breeding to provoke a friend or a stranger by insulting language or conduct to the aggressive point, merely for the sake of "polishing him off" scientifically. Pugilism has at length fallen so low in England and has become so utterly disreputable, that the British people are making a manly effort to rid themselves of it. In this country pugilism has never until recently been countenanced but by a low class, composed chiefly of expatriated English thieves and cracksmen. Fighting, except in defence of honor, person, or property, has always been considered disreputable in America, and a "bully" which is our common synonym for a professional bruiser has been with us classed in the same category with thieves. But the art of bruising, having fallen into disfavor in its former home, and being threatened with expulsion thence, is now seeking to establish itself in this country, where it finds advocates upon the ground that it promotes physical development. Our people have lately manifested a spasmodic tendency toward muscular development, and, as usual with them whenever they embrace a new idea, they are carrying it to extremes. Within a few years Winship the lifter and Heenan the hitter have engrossed a large share of popular attention and admiration, and have been held up as models for the emulation of our growing youth. It is this new fancy that has invested the prize-ring with a popularity in certain quarters which it could not otherwise have gained. It is this which induces ministers, lawyers, physicians and members of our Educational Board to lend their presence and countenance to the combats of the prize-ring—certainly this, and not that they have wagered money on the result. But the truth is, that the training which fits a man for the ring is not conducive to the best general health. It serves for the occasion, and no longer. Pugilists are short-lived as a rule. So are acrobats, and those men of wonderful strength, who lift immense weights. Even when they escape injury from over-exertion, which they are so apt to indulge in, they do not live longer than other people, or enjoy greater immunity from the ills that flesh is heir to. Physical strength is not to be despised when it is useful, and is conferred by nature, or gradually developed by moderate exercise; but when obtained at the expense of good digestion, as is not unfrequently the case, it is a curse rather than a blessing.

That the mere exercise of boxing may be beneficial to the health and muscles we have no doubt. That it is more so than sawing wood, or swinging an axe, or playing base ball, we do not believe. Least of all will we admit that pugilism can exert any real benefit upon either health or morals, merely because it furnishes an occasional exhibition of two well-trained brutes in human form, pummeling each other almost to death, for a few paltry dollars and the applause of a ruffian horde.

[For the Californian.]

SPRINGTIME.

The Springtime is coming, to many
As merry as merry can be;
But to me, who am saddest of any—
Why comes there no Springtime for me?

Sweet birds in the forest are singing,
I hear them from thicket and tree;
And yet, though the greenwood is ringing,
Not one of them all sings for me.

The sun shines on acres of flowers,
And bright buds unfolding in glee;
But in wide Earth's myriad bowers
There blooms not a flower for me.

And hopes that are sweeter than singing,
And brighter than daisy-starred lea,
In how many hearts they are springing!
Why comes there no promise for me?

Will a May-day come to me never,
In some region over the sea,
Where they love and are loved forever?
Oh, waits there no Springtime for me?

DENNAR STEWART.

THE triumph of moral over mere brute courage was signally exemplified in the "twenty-four foot ring" at San Mateo the other day, when Sheriff Lathrop and Judge Templeton, by their firmness and decision, maintained the majesty of the law and prevented the consummation of a criminal act, in the face of threats and actual demonstrations of violence by a crowd numbering hundreds of armed, enraged and reckless men. Had Sheriff Lathrop attempted to arrest the proceedings by physical force, the probability is that he would have been defeated and badly treated—perhaps killed. The members of the Bruisers' Fraternity will yield to none in brute courage, especially when the advantages are all on their side; but the moral heroism of the Sheriff overawed them; it was something so far above their comprehension that they were cowed and dispirited by it; and the muscular outlaws who went out in the morning boasting that "no officer would be such a fool as to attempt to stop the fight," returned in the evening sadder and wiser, but we fear not better men.

CHARITY.—It is pleasant to note the promptness and heartiness with which our citizens have generally responded to the call upon them for aid to the Southern Famine Relief Fund. The direct contributions have been quite large, and much has indirectly been added to the fund in the shape of patronage of the various entertainments gotten up for its benefit. The managers of the theaters, the musical and dramatic artistes, and the purveyors of public amusements generally, have acted with their accustomed generosity on this occasion, and their gratuitous entertainments have brought a considerable augmentation to the fund. If the charge be true that our citizens are somewhat vain of their reputation for charity, they are not so without some reason.

BOOK NOTICES.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. By Charles Dickens, with Original Illustrations by S. Eytinge, Jr., Boston: Ticknor and Fields. 1867. From A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

This elegant little volume in green and gold, is the second of the Diamond series of Dickens's novels. The illustrations by Eytinge are spirited, and evince a sympathy with the genius of the writer, and an appreciation of the traits and characteristics of the various personages of the story, that an author does not often find in the artist who undertakes the difficult task of bodying forth to the external sense the creatures of his imagination. Mr. Eytinge has proved, in the sixteen drawings for this volume, that he possesses a keen sense of humor, and no mean share of the imaginative faculty. He has been especially happy in his attempts to give outward form to Lizzie Hexam, in the first drawing; to the "literary man with a wooden leg," in the fifth; and particularly, to the "Chernb and the Lovely Woman," and the "Bad Child and the Person of the House." Mrs. Wilfer is also notably rendered, while Podsnap was altogether too much for the artist's skill, and the embodiment he gives us is a disappointment.

OUR MUTTAL FRIEND. With forty-two Illustrations, from Original Designs by Marcus Stone. T. B. Peterson & Brothers: Philadelphia. From A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

This is the first of a new edition of Dickens's Complete Works. The publishers promise that the edition shall contain over five hundred illustrations in the best style. The present volume is in octavo form, printed in double columns, and in type large enough to be read with ease. The publishers entitle the series of which this is the first, "The Author's American Edition of Dickens," claiming that they, in connection with Harper & Brothers, are the only publishers in the United States who have ever paid Mr. Dickens for the manuscript or advance proof-sheets of his works. The second of the series, David Copperfield, was to have been issued in March, and the other novels are promised in rapid succession.

MYSTERIES OF THE PEOPLE; Or the Story of a Plebeian Family for 2,000 Years. By Eugene Sue: Translated by Mary L. Booth. New York: Clark, Publisher, 448 Broome street. 1867. From H. H. Bancroft & Co., San Francisco.

In its conception and plan, this is certainly entitled to be considered "a great work." In eight "series," each complete in itself, the author proposes to give the entire romantic history of France. The present volume, of 177 double-columned pages, constitutes the first series, and covers the period from 57 B. C. to 10. A. D. The translator, in her preface, expresses the opinion that this is Sue's most brilliant and powerful work, and tells us that it depicts "the inner life of the French people from the remotest ages" with "Pre-Raphælitish fidelity." Not having found time to read more of it than the introductory portion of some fifty pages, we must take Mrs. Booth's word for the merits of the remainder. But the "inner life" of the Lebrun family as "depicted" in the fourteen introductory chapters devoted to them, is something that we are quite unable to form any conception of as a reality. It is stated, we don't know with how much truth, that the book has been suppressed in France "on account of its Democratic principles."

SPANISH WITHOUT A MASTER; In four Easy Lessons. A Course of Lessons In the Spanish Language on the "Robertsonian Method." By A. H. Monteith, Esq., Author of French Without a Master, etc. T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. From A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

FRENCH WITHOUT A MASTER; In Six Easy Lessons. By A. H. Monteith, Esq., Author of Italian Without a Master, etc. T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. From A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

The above publications, and others of the same series, are too widely known to call for extended comment. Of course the idea of acquiring a foreign language without a master, in six lessons, is preposterous, and it would be doing great injustice to the author of these useful and very ingenious manuals, to suppose that he intended to encourage such an expectation. The real value of these publications consists in the help they afford to persons not habituated to rigorous study, and who would be repelled and disheartened should they attempt to master a language in the ordinary way, by the use of the grammar and lexicon. By the use of these manuals according to the instructions they contain, any person of ordinary intelligence can acquire an elementary knowledge of the languages they respectively teach, in a comparatively short time—a foundation upon which, by subsequent exercises in reading and speaking, it is much easier to build, than upon a mere acquaintance with the grammar, gained at the expense of much time and labor.

HE is the most thoroughly educated man who derives his knowledge not from books alone, nor from men alone, but from the careful and discriminating study of both. A truly learned man is liberal toward opponents, tolerant of error, charitable toward frailty and compassionate toward failure. Only the ignorant and half educated are dogmatical, illiberal and intolerant.

[For the Californian.]

THE FIRST CRUISE OF THE AVITOR.

ON the night of Saturday, the 30th of March, ultimo, Thomas Brown, William Jones and Edward Robinson, gentlemen connected with the San Francisco press, casually met at Maguire's Opera House. The play was the new local farce, The Curse of Our Country; and its wild waggery, compelling incessant explosions of heart-reuding laughter from the most indifferent spectator, had such an exhausting effect upon our friends that, when the agonizing merriment was ended by the fall of the curtain, they were fain to recruit their wasted energies and restore the tone of their shaken nerves by means of a mild stimulant, which they found at the bar of a convenient saloon. As they appeared to derive some benefit from the first exhibition of the very popular remedy for physical and mental depression prepared hy the skillful and gentlemanly harkeeper, they repeated the dose, and continued to repeat it to an extent not only unnecessary but positively hurtful; for they soon showed symptoms of nervous excitement, talked loudly and with rather confused utterance, and, I am sorry to say, expressed sentiments which, though natural and proper enough to sordid men of business, were discreditable to attaches of our respectable city press.

"Jones," remarked Brown, "I didn't see you at the laying of the corner-stone this afternoon. What was the matter?"

"Well, you see," responded Jones, "I was coming round: but I heard of a first-rate runaway out on Mission street between Eleventh and Twelfth—horse stove all to pieces, wagon mashed into kindling wood, womau run over and both legs broke and a baby killed—that's what the fellow reported; and of course I hurried out to get the particklars. Well, would you believe it, when I got out there and inquired round, at first I couldn't find anybody that knowed anything about it; hut at last I struck a man that seen it, and found out that it was only a commou runaway—no baby killed nor woman hurt, aud the damage wouldn't amount to more'n fifty dollars! Never was so disappointed and disgusted in my life—never; upon my honor."

"You was in bad luck that time," said Robinson; "but I can sympathize with you, for I got badly sold myself this evenin'. I heard that the police had picked up a murdered man on Pacific street, and I rushed up to the dead-house to see the corpse and find out all about it, but there wasn't no corpse there. So I went round to the station-house to make inquiries, and found that the man was only dead drunk. He'd fell agin a curbstone or something and cut his forrard and was bleedin' a little, but there wasn't any chance of his dyin', for he snored as healthy a snore as I ever heard. I'll git even on him when he gits sober enough to give his name—I'll give him the benefit of a half a stickful as a 'd. d.' I ain't goin' to be bilked altogether. But you didn't miss much, Jones, by not bein' at the layin' of the corner-stone—it was mighty sick old perceedin's, and not very comfortable standin' out there in the rain."

"What did they do, anyhow?" inquired Jones. "What did they deposit in that there corner-stone?"

"Well," answered Robinsou, "they hove in a lot of gold and silver coins, and some greenbacks, and some noospapers and things."

"How much money did they put in?"

"As near as I can reckon it np there must ha' been about sixty dollars, greenbacks and all. Don't you think there was, Brown?"

"Yes, about that, I gness."

"Well, now, gentlemen," said Jones, "I consider that a shameful waste of money. Sixty dollars! Let me see—it would buy four hundred and eighty drinks, pervidin' a fellow didn't put on airs and go to a two-bit house; or it would buy two hundred and forty square meals; and there it's all throwed away in that idiotic manner, where it won't do anybody any good."

"I wonder, now," said Robiuson, "if we couldn't hit on some plan to raise them spondulicks. They won't do no good where they are, and we might as well he spendin' and enjoyin' them.

"Yes," said Brown, "if we had a good crowbar we might fetch them."

"No use, gentlemen," said Jones. "We ain't got no crowbar, and I don't think there's money enough in the crowd to buy one; and as for stealin' it, you know, that wouldn't be honest: and besides, I don't know where there's one to steal if we wanted to. And then, you can bet your life them Mercantile Library fellows has got a policeman watchin' them premises mighty sharp. That money's safe enough, so far as we're concerned. Let's take another drink and go."

This proposition was readily assented to. Having fortified themselves with a final gentle stimulant the party left the saloon, and walked down the street until they came to the office of the Patriotic Conservative (Robiuson's paper), which they entered, and sat down to smoke their meerschaums before going home to bed.

"I tell you what it is," said Robinson, "it's geitin' so confouuded dull and stupid in this here city that I'd like to do something just for an excitement. I've thought seriously of orgauizin' a company to break into the Bank of California, but after takin' a view of the premises I concluded it wouldn't work. I've deliberated ahout settin' fire to the Occidental Hotel; but that imposin' structure ain't built to any great extent of combustible materials, and they've got water on, and fire-hose, and buckets and things all over the house, so that they'd put out a fire before it could get a decent start. Now if old What's-his-name would ever get his confounded 'Avitor' ready, I'd like to go on her the first trip. There'd be some sensation about a cruise through the air on that there machine, and a fellow could get up a purty good article about it—it would admit a good deal of hifalutin description, you know."

"I wouldn't like to go the first trip," said Jones. "They say the engineer himself's a little duhious ahout how the thing'll work, and I'd rather he'd experiment, and get used to the craft, before I risked my neck ahoard of her."

"Risk be hanged," said Robinson, who was in a very courageous mood just then. "I'd go in her the first trip, if the devil himself was engineer. Even if a fellow got his neck hroke it would immortalize him, and if he come down all safe it would he the makin' of his reputation. I'd give all my chances of salvation for the opportunity, anyway!"

"Oh! yes," said Brown, sneeringly; "You're very brave now; but I kind o' think that abont the time the Avitor gits ready to sail you won't be quite so anxious to git aboard. You'd forfeit your fare if you'd paid it in advance, though you wouldn't lose much if you only swapped your chances of salvation for a passage."

Then ensued a half-jesting, half-earnest discussion of the merits of the Avitor and the probable chances of its success, in a style more expressive than elegant. The average San Francisco reporter is not distinguished for the purity of his conversational style, although he manages to write with tolerable accuracy, blundering only when he attempts a compound sentence. What would you have? You cannot reasouably expect an accomplished scholar to perform a reporter's duties for a reporter's wages. In the langnage of Mr. Gradgrind, "What we want is facts;" and if they are stated with sufficient clearness to enable us to understand them, we can pardon a few grammatical errors.

The discussion was prolonged until midnight, when Brown and Jones took their leave, Robinson remaining behind to make a note of some circumstance which had suddenly recurred to him. Having performed this duty he relit his meerschaum and assumed a comfortable if not graceful attitude, by tilting his chair hack at an angle of forty-five degrees and placing his feet upon the desk where he could regard them through the wreaths of thick smoke which he blew from his pipe, while his thoughts reverted to the suhject of the Avitor, which had taken a firm hold upon his mind. After a few moments' silent contemplation he said. aloud:

"By all that's lovely, I would go on the first trip of the Avitor if I had a chance; and I'd go, as I said, even if the devil himself was engineer."

A slight noise in the direction of the door cansed him to look aronnd. There stood a stranger, who had entered without knocking and unperceived. The intruder was a tall, slender, sharp-featured, dark-looking man, with small, black, sunken eyes, which twinkled not unpleasantly. He was quite respectably dressed in sober black, with elaborately neat shirt-front, collar and cravat, glossy hat and irreproachahle boots. His appearance was on the whole rather prepossessing, aud he was evidently a person of spirit and resolution.

"Well, sir," said Robinson, eyeing the stranger sharply, "can I do anything for you to-night, sir."

"Pardon my intrusion at so late an hour," replied the stranger, blandly. "I came to see you on business—in fact, in regard to the very matter which occupied your thoughts when I entered. You would like to accompauy me on the first trip of the Avitor?"

"May I ask, sir, if you are the captain or the engineer of that ærial craft?" said Robinson.

"Neither; but I propose to take charge of her on the first trip, and if you like you can come along."

"Have you—ah—that is to say—are you—ah—acquainted with the mode of working one of these machines? Did you ever have any experience in one of them?"

"Not at all; hut I think I can manage it very well."

"Oh! the devil—"

"Stop, young man—a little more polite and less profane, if you please. Will you go?—or were you only hoasting to yourself when you made the remark I overheard just now?"

"Well, by ——"

"Come, now," said the stranger, hastily interrupting, "if you expect to travel in my compauy you must eschew profanity. I fear that you were about to pronounce a name that would have shocked me inexpressibly. If there is anything I can't tolerate it is profane swearing. Now answer me—are you coming?"

"Yes, I'll go. When do you start?"

"Immediately."

"Not to-night, cortainly?"

"Yes, to-night. Hurry up. Put on your hat, turn ont the gas, and come along."

Robinson, who had drunk just enough liquor to make him reckless, obeyed without further parley or hesitation. As they stepped into the street together the stranger took him by the arm, and, although they seemed to walk at only an ordinary pace, in a few moments they had reached a high hoarded enclosure far outside of the city. The stranger took a key from his pocket, unlocked a large gate, and they entered. A lamp being lit disclosed the Avitor—a car furnished with a small engine and boiler, and with immense wings and tail, rndely modeled after those of some awkward bird, projecting from its sides and stern; the whole machinery being partially covered by a large oiled canvas bag, intended to contain the elevating gas. The stranger proceeded to inflate the bag by blowing into it with his mouth, and as it filled it became buoyant, insomuch that it would have mounted upward with the car, if the latter had not been securely fastened down with stout ropes. Then he placed some combustible materials in the furnace under the boiler and fired them, and in a few moments steam was up, and everything in readiness for the trip. "Now," said he to Robinson, who had been watchiug the proceedings with much interest but without any tokens of astonishment, "get aboard."

"What do you want with a board? Where shall I find one?" asked Robinson.

"Now, don't stand there repeating those stale jokes. Your name isn't Fitz-Smythe, I hope—because if it is I'll break your neck before you get down. Get into the car and let's be off. We've a long way to go."

Robinson jumped in; the stranger cut the ropes, and as the Avitor gracefully mounted aloft he set the engine in motion, and the huge, unshapely wings began to flap, and the machine moved in a horizontal direction. As the stranger performed the duties of engineer aud pilot, as well as captain, fireman, and all hands, Robinson had nothing to do but sit still and enjoy the ride. They passed rapidly over the city, and the next instant Robinson exclaimed:

"Why, here we are at Angel Island."

"What?" exclaimed the stranger, giving the helm a convulsive turn, which caused the Avitor to swerve from its course and to tremble violently, as if it had been struck by a sudden heavy squall. Then he put the helm so hard to the other side that the craft was almost capsized. He was terribly agitated, and his face, as he turned it toward the furnace fire, was overspread with a horrid bluish pallor, while a fierce, unnatural light glared from his sunken eyes. Robinson, overcome with terror, shrieked:

"Great God, deliver me!"

Instantaneously upon tho utterance of these words there was a fiendish yell, and the sound of a tremendous explosion, accompanied by a sulphurous smell, and followed hy a sensation of falliug through the darkness. Theu Robinson remembered nothing more. until he found himself iu bed, bruised and sore. His friends told him that he had fallen down stairs while intoxicated, and that it was a mercy he was not killed. He knew better, but kept his own counsel. Only to me did he impart the truth, under injunctions of secresy, which I hope the reader will not violate. He assures me that it is his intention to join the church, eschew strong potations, and, by leading a respectable life, to try to elevate the character of the San Francisco Press.

It has been announced that, owing to unforeseen circumstances, the trial trip of the Avitor has been unavoidahlp postponed until a more convenient season. JOHN CLERK.

RUMORS OF WAR.—The sound af warlike preparation is heard from beyond the wide Atlantic. All Europe is arming, and at any time we may hear of the commencement of a struggle, the result of which will determine whether Louis Napoleon or Bismarck is the abler politician and the bolder general—whether France or Prussia shall control the map of Southern Europe; or whether Russia will overmaster them both. War is a terrible thing, but it is a great educator. It is less brutalizing than inglorious peace, and therefore less to be deprecated. Only through war can Europe be enfranchised; and therefore, while we regard it as an evil in itself, we welcome it for the good results which must attend it.

ASPHALTUM SIDEWALKS.—Every one knows that sidewalks made of asphaltnm are the best, smoothest and most durable; bnt every one is not generally aware that they are also the cheapest, which they are when durability as well as cost is taken into consideration, for they will outwear half a dozen relayiugs of any other kind of walk. The owners of Montgomery Block are now having the Washington street sidewalk of that building laid iu asphaltum by the Pacific Asphaltum Co. under the personal supervision of Mr. M. E. Fitzgibbon, the mauager, which is a sufficient guarantee that the work will be done in the best manner.

BAKER & HAMILTON.—This firm that have so long held the command of the agricultural trade of Sacramento, and whose name is so well known to the agriculturists of interior and foot-hill counties, have established a house in this city in the fine new stores, No 17 and 19 Front street, near Market. Those in want of agricultural implements, machines, hardware, etc., will meet with especial inducements by calling on Baker and Hamilton before purchasing elsewhere. Their stock is one of the largest on the Pacific coast—See catalogue on 16th page

ABOUT GOVERNESSES.

THE London Queen has a long article on "The Governess," containing many judicious observations, some of which are quite as applicable on this side of the Atlantic as in England, although, owing to the different constitution of our society, the relative social position of the governess is much higher with us.

The principal cause of the low salaries paid to governesses is said to be, that "teaching is an occupation to which all women imagine they can turn without any special education or preparation. No mistake is greater than this. Many women take to teaching who have themselves had a very superficial education, and 'never thought they would have to go out in the world.' These are amongst the worst of that large class which we must term the incompetent. Some have been well taught, but have not the least capacity for imparting instruction, and still less for inspiring children with a love of knowledge, or for training them to obtain it for themselves. Such teachers as these are often a weariness to themselves and to the children over whom they are placed. Governesses who know both what to teach and how to impart it are, indeed, comparatively rare. This state of things would not, we believe, continue, if parents were more alive to the need of good education for their daughters, and had made up their minds a little more as to the points in which good teaching and thorough education consist.

"As a rule, governesses of the present day are better treated, and some of them better paid than they were forty or fifty years ago. But there is great room for improvement in both particulars. A woman who is fit to train the children of a house is fit to be treated better than as a kind of upper servant. Upper servants, indeed, as a rule, would not think of enduring the circumstances which surround the position of the governess. We wish that it were less often stated as a matter of wonder, and, on the whole, of congratulation, that here and there some people treat their governess 'as if she were one of the family.' We wish that it could be truthfully said that it is the exception, when this does not take place. We are perfectly well aware that the work of a governess makes her proper place to be in the schoolroom. But, when lessons are over, is there any good reason why the governess should be made to feel that her position in the family makes her less a lady, or renders her a person unfit to be conversed with, or to partake in the ordinary courtesies of life?

"Unfortunately governesses themselves, in many cases, do not possess all the qualifications which they ought to have, or all that they make a pretence of possessing. Everybody can judge at once of the manner and bearing of a woman who seeks the position of a governess; and, unfortunately, it is too often simply by these points that her qualifications for the office are determined by those who are to employ her. We constantly hear it inquired—has she a good manner? But how rarely—is she possessed of good principle, of self-control? It is asked—does she play well?—can she draw?—does she speak French, German, Italian? but very seldom—what solid acquirements has she?—is she thoroughly acquainted with her own language?—does she know how to teach?

"Even in quarters where one would expect better things, we find that governesses are expected to know and impart everything. Of course there is perpetual disappointment. Parents cannot get well educated and accomplished women to come to them for very small salaries. They therefore take what they can get for the money they offer; and the consequence is that on the one side is incompetence and on the other discontent. Then there comes change; and as a result of all, the poor children suffer, and are neither taught nor trained.

"The fault appears to us to be the result of several causes. People who want governesses never seem to realize that a governess who knows everything well is a non-existent person. For instance, we have known a lady who was an excellent English scholar, a first-rate musician and a competent teacher, rejected over and over again because she could not teach French. However otherwise accomplished and capable a woman may be, she has no chance nowadays unless she not only knows something of music, but can play. It seems impossible to persuade some people that, if their governess can do some things really well, that is all they can in reason expect; and that it would be better for the children that the parents should supplement by masters the deficiencies of a governess competent in some points, than that they should insist on obtaining a profession of everything—the reality is impossible. Again, for a good article you must pay a good price. One would imagine that in our highly commercial country this statement would be axiomatic. But, with regard to governesses, its application is certainly not realized. We see it constantly stated in the advertisements of people seeking situations as governesses, that to them 'salary is not so much an inducement as a comfortable home.' That such a statement can be made, as a kind of inducement which will be tempting to intended employers, implies that these latter persons are little aware of the value of that which they obtain at apparently so small a cost. No woman seeks to be a governess from love of the work. If she seeks such employment, she does so because she must earn her living; and, if she has anything of value to offer, she will desire to sell her labor for the highest price she can obtain for it. If she can obtain nothing, it must be simply because her work is worth nothing. If she be willing to exchange it for little or nothing, it is worth just that and no more."

A CRAYON SKETCH OF ALEXANDER SMITH.

A PLEASANT glimpse of the late Alexander Smith is afforded in the following extract from an article in the February number of Macmillan's Magazine: "Those who have in their minds a certain ideal of the look and physical appearance to be expected in poets, who fancy them as personally weird, ecstatic and wind-blown, would have had their ideal somewhat discomposed by their first sight of Alexander Smith. Even people who had no such ideal for all cases, but who had formed a preconception from Mr. Smith's early poems, found in him, when they came to know him, a very different sort of being from what they had pictured. He had a full sense of this himself. A tight-built, modest youth of middle stature, or nearer the short than the tall, with lightish-brown hair worn close, a round but nowise singular head, a placid and shrewd expression of face, and a distinct but not disagreeable cast in one of his eyes—such was the Alexander Smith one saw just after he had become famous. Latterly he had become stouter about the shoulders, and more manly looking, with a tendency to baldness over the forehead, which gave a better impression of mental power. But the most remarkable thing about him was his wonderful quietness of demeanor. There was never a quieter man, one who would sit longer with others and obtrude himself less. People meeting him casually complained of this, and wanted more conversation, more of the poet. They might try him on this track and that, but he foiled them, listening pleasantly to what was said, but keeping his own contributions to a minimum. When he was really known, one came to like this quietness, as but the social form of the mind of the most perfect good sense, incapable of flummery or pretence, and sagacious in taking the measure of persons and things around it, but kindly-humorous and acquiescent rather than explosive or aggressive. There was something even formidable in this power of at least never, in the midst of other people's rubbish, saying anything that was silly or untrue. With his familiar friends, however, in a walk or in a snug room, he was, though still far from loquacious, chatty enough. He talked racily and simply, but generally with a flavor of shrewdness and humor. 'So-and so,' he would say, 'is the finest fellow in the world, and I never came away from him without feeling rebuked by the contemplation of so lofty a standard; but then, you know, he's a great ass.' Or, again, speaking of the reaction that had taken place against his own poetry, and of the ferocious onslaught upon him as a plagiary which had so much to do with the reaction, 'One does feel these things,' he said, 'and it is queer to come out in the sunlight and walk along the street after you have read such a review of your book; but I find that all such chagrins pass off in exactly twenty-four hours.' His fancy apparently was that every rotation of the earth brings things round again to the status quo. Nor was this mere talk. As the first sudden burst of applause had never turned his head, so the contrary blast had no more than a twenty four-hours' effect upon his equanimity. He would have gone on to the end quietly, modestly, and like a man of the soundest sense."

Friend, do not cronch to those above;
Friend, do not tread on those below;
Love these, they're worthy of thy love;
Love these, and thou wilt make them so,

LIFE AT SUMMIT CITY.

[The following versicles, which we clip from the Grass Valley National, furnish a glimpse of the winter life of those whose lives have fallen to them in snowy places, high up in the Sierras. The last two lines refer to snow-shoe skating, in which some of our mountaineers have made better time than was ever made on skates.]

Storming, storming, storming,
Storming, while the snow,
Thirty feet already,
Ceases not to grow!
Hidden so our city
None outside could know,
Like a new Pompeii
Buried in the snow!

Though the storm winds bluster,
What for them care we,
As we daily muster
Full of jollity?
Music, dancing, reading,
Thus the minutes go,
Jolly lives we're leading
Buried in the snow.

When the sun is shining
On the glittering snow,
Other games resigning
To the race we go;
Gents and ladies in it
Off like lightning go—
A mile in half a minute
Skimming o'er the snow.

S. C. J.

PITY is a thing often avowed, seldom felt; hatred is a thing often felt, seldom avowed.

ELOQUENCE is vehement simplicity.

YANKEE HUMOR.

ONE of the earliest, most obvious, and most easily illustrated characteristics of Yankee humor is its lusty hyperbole and power of bonndless exaggeration. It is great in "throwing the hatchet," and "pitching it strong;" mighty in drawing the "long bow" for a flight unparalleled. In this respect it shows some traits of kinship to the old Norse humor, with its immeasurable broad grins and huge, uncontrollable laughters. We catch a far-off echo from the back woods of the new world of that Brobdingnagian humor which once delighted the Norsemen in the old. The story-tellers are not the simple men of the Sagas; they have acquired a few more "wrinkles" of knowledge; the laugh has lost somewhat of the old hearty ring; the imagination is seldom sublime; still, we recognize the instinct of race working on and asserting itself; and in defiance of time, and change, and shape, we find an affinity here to the broad humor of the blithe Norsemen.

We can trace certain types of Norse humor in some of the Yankee stories. Also in expression there is yet a speaking likeness. At the gate of Utgard, says the Norseman, you found it so high that "you had to strain your neck bending back to see to the top!" In the Norse tales we have a character who listens and listens until "his ears are fit to fall off!" Another is in such a passion he "does not know which leg to stand upon." Another had such a bush of beard that the birds come and build their nests in it. Speaking of a very long distance, the North Wind attempts to indicate it by saying that "once in his life he blew an aspen leaf thither, but it made him so tired he could not blow a puff for ever so many days after." And surely the American Eagle, of which we hear such astounding things, must be one with that great Giant of the Edda, who sits "at the end of the world in eagle's shape, and when he flaps his wings all the winds come that blow upon man."

This tendency to humorous exaggeration has run to riot in the Yankee mind, especially in that which is a dweller somewhere "down East" or "out West." In comparison with its faculty for "stretching it" when "spinning a yarn," the "going in for it," the "piling of it up," the Norse originals are left far behind. In no domain does it "go a-head" more rapidly than in "running a rig" with that species of humor which depends on enormous lying for its success. Something vast in this way might have been anticipated from a people born and bound to "whip all creation;" the children of "Nature and of Freedom," half horse and half alligator, with a dash of earthquake, whose country is bounded "on the East by the Atlantic ocean, on the North by Aurora Borealis, on the West by the setting Sun, and on the South by the Day of Judgment." The geography has been too much for the brain. Thus we meet with a Yankee in England who is afraid of taking his usual morning walk lest he should step off the edge of the country. Another, who had been to Europe, when asked if he had crossed the Alps, said he guessed they did come over some risin' ground.

It is related of one of this class which nothing astonishes, nothing upsets, that he wanted to send a message by telegraph, something like a thousand miles, and on being informed that it would take ten minutes said he couldn't wait.

Akin to which is the story told by Mr. Howells, in his recent work on Venetian Life, of a "sharp, bustling, go-ahead Yankee," who rushed into the Armenian convent one morning rubbing his hands, and demanded that they should show him all they could in five minutes. The Yankees pride themselves on this trait of their character. They consider themselves much quicker and "cuter" than the slow, unwieldy English.

Here are bits of Yankee humor really worthy of the Norse imagination. They are so ridiculous as to be within one step of the sublime. A traveler called at a hotel in Albany, and asked the waiter for a bootjack. "What for?" said the astonished waiter. "To take off my boots." "Jabers what a fut!" the waiter remarked, as he surveyed the monstroity, for the man had an enormous foot. At length, we may say at full length, he gave it as his opinion that there wasn't a bootjack in all creation of any use for a "fut" like that, and if the traveler wanted "them are" boots off he would have to go back to the fork in the road to get them off.

It may have been "out West" that the thieves were so "smart" they stole a felled walnut tree in the night-time; drew the log right slick out of the bark, and left the five watchers sitting fast asleep astride the rind! Kentucky must have the credit for that wonderful curative ointment, which was so effective that when a dog's tail had been cut off, they had only to apply the ointment, whereupon a new tail instantly sprouted; and a youngster, with a genuine Yankee turn of thought, picked up the old tail and tried the ointment upon it, when it grew into a second dog, so like the other that no one could tell which was which.—London Quarterly Review.

BOOKS, like friends, should be few and well chosen. Like friends, too, we should return to them again and again—for, like true friends, they will never fail us, never cease to instruct, never cloy.

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used by the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world It can be thrown a distance of three hundred feet, and will return and fall at the feet of the thrower. As the Australian boomerang is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever invented, so is the San Francisco Boomerang, at the corner of Washington and Dupont streets, acknowledged to be one of the greatest institutions of the city. The smoking har, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot punches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum —in fact, everything about the Boomerang is perfect.

Absconded!—The wife whose husband supposed she had absconded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, and get one dozeo of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you want to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 and 27 Third street, east side, near Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

Mayer's Bazaar.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instruments, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furnituro dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

Medical.—"Young Man's Friend and Protector," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the Actuary, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

PHOTOGRAPHY
IN ALL ITS BRANCHES
Executed in a Superior Style, at
GEO. D. MORSE'S
NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,
No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
San Francisco.

STERETT & CUBERY,
PRINTERS,
533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 610, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY
PRINTING?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

Printing of every description done on short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

We are now closing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

D. J. OLIVER,
101, 103 and 105 Front Street, 110 Pine St.
ON NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STS.,
Where he offers for sale the largest stock of
Paints, Oils, Glass, Etc., Etc.
ON THE PACIFIC COAST, AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

Refers to Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

GREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of
PIANO-FORTES.
FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.
☞ PIANOS TO RENT. ☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S
Piano Manufactory
Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories
Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.

THE FAMOUS
PIANOS
OF
Chickering & Son
Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's.
Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET,

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA
COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,
(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.
French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

A. BONZI & CO.,
Italian Restaurant,
515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.
MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.
On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

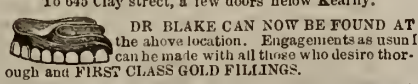
THE NEW BRANCH
OF THE
CLIPPER RESTAURANT,
No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,
WILL BE OPENED ON
MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.

MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBlic that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J STOCK, Proprietor.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.
MILLER & HALEY,
EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,
NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,
San Francisco.
SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED
To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.



Lamott's Hat Emporium
IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE
HAT OR CAP,
AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of
LAMOTT'S HATS!
CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

AIRY CASTLES.

Domes and minarets and towers—
Turrets which can kiss the sky,
Grottoes cool, and leafy bowers
Clad in buds that never die,
These, and beauties twice as fair,
Deck my castles in the air.

Flecks of clouds, all bright and golden,
Hover round their shadowy walls;
Strains and voices, sweet and olden,
Echo through these spectral halls,
Many an angel lingers where
Float my castles in the air.

But when I approach them nearer
And their beauties fain would clasp,
Neither more distant nor clearer—
Ever they elude my grasp,
And I turn in sad despair
From my castles in the air.

WOMEN.

Who shall limn for us the picture of a true good woman?—the pride and the paragon of her own sex, and the admiration of the other—of the woman young, beautiful, healtbful—well-formed, but not pedantic; who can talk well, listen well, sing well, play well, walk well, dance well, and dress well; who is neither flirt nor prude; who knows neither too much nor too little—whose lips are innocent of slang, and whose heart is pure from evil thonght; who is polished in manners, and affectionate in disposition; beloved of the old—the darling of the young; shy, modest, retiring; and commanding all the world's homage, without demanding tbe homage of anybody? It must not be considered that the yonthfulness of such a womau is absolutely necessary to her loveliness. Youth is a great blessing, and a great charm; but age is also a blessing—(do we not all wish to grow old?)—and a great adornment if it be combined with goodness. The beanty of the mind grows with the revolving years, and makes a woman of seventy, with mind and manners and innate gentleness, more beautiful than sweet seventeen can be, if the mind and the manners are wanting, and the tenderness that sbould be in every womanly heart is displaced by a masculine tone of thought, bebavior, or conversation. Though all women are not sucb as every man, at the poetical period of life, has pictnred in bis imagination, tbere are tbousands in every country who resemble the ideal, if not in accomplishments and education (for these are not witbin the reach of every one), but by outward grace of person, and inward purity of soul. All the flowers that bloom in the fair garden of humanity are not of equal delicacy and brilliancy; for Nature, that has room for the magnolia, tbe camelia, the rose, and tbe lily, has room also for the violet, the blue bell, and tbe daisy, and loves her humblest children as well as her proudest. Nothing in the world—at least to the male eye—eqnals in pleasantness the face and form of a bashful, virtuous woman, looking up to a man for snpport and gnidance, and giving him her true affection in return. Nothing on the other hand, is more disagreeable than the bold virago, womanly in form, but not in spirit, who would storm the citadel of your politeness to extort your bomage vi et armis, and who, by every movement of her features and glance of ber eyes. even if she do uot utter a syllable, betrays that she is puffed up witb conceit and selfishness, and is too ignorant to distinguish between a churl and a gentleman, or to accept the place that properly belongs to her in the social system.

Roman Dressing.—The fasbionable ladies of Rome carried artificial styles of dress and ornament to an excess which has no parallel in modern times. They spent large sums of money and a considerable portion of their time in the articles and operations of their toilet, and particnlarly in their baths. Lengthy descriptions of the details oonnected with them, have been given by several ancient autbors, which exhibit a degree of folly, vanity and voluptuousness scarcely compatible with the commonly-received opinion of the Roman character. Among the higher classes, each department of the toilet had its particnlar operations. Each portion of the body, even each limb, separately commanded attention; and to every one of these duties was assigned a separate servant or slave. The capriciousness of the female taste and temper were, perhaps, never exhibited in a more unfavorable light than in the persou of a Roman lady of distinction and fashion at her toilet.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

Dr. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years (15th (1866) in San Francisco,) enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK
EVERY TWENTY DAYS!
Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA,
EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander
Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on
MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.
☞ The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE CALIFORNIA
Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rate, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,
Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

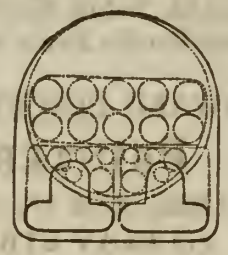
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establisment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN,
JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Manna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Belt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COBBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for

WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, Etc.

Also, Importers of

GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,

Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & CO.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Jolnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

WORKMEN'S HOMES IN SCOTLAND.—Edinburgh numbers 1530 one-roomed houses, of which 825 contain each six inmates and under, whilst no one of the remaining 705 contains less than that number of occupants. In Glasgow the state of things is still worse; for there the number of one-roomed houses is 2212, of which number 1253 shelter seven human creatures, whilst each of the other 959 dwellings has more than seven inmates. There are in all Scotland no fewer than 7964 houses—if they can be called houses—without windows, and 226,723 houses of only one apartment; proving that nearly 1,000,000 of the people of Scotland, or nearly one-third of the entire population, are living in houses—places improperly so-called—in which neither the comforts nor decencies of life can be secured, and which are thus totally unfit for human habitation. What wonder that working men like to spend as much of their leisure as possible in public houses, and as little of it as possible in their homes?

A LADY on one occasion, traveling in a railway carriage, was much annoyed by a cockney companion continually embellishing his conversation with "This 'ere" and "That 'air." A few moments afterwards she quietly requested him to close the window, remarking, "This ear is affected by that air."

HE keeps his road well enough who gets rid of bad company.

WHY is an orange like a church tower? Because we have a peel from it.

A LOVE SONG.

[The following beautiful love song was found in the dining room of the Occidental Hotel. It is supposed to have fallen from the pocket of the handsome and accomplished T—— D—— Esq.]

TO ——

I loved you once, I must confess,
And I might love you once again,
If you would but what's wrong re-dress
And cease to give my eye-sight pain.

Your eyes flash with an eagle's glance,
Your figure's good—the mould of form—
Your gloves are neat—direct from France—
Your temper's good, your heart is warm.

But, oh! one grievous fault appears,
Oh, why not wear a handsome tile?
One made by MEUSSDORFFER so famed—
His latest Spring and Summer style.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,
CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.

Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.

THEODORE MEETZ.....President
WM. ERZGRABER.....Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.....Secretary

TRUSTEES.

FABIAN JOOST — HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT, — FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE, — PETER MEYER.

The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer

In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.

☞ All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE
FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.
GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines halve is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A. DEMING,
137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents — CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,

OPTICIANS

THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined.

SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.

Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.

Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.

N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
STEAMSHIPS FOR
NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,
WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR APRIL.

April 10th—MONTANA, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
April 18th—SACRAMENTO, Capt H. Cavarly, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
April 30th—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

HOUSEKEEPERS'
HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,
And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF
MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.
706 SANSOME ST. 706
SAN FRANCISCO.
BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 KEARNY STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the
SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

AT THE REGULAR
WHOLESALE PRICES.
RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets, San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc.

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

PRETTY IS THAT PRETTY DOES.

The spider wears a plain brown dress,
And she is a steady spinner;
To see her, quiet as a mouse
Going about her silver house,
You would never, never, never guess
The way she gets her dinner!

She looks as if no thought of ill
In all her life had stirred her,
But while she moves with careful tread,
And while she spins her silken thread,
She is planning, planning, planning still
The way to do some murder.

My child, who reads this simple lay
With eyes dropt down and tender,
Remember, the old proverb goes,
That pretty is which pretty does,
And that worth does not go or stay
For poverty or splendor.

'Tis not the house and not the dress
That makes the saint or sinner.
To see the spider sit and spin,
Shut with her webs of silver in,
You would never, never, never guess
The way she gets her dinner!

—ALICE CAREY.

COUSINS.—It is a favorite dodge with a fashionable widow to get you to look into her eye, to find the particle of dust that is irritating that delicate organ, but the man who looks is a "goner." Handsome young ladies inclined to flirt don't resort to that mode exactly, to entrap a fellow, but they will manage to get you to call them "Cousin," and under this assumed and tender relationship, they will play the deuce with one's unsophisticated affections. One can get along so rapidly in love making under the cloak of pretended cousinship; for you can make the most serious protestations and show the most assiduous attentions, as i in the merest fun, just to keep up the character of "cousin," you know. Oh! the untold mischief that has been occasioned by a youth recklessly proposing himself to a confirmed flirt as cousin.

It is very pleasant at first, we grant you. You call to see your fictitious relation, and she meets you smilingly at the door, saying, "Oh, I'm glad to seeyon, consin Charles;" and she looks so handsome, and smiles so bewitchingly at the joke, that yon are quite entranced, and ready to die for her at once. When, on leaving, you salute her good night with "Adieu, sweet coz," and laugh as if it was all a joke, and the kiss you had received in fun wasn't going to keep you staring, broad awake all night, in downright earnest.

You are bewildered by the rapid manner in which everything appears to be advancing, and some fatal evening you are weak enongh to fall npon your knees and declare your love in strains particularly turtle-dovy, to have your fictitious consin (who, being a flirt, is tired of the farce by this time) draw herself up with offended dignity, assure you, in a tone that brings you to your senses and your feet at once, that "you are presuming altogether too much on a mere jest, Mister Brown!" This is a clincher, and if you are not a ninny you will be very careful how you call a bewitching flirt "cousin" again.

To be a woman, nowadays, appears to be the most difficult thing in the world. To be a creature bewigged, bepowered, bepuffed, rolled, coiled, padded, bagged, stuffed, frizzled, curled, tied, tortured, strained, dyed, beaded, dotted, streamered, fringed, trimmed, ruffled, plaited, trailed, jetted, jeweled, frilled, rouged, jerked, smirked, till the very fashion-plates hide their diminished head, is one thing; to be a human soul, with an eternity to live, with other human souls to help, with actual working and suffering, self-denying, conquering, learning, and ennobling before it, is another.

The other day a teacher at a lady's school, while putting a company of juveniles of the gentler sex through their spelling, came to the word "lad," of which, in accordance with the modern method of tuition, she asked the signification. One little pnss, on the question being put, with a sidelong look, blushingly answered: "For courtin' wi."

WHEN is butter like Irish children?—When is made into little pats (Pats).

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,

HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.

DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham, Marysville.	William Smith,

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Monigomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

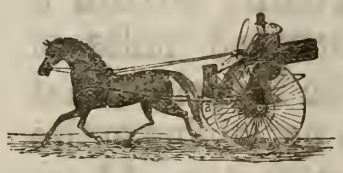
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Head-stones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S



NORFOLK STABLES,

ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON, SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.

Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

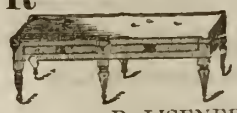
A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor. Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fonrth streets, San Francisco.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM



Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
es corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.
A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel.
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.
THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MRS. WINSHIP,

Fashionable Milliner,

NO. 23 POST STREET,

Between Kearny and Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.

Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.

☞ Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works, Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate ahould not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, hy the petition this day presented and filed hy J. W Brumagim, the Administrator of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased nnd the dehts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered hy the said Court, that all persona interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Mondny, the 6th day of May, A. n. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of Sau Francisco, to show cause why an order should not he granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceaaed as shall he necessary;

And that a copy of this order ho published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 5th, 1867. ap6-5w

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 4th day of April, A. n. 1867, noticc is hereby given that Tuesday, the 23d day of April, A. n. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, and the Court-room of said Court, at the City Hnll, in the city nnd county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased, und for hearing the application of Wm. A. Quarles, Public Administrator, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters of Administration with the will annexed, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Dated at San Francisco, this April 5th, A. n. 1867.
J. F. FINN, Esq.. Att'y for Petitionsr. ap6 3w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HORACE COLE, deceased. Notico is hereby given hy the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of HORACE COLE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within nine months and twenty-one days after the first publication of thia notice, to the said Administrator with the will annexed, at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 4th, 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Horace Cole, deceascd. ap6-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, Stnte of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased.

Order to show cansc why order of sale of real estate ahonld not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Michael Lynch, the Administrator of the estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of admiuistration;

It is therefore ordered hy the said Court, that all poraons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear hefore the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Prohnte Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show canac why an order ahould not be granted to the said Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shnll be necessary;

And that a copy of this order ho published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and pnblished in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w

R. W. HENT, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of J. C. BEIDEMAN, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of the Judge of said Court, made this day, notice is hereby given that Mondny, the 22 l day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, being a day of a regular term of said Court, to-wit: of the April Term, A. D. 1867, at the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, has been appointed for hearing the petition, this day filed, of Bernard Kennedy, praying for a decree authorizing and directing John W. Brnmagim, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate left unadministered of J. C. Beideman, deceased, to eonvey to the snid petitioner certain real estate situnted in said city and county, and particularly deacribed in said petition, upon the payment to said Administrator of the balance of the purchase money of said real estate; at which time and place all persons interested in said estate may appear and contest said petitiod by filing their objections in writing.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Drake & Hent, Attys. for Petitioner.
mar23-5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als, Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE. Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may he determined by a decree of this Court; that hy said decree it he declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of laud, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, he forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th dny of Februnry, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on tne 10th day of September, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates of David Whipple and Will am Whipple, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of aad minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, nnd subject to confirmation hy said Probate Court, on TUESDAY, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors, David Whipple and William Whipple, of, in and to all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the southerly line of Pine street, 111½ feet easterly from the south-east corner of Pine and Taylor streets; running thence easterly along said line of Pino street 26 feet; thence at a right angle southerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet; thence at a right angle westerly 26 feet, and thence at a right angle northerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will he received at said place, No. 6 Montgomery Block, in said city and county, from this date till Tuesday, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock, noon, hy the undersigned. ROBERT L. HARRIS,
Guardian of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-4w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed hy Thomas Breeze, the Administrator of the estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, praying for an order for the sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts of the deceased and the charges and expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear hefore the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cnuse why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall he necessary;

And that a copy of this order he published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Adm'r. mh30 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased, praying for an ordor of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion, and would ho most for the interest of all concerned to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the family allowance, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered hy the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear hefore the said Probate Court on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Prohate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to show canse why an order should not he granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of tlds order be published at lenst four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given hy the undersigned, Executors of the Last Will and Testament of JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persona having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the store of A. Crawford, No. 27 Market street, San Francisco, that being the place of the transaction of business hy said Executors of said estate.

A. CRAWFORD, } Executors.
D. N LUNDT, }

Dated March 30th, 1867. mh30-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NAYLOR C. DAVIS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John H. Madison, Administrator of the Estate of Naylor C. Davis, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to he divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 15th day of April, A. D 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not he made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs at law of the said Naylor C. Davis, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order he published for four successive weeks before the said fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 11th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city nnd county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to he a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM LOEWY, Clerk.
m16 5t By WM. LEDLIE, Deputy Clerk.
CHAS WITTRAM, Esq., Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintills, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant; You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, hnt in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to he due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the snid complaint, as above required, the snid Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you hy the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, hnt in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by defanlt will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the honds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City nnd County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHANN GEORG MOELLER, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 27th day of March, A. n. 1867, Notice is hereby given, that TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, in the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said Johann Georg Moeller, deceased, and for hearing the application of Louise Moeller, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters Testamentary, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Dated at San Francisco, this 29th March, A n. 1867.
J. F. FINN, Attorney for petitioner. mh20-3w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY A. WALSH, deceased. Notice is hereby given hy the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at at the office of Crane & Boyd, Attorneys at Law, in the city and county of San Francisco, the place of his transaction of business.

Dated at San Francisco, March 25th, 1867.

JOHN TOWNSEND,
Administrator of Estnte of Mary A. Walsh, deceased.
Crane & Boyd, Att'ys, S. W. cor. Clay and Montgomery streets. mh30-5w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Jndicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, hnt in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment hy default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to he $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and he put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of BENJAMIN P. GREEN deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate shonld not he made.

It appearing to the said Court, hy the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Courtis, Administrator of the estate of Benjamin P. Green, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the claims against the estate, and the expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear hefore the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the twenty-second day of April A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not he granted to the said Administor to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspuper printed and published in said city and county.

M C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to he a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 22d day of March, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp 50 cts., canceled.]
WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
F. A. Fahens, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
mar23 4t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN NERAC, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the Will annexed of the Estate of Ellen Nerac, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisee named in the Will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate to the party entitled thereto:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the devisee of the said Ellen Nerac, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order he published for four successive weeks, before the said sixteenth day of April A D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated March 14th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss.

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to he a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the snid Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. m16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased. Notice is hereby given hy the undersigned, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against FRANCIS S WOOD, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, JOHN G. HODGE, at Nos. 418 nnd 420 Clay street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 6th, 1867.

JOHN G HODGE.
Administrator with the will annexed of FRANCIS S Wood, deceased. ap6-5w

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIUBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

BLACK CROOK!

BLACK CROOK!!

BLACK CROOK!!!

THE WORLD-RENOWNED BLACK CROOK!—SPLENDID COSTUMES AND SCENERY!!

This, the most gorgeous spectacular play ever presented in the United States, will be produced at

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE,

On Monday Evening.....April 15th,

—WITH—

MISS SALLIE HINCKLEY,
MISS ROSA SIEGRIST,
MISS EMMA MILES,

A full Corps de Ballet, and the Opera House Stock Company.

Box Book open on Monday.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette.....50 | Upper Circle.....25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

In compliance with the desire of numerous friends, the
SAN FRANCISCO OLYMPIC CLUB
Will give a
GYMNASTIC AND ACROBATIC EXHIBITION
TUESDAY EVENING.....April 16,
AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....$1 00
Gallery.....50

☞The Box Office is now open for the sale of Tickets and Reserved Seats.

Tickets may also be purebased from Members of the Club. Holders of such tickets will please show them at the Box Office on securing Reserved Seats.

By order of the Board of Directors.
DAVID WILDER, President.

METROPOLITAN THEATER.

MONDAY EVENING,.....APRIL 15.
COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT TO
MR. E. G. BERT,
ON WHICH OCCASION
AN IMMENSE BILL

Will be presented by the Combined Companies of the METROPOLITAN AND OLYMPIC THEATERS!

When the following Great Artistes, who have kindly volunteered, will appear:

MME. MARZETTI, MLLE. DESIRE MATHIEU, MLLE. JULIA LEHMAN and IGNACIO MATHIEU, of the celebrated Martinetti Troupe.
MR. L. P. WARD, in his Wonderful NIAGARA LEAP.
MISS CHARLOTTE CRAMPTON, the Distinguished Tragedienne.
MISS GRACE DARLEY, (her first appearance at this Theater.)
HARRY COURTAINE.
MISS KATHLEEN O'NEIL, (her first appearance at this Theater.)
JOE MURPHY, NEW RATTLER.
THE ENTIRE OLYMPIC COMPANY, AND A HOST OF VOLUNTEERS.

For particulars see future announcements.

BOX SHEET NOW OPEN, where seats can be secured without extra charge.

☞On the occasion of the above Benefit, the OLYMPIC THEATER WILL BE CLOSED.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine

WANTED!

A GIRL 10 or 12 years of age, to live in a small family (no children). A good girl can find a permanent home by applying at No. 327 Third street, between Harrison and Folsom, or by leaving address at this office. References required.

B. C. HORN & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF

FINE HAVANA CIGARS,

.....AND.....

VIRGINIA MANUFACTURED

TOBACCO,

AT THE OLD STAND,

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF

CLAY AND FRONT STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A WELL ASSORTED STOCK OF

HAVANA CIGARS,

CHEWING,

SMOKING, MANUFACTURED

.....AND.....

LEAF TOBACCO,

.....AND.....

SNUFF,

ALWAYS ON HAND.

Horne's Best,
Cabanas,
Bella Mar,
Ramon Rosales,
El Encanto,
Juan Martines,
La Favorita,
La Fama,
Republicana,
Carmelita,

Buen Fumar,
Adelina Patti,
Avellanda,
Comerciante,
Gen. Sheridan,
Manzanillas,
De Albuerne,
Castelo,
Gen. Grant,
La Rosa.

Century,
Forest Rose,
Solace,
Crumbs of Comfort,
Liberty Boy,
Young America,
Savory,
Standard,
Solar,
Sunnyside,

Golden Luxury,
Bouquet,
Big Lick,
Forest Rose,
Grand Trunk
Knickerbocker
La Flor de Tobac,

Nonpareil,
Our Pet,
Pride of the Union,
Queen of the Pacific,
Star of the West,
Turkish,
Universal,
Wadawannuck,
Excelsior,

American Gentleman,
Scotch,
Rappee,
Maccaboy,
Tobac de Paris,

Nature's Beauty
Our Favorite,
Flowers of the Forest,
Fruit Juice,
Atlantic Cable,
Jewel of Ophir,
Jesse Hare Reed,
Nectar of Roses,
Washoe,
Signet.

Golden Apple,
Bouquet,
Pippin,
Pear Brand,
Horn of Plenty,
Black Hawk,
Melon,
M. B. Allen,
Citron.

☞The facilities for importing from Virginia and Havana enjoyed by this house cannot be excelled by any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
APRIL
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Norman. Published by A. Roman & Co.
The Pacific Base-Ball Guide for 1867. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Genius of Solitude. By Wm. R. Alger.
Amendments to the Internal Revenue Law. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Tristan. A Novel. By Edward Spencer.
Bankrupt Law of 1867.
Unspoken Sermons. By George MacDonald.
Our Father's Business. By Thomas Guthrie.
Madame Recamier's Memoirs, translated by Miss Luyster.
The Good Report: Lessons for Lent. By Alice B. Haven.
Peter Killip's King.
The Diamond Cross. By Wm. B. Phillips.
The Children's Treasury.
Our Mutual Friend: Diamond Edition, illustrated.
Our Convicts. By Mary Carpenter.
Watson's Practice. Abridged. By J. J. Meylor, M. D.
Angular Curvature of the Spine. By Benj. Lee, M.D.
Guide for Using Medical Batteries. By A. C. Garratt, M. D.
Curfew Chimes. By J. R. MacDuff, D. D.
Cruise of the Shenandoah. By C. E. Hunt.
Mosby and his Men. By J. M. Crawford.
The Criterion. By A. Cleveland Coxe.
The Tent on the Beach. By John G. Whittier.
New America. By Wm. Hepworth Dixon.
The Market Assistant. By Thomas F. De Voe.
Sequel to Ministering Children.
Jacobus on Genesis, 2d vol.—Covenant to the End.
The House of Israel. By the Author of "Wide Wide World."
The Parish Hand-Book. By Thomas Richey, D. D.
Sewell's Readings for Lent—New Edition.
Out of Harness By Thos. Guthrie, D. D.
Played Out—a Novel. By Annie Thomas.
Venetian Life. By W. D. Howells—New Edition.
Hours of Work and Play. By Frances P. Cobbe,
Elements of Logic. By H. W. Day.
School day Dialogues. Compiled by A. Clark. A. M.
Memoirs of the Confederate War. By H. Von Brocke.
A Guide for Passing Lent Holily. By Avrillon.
Yonman's Observations on the Scientific Study of Human Nature. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Speeches and Addresses. By H. Winter Davis, of Maryland.
The Book of Perfumes. By Eugene Rimmel.
The Village on the Cliff. By Miss Thackeray.
Woodburn Grange. By Wm. Howitt.
Kaloolah. By W. S. Mayo, M. D.—New Edition.
A Rosary for Lent.
Cumming's Last Warning Cry.
The Papacy. Abbe Guette.
Irving's Traveler. Putnam's Railway Classics.
Ingemisco. By Fadette.
The Huguenot Galley Slave.
Humboldt's Letters to a Lady.
Injuries of the Spine. By J. Ashhurst, Jr., A. M., M. D.
Headland on the Action of Medicines. New Edition.
Financial Economy of the United States. By John A. Ferris, A. M. Published by A. Roman & Co.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,
Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

J. O. HANSCOM. M. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO { T. PENDERGAST. W. W. HANSCOM.

Etna Iron Works!

S. E. corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,
Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,
MANUFACTURE
STEAM ENGINES,
QUARTZ-MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,
Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting
PISTON PACKING,

Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,

The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.

TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,

Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables. All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.

SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES"

None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.

Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

☞Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

A. J. SWEETSER,

Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic
Song and Cage Birds,
CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.
No. 519 Kearney street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

IMPORTERS OF
Agricultural Implements,
MACHINES, HARDWARE, ETC.,
NOS. 17 AND 19 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO,
NOS. 9, 11, 13 AND 15 J STREET,
(Near the Levee,) SACRAMENTO,
Eastern Office, 88 Wall Street, New York,
OFFER:

Buckeye Reapers, 5 and 6 feet; Mowers, 2 sizes.
Ball's Ohio Reapers; Mowers, 3 sizes.
Burt's Eagle Reapers and Mowers, double and single gear.
McCormack's Reapers and Mowers, hand and self-raking.
Manny Reaper and Mower, 5 feet cut—cheap.
Wood's Prize Combined Machines, 5 feet cut.
Kirby's Reapers and Mowers, 5 feet cut.
Wood's Prize Mowers, jointed and stiff bars.
Badger State Reapers and Mowers.
Russell's Junior Mowers.
Union Mowers, 2 sizes.
Champion Mowers.
Bay State Mowers.
Haine's Headers, iron wheels—genuine.
Haine's Headers, screw hub wheels—genuine.
Header Wagons, screw hub wheels.
Pitt's Improved Threshers, 24 to 40-inch cylinders
Aultman's Sweepstakes Threshers, 33 to 40 inch cylinders.
Pitt's Double Pinion and Iron Horse Power.
Portable Steam Engines, 5 to 20-horse power.
Wheel Wire Horse Rakes.
Revolving and Wire Horse Rakes.
Hay Presses, Hay Rope and Baling Wire.
Scythes, Snathes, Rakes, Cradles, Forks, etc.
Rubber and Leather Belting, all sizes.
Single Plows and Gang Plows.
Harrows, Horse Hoes, Cultivators.
Fan Mills, Grain Mills, Hay Cutters.
Wine and Cider Presses, Churns.
Broadcast Seed Sowers and Seed Drills.
Ox Yokes, Road Scrapers, etc., etc.

Samples of machines may be seen at their new warerooms. BAKER & HAMILTON,
Front street, between Pine and Market streets, San Francisco.

ARRIVAL

—OF—
MADAME LAURUSTINUS,
The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europe, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ROBERT CARTER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratix of the estate of Robert Carter, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratix, at the place of transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, John F. Finn, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

GRACE CARTER,
Administratix of the Estate of Robert Carter, deceased.
Dated April 12, 1867. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate left unadministered of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator as aforesaid at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 12th, A. D. 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Thomas A. Kimball, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Administrator.
ap13-5t.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CHARLES MITCHELL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF LUDWIG IGEL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of LUDWIG IGEL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Ludwig Igel, deceased. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JACOB R. MAYER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 523 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Dated April 13th, A. D. 1867.

A. W. BOWMAN,
Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased. ap13 5t

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 2-
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 20, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: A Whaling Port, by Prentice; Snodgrass on Poe; Local Architectural Notes; Local Art Items, by Astræa. LION'S MOUTH: The Case of Rook vs. Crook; Charity Concerts; Spring Gardening; A Jewish Rabbi in a Christian Pulpit; England Threatened; Muscular Christianity. Literary Gleanings and Gossip; Book Notices; Dramatic Affairs; Paragraphs, etc. Poetry—Cable Hymn, by John G. Whittier; Lines on the Bust of Dante, A Love Song, etc. SELECTED: The Story of Rose Blackett and her Lovers; Candace, a Story; "Black Sheep," etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Spring Gardening.

"About this time expect much flurried gardening" might safely be written in the almanacs, and with much better chance of correctness than the weather prophecies. When the buds are sprouting, birds mating and hives incubating, a large proportion of the women of America are taken down with the flower garden fever. There is a putting on of garden gloves, a seizing of garden trowels, a dropping of garden seeds and a prodigious amount of ineffective scratching in the garden beds. The weeding and watering are performed at or about the same hours of time. The horticultural enthusiasm so suddenly developed by the first mild rays of spring gives out prematurely. Weeds will grow also. They seem to thrive better in our gardens than elsewhere. While the legitimate plants are often of slow and sickly growth the weeds pop out in every direction. They appropriate our water and the richness of our soil in a most audacious manner. We are going to have roses, pinks and violets, dasies, fuchsas and hyacinths mignionette, sweet peas and morning glories, oleanders, lilies, and geraniams. Then we have a number of other strange plants with strange names. We have a beautiful garden in imagination. Ten days since ten papers of seeds were sown and none up yet. We have dug several times to see if they had sprouted. For several days after planting we watched the groad to see them protrude. Their tardiness is very provoking.

We have a hose and a garden sprinkler, and we drench our garden every morning. It is so nice to hydraulic. A neighbor has remarked that we keep the ground too wet—and that there is such a thing as being too aquatic in horticultural matters. But he is simply envious. He has no garden hose or sprinkler. He is obliged to go round and ladle out water on his plants and flowers with a prosaic old pail and tin dipper. Yet his garden looks well, nevertheless. One goat has been in our garden. He made sad work and made it in a very few minutes. Goats seem quite impervious to pounding. There is also a hen who makes an occasional foray. But the nurserymen, who go about during the day when the man of the house is absent, tempting the American women of San Francisco with pots of hot-house plants, constitute the greatest and most expensive trial. Then these female people commence buying flowers they know no such word as stop.

The American Flag,

The world must confess the American flag has come out of this war undamaged—the stars are all there. But the American Flag newspaper was sadly damaged by the cessation of war. After the war came the sheriff, and the Flag went in. On Thursday last the Flag appeared again and again asserted that it was not established for a campaign but "for all time," It knew it would be welcomed by thousands who, during the time of its suspension, had been longing for an independent newspaper, and all that sort of thing. We fear that the Flag in its present shape, will not be as useful at it was formerly. An intelligent Chinaman who formerly took thousands of copies of the Flag—at $1 a hundred—thus expressed his dissatisfaction at its present appearance—"Flag no good now, too little; some time Flag was good, no good now; some time, put flee shirt in Flag; now no can. Flag all same Morning Call, too little." Under these circumstances we cannot, in spite of the flattering notice which D. O. McCarthy's circular has received from the Red Dog Bulletin. The murderer's Cañon Gazette and other flourishing papers, prophesy that it will achieve a success. It has as yet, since its resuscitation, done very little towards creating a sensation. It has not pitched into the Irish; it did not on Good Friday curse the Jews as being responsible for the event which took place on Calvary; it has not thrown out hints to the effect that all the banks in San Francisco are unstable; it has not—oh! bah, it has done nothing.

Flowers of Literature.

The new local-items of the Alta gets up his police reports in an even more florid style than did the lamented Fitz-Smythe. He calls "drunks," "bacchanals arrested for festive imprudence."

A Jewish Rabbi in a Christian Pulpit.

Under the above heading, the Bulletin of Wednesday last, published the following from the Cincinnati Gazette of March 4th:

"Many persons, no doubt, had their sense of propriety somewhat startled, on Saturday morning at reading among the religious notices for Sunday that the Rev. Dr. Max Lilienthal, the elderly Rabbi of the Jewish congregation that worships in the synagogue on the southeast corner of Broadway and Sixth street, would preach to the First Congregational (Unitarian) society, in Hopkins's Hall, in the absence of the pastor, on the following morning. Such a pulpit exchange—or courtesy, rather, for we presume that Rev. Mr. Vickers would hardly have been admitted to the altar of the Broadway synagogue, as an expounder of the law and the prophets as he understands them—has never been known before in this city, if anywhere. And when it is remembered that this Congregational society professes to be one of the advance outposts of the Christian church, and that the Jewish religion is the most ancient known to accepted history, this circumstance seems a striking confirmation of the adage, 'Extremes meet,'

Many persons have expressed their astonishment at this remarkable instance of liberality on the part of a "Christian Church." A little reflection on the subject will perhaps lead them to think that there is nothing very extraordinary in the fact of a Unitarian congregation inviting a Jewish Rabbi to preach before them. The Unitarians utterly deny the divinity of Christ but consider him a teacher inspired by God; the Jews deny the divinity of Christ and believe him to have been in no way inspired. Had a Jewish Rabbi been invited to preach in a Christian Church—that is a church whose members believe in the divinity of Christ—then indeed the members of the Christian Church throughout the world might have been astonished; but for Unitarians, who believe only in the Father—the God of the Hebrews—to invite a Hebrew to preach for them is nothing strange. We do not think that the Rev. Dr. Max Lilienthal, the elderly Rabbi of the synagogue, when he preached in a Unitarian church, could be justly described as "A Jewish Rabbi in a Christian pulpit."

Charity Concerts.

Too many concerts are given in San Francisco "for the sake of charity." On Thursday evening a concert was given at Platt's Hall for the sake of charity; the lessees charged nothing for the hall and O, mirabile dictu!—the San Francisco Gas Company charged nothing for their gas. Here was a hall and several feet of gas at the service of the Committe of the Southern Relief Fund. For the sake of charity, Mrs. Lizzie Parker Northup volunteered to sing a song, Miss Ella Kemp also volunteered to sing a song, the Second Artillery Band volunteered to play three tunes. Wilils's Quadrille Band also volunteered to provide music for the "ball" which was to follow the concert. We had almost forgotten to state that a Mr. Bosworth also volunteered to sing a song, or make himself useful in some other way. The press, for the sake of charity, hoped that the concert would be well attended, and assured the public that the entertainment offered was a very good one. The public declined suffering itself to be swindled out of its money, preferring to give its dollars directly to the Committee of the Southern Rolief Fund to having—for the sake of charity—to endure a concert of three fair artistes and a small ball. We don't believe in charity which takes such a shape as this. About thirty people attended the concert on Thursday evening—two down-stairs and twenty-eight up-stairs. It is not necessary to attempt to swindle the liberal public of San Francisco out of its money. Give the public a fair entertainment and it will respond liberally without considering whether the amusement offered is fully worth the price demanded for admission to it; but when two or three unknown artistes of third or fourth rate ability volunteer to "get up" a charitable concert in order that the public may, without cost to themselves, be aware of their existence, it is not be lamented that the public refuse to go to hear them even "for the sake of charity."

A Final Decision in the Case of Rook vs Crook.

It is not only in the U. S Circuit Court that the great case of Black Rook vs Black Crook is tried. The public are trying the case themselves. Every evening the Faust Cellar becomes a court room, and George, like a learned judge, charges the jury and the advocates with lager until they froth up to an alarming extent. A worthy Teuton last night, after being charged several times, delivered the following decision, which must be accepted as final by every unprejudiced man:

"I sees through dis affair. Der management of der Metropolitan gets some fellow to steal der Black Crook in New York and der management of der Opera House gets some fellow in New York to steal der Black Crook andt dey both gets der same fellow, andt when Maguire finds out that he can't make business that way, he thinks it is not honest and he has combunctions visitings of conscience, andt is troubled mit his mind, and he becomes honest, andt he pays Mr. Barras for his copy right, and tells der management of der Metropolitan that they are dishonest, andt that he wouldn't steal from Mr. Barras but pays him for der copy right of his play, which gives him der right to copy all der bogus Black Crooks of which he can get hold." A knowing man, upon hearing the above, remarked that "he believed the Dutchman was about right, and that if a certain theatrical agent were put on the stand and forced to tell from whom he received the copy of the play produced at Maguire's Opera House under the title of The Black Crook, another theatrical agent in New York would be in a bad way." The case will be settled, we suppose, shortly after we go to press, but we shall take care that Judge Deudy does not get a copy of the CALIFORNIAN, as we wish him to give an original and unprejudiced decision.

Muscular Christianity.

The term muscular Christianity originated in England, where physical training is deemed an important adjunct to intellectual and religious education. Muscular Christianity takes an unpleasant form in the Eastern States of America. Not long ago a Christian clergyman carried his practise of Muscular Christianity to an unwarrantable extent: he beat his little boy to death because he would not say his prayers. A somewhat similar case has occurred in Indiana. B. F. Mead, residing in Johnson Township, Gibson county, a muscular Christian, a zealous member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, brutally beat his daughter because she had her hair shingled and refused to lead in prayer. The young lady is about seventeen years old; has been for some years a member of the General Baptist Church; has the reputation of being a very pious and devout Christian, often leading in prayer at the family altar, and generally obedient at the request of her parents. But her father, in a strange freak of nature, forbid that she should have her hair "shingled" and she did not, until about three weeks since, when, in her father's absence, she had her hair cut off. Some five or six days after that her father requested her to lead in prayer, which she declined, saying she did not at that time feel in a proper mood The next morning, while she was engaged in making up the beds, her father entered the room with a large black-jack switch four or five feet long. He ordered her to stand before him, saying he was going to whip her for cutting her hair off and not praying last night. He then plied the black-jack to her back in real ox-driving style until he was satisfied. Then turning, he threw the butt of the stick into the fire, in order that it might not appear in Court against him.

Mahomet spread his religion by means of the sword, but we doubt if Christianity can in these days be beaten into boys and girls with clubs and whips.

England Threatened.

England is claimed. The haughty Briton totters. Now can be seen the beginning of the end. Progress is made by the Fenians not merely in proposing warlike measures, but in taking action thereupon. At a recent Fenian meeting in New York city, a Mr. Griffin proposed sailing up the Thames with two Dunderbergs and demanding the unconditional surrender of Windsor Castle. The moral effect of the capture of Winsor Castle might be great although it is not now considered the key to the British Empire. As a contribution toward this enterprise one individual handed in a musket, and the "Window Bowers," not to be outdone in patriotism, handed in another musket and forty-five rounds of cartridges! Will not the English government keep an eye on this formidable "Window Bowers," and prevent, if possible, these supplies of ammunition—the initiatory steps toward the capture of Windsor Castle. Well may England tremble, actually threatened as she is with two muskets, forty-five rounds of cartridges, the "Widow Bowers," and two rams in prospective.

What to do With Them.

The Indians are likely again to make us a great deal of trouble, and various suggestions are made from time to time as to their final disposition, One individual, in view of the great expense which the Indians are to the Government, suggests that the whole race, as an economical measure, be boarded at first-class hotels. Another reasoning from an observation which has been repeated several hundred thousand times, to wit; that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast" advises the administration of an extensive course of music to the noble red man. The Owhyee Avalanche remarks that a certain neighbor of theirs, could his services only be obtained "for one night only," would answer every purpose required in a campaign. As executed by him every fifteen minutes on a cornet, one strain of "Home, Sweet Home" would make a "savage breast" sick for a week. With a view to a military end a campaign of boarding school misses practicing on the piano is hinted at. The gentle savage, did he realize the distress of such a demonstration, would probably prefer extermination.

Sporting Intelligence.

We do not know how much truth there is in the rumor to the effect that Tommy Chandler will fight again; we are uncertain as to the time fixed for the fight between Doony Harris and Con Mooney; but, in the meantime, we can assure our readers that Benjamin Todd, the champion of the heavy weights, still challenges the clergy of the Pacific Coast. Benjamin's usual style of fighting is rough and tumble, but he is willing to fight in a ring if compelled, and as far as in him lies conform to rules. The champion possesses not only a plentiful store of hard words, but also much endurance. He proposes to "discuss two days." We will bet on Benjamin. We trust that the Right Reverend Bishop Kip will not accept this challenge to "discuss two days," as the event would surely be that he would be found dead, with Todd on his knees at his side, shouting in his ear.

Business Rivalry.

The Alta evidently wishing to hear the Bulletin stock, announced yesterday that two of the editors of that paper left on the steamer of Thursday. Mr. L. Pickering did embark on the steamer, but "Samael Williams, Esq. another of the talented editors of the Bulletin," as the Alta expresses it, did not go. The Bulletin still has a few editors left. If some of the numerous editors of the Alta were to go East its readers would probably be much benefitted.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XII.—THE FALLING OF THE SWORD.

STEWART ROUTH left his house in Mayfair at an early hour on the day following that which had witnessed the eccentric proceedings and subsequent resolution of Jim Swain. Things were prospering with him; and the vague dread which had fallen upon him had been dissipated. Hope and defiance divided his mind between them. His speculations were all doing well; there was money to be had—money easy to be realized, on which he could lay his hand at very short notice—and there was triumphant, successful love. So much had hope to feed on—assuredly no insufficient aliment. Defiance reared itself against Fate. The time was drawing near, approaching with fearfully rapid strides, when the contingency, long contemplated, successfully eluded for a period beyond his expectation, kept off by such unlikely accidents and combination as might almost have justified his daring faith in his luck, but recognized of late as inevitable, must be realized, when the identity of the murdered man must be known, and the perilous investigation must begin. So be it, he was ready to meet the danger if it must be met; but he hoped no such necessity would arise. His influence over the beautiful woman whom he now really loved with all the passion he had at first feigned was becoming every day stronger and more complete. He knew that the strength of his nature had subdued her; she had no pride, she had vanity; and Stewart Routh made the mistake to which selfish and interested natures are prone. He forgot to calculate upon the influence of selfishness and calculation when their employ must necessarily be in opposition to him. His egotism injured the balance of his intellect, and now he had not the aid of Harriet's calm, cool, unerring judgment in his scheme to restore that balance. His position in regard to Harriet was the most troublesome topic of his thoughts just now. He tried to forget it often, but he did not succeed; not that any sentimental obstacle to the most complete oblivion presented itself.

Routh never bestowed a backward glance upon the life of self-sacrifice and devotion to him, of fidelity which, however depraved in its manifestations, was still fidelity, fond and true as the best man who ever lived an honest and virtuous life in the face of heaven and earth might be proud to inspire, which had been that of the woman whom he had deliberately betrayed, and was now prepared deliberately to abandon. He would have sneered at such a suggestion as a contemptible weakness. Harriet had been undeniably useful to him. He did not attempt to deny the fact to himself; but circumstances had arisen which prevented his making use of her in the future, and consequently, as this instrument was unfortunately living, intelligent, peculiarly acute, and animated by one of the strongest of human passions, it had become dangerous. Harriet had been agreeable to him too—it has been said that he loved her after his fashion; but this had been all over months ago; and the deadest of all mortal things to a man of Stewart Routh's stamp is a dead love; it has not even the dreary faculty of ghostliness—it cannot haunt. The uncomplaining, active, hard working, inventive, untiring comrade, the passionately loving wife, the shrewd, unscrupulous, undaunted, steel-nerved colleague, was nothing more to him now than a dangerously sharp-witted, suspicious woman, who knew a great deal too much about him, and was desperately in his way. The exhilaration of his spirits and the partial intoxication of his new passion had done away with the fear of Harriet which had taken possession of him, but they had intensified his dislike, and one thought presented itself with peculiar distinctness to Stewart Routh as he went Cityward that morning. It was—

"If it was only to get out of her sight, to be rid of her forever, what a relief it would be."

He had been at some pains to keep up appearances with his wife since their return to London. To the step which he meditated a quarrel with her was in no way necessary; and in the event of his failing to bring his plans to maturity before the inevitable discovery, it was all important that they should be agreed on the line of action to be taken. Harriet could not, indeed, oppose him successfully in his determination, if the occasion should arise, to throw the charge of the murder upon George Dallas; but she might render his position extremely perilous if she did not second him. What reason had he to fear? The estrangement between them had been growing wider, it was true, but it had not been exclusively of his making; she had held aloof from him as much as he from her, and he acknowledged that, if no infidelity had existed upon his part, it would still have taken place. From the moment they ceased to be comrades in expedients, and became accomplice in crime, the consequences made themselves felt. Routh did not believe in blessings or in curses, but he did not dispute the inevitable result of two persons finding out the full extent of each other's wickedness,—that those two persons, if obliged to live together, will find it rather uncomfortable. The worst accomplice a man can have is his wife. he had often thought; women always have some scruple lurking somewhere about them, a hankering after the ideal, for the possibility of respecting a man in some degree. While he had been forced to see and to believe in the intensity of his wife's silent sufferings, it had occurred to him more than once to think, "she would not be so miserable if she had done it herself; she would have been much jollier. Nothing ever will cure some women of sentiment."

Did it ever occur to him that it had not been worth his while to do what he had done? that, on the whole, it had not paid? No, never. Routh had been angry with Harriet when the matter had been brought up between them, and complained that it was always "cropping up;" but the truth was, he thought of it himself, much more frequently than it was impressed on him by any allusion from without; and he never ceased to remind himself that the deed had been necessary, indispensable. It had brought him money, when money must have been had, or all must have ended for him; it had brought him money when money meant a clearing and brightening of his sky, an utter change in his life, the cessation of a hazardous and ignoble warfare, the restoration to a peaceful and comparatively safe career. He was in a difficult position now, it was true,—a position in which there was peril to be surmounted only by dauntlessness, prudence, and coolness; but he was dauntless, prudent, and cool. Had all this never been, what might have been his position? When Deane and he had met, his luck had been almost at its lowest; and, in the comradeship which had ensued, there had always been burning anger and intense humiliation on Routh's part, and cold, sneering, heartless boasting on Deane's. Routh was the cleverer man of the two, and incomparably the greater villain; but Deane had elements of rascality in him which even Routh had felt himself entitled to despise. And he had hated him. Routh in his cool manner of thinking things over, had not failed to take this feeling into due account. He would not have killed Deane only because he hated him; he was too true to his principles to incur so tremendous a risk for the simple gratification of even the worst sentiment, of even sentiment intensified into a passion, but he allowed it sufficient weight and influence effectually to bar the entrance of a regret when the larger object had also been attained.

He had no pity for his victim, not even the physical sensation which is experienced by men whose organization and associations are not of the brutal kind, when temper, circumstances, or sudden temptation have impelled them to deeds of cruelty; he had hated Deane too much for that. He never thought of the crime he had committed without dwelling on the conduct which had made him resolve upon it. How the man had played with his necessities, had tricked him with compromising confidences, had duped him with false promises, had led him to the very brink of the abyss, and there had struggled with him,—with him, a desperate man! Fool,—fool! one must go over the brink, then; and who should it be but the weaker? who should hold his ground but the stronger,—but he who had everything to gain? He thought over all those things again to-day, methodically, arranging the circumstances as they had occurred in his mind. He recalled the hours of suspense through which he had lived on that day when Deane had promised to bring him a sum of money representing his own interest in the mining company, which sum was to secure to Routh the position he had striven hard to attain, and rescue him from the consequences of a fraudulent transfer of shares which he had already effected. It had come to a question of hours, and the impatience and suspense had almost worn out Routh's strong nerves, almost deprived him of his self-command. How well he remembered it; how he lived through all that time again. It had never been so vivid in his remembrance, with all the vitality of hate and anger, often as he had thought of it, as it was to-day.

The heartless trifling, the petty insolence of the rich rascal, who little guessed the strength and resolution, the daring and desperation, of the greater, if worse, villain, came back as freshly to Stewart Routh's vindictive memory as if he had not had his ghastly revenge and his miserable triumph months ago, as if he had suffered and winced under them but yesterday. And that yesterday! What a glorious day in his life it had been! Presently he would think about that, and nothing but that; but now he must pursue his task of memory to the end. For he was not his own master in this. Once set to thinking of it, to living it all over again, he had no power to abridge the history.

He had to remember the hours during which he had waited for Deane's coming, for the payment of the promised money; he had to remember how they waned, and left him sick with disappointment, maddened with apprehension; how he had determined he would keep the second appointment with Deane: he did not fear his failing in that, because it was for his own pleasure; and then, for the first time in his life, had felt physically unable to endure suspense, to keep up appearances. He had to remember how he had shrunk from the coarse insolence with which he knew Deane would sport with his fears and his suspense in the presence of George Dallas, unconscious of their mutual position; how all-important it was that, until he had wrung from Deane the promised money, he should keep his temper.

He had to remember how the idea that the man who had so far broken faith with him already, and might break faith with him altogether, and so ruin him utterly, (for if he had failed then, and been detected, hope would have been at an end for him), was within a few yards of him, perhaps with the promised money in his pocket at that moment, had occurred to him with a strange fascination. How it had intensified his hatred of Deane; how it had deepened his sense of his own degradation; how it had made him rebel against and curse his own poverty, and filled his heart with malediction on the rich man who owned that money which meant safety and success to him. He had to remember how Deane had given no answer to his note, temperately worded and reasonable, (Harriet had kept to the letter of the truth in what she said of it to George Dallas,) but had left him to all the tortures of suspense. He had to remember how the desire to know whether Deane really had had all day in his possession the money he had promised him, and had kept him expecting, grew imperative, implacable, irresistible; how he had hung about the tavern, had discovered by Deane's boasting words to his companion that he had guessed aright, had followed them, determined to have an answer from Deane.

He had to remember how he strove with anger, with some remnants of his former pride, which tortured him with savage longings for revenge, while he waited about in the purlieus of the billiard-rooms whither Deane and Dallas had gone. He remembered how lonely and blank, how quiet and dreary, the street had become by the time the two came out of the house together, and parted, in his hearing, with some careless words. He had to remember how he confronted Deane, and was greeted with a taunt; how he had borne it; how the man had played with his suspense, and ostentatiously displayed the money which the other had vainly watched and waited for all day; and then, suddenly assuming an air of friendliness and confidence, had led him away Citywards, without betraying his place of residence, questioning him about George Dallas. He had to remember how this had embittered and intensified his anger, and how a sudden fear had sprung up in his mind that Deane had confided to Dallas the promises he had made to him, and the extent to which their "business" relations had gone. A dexterous question or two had relieved this apprehension, and then he had once more turned the conversation on the subject in which he was so vitally interested. He had to remember—and how vividly he did remember—with what an awakening of the savage fury it had called into life, how Deane had met this fresh attempt,—with what a cool and tranquil assertion that he had charged his mind, had no further intention of doing any business in Routh's line,—was going out of town, indeed, on the morrow, to visit some relations in the country, too long neglected, and had no notion when they should meet again.

And then,—then Stewart Routh had to remember how he had killed the man who had taunted, deceived, treated him cruelly; how he had killed him, and robbed him, and gone home and told his wife,—his comrade, his colleague, his dauntless, unscrupulous Harriet. He had to remember more than all this, and he hated to remember it. But the obligation was upon him; he could not forget how she had acted, after the first agony had passed over—the first penalty inflicted by her physical weakness, which she had spurned and striven against. So surely as his memory was forced to reproduce all that had gone before, it was condemned to revive all that had come after. But he did not soften towards her that day, no, not in the least, though never had his recollection been so detailed, so minute, so calm. No, he hated her. She wearied him; she had ceased to be of any service to him; she was a constant torment to him. So he came back to the idea with which his reflections had commenced, and, as he entered on the perusal of the mass of papers which awaited his attention in his "chambers" in Tokenhouse Square,—for he shared the business abode of the invisible Flinders now,—he repeated,—

"What a relief it would be to get away from her forever!"

Only a few days now, and the end must come. He was a brave man in his evil way, and he made his calculations coolly, and scanned his criminal combinations without any foolish excess of confidence, but well grounded expectation. For a little longer it would not be difficult to keep on fair terms with Harriet, especially as she had renewed her solitary mode of life, and he had taken the precaution of pretending to a revived devotion to play, since the auspicious occasion on which he had won so largely at Homburg. Thus his absence from home was accounted for, and as she had not the slightest suspicion that Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge was in London, had never displayed the least jealousy, except on the one occasion when he had shown her the locket, and had unhesitatingly accepted his explanation of their sudden return to England, he had no reason to trouble himself about her. To sedulously avoid excit ing her suspicion and jealousy now, and, when the proper time should arrive, to confirm the one and arouse the other so effectually by desertion, infidelity, and insult, as to drive her at once to free herself from him by the aid of the law,—this was his scheme. It looked well; he knew Harriet, he thought, thoroughly. and he might safely calculate upon the course she would adopt. It was strange, if human inconsistency can ever be strange, that Stewart Routh, a man of eminently vindictive disposition, entirely forgot to take into account that the woman thus desperately injured might also seek her reveuge, which would consist in declining to take her own freedom at the price of giving him his.

Perhaps if the depths of that dark heart had been sounded, the depths beyond his own consciousness,—the unvisited, unquestioned, profound,—it would have been discovered that this man was so entirely accustomed to the devotion of the woman who loved him with a desperate though intelligent love, that even in her utmost despair and extreme outrage of wrong he felt assured she would do that which it was his will she should do.

During all this mental review he had hardly bestowed a thought on George Dallas. He would be safe enough in the end, if the worst came to the worst. It had suited him to magnify the strength of the coincidences, which looked like evidence, in discussing them with George, and he had magnified it; it suited him to diminish that strength in discussing them with himself, and he diminished it. A good deal of suffering and disgrace to all the "Felton-Dallas-Carruthers connection," as he insolently phrased it in his thoughts, must come to pass, of course, but no real danger. And if it were not so? Well, in that case, he really could not afford to care. When he had wanted money, Deane (he still thought of him by that name) had had to give way to that imperative need. Now he wanted safety, and Dallas must pay its price. There was something of the sublime of evil in this man's sovereign egotism. As he turned his mind away from the path it had been forced to tread to the end, he thought, "there is a touch of the whimsical in everything; in this it is the demi-semi-relationship between Harriet and these people. I suppose the sensitive lady of Poynings never heard of her step-father Creswick's niece."

A letter for Mr. Routh, a delicate, refined-looking letter, sealed with the daintiest of monograms, the thick board-like envelope containing a sheet of paper to match. on which only a few lines were scrawled. But as Stewart Routh reads them, his sinister dark eyes gleam with pleasure and triumph, and his handsome, evil face is deeply flushed.

"Bearer waits." Mr. Routh writes an answer to the letter, short but ardent, if any one had been there to judge by the expression of his face while he is writing it. He calls his clerk, who takes the letter to "bearer;" but that individual has been profiting by the interval to try the beer in a closely adjacent beer-shop, and the letter is laid upon a table in the passage leading to Stewart Routh's rooms, to await his return from the interesting investigation.

Another letter for Mr. Routh, and this time, also, "bearer waits." Waits, too, in the passage, and sees the letter lying on the table, and has plenty of time to read the address before the experimenting commissionaire returns, has it handed to him, and trudges off with it.

Presently the door at the end of the passage opens, and Routh comes out. "Who brought me a letter just now?" he says to the clerk, and then stops short, and turns to "bearer."

"O, it's you, Jim, is it? Take this to Mrs. Routh."

Then Stewart Routh went back to his room, and read again the note to which he had just replied. It was from Harriet, and contained only these words:

"Come home at the first possible moment. A letter from G. D., detained by accident for two days, has just come, and is of the utmost importance. Let nothing detain you."

The joy and triumph in his face had given way to fury; he muttered angry oaths as he tore the note up viciously.

"All the more reason if the worst has come—or nearer than we thought—that I should strike the decisive blow to-day. She has all but made up her mind—she must make it quite up to-day. This is Tuesday; the Asia sails on Saturday. A letter from Dallas only cannot bring about the final crash: nothing can really happen till he is here. If I have only ordinary luck, we shall be out of harm's way by then."

A little later, Stewart Routh, made certain changes in his dress, very carefully, and departed from Yokenhouse-Yard in a hansom, looking as unlike a man with any cares, business or other kind, upon his mind, as any gentleman in all London. "Queen's-Gate, Kensington," he said to the driver, and the last words of the letter, daintily scaled, and written on board-like paper, which was in his breast-pocket at that moment, were,—

"I will wait for you in the carriage at Queen's-Gate."

"I'm glad I seed that 'ere letter," said Jim Swain to himself, as, deeply preoccupied by the circumstances of the preceding day, he faced towards Routh's house, "because when I put Mr. Dallas on this here lay, I needn't let out as I spied 'em home. I can't 'connt for knowin' on the place perfectly miscus." And then, from an intricate recess of his dirty pocket, much complicated with crumbs and fragments of tobacco, Jim pulled out a crumpled scrap of paper. "Teddy wrote it down quite right," he said, and he smoothed out the paper, and transferred it. for safer keeping, to his cap in which he had deposited the missive with which he was charged.

When Jim Swain arrived at his destination, and the door was opened to him, Harriet was in the hall. She seemed surprised that he had brought her a written answer. She had expected merely a verbal reply, telling her how soon Routh would be home. Jim pulled his cap off hastily, taken by surprise at seeing her, and while he handed her the note, looked at her with a full renewal of all the compassion for her which had formerly filled his untaught but not untender heart. He guessed rightly that he had brought her something that would pain her. She looked afraid of the note during the moment she held it unopened in her hand; but she did not think only of herself, she did not forget to be kind to him.

"Go down to the kitchen, and cook will give you some dinner, Jim," she said, as she went into the dining-room and shut the door; and the boy obeyed her with an additional sense of hatred and suspicion against Routh at his heart.

"I'm beginning to make it all out now," he thought, as he disposed of his dinner in a most unusual silence. "The other one put Routh up to it all, out of spite of some kind. It was a plan of hers, it was; and this here good 'un—for she is good—is a-sufferin' for it all, while he's a carryin' on." Shortly after, Jim Swain took a rueful leave of the friendly cook, and departed by the area gate. Having reached Piccadilly, he stood still for a moment, pondering, and then took a resolution, in pursuance of which he approached the house at which he had made a similar inquiry the day before, and again asked if there was any news of Mr. Felton. "Yes," the servant replied; "a telegram had been received from Paris. The rooms were to be ready on the following day. Mr. Felton and Mr. Dallas were coming by the tidal train."

"I've a mind to go back and tell her," said Jim to himself. "She must want to know for some particular season, or she wouldn't have sent me to ask yesterday, and she wouldn't have let me catch her out in tellin' a crammer if there warn't somethin' in it. But no," said Jim, eagerly, "I won't. I'll wait for Mr. Dallas; there ain't long to wait now."

Jim Swain's resolution had an important consequence, which came about in a very ordinary and trifling way. If the boy had gone back to Routh's house, and had been admitted into the hall, he would have seen a piece of paper lying on the doormat, on which his quick eyes would instantly have recognized the calligraphic feat of his accomplished friend, Teddy Smith; and he would have regained possession of it. But Jim did not return, and the paper lay there undisturbed for some hours,—lay there, indeed, until it was seen by the irreproachable Harris, when he went to light the gas, picked up, perused by him, and taken to his mistress, who was sitting in the drawing-room quite unoccupied. She looked up as the servant entered; and when the room was lighted, he saw that she was deadly pale, but took no notice of the paper which he placed on the table beside her. Some time after he had left the room her glance fell upon it, and she stretched out her hand wearily, and took it up, with a vague notion that it was a tax-gatherer's notice. But Harriet Routh, whose nerves had once been proof against horror, dread, suffering, danger, or surprise, started as if she had seen shot when she saw, written upon the paper,—

"Mrs. Bembridge, 4 Hollington Square, Brompton."

To be Continued.

A LOVE SONG.

She who sleeps upon my heart
Was the first to win it;
She who dreams upon my breast
Ever reigns within it;
She who kisses oft my lips
Wakes the warmest blessing;
She who rests within my arms
Feels their closest pressing.

Other days than these shall come,
Days that may be dreary:
Other hours shall greet us yet,
Hours that may be weary;
Still this heart shall be thy home,
Still this breast thy pillow,
Still these lips meet thine as oft
Billow meeteth billow.

Sleep, then, on my happy heart,
Since thy love hath won it;
Dream, then, on my loyal breast—
None but thou hast done it;
And when age our bloom shall change,
With its wintry weather,
May we in the self-same grave
Sleep and dream together!

BENNETT, of the New York Herald, is engaged on a history of his life on newspapers, to be published after his decease.

MORE ocean telegraphs are still talked of. The more the merrier, if they only do cheaper work.

LINES ON A BUST OF DANTE.

SEE, from this counterfeit of him
Whom Arno shall remember long,
How sterm of lineament, how grim,
The father was of Tuscan song.
There but the burning sense of wrong,
Perpetual care and scorn, abide;
Small friendship for the lordly throng;
Distrust of all the world beside.

Faithful if this wan image be,
No dream his life was—but a fight;
Could any Beatrice see
A lover in that anchorite?
To that cold Ghibeline's gloomy sight
Who could have guessed the visions came
Of Beauty, veiled with heavenly light
In circles of eternal flame?

The lips as Cumæ's cavern close,
The cheeks with fast and sorrow thin,
The rigid front, almost morose,
But for the patient hope within,
Declare a life whose course hath been
Unsullied still, though still severe,
Which, through the wavering days of sin,
Kept itself icy-chaste and clear.

'Not wholly such his haggard look
When wandering once, forlorn, he strayed,
With no companion save his hook,
To Corvo's hushed monastic shade;
Where, as the Benedictine laid
His palm upon the pilgrim-guest,
The single boon for which he prayed
The convent's charity was rest.*

Peace dwells not here; this rugged face
Betrays no spirit of repose;
The sullen warrior sole we trace,
The marble man of many woes.
Such was his mien when first arose
The thought of that strange tale divine,
When hell he peopled with his foes,
The scourge of many a guilty line.

War to the last he waged with all
The tyrant canker-worms of earth;
Baron and duke, in hold and hall,
Cursed the dark hour that gave him birth:
He used Rome's harlot for his mirth;
Plucked bare hypocrisy and crime;
But valiant souls of knightly worth
Transmitted to the rolls of Time.

O, Time! whose verdicts mock our own,
The only righteous judge art thou;
That poor old exile, sad and lone,
Is Latium's other VIRGIL now:
Before his name the nations bow;
His words are parcel of mankind,
Deep in whose hearts, as on his brow,
The marks have sunk of Dante's mind.

—THOMAS W. PARSONS.

* 'It is told of Dante that when he was roaming over Italy, he came to a certain monastery, where he was met by one of the friars, who blessed him, and asked what was his desire; to which the weary stranger simply answered, 'Peace."

THERE has lately been a great increase in the quantity of English and American literature, but the quality of it seems to have deteriorated. Namby-pamby is in the ascendant, and a good new book appears only at rare intervals. The literary field in this country, as in England, has been captured by an army of young men and women who have taken to book-making because they are not capable of doing anything else; and the consequence is that publishers' catalogues are like the bills of fare at certain restaurants—very long, but not particularly inviting.

MR. LOCKE (Petroleum V. Nasby) has reason to be proud of the success of his first book, "Swingin' Round the Cirkle," of which—notwithstanding that it is a compilation of matter that had attained a wider newspaper publicity than anything else ever written—already more than ten thousand copies have been sold. Mr. Locke, it is said, although a Western man by birth and education, purposes shortly removing to New England and making his future home there.

TRUE FELICITY.—The true felicity of life is to be free from perturbations, to understand our duties towards God and man, to enjoy the present without any anxions dependence upon the future, not to amuse ourselves with either hopes or fears, but to rest satisfied with what we have, which is abundantly sufficient; for he that is so wants nothing.

TIME, patience and industry are the three grand masters of the world—they bring a man to the end of his desires; whereas an imprudent and turbulent murmur oftentimes turns him out of the way to his proposed ends.

CARPENTER's picture of President Lincoln reading the Emancipation Proclamation to his Cabinet has been placed over the last door of the rotunda of the Capitol.

DICKENS bothers compositors terribly with his corrections.

MRS. Stoddard will shortly have another novel ready.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLIES.

WITHIN the last two years there has been a very notable advance in New York weekly journalism. The Nation and the Round Table are, so far as we are aware, the first weekly papers in the United States modelled upon the idea and plan of such English journals as the Saturday Review, and Spectator. Like their London prototypes, these weeklies publish no stories, no poems (except such as are quoted in their critical articles) but occupy their space with essays on political, literary, and social subjects. The Nation is able dignified, and severely critical; while its rival the Round Table, affects the sensational vein, and seems in its choice of topics and its style of handling them. The Citizen, another New York weekly, edited by "Miles O'Reilly"(Charles G. Halpine) claims to be par excellence the "representative literary paper" of the American Metropolis, It evinces considerable ability of a certain kind, a vast deal of self-assertion, together with a certain dash and vivacity that are more popular with the majority of American readers than higher literary qualities. The Citizen thus complacently "reckons up" its contemporaries:

"Our weekly press is very painfully deficient in literary talent of a high order. Contrasted with the great literary weeklies of England, we have no representive weekly here, for instance, if we except the Citizen. The Nation is ponderous and wants enterprise. It goes round and round, making fifty-two revolutions a year, and sails under the colors of a lot of Boston people who may be great at the hub, but whom nobody knows nor wants to know. The Round Table suggests veal. It is green and young, and wants directness of purpose, going pell mell into everybody and everything, and saying the most meaningless things in large handsome type. The Round Table lacks genius. Compare it with The Saturday Review, or the Athenæum, and see how far it is from realizing the scholarship and taste of those great journals At the same time there is every chance for the Round Table's becoming a prosperous and useful paper, if it only remembers that there are some things in the world besides the dishes on its own table. A national weekly in New York would be a great enterprise. As it is we print nothing to equal the weekly publications of the New York dailies.

SOUTHERN JOURNALS.

If the prosperity of the South can be inferred from the number of its newspapers, it must be highly prosperous. In Richmond alone, there are no less than seven dailies. all of which judging from their appearance, are highly prosperous. The Richmond Times is a large and handsome paper of eight pages, issuing once a week a "double sheet," or more properly an edition with a supplement, of twelve pages. Speaking of the Virginia papers the New York Citizen says:

"The Enquirer is as large as ever, but more sprightly. It represents Old Virginia, and is intensely aristocratic. The Examiner—the great paper of the South during the war—and before the war, according to Theodore Parker, the best paper in America—has been reconstructed. Daniel is dead—Daniel the boldest, most gifted, most unrelenting of all the rebels. He was as a general of cohorts. and was of more use to the Confederacy than any man except Lee. How he fired the slumbering Southern hearts, and poured oil upon the flames, and made Jefferson Davis himself eat many a sad breakfast. Among Daniel's eccentricities was a contempt for Yankee spelling. He would have nothing to do with Webster or Worcester, and so went back a hundred years and followed Johnson. Public became "publick,"—Atlantic, "Atlantick,"—hour, "honour"—connection, "connexion,—labor, "labour," making the paper look very quaint. His successor, Mr. Pollard, an assistant of Daniel, follows his master's spelling absolutely. We can pardon eccentricities in men of genius—we smile at the mimicries of small men, and think of Kinglake's extremely sarcastic comment on Louis Napoleon: "Conscious that in point of hat and coat and boots he was the same as the Emperor Napoleon, he imagined that the great scion of 1815 between the man and the men of a hundred fights could be acted over again." Pollard in the hat and coat and boots of Daniel, makes an awkward figure. His paper is a good one, and bad spelling does not improve it. All these Richmond journals show signs of thrift. The people seem to be holding on to their land. The columns of "plantations for sale" have disappeared, and we find every indication of prosperity and wealth. In Charleston there are three newspapers. One before us have eight pages, and every one is filled with advertisements with the exception of a little space for news. Savannah sends us supplements telling us where all the Christmas luxuries of New York and London may be purchased. Augusta has large dailies. When we go to Mississippi we find the small town of—Corinth with a large daily—Corinth, from which Beauregard ran away. The town of Lelma—a country town—in Alabama, has an eight-paged daily. Memphis prints daily papers as large as The Citizen. Natchez has a brisk dailey; while New Orleans prints the largest paper in the United States. Take up any one of these journals—broad white, neatly-printed, rich teeming with evidence of prosperity and advancement—and compare them with the small, dingy, greasy, seven-by-nine straw sheets that spies were wont to carry in the heels of their boots and sell to pickets for whiskey, and we can see how much more advantage the Union is to the South than was the Rebellion. The South now learns that Union is wealth and strength.

THE PORTER-HOUSE STEAK HISTORICALLY CONSIDERED.

The following rather odd historical sketch of the Porter-House Steak, is from a new curiosity in literature, entitled The Market Assistant, which we find among a number of recent puplications just received from A. Roman & Co:

"Martin Morrison was the proprietor of a long-established and well-kept 'porter-house,' located and known at that period at No. 327 Pearl street, New York, near the 'Old Walton House.' We introduce him in 1813, where we find he opens a 'porter-house' at No. 43 Cherry street, which became a popular resort with many of the New York pilots for his prepared hot meals at any hour, at their call; they being occasionally detained on shipboard until their vessels were safely moored.

The 'porter-houses' in those days were not so devoted to tippling, dram-drinking and the common nests for the loafing, or the manufacturing of politicians and corrup officials, as at the present day; but served to accomodate the hungry and thirsty travelers, old and young bachelors, seamen and others, with a cold lunch, after the English custom—'a pot of ale [or porter] and a bite of something.' Some 'porter-houses' prepared a hot meal of one or two dishes; among these was Morrison's, who must have been quite famous for his excellent broiled beefsteaks, which were universally called for at his place.

On one occasion (at the above period, 1814), Morrisen having had an unusual call for steaks; he had cooked his last steak, and, as fortune would have it for all future partakers of beefsteaks, an old favorite, but a rough pilot, made him a late visit, both hungry and thirsty, having been several hours without food. Not caring for the salt junk aboard the vessel which he piloted in, he had concluded to wait until he got on shore, that he might cast his anchor at Morrison's, where he could enjoy his 'hot steak and mug of porter.'

In his honest language, the pilot gave his usual order. Morrison had nothing but his family dinner for the next day, which consisted of a sirloin roasting-piece, from which he offered a cut, if the old pilot would have it. 'Yes, my hearty, anything—so long as it is a beefsteak—for I am as empty as a gull!' exclaimed the pilot. Morrison cut off a good-sized slice, had it dressed and served. The pilot ravenously devoured it, and turning to the host (who had been expecting a blast from the old tarpaulin) to his astonishment, renewed the order: 'Messmate, another steak just like that—do you hear?' Having finished his steaks and the second mug of porter, the old pilot squared himself towards his host, loudly vociferating: 'Look ye here, messmate, after this I want my steaks off the roasting-piece! do ye hear that?—so mind your weather-eye, old boy!'

It was not long after this when the old pilot's companions insisted upon having these 'small loin steaks' served to them. Morrison soon discovered that these steaks were more suitable in size to dish up for single individuals, and he ever after purchased the sirloin roast-pieces, from which he cut off the small steaks as they were called for; the large sirloin steaks becoming less in demand.

Morrison's butcher—Thomas Gibbons—in the Fly Market, one morning put the question, after he, (Morrison), had selected several sirloin pieces, 'Why he had ceased purchasing the usual quantity of sirloin steaks?' Says Morrison, 'I will tell you the reason. I cut off from the sirloin roasting-pieces a small steak which serves my pilots and single patrons best; but as it is now cold weather, I wish to have these roasting-pieces cut up as I shall direct every morning.' After this, Morrison's sirloins were daily cut up by Mr. Gibbons, with his order to 'cut steaks for the porter-house;' hence, the sirloin was changed into 'cut the porter-house steaks.' Their appearance attracted the attention of other butchers and keepers of porter-houses, who admired their appearance and convenient size; in a few years their name and character became quite common to the butchers of the Fly Market, from which the name has spread to the several principal cities of the United States, and I doubt not that the name, porter-house steak, has reached across the Atlantic."—From the Market Assistant.

ART AT WASHINGTON.—THE SENATOR FROM OREGON THINKS HE IS A JUDGE OF STATUARY.

Most people who are in the habit of reading the Congressional debates, understand pretty well how, and upon what principles "Art-jobs"—for the furnishing of a picture or a statue for the Capitol is regarded like any other contract for work—are "given out" at Washington. The statue of Mr. Lincoln, for which $10,000 is to be paid, is not to be the work of any known American artist; but the contract was awarded to Vennie Ream, an amateur of sixteen years, the daughter of a department clerk, whose friends were powerful with the lobby. It is in this unintelligent and barbarously ignorant spirit that nearly all the ornamental work for the Capitol is assigned, and there is reason to fear that the statue decreed to General Scott will furnish another example of the taste and culture of our national legislators. Speaking of the debate in the Senate on the Vennie Ream bill, the New York Nation says:

"The ignorance displayed by honorable Senators in the debate upon this bill was most astounding, and would have been ludicrious had it not been so saddening. What, it may be asked, is to be hoped for art in a nation whose highest representatives can speak, as did Mr. Nesmith, of Oregon, in reply to Mr. Sumner? 'Mr. President, it this were a mere matter of research, I should be very much inclined to defer to the judgment of the Senator from Massachusetts; but as it is not, and as it requires no great learning, no particular devotion to reading, to discover what is an exact imitation of nature, I claim that my judgment on such a subject is as good as his own. My mind has never been perverted by the extensive reading which the gentleman from Massachusetts has had, or by that vast amount of lore in which he is so accomplished, but I claim to be equally as good a judge as he is of any mere matter of art which is an imitation of a natural object.' There is an effrontery about this truly magnificent; an utter ignoring of the fact, which we should think scarcely needed demonstration, that a knowledge of art is to acquired only by study and observation, just as a knowledge of any other branch of learning. Just as well, surely, might Mr. Nesmith claim to be naturally an entirely competent judge of music or Greek prosody. A knowledge of art and its laws is not to be required of members of Congress. It may be a question whether or no the 'condition of the Senator from Massachusetts,' which seems so irritating a thorn in the sides of many members, be necessary to the faithful fulfilment of their trusts, though we are inclined to think that it might do no harm even to the worthy Senator from Oregon; but we are not disposed to ask of them an intimate acquaintance with art. We do ask, however, that they should acknowledge the fact that there are many others in the land, men whose lives have been devoted to the study of art, who are more competent to judge in this department than they, and to whom the purchase of works of art should, and the adornment of public buildings, might well be committed, that the public money may not be squandered in works which can be but an eyesore to all cultivated persons, and whose only tendency must be to depress the public taste."

BORES.

THE tunnel through the Alps is a gigantic bore, but not of the kind we are going to describe now, though the very mention of it recalls an old story which will still bear repeating. An old gentleman having caught a listener, was detailing at frightful length how he had been trying in vain to make an Artesian well, and the luckless hearer was in utter despair. "Well, sir," he continued, impressively, "I bored, and I bored—" "Oh!" ejaculated the tortured one, "that you did, I'll be bound—I am sure you bored."

A bore has been defined as "somebody who doesn't know when it is time for him to leave off doing something," and this is right as far as it goes. But a man may bore by beginning something which is inopportune. When Bob Sawyer described over the breakfast table the extraction of a tumor from a gentleman's head, illustrating with a loaf and oyster-knife, he was an unmistakable bore.

I was on a country visit not long since, writing against time one morning. Enter housekeeper, with a countenance half dismayed, half amused, and announces Mr. Boggley. He came in, looking like Punch's picture of John Bull, and sat down for three hours and ten minutes, and recounted how he had made a speech at the last vestry. I don't think there was much in it, but it began thus: "Gentlemen, I says—just as it might be to you, now—Gentlemen—Squire Oaks was a settin' as might be there—Gentlemen, I says, two and two makes four, leastways they allus did when I went to school." Boggley thought this so neat that he repeated it a dozen times in the course of his monologue. What suffering I endured! I threw myself into attitudes, I drew portraits of Boggley behind my desk, I read the paper, but still he bored. I related my sufferings next day to Farmer Wuts, who told me that once, as he was driving out of Colchester to go home—eleven miles—he overtook Boggley and offered him a lift. Boggley related then the measures he had taken to remove an obnoxious wagon which had been pulled up opposite his window. He had dilated on the attendant circumstances, and was nearing the crisis of his story, when they reached home. "I'll tell you next time what I done," said Boggley, as he got out. "But he never will," added Wuts, confidentially.

Boring does not necessarily mean talking on distasteful subjects. One has to do that sometimes, whether people like it or not. But a bore is of necessity a selfish person. Boggley was inconsiderate of our feelings, therefore he bored. On the other hand, it would be hasty and uncharitable to say so of the hero of a beautiful drawing which comes into my memory as I write. One of Leech's sketches displays Jacky Troublesome, a pickle from school, in a room with his sister Lucy and her betrothed lover, Mr. Whitey Brown. Master Jacky relates at length how Boodle's dog worried Cobley's rabbits. You may guess, if you do not remember, their misery-stricken faces. Now certainly Jacky was boring, but he is not a Bore proper, because he is talking in all innocence, thinking the listeners enjoy it. If they had given him a hint to go he would have taken it, being a good-natured fellow. As, however, people in like circumstances often have not courage to do it, we will give the hint for them. Never make a third in a conversation. If you see two people talking, don't go near them. The chances are a thousand to one that if you do you will bore.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday the Black Crook was produced at Maguire's Opera House. A rush ensued as might have been expected, and nearly every seat in the house was secured before the opening of the doors. Hundreds were content to stand during the whole of the performauce, rather than miss the first representation of the Black Crook. The audience were called upon to applaud the very minute after the curtain rose, for the pretty Miss Sallie Hinckley immediately appeared in the character of "Rodolphe." She received a hearty welcome back to San Francisco. Miss Hinckley proved, by the improvement which she evinced in her acting, that she had made good use of her New York experienoe.

The Black Crook is a piece of the same style as the Sheep's Foot; the literary portion of the play is even more silly and ungrammatical than that of the piece which proved the greatest success ever achieved on the San Francisco stage. In the matter of scenery and startling effects the Sheep's Foot is qnite eclipsed by the Black Crook, as produced at Maguire's Opera House. The "Grotto of Stalacta" is a magnificent scene, one of the finest ever put on the stage in this city. Andrew Torning and son have surpassed their previous productions, in this play, and these scenic artists are probably equal to any in the United States. Miss Olivia Rand made a fine appearance on the stage, and sang "Naughty Men" and other songs pleasingly. Miss Rand possesses such a beautiful, natural voice that all must regret that it has not already been properly cultivated; there is time, however, if this promising artiste possesses sufficient indnstry and perseverance,for her to achieve eminence as a singer. Mr. Edwards played "Black Crook" very impressively, and made all he could out of the part. Mrs. Sophie Edwin looked charming as "Stalacta." The comic business was woll managed by Mrs. Judah as "Dame Barbara," H. Sinclair as "Don Puffinquintz," Harry Jackson as "Greppo" and Willie Edouin as "Dragonfin." Harry Jackson caused much laughter by the manner in which he impersonated the woe-begone "Greppo." Willie Edonin came near carrying off the honors of the piece by the wonderfully funny manner in which he played "Dragonfin;" his skill in gymuastic feats evidently took the audience by surprise, and they applauded heartily. H. D. Thompsou grossly libelled the Devil in his characterization of "Zamiel." No respectable fiend—far less an arch-fiend—ever indulged in such absurd contortions as does Mr. Thompson, who evidently thinks that it is no use having wings unless you flap them continually. Moreover, Zamiel was a German devil, and it is incongruous to represent him as an Irish devil with a bad brogue. If Mr. Thompson will realize the fact that the Devil is a gentleman, and not an Irish process-server, he will do the character more justice. I was grieved to see E. Russell--the cherub-like E. Russell--in the role of a demon. It is too bad. However, he played his part very well. The ballet performed capitally when allowance is made for the fact that it was composed of young California girls who made their first appearance on the stage on this occasion, in place of veuerable dancers of thirty or forty years' experience. There are several pretty faces in the ballet; the Misses Corcoran are included, and performed their respective parts very well. The two leading danseuses, Miss Rosa Siegrist and Miss Emma Miles, received much applause for their artistic and graceful dancing. These young California artists are nearly as clever as and far prettier than any of the fine, well-preserved old ladies of the French stage. The Black Crook is bouud to have a long run. It is very doubtful whether the "Black Rook" can produce sufficient caws to preveut the public from flocking to see the Black Crook. There is a "bogus" sound about "Black Rook" which is apt to frighten the public and act as a scare crow. The public knows that The Black Crook is magnificent, and its success is secured. The egg which the magagement of the opposition theater have been sitting on for so long may produce a black rook, or on the other hand it may be addled.

The management of the Metropolitan anxiously await the decision of the Courts. An injunction may be issued which will prevent them from producing the very weak affair which they call The Black Rook, and the management of the Opera House call The Black Crook. Of course in such case they need not lose the immense sum of money and the skill and labor they have bestowed on the scenery. A new play can easily be written introducing all the scenes, and scenic effects, and the merest tyro in the art of play-writing could not fail to produce a play more acceptable to the public in a literary point of view than the farrago of nonsense called the Black Crook —or Rook.

Mr. Maguire's operatic artistes, Madame Stella Bonheur, Signor Lamberti and Signor Milleri. left New York on April 11th, and on their arrival will commence a season of Italian Opera, supported by Signorina Brambilla, Signor Mancusi and other artistes.

The Guatemala Opera Troupe have not yet arrived.

The Sacred Concert given on Sunday last at the Metropolitan Theater, netted $750 for the Southern Relief Fund. The programme was well carried out by the following artistes who volunteered on the occasion: Elvira Brambilla, Signora G. Bianchi, Miss Louisa Tourney, Miss Emma Howson, Mrs. S. W. Leach, Miss Clelia Howson, Miss Ella Kemp, S. W. Leach, R. Wunderlich, John Allen, Signor E. Bianchi, Signor G. Mancusi, Signor C. Morley, Frank Howson, Henri Herberte, Geo. T. Evans, Chas. Schultz, M. Roncovieri, Jas. F. Swift, H. H. Stevens, members of "The Twelve," ladies and gentlemen of the San Francisco Chorus Society, a full orchestra, every one volunteering, together with the United States Second Artillery Band. Such a concert as this was worthy of the cause in which it was given, but sham "benefits" for the Southern Relief Fund can only annoy the public and be of no service save to advertise a few amateur or third rate singers.

The Annual Public Exhibition of the Olympic Club was given on Tuesday evening, at the Metropolitan Theater, before a large and fashionable house. The feats on the "Horizontal Bar," with which the perfromance commenced, was very good, and served to show to what a degree of perfection muscular education may be carried. "The Japanese Pole Feat" was well performed by Mr. W. S. Lawton and the same gentleman performed many acrobatics feats with Mr. C. E. Elliot, in capital style. One of the most surprising feats of the evening, and one which drew the greatest applause, was "Balancing on a Ladder," by Mr. David Wilder. The performance on the "Swinging Rings," by Messrs. J. A. D. Holdredge, H. B. Russ, H. W. A. Nahl and G. S. Brown, exhibited much skill and daring. The "Niagara Leap," which concluded the entertainment, was extremely well performed by Messrs. L. P Ward and N. H. Seligman. This last feat was nearly attended with unpleasant consequences to one of the performers. Mr L. P. Ward, while swinging by the hand from a trapeze held by Mr. Seligman, relaxed his grasp and fell to the stage. Mr. C. A. Bennet, the Hercules of the Club, caught him in his arms and succeeded in partially breaking the force of his fall, but both came down together, and the spectators were much alarmed. Mr. Ward, who was luckily unhurt, sprang to his feet and turned a somersault to assure the spectarors that he had sustained no injury. The gymnastic and acrobatic feats of these talented amateurs were accompanied by fine music, and the entertainment throughout was a most brilliant success.

On Sunday, Prentice Mulford, Esq., whose sketches in the CALIFORNIAN and other papers have achieved a widespread popularity, will read an essay entitled "Street Car Reflections," before the Dashaway Association in their Hall on Post street. Mr. Mulford's lectures which he delivered some time ago were very popular.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy will deliver one of her popular lectures at the Mechanics' Institute Hall on Post street, at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and another at 8 o'clock in the evening.

TOUCHSTONE.

LOCAL ART ITEMS.

THERE has been for years a prevailing fashion among our artists to paint pictures of the Yosemite valley, and we have had, consequently, innumerable sketches of its different objects of interest, taken from every conceivable point of view and executed in every conceivable style. In making the reputation of an artist, so much lies in the choice of subjects, that we wonder experience has not taught our artists to confine themselves, at least in the beginning of their career, to such scenes as commend themselves to the people by their familiarity and simplicity—rather than by their strangeness, which lessons their attractiveness and grandeur, which at best can be only distantly approached in art. A stretch of country road, with grass and rocks and clumps of trees, a rustic house, or shady brook, if drawn with any degree of power, makes a much more satisfactory picture for the public eye, and comes more easily within the painter's grasp, than our mountains and valleys, with their magnificent distances and difficult atmospheric effects.

The last instance of misdirected taste is seene in an immense painting of Cathedral Rock, which is notable only for its exceeding dullness--there is a sameness in the drawing of the trees and the coloring of the foliage, an utter stagnation in the water, and a total lack of aerial perfection that cloud, whatever little merit the picture may possess. Whatever charmes the original scene may have are lost in the portrayal here; and yet we do not know but the artist might have made a very decent picture, had his aspirations confined him to something less pretentious.

As an exemplification of the folly of aiming too low, which is quite as bad as the folly to which we have first alluded, we reluctantly call attention to another work lately exhibited; and we believe that every one interested in art must share with us a feeling of intense disappointment in viewing this last piece of portrature by Charles Nahl which has for a week past disfigured Snow & Roos's window. As a likeness of a good-natured negro boy, two coach dogs, a rooster and a hen, had it been painted by one who made no pretensions as an artist, we should have passed it by with a word or two in commendation of its fidelity and careful execution; but as a work of art we hold it quite unworthy the reputation of an artist who has given us such excellent specimen of his power as the "Pack Train Crossing the Mountains," exhibited at the same gallery. There is an unnatural brilliancy in tho atmosphere, an exaggerated coloring in the foliage, and a painful stiffness and lack of grace in the drawing of the figures, every one of which has the appearance of having sat for a portrait. If Nahl must descend so low in the scale on his future paintings we hope our recollections of his work may end with this.

Marple, who has improved very much in his coloring, has had several pictures on exhibition of late, the best being a sketch of Summit Rock, showing much more freshness in color than he has usually exhibited.

Arriola has lately displayed a view of Howard Street as seen through one of our heavy evening fogs. The scene is a tolerably picturesque one of its kind, and the painting, executed with some degree of care, shows considerable cleverness; but it is of rather a low order of art, in our opinion, as is also a representation by the same artist, of the National Guard Armory, with the Synagogue in the back ground. The latter picture is very badly colored and quite as badly drawn. A small painting of Mexican scenery, by the same artist, is noticeable only for its bewildering mixture of gaudy colors and its evidence of reckless handling of the brush.

Keith,who accompanied the Academy of Sciences upon their recent field excursion to Fort Alcatraces, is engaged upon a water color drawing of Tamalpais as seen from that spot. We lately saw a very charming and effective bit of coloring from his hand, representing an Oakland roadside. The picture has passed into the hands of an appreciative admirer of works of merit, of which this is certainly one, and we hope the public may have an opportunity of seeing it before it is consigned to the privacy of the drawing-room.

Denny has a figure-piece at Jones & Wooll's, and also a landscape: both are failures when compared with his marine sketches, which we commend him to confine himself to, and for which he shows much adaption.

Narjot has not been idle, but we have nothing to say in praise of the distasteful figure-piece on exhibition at Snow & Roos's.

Norton Bush has, we have been informed, retired from the profession and sought the more remunerative walks of commerce.

ASTRÆA.

BOOK NOTICES.

WE have received the following new publications which will receive due notice next week:

BACK BONE. Photographed from "The Scalpel." By Edward H. Dixon, M. D., New York. Robert M. De Witt' Publisher, 13 Frankfort street. From A. Roman & Co.

Dr. Dixon, in a tasteful circular, addressed rather familiarly "To Our Brethren of the Press: Gentlemen and Brother Chips," and bearing his own signature, characterizes his book as "the boldest, most insolent, serious, satirical, instructive Mephistophelian affair that has ever been sent forth from the Press." He further assures us that "whatever its merits or demerits, it is the best we can do," and after expressing a desire to receive "a duplicate number, containing your opinion for the purpose of entering your journal on our list for our next number" (of the Scalpel, we presume) subscribes himself "Fraternally Yours." Of course it will not do to speak rashly of a work of which the author entertains so high an opinion, and which comes to us with so frank and peculiar an appeal as "Brother Chips." We shall therefore reserve further notice until we have bestowed upon the volume the amount of careful study commensurate to the claims of so "serious, satirical, instructive, and Mephistophelian an affair."

MY HOLIDAY; HOW I SPENT IT. Being some Rough Notes of a trip to Europe and back in the Summer of 1866. By James N. Matthews, New York. Hurd & Houghton. From H. H. Bancroft & Co. Mr. Matthews is one of the editors of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, and the book consists of letters written for that paper during a hurried trip to Europe, taken as a respite from journalistic labors.

MAGA STORIES. New York. G. P. Putman & Son, 661 Broadway. From A. Roman & Co.

This neat volume is one of the series of Putnam's "Railway Classics." It contains seventeen stories, all of which, except one, first appeared in Putnam's Magazine.

A YOUTH'S HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA, from the earliest period of its discovery to the present time. By Lucia Norman. San Francisco. A. Roman & Co., 417 & 419 Montgomery street. New York, 17 Mercer street.

This is a small volume of 187 pages, written, as the author brief and reliable account of the progress of this State from the time of its discovery to the present."

MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURES. By Douglas Jerrold. With illustrations by Charles Keene, Pp. 184. Hurd & Houghton, New York, 1867. From H. H. Bancroft & Co.

THE MARKET ASSISTANT. By Thomas F. De Voe. Pp. 455 1867.

informs us in her brief preface, to supply young persons "a

THE GENIUS OF AMERICAN LIBERTY. A Patriotic Poem. By Fanny Green McDougal. San Francisco. Published by Benjamin Todd & Co., Banner of Progress office, 522 Clay street, 1867.

ROSE BLACKETT AND HER LOVERS.

"YES, I suppose it is a good thing," said Fred Whitfield, yawning, a little indifferently, considering the occasion. "You see my mother made it up, so that I don't take much credit to myself in the matter. I dare say I might have gone in and won on my own hook if I had liked; but I left it all to the old lady. She likes managing. So she and Mrs. Blackett laid their heads together, and Rose and I said yes."

"Well, Fred, you certainly are the most extraordinary fellow," said his friend, laughing; "I don't think many people would imagine you were speaking of your marriage."

"Dessay not," returned Fred. "People go in for such a jolly lot of bosh on such occasion they cannot understand that one should have any common sense in the matter. Time's gone by for blisses and kisses, and Cupids and arrows, and all that rubbish; and it's all very well, you know, to like the girl you are going to marry—but hang it all! one needn't make a fool of oneself about it! I like Rose Blackett very well. She's a nice girl enough; no nonsense about her; can ride well, which is something, and plays croquet first-rate; she is good-tempered, and, I am thankful to say, without sentimentality; so we hit it off exactly; but as for being over head and ears in love, and all that stuff, I am far too used up for anything of the kind, and she is too sensible. We marry because our mothers wish it, and because—as they wish it—we might as well marry each other as any one else. I can't say I particularly want to marry any one; but I suppose I must do my duty that way; and so you see I do it."

"All very well, Master Fred, but I cannot say I think you are in a proper frame of mind," said Harvey Wynn, "and I only hope that when I am going to be married I shall be over head and ears in love with my wife. I don't think I would let my mother make up a marriage for me, however sensible in its outlines."

"All the result of temperament and organization, my dear fellow," said Fred, languidly; "you see you have a big heart and big lungs and big muscles and a big brain, and are a son of Anak altogether. I have a weak heart and weak lungs, and more nerves than muscles, and an irritable brain which has to be kept quiet by the never-to-be-sufficiently-praised nicotine; and so emotion and excitement, and all that sort of thing, bore me to death; and, in fact, I'm not up to them, and that's just it.,"

"One would think you were a poor miserable starveling, to hear you talk," shouted Harvey. "A six-foot life-guardsman not 'up' to anything! and the best cricketer and boldest rider to hounds in the country! Who is talking bosh now, Fred?"

"Perhaps I am, and perhaps you are; but it's too much trouble to decide," yawned Fred, lazily.

And Harvey knew that when his friend culminated to this point there was no good in talking to him any more.

Fred was of the cui bono school; good hearted and honorable, generous, brave, affectionate in grain; but he had spoilt himself by the affectation of indifference, by pretending to be so terribly superior to all the weaknesses of enthusiasm or emotion, and by making believe—and it was only make-believe—that there was nothing in life worth living for. In aid of which philosophy he had put on a lazy, lounging, careless manner, inexpressibly annoying to earnest and energetic people, maintaining that the cultus of nicotine, as he called it, was the only thing worth a sensible man's devotion; though he added a kind of hy altar to Byass.

His friend, Harvey Wynn, was a very different kind of person. Tall, muscular, broadly proportioned, his face not handsome so much as honest and strong—(Fred Whitfield was allowed to be the handsomest man in the country, and the most elegant in appearance and manners, when he chose)—full of life and spirits, and animal energy and vigorous thought, impassioned in a strong manly way, and romantic too, always in earnest, and never frivolous—surely it was only by the law of contrasts that he was the friend of languid, used-up, affected Fred—only by the theory of compensation that the conventional club-man about town found anything harmonious in the country doctor who took life in heroic doses, and even then complained of inanition!

But one does sometimes see these odd friendships; and Fred Whitfield loved Harvey Wynn better than he loved any human being, save, perhaps, his mother; and Harvey loved him, but with that sad kind of love which one feels for people who might be so much better than they are if they would but be their truest selves.

So it came to pass that Harvey, who was to be groomsman, was invited to Fred's house for the few days now intervening before the marriage took place. He had only just arrived when they had the conversation given above; and as yet had seen neither the old lady, as Fred irreverently called his mother, nor, of course, Miss Blackett, who lived rather more than two miles from the Hawse—the Whitfields' place.

His introduction to the mother came first. She was a handsome, stately woman, with the mien and manner of a duchess: a cold, courteous, iron hearted kind of person, who wore rich black silks and point-lace caps, and despised poverty as on a par with vice and crime. Conventional, proud, cold, worldly—Harvey understood now whence had come the flaw that ran through, and so pitiably married, the beauty of his friend's nature.

Mrs. Whitfield was very civil, though, to Harvey. She was in too good a humor about this marriage of her planning not to be civil to every one; for Rose Blackett was an heiress, owning now some two thousand a year in her own right, with inheritance yet to come; and she was glad that she had secured so rich a prize for her son, when others, and men of higher social standing (notably my Lord Marcy Masters and Sir James Ventour), were pretendants in the same field; so that Harvey only felt in a general way the ice and iron of her nature; to himself individually she was all graciousness, of a stately sort, not to say grim.

But one thing he did see, and that was, that she was feverish and overstrained, and looked ill, and as if on the point of breaking down. His profession taught him that; besides having by nature the full use of his eyes.

"I am glad that my mother likes you, old fellow," said Fred, when she left the table. "I know her manner so well, I can weigh to an ounce the measure of esteem she gives to any one; and I can tell you—if you care for it—that you are in class number one with her; which makes it more comfortable for me, you know. I hope that Rose will like you, too, and then we shall be all right."

"I hope so, too," said Harvey, laughing. And then they talked of other things.

The next day they went over to Lisson, where the Blacketts lived.

Mrs. Blackett was a meek, mild, inoffensive creature, with weak eyes; always dominated by the last speaker, and given to easy weeping. She had long been under Mrs. Whitfield's influence, whenever that lady chose to exert it; though, since Rose had grown up, there had sometimes been fierce collisions, when the poor lady had been put to terrific straits, not knowing which sovereign to obey.

Fortunately for her, Rose was too fond of liberty to be domineering; and, so long as people would leave her alone, was content to leave them the same. So that, unless when Mrs. Whitfield annoyed her personally, and sought to curtail her individuality, as she chose to phrase it, she let her manage her mamma as much as she liked, and gave no heed to the direction which that management was taking.

It was only when Fred asked her to be his wife, saying, "You see, Rose, the old ladies have made it up between them, but we can't do better, unless you are not for it," that she understood the meaning of the last few years.

"She did not care much about the matter one way or the other," she said; "she liked Fred better than either my Lord Marcy Masters, who was old enough to be her father, or than Sir James Ventour, who was half a fool;" so she said, "Yes, very well, Fred;" and there the thing rested. And that was about the extent of love making they had between them.

While Harvey was "making himself agreeable" to Mrs. Blackett, Fred Whitfield went out on a roving commission to look for Rose, who was never to be found, like any other young lady, in the drawing room; but always where she had no business to be—in the stable, or by the dog kennel, or shooting at a mark with a real pistol, as she used to say, or practicing croquet, or doing something that was not needlework, or anything else essentially feminine. A turn of the scale more, and Rose would have been "fast;" as it was, she was only free.

Fred found her, as usual, in the yard, superintending some tremendous proceedings connected with Fan and Fan's puppies, and after their first off hand greetings (they met more like two young men than a lover and his betrothed), told her who was in the drawing-room, and asked her if she would go and see him.

"That's your friend come to see you turned off?" she asked.

And Fred said "Yes it was."

"Oh, very well! of course, I'll go," cried Miss Rose, with just the shadow of a blush on her face, "but you know, Fred, though I don't care about such things myself, it is terribly like being trotted out for show."

"Oh! nonsense, Rose," drawled Fred. "Harvey's far too good a fellow to have any such disagreeable ideas."

And they went into the drawing-room together.

Certainly Rose Blackett was a very pretty girl. Tall, graceful, and yet with a certain look of personal power about her, which some men like in women, though others repudiate; with large dark eyes of uncertain shade, and thick, rich, glossy hair of the brown that sits next door to black; small hands, now thrust into dog-skin gauntlet gloves; small feet and dainty ankles, which the looped-up purple dress and curt red petticoat showed to full advantage; dangling her hat, with its sweeping feather, in one hand, while sticking the other into the pocket of her short jacket with the big metal buttons, half blushing and half defiant, she was altogether a "girl of the period," after the best models of her kind; just a little too jaunty, perhaps, and a shade too indifferent, but evidently a fine-natured, pure-minded, high-hearted creature, as yet in the block, and unawakened. At a glance Harvey read it all.

"She does not love him," he thought, "and was never loved."

The two young men staid to dinner on Mrs. Blackett's invitation. At first amused, then surprised, Harvey ended by being indignant at the cavalier indifference with which Fred treated his betrothed. Indeed, the whole thing was really painful to him; it seemed to be so little earnest, and so devoid of the poetry and passion of love. And he, who thought of marriage as of an earthly heaven, and who would have given all he had in the world to be loved by such a girl as Rose!

"How often it is that people have what they don't prize, and that others would give their lives for," he said to Fred as they drove home.

"Yes," said Fred, wearily. "Some men like love making and all that bother; I confess I don't."

"You do not give yourself too much trouble about it," said Harvey, secretly nettled, but attempting to laugh. "Of all the indifferent lovers that ever lived I should say you were the most indifferent."

"It suits Rose," said Fred; "and I am sure I do the best I can under the circumstances. It is such a stupid position for a fellow to be in, altogether; and even Rose, though not silly, and not a bit sentimental, dislikes it as much as I do. Did you see how she blushed when she came into the room to see you."

"I saw she looked very beautiful and rosy," replied Harvey; "but I did not notice that she was particularly embarrassed or blushing."

"No, not embarrassed; she is not the kind of girl for that; but she colored up."

Which seemed to have impressed the young man as something wonderful; for he spoke of it again before they got home.

When they reached home they found that Mrs. Whitfield had gone to bed, suffering from a slight attack of fever; by the next morning she was decidedly ill; and in a short time dangerously so. It was an attack of nervous fever, and for a time her life was despaired of. Of course the marriage was put off indefinitely now until she recovered; and, as Harvey Wynn was free, not having yet made a practice anywhere, he agreed to remain in the house in close attendance, until she had passed the crisis, either for life or death. And this was how it came about that he took up his quarters at the Hawse, and, by consequence, became well acquainted with Rose.

Rose was not merely "the jolly girl without any nonsense about her" that Fred proclaimed her, and that she ostentatiously proclaimed herself to be, in deed, at least if not in word.

Harvey, who had no love for "fast" girls, and who had the power of truth to elicit truth, soon found her out, and told her plainly that she was acting a part which neither became her nor belonged to her. "It was all very well," he said "that she should like riding, and be fond of dogs and horses, and even enjoy firing at a mark—though he hoped she might never develop into a sportswoman, clever at killing pheasants, or hares either; but it was nothing but affectation her trying to make herself into the bad imitation of a man, and pretending to be ashamed of herself as a true woman. Women were women," he said, "and not all the big buttons or easy-going slang in the world could make them anything else; and whatever the fast school might say, there was a grace in softness, and a power in love, and an ennobling influence in enthusiasm, not to be had in stables and hunting fields; and womanly work is womanly glory, Miss Blackett," continued the young doctor, warmly; "and home is not merely a 'place to sleep and feed in,' as you say, but the emblem and enclosure of woman's truest life. And all this you ought to feel strongly and enact steadily, because you are strong and steadfast."

This he said earnestly, for he was too thoroughly manly himself to uphold "as truly womanly" incapable or imperfect women; and the thing he liked the best in Rose was her power and the dash of manliness in her, which might be turned to such noble account if she would.

"And when you have made me all these fine things," she said, her eyes kindling as she spoke, but not with enthusiasm, "what will be the good of it? Much Fred will value me! Much the world will understand me! One gets no good by such subtleties, Mr. Wynn; people do not care for them, so what is the good of them?"

"I am sorry you think so," Harvey answered. "I should have expected from one so entire as yourself the recognition of a good for its own sake, quite independent of the sympathy or understanding of the world."

"One must be understood by some one," she answered; "and the more one's nature is called out, the more need of a response."

Then she blushed—cheek, neck, and brow, all one burning crimson—while her eyes dropped, full of thoughts and feelings better left untold.

Harvey felt his own heart beat with strange violence while he watched the lovely face before him; but he was not a man to show what he ought to hide; so, with an effort, he drove the blood back to its calmer current again, and simply answered:

"The response always comes some time in life, Miss Blackett."

She raised her eyes to his.

"Is every one happy, then?" she said; "is every marriage well suited?"

"There are other means of happiness besides marriage, though this is the greatest," he said; "a woman's home has generally other loves and other duties besides the one of the husband; and at the worst there are friends."

"Friends!" she said, scornfully; "what good are friends?"

"You think so? I hoped for a different verdict," said Harvey.

"Oh, you are not a mere friend," cried Rose; "at least, not the kind of friend I meant," she added; and again she blushed,

"No; I am more the brother than the mere acquaintance," Harvey said, in a low voice, altered, too, in its tones, and deep and mellow—"your future husband's brother-friend. I am yours also, am I not?"

"I suppose so," she answered, coldly, and turned away from him, as if offended.

Something not quite so fiery as wrath, nor so happy as mirth, came into Harvey's eyes as he watched her move away discontentedly, perhaps more hurt than annoyed; but he did not follow her, and in a few moments she came back to him, smiling as usual, as if she had done battle with the evil spirit within her, and driven him out.

But when Harvey parted with her that day, she went into her own room and wept as if her heart would break; and he, for the first time in his life, felt inclined to hate Fred Whitfield, and to curse his blindness and fatuity.

Had it not been for the young doctor, Mrs. Whitfield's life would not have been worth many hours' purchase. More than once during her illness he had dragged her out of the very jaws of death, and had now so very far recovered her that the wedding-day was again discussed, and only waited Harvey's sanction for the invalid to risk the fatigue and excitement consequent.

"Oh, bother the marriage!" said Fred, taking his mother's hand. "Rose is a dear, good girl, and will wait till doomsday rather than you should risk anything, mother. There is no hurry, and we can wait quite well until you are strong; can't we, Harvey?"

"Very well, indeed, I should think," Harvey answered, with an almost imperceptible dash of sarcasm in his voice; "but it is not good for your mother to be anxious; and she seems to be anxious to conclude this affair. Of course it can be nothing to me," he added, hastily. "I have no purpose of my own to serve in the delay or the conclusion."

He had though. As it was to be, it was better concluded with all decent speed, he said to himself; and then he, at least, would be out of danger. She, perhaps, needed no such precaution; and yet—those blushes of hers, and that eager, tremulous face, had wakened strange thoughts in him. Hush, he must not dream such dreams. What would he think of himself, a poor, penniless, country doctor, if he came here as his friend's almost bother, and, in return for his love, broke off his marriage with a heiress, and secured her for himself? The thought brought the blood into his face, and made him loathe himself, as dishonored in soul, for even harboring such a vision.

So it was arranged that the settlements should be signed, and that next week the marriage should actually take place. Mrs. Whitfield's health not preventing.

And when Rose was told this, she wept again; and, to her mother's intense dismay, burst out with, "Mamma, I will not marry Fred Whitfield!" an announcement which that fine lady put down to insanity, as the mildest term.

The day following this decision Fred could not go over to Lisson; he was detained on some business or other at home; so the young doctor rode over, with a note containing a request for the two ladies to dine at the Hawse that evening seeing that on this side one was disabled and the other detained, and no intercourse possible unless they would kindly come.

"Certainly," said Mrs. Blackett, a little nervously, glancing at her daughter, who, with her head thrown up, stood sideways to her.

"And you, Miss Blackett?" asked Harvey.

"Oh, by all means!" said Miss Rose, not quite pleasantly, at least to her mother's ears. "I want to speak to Fred very seriously."

"My dear!" remonstrated Mrs. Blackett; and then she left the room.

"What has happened?" asked Harvey, impulsively.

"Oh, nothing," answered Rose; she was standing now in the bay-window, looking out into the garden, so that her face was not seen. "I have only told mamma that I am not going to marry Fred; and she is put out."

Harvey started. Had his senses played him false?

"Indeed!" he then said, after a long pause; "your determination is sudden, Miss Blackett."

"Yes," she answered, with assumed carelessness; but her quivering voice and bashful eyes belied her assumption. "Now that it has come so near, I feel that it will not do; and I am sure Fred will feel with me."

Again Harvey was silent. What could he say? that he thought Fred would consent to give her up, being utterly unworthy his good fortune? that he hoped he would keep her still to her word, when he hoped just the reverse? that she was doing wrong to be honest, when he loved her for it more than he had ever loved her before? What could he say? Truth and honor were on opposite sides, as sometimes happens in life; and if he said what he thought, he would say what he ought not to say. So he kept silence; and Rose was not quick enough to divine why.

While they were standing in this awkward position, both too much moved to speak, a carriage dashed up to the door, and "Mr. Norton" was announced. Mr. Norton was Rose's trustee and guardian, in a way; though that young lady had full power over her own funds, and did not, in general, either ask advice as to what she should do with her own, or defer to it, if given. And being of the school which "goes in" for a great many things better left alone, she "went in" for speculation, on a tolerably large scale; so that, since she came of age, she had placed most of her money out at nurse, she said; but she had chosen, unfortunately for her, the most capricious nurse of all—mining property. However, she would do it; so she had no one to blame but herself.

And when Mr. Norton came Harvey left, bearing with him the promise that the two ladies would come to dinner at half-past six precisely. As much before as they liked, but not a moment after.

When they came it was easy to see that something had happened. Mrs. Blackett was depressed, tearful; her eyes were red and swollen, her face puffed and pale; she spoke as if she had a violent cold, and in every other particular of manner and person showed that she had been weeping bitterly. Rose was flushed and excited, with a certain bravery of manner which trembled too nearly on bravado to be quite as lovely as might have been. But she looked beautiful—perhaps more beautiful than she had ever looked in her life before; and even lazy Fred seemed struck by her, and warmed up to unwonted feeling.

After dinner she asked him to go with her into the library; for she was utterly unconventional in all she did, and would not have minded asking a prince to tie her shoe, or anything else that she might desire, but just a little touched by the self-will belonging to the heiress; and Fred assented, wondering what was up, and what she wanted.

When she had shut the door: "Dear old Fred," she said, in a coaxing voice, "I want you to do me a kindness."

"I am sure I will, Rose," said Fred, naturally, and without his drawl.

"You do like me, don't you, now?"

"Why, yes; of course I do. I think you the best girl going," answered Fred, opening his eyes.

"And would not like to hurt or distress me?"

"By Jove! no," he cried. "I should think not, indeed!"

"Well, I will take you at your word," said Rose.

"I want you to give me up, Fred, and break off the marriage. Come now; are you a good enough old fellow for that?" very coaxingly.

"Break off the marriage, Rose?" cried Fred, all in a maze "Are you dreaming?"

"Not a bit of it," she answered, laughing a little hysterically; "quite serious and wide awake."

"But I cannot give you up, Rose," said Fred. "My mother has set her heart on the marriage; and it is so near, too, now; and I do love you—a great deal more than I have said or shown," he added, stirred out of his affectation. "You know, Rose, how I hate the idea of sentimentality or spooneyism in any one; and I have fought off that as long and as well as I could. But I am not the indifferent beast you may think me. I do love you, Rose, and I cannot give you up."

She had turned quite pale during her lover's speech.

"Well, Fred," she then said, "of course I am much obliged to you, and all that; but I have not been playing a part, and I do not feel a bit more than I have shown; so that we are not on equal terms if you love me as deeply as you say; and I am simply in the old way of good fellowship. Mind that, and never reproach me hereafter; for I have told you the truth, remember. As for your lady mother, I don't think she will make much objection when she knows all, because, dear old Fred, I am ruined!"

"Good God, Rose!" cried Fred; "what on earth do you mean?"

"Well, you know I have been going in for speculating; and so Mr. Norton came down to tell me to-day that all my great expectations are come to nothing; the Bella Juanita mines are drowned; and I have not what will realize two hundred a year instead of two thousand. And so I think the question of Mrs. Whitfield's consent is settled, is it not?"

"Now, then, Rose, I will not give you up for any one in the world," said Fred, in a deep voice. "My mother may say what she likes, and you may say what you like—the marriage shall go on; this day week you are my wife, come what may! I never felt how much I loved you before to day, Rose, when there has been just a chance of losing you."

"But if I don't want to marry you, Fred?" urged Rose, touched in spite of herself by the unusual warmth and chivalry of the man.

"Oh, bosh!" said Fred. "You are not the girl to have been engaged for three months contentedly enough, and then turn round just at the last moment and say that you don't care for the fellow. I quite understand you, Rose, dear old lassie! You think that my mother will not like the match so much now as when you had money, and that you are not the catch you were before you had lost it; and so you would release me. But I will not be released, Rosy; and so I'll tell my mother when she speaks to me about it, if she takes that tone at all."

Upon which Rose did what was a most extraordinary thing for her to do—what Fred had never before seen the slightest inclination toward him—she flung her arms around his neck and kissed him, and then burst into a violent flood of tears, which soon passed into hysterics; when he was obliged to call the servants and Harvey Wynn.

So now the whole thing came out, both to Mrs. Whitfield and to Harvey: Fred had no idea of making mysteries and keeping secrets unnecessarily; but he noticed two things as the result of his communication: that his mother looked decidedly displeased, and as if she had made up her mind in a different direction from his, and, perhaps, with more stability; and that Harvey, whose face had lighted up with strange passion, suddenly became cold, and ashen, and "odd."

But Fred Whitfield was not remarkable for penetration; so the coil coiled itself a turn tighter, and no one seemed likely to get out of the rounds or to be free of its strands. Rose could do no more than she had done; Fred could do no less; and for once in her life his mother was powerless, and he flatly refused to obey her. His nature had been plowed up for the first time, and the weeds had been cut down, and the good seed had sprung up. Rose Blackett, however, and Harvey Wynn were as miserable as it often falls to the lot of people to be by the virtues of another.

If Fred would only have been selfish and narrow-hearted, how many days and nights of suffering would have been saved!

The time was coming very near now: it wanted only three days to the wedding, and none but Fred was content.

Mrs. Whitfield was coldly savage, and declared she would not appear at the church or breakfast either. Conditions were changed, she said, since the engagement was made; and Rose Blackett, who had once been well enough, was no fit match now for the owner of the Hawse; Mrs. Blackett was in a state of chronic tearfulness, which made her poor eyes very bad; Rose was broken up out of all likeness to her former self, and her attempts at the old high-handed "fastness" failed signally; Harvey was moody, irritable, feverish, uncertain; and the whole octave rang with an undertone of discord, which no one saw any means of preventing; it not being always possible for one's fingers to strike the true key.

The three friends were riding along the lane leading up to Lisson; Rose and Fred in front and Harvey at some little distance behind—the lane being too narrow for three abreast.

Fred was talking about Tuesday next (it was Monday now) and talking naturally and lovingly—for somehow he had forgotten his drawl of late—when they heard a terrific plunging in the rear, and then a heavy fall, as Harvey's horse—a wild, fiery, nervous brute—flung him suddenly to the ground, taking him at a moment of inattention when he was riding with a slack rein and his mind far away; so that he was thrown in a second, almost at the first start and plunge the terrified brute made—frightened at an idiot lad of the place starting up from behind the hedge, yelling, and flinging his arms abroad.

In another moment Rose Blackett, throwing her reins wildly to Fred, was kneeling by his side, holding his head against her bosom, and calling him her "Beloved Harvey!" which he, stunned as he was, and unable to reply, was not too insensible to hear and understand.

The carriage was sent for from Lisson, and the poor fellow, bleeding and terribly shaken, was taken to the house to be set to rights as soon as possible; and while they were carrying him through the hall, Rose turned to Fred, who stood leaning against the lintel of the door, and nearly as pale as the wounded man, but a great deal more wretched.

"It has come out, Fred," she said, laying her hands on his shoulder, the tears in her eyes, but with a more contented expression of face than she had had of late. "I am very sorry for you, especially as you seemed to like me so much more really than you did; but I cannot help it."

"You are a dear good girl, Rose," said Fred; "and I have been a fool. But it serves me right. When I was master of the situation I fooled away my opportunity; and now, when I would die to be beloved by you, Rose, you have gone off to another."

He tried to smile, but his lips quivered, and he was obliged to turn away his head.

"Never mind, Fred," said Rose. "You will find some one else better suited to you, and more worthy of you than I am; and, perhaps, you will come to me some day and say, 'Rose you have been the best friend I ever had in my life,' when you have a sweet little wife that you adore."

"I don't quite think that," said poor Fred; "but if you are happy that will be something. At all events, you are a dear, good girl; and I love you more than you know of, or would, perhaps believe. But that is nothing to the purpose now; I have lost you, when I might have won you if I had been wise."

They shook hands cordially, and parted; and the next day Fred left the Hawse, and soon after went abroad.

Rose and he did not meet again for many years after her marriage with Harvey; and when they did, Fred was really married to the "dearest little woman under the sun," and Rose was a handsome matron, superintending her nursery instead of the kennel, and finding her children rather more interesting objects of care than Fan's puppies of olden time.

She had saved altogether about four hundred a year out of the wreck of the grand Bella Juanita silver mines; and so, on the whole, did not do badly in life. Happiness has been found at even a lower "figure."

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1867.

SNODGRASS ON POE.

SOME months ago, a Southern lady, Mrs. Weiss, published in one of the New York weeklies some reminiscences of Edgar A. Poe, which were calculated to present the character of this extraordinary genius in a somewhat more favorable light than that in which it has been generally viewed. More recently Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith furnished an article on the same subject and of the like tenor, to Beadle's Monthly. In the biographical notices of the poet, published soon after his death, and emanating from those who claimed to have been his especial friends while living, all the more repulsive traits of his character were portrayed with a minute and conscientious fidelity that showed how thoroughly exempt were his voluntary biographers from the partialities and the weaknesses of private friendship They faithfully recorded every five dollars that their deceased friend had begged or borrowed, not forgetting to make due mention of the munificent sums paid him by several of their own number who were publishing periodicals, for his literary productions. Mrs. Weiss and Mrs. Oakes Smith, having somewhat relieved the melancholy gloom of this picture by adding, in the true spirit of feminine charity, a number of brighter and kindlier touches, and the latter having denied that Poe "died in consequence of a drunken debauch," another "friend" of the deceased comes forward as a magnanimous volunteer in the interest of historic truth, and in an article in Beadle's Monthly for March, makes a zealous effort to destroy the illusion created by these over-indulgent women, that Poe was not, after all, quite as bad a man as he has been painted. The new witness, who signs himself "J. E. Snodgrass, M. D," evidently has a high appreciation of Poe's intellectual gifts, for he speaks of him as "one of the most remarkable embodiments of genius the world has ever produced in all the centuries of its history—the author of a single poem, which alone has been adjudged by more than one critic, as entitling its producer to a lasting and enviable fame." His tender regard for Poe's memory is also beyond question, for he alludes to the unfortunate poet as "my personal friend," and he furthermore tells us that he "felt resentful" when a relative of deceased spoke of Poe's "rudeness while drunk to the ladies of his (the relative's) household." The delicacy of Doctor Snodgrass's feelings, and his tender loyalty to the memory of his "personal friend," are still further shown by the shock which he tells us he experienced, when on the occasion of the poet's burial, he observed that the hard-hearted "relative" who had charge of the funeral arrangements, had neglected to provide "the customary box as an enclosure to the coffin itself, or even the commonest boards to prevent the direct contact of the decomposing wet earth with it." Says the sensitive and eloquent Snodgrass, in this connection: "I shall never forget the emotion of disappointment mingled with disgust and something akin to resentment, that thrilled through my whole being as I heard the clod's and stones resound from the coffin-lid and break the more than ordinarily solemn stillness of the scene, as it impressed me. It seemed as if heartlessness, too often found directing funeral rites of the poor and forsaken ones of earth, had suddenly become personified into a malign goddess, and that she had ordered those awful discordant sounds as best befitting her own unhealthy mood." But notwithstanding the suggestions of personal friendship, Mr. Snodgrass feels that his paramount allegiance to "the cause of truth," requires him to come forward and bear testimony that Poe died dead drunk, and also to give all the sad and repulsive details of the closing scenes which he claims to have witnessed. "In Beadle's Monthly," says the poet's friend, "I find some statements respecting the cause and manner of the death of Edgar Allen Poe, and as a possesser of the facts of the case, I feel it to be due to the truth of history that I should narrate them." The conscientious Doctor then proceeds to state, "with due respect to the author of this assertion"—the assertion that Poe died sober—"and at the same time to the memory of one who was my personal friend, that it is, alas! too true," meaning evidently, not what his language implies, but the contrary, since we cannot suppose that he would cry "alas! too true," because obliged to bear witness in his friend's favor. After this not particularly lucid assertion—or denial—the Doctor gives the public what he alleges to be the full particulars of Poe's last debauch, and [illegible] he so skillfully disguises the pain it must have cost him, and so thoroughly controls his feelings, that one is almost impressed with the notion that he rather enjoyed the work, instead of being revolted by it.

In the course of his narrative, the Doctor takes occasion to let his readers know, that he is himself a literary man, and had at one time the distinguished honor of editing a journal entitled the Saturday Visitor; and we fancy that certain peculiarities in his style are the result of a consciousness that in telling his melancholy story, something in the way of fine writing would be expected from a gentleman of his pretentions. Accordingly, he speaks of the saloon where he found Poe, as a "Bacchanalian haunt;" mentions a "company of unsymphathetic tipplers who stared at me as I entered," and instead of telling us that the poet was drunk, he picturesquely characterizes him as "a strangely metamorphosed being" whose "tout ensemble was well calculated to recall his own so frequently hinted doctrine of the metempsychosis." Morever his face was "haggard, not to say bloated and unwashed;" his hair was "unkempt;" and that "full-orbed and soulful eye" was now "lustreless and vacant." In his unflinching loyalty to "the truth of history" and "the memory of his friend," the Doctor does not hesitate to furnish the minutest details necessary to complete his picture. The poet's hat was "a rusty, almost brimless, tattered and ribbonless palm-leaf;" his coat was of "sleezy black alpaca," and was furthermore "ripped more or less at several of its seams;" at precisely how many the Doctor does not inform us, but that he could have done so, had he chosen, is apparent from the astounding power of memory that has enabled him to recall so many apparently trivial particulars after the lapse of nearly twenty years. We are next informed that "the pants" of the author of the Raven were, on the occasion referred to, "of a steel mixed pattern of cassinette;" also that they were "half worn and badly fitting, if they could be said to fit at all;" moreover "the bosom of his shirt was crumpled and badly soiled," his boots were "of coarse material" and what is worse, they gave "no sign of having been blacked for a long time, if at all." Taking into consideration the circumstances, that the Doctor is writing in 1867, an account of an event that occurred in 1849, no one can fail to be impressed with admiration of a memory, that has been true to its trust through all the intervening years; and has proved equal to the task of reproducing in the interests of historic truth the poet's "rusty, brimless, ribbonless" hat, his "sleezy" alpaca coat, with its "several ripped seams," the "steel mixed" pants, crumpled shirt, and unblacked boots.

In conclusion, we beg leave to congratulate Doctor Snodgrass upon the thoroughness and fidelity with which he has performed the ungracious task he has undertaken. If it was a duty which he owed to the cause of truth, and the memory of his friend, to establish that Poe died in consequence of a beastly debauch, and to spread all the repulsive details before the world, he has discharged that duty with unflinching conscientiousness. Henceforth no one will be able to accept the statements of Mrs. Weiss, or Mrs. Oakes Smith on the subject without calling in question the Doctor's veracity, a thing of course not to be dreamed of.

OUR Foundry and Machine shops have been unusually busy turning out work for the Winter months, mostly from local city orders. Devoe, Dinsmore & Co., of the San Francisco Works, have been engaged on work for the Pacific Distillery and Alta Flour mills, and are now completing an immense quantity of those incomparable Hansbrow pumps for Locke & Montague and other agents. William Brodie at the California Foundry has been busy casting those beautifully finished and ornamented iron fronts for Murphy, Grant & Co's block of buildings, and the new "Sachs's Block" on Battery street, near Bush. John Sochhead—the man who counts the engines he has manufactured in California by the scores and hundreds, has recently completed a number of engines besides the famous little one that did not go up in the Avitor. Though that is no fault of the engine.

THE Trustees of the Institution for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind, have advertised for plan for a new building to be erected in Oakland. The proposed structure is expected to cost about $70,000. We trust that the Trustees may not be prevented by any narrow penny-wise and pound-foolish ideas of economy from obtaining designs that will evince genuine professional talent, and prove a credit to the State. In other words, we hope that they will be wise enough to secure the services of an architect, who is an artist, and not merely a carpenter.

IT IS stated that Queen Victoria employs some of her leisure hours in writing a book which will soon be published. And the Loudon Athenæum "thinks it probable that her majesty is engaged, with the assistance of her helps, in writing a memoir of the late Prince Consort."

OPPOSITION STEAMER.—The America having received a new shaft, will sail on Thursday next the 25th inst. The America is one of the fleetest of our ocean steamers, and on her last trip her passengers were landed in New York in twenty-one days.

A WHALING PORT.

BY PRENTICE.

HARPOONS, whaleboats and lances, bungs, barrels and hogsheads, sperm whales' teeth, sharks' jaws and porpoise jaws, sea shells and all manner of marine curiosities, are a few of the articles which my youthful eyes first encountered My ears were regaled with tales of narrow escapes in encounters with the leviathan, of boats upset, and men tossed high in air, of brave sailors carried out of the boat in the twinkling of an eye by the fouling of the line, of adventures with the tattooed and cruel natives of the South Sea Islands, of bitter cold experiences on the "North West" coast, and all the stirring scenes of lives passed in this, the most exciting of all maritime experience.

I have seen something of whaling in propria persona. There is no other species of hunting which for real danger and the consequent thrilling excitement can compare with it. By its side lion and elephant killing is dull sport. After the iron is put in the whale's body, you have a free ride of four or five hours' duration. You are rushed through the waves at race-horse speed by the monster maritime locomotive. There is no pulling to be done; the oars are apeak, the crew sit quiet on their seats, and more delightful still, there is always the chance of a collision between the boat and the enraged Cetæson, in which the boat is likely to come out second best.

But it is some of the phases of life in a whaling port that I propose to handle. In the Winter and Spring business of every description in S— H— rested on its oars. Gossip was the principal occupation of our people, male and female. "Oh," we used to say, "there never was such a place for gossip as S— H—." And, by the way, I never yet lived in any place so small as to allow everybody to know everybody else, but that there was a similiar howl from the much abused population. One half of the men were at sea, some on the Brazil Banks, some in Bhering's Straits, some off Cape Horn, some in the South Pacific, some in the Sandwich Islands, and some, perhaps in this very Bay of San Francisco, looking over a dismal vista of sand hills, and little dreaming of the change to be brought forth in twenty-five or thirty years. The Bay of Monterey was also a frequent stopping place for whalers, and I recollect hearing one of our captains, whose four years' voyage had embraced within its limits the commencement and termination of the Mexican war, inquiring what in the world General Taylor's army was doing away over at Monterey? He had heard of the battle of Monterey, and to him but one Monterey was known—that on the Pacific Coast.

Two score years ago the crew of a whaling vessel, while on their voyage, were nearly shut out of the world. About once in six months they visited the Sandwich Islands, or some South American port for provisions and repairs. There were not so many swift sailing merchantmen then to bring news from month to month. So on their return their knowledge of current events was nearly as musty as the fashion of their store clothes. And these fashions looked very queerly to us being so suddenly revived after the lapse of three or four years. The captain always landed some hours before the other officers and crew, and of course before he landed it was incumbent on him to apparel himself in gorgeous array. He put on a narrow-rimmed plug hat when broad brims were only worn, and a long swallow tailed coat when we saw only short skirts, and perhaps a stock when everybody, except some lingering representatives of a sort of old school gentry, wore cravats. And straps too—how we used to laugh when some dandy skipper landed with pants tightly strapped under his boots, when straps had been out of fashion for three years. They looked so ridiculous—much as one of the enormous, flare-monthed, coal-scuttle bonnetts worn by the belles of that period would to-day on Montgomery street.

In those days they wore bustles. "They" refers of course to the women. It must be admitted that there is quite an inconsistency in mixing up whales and bustles, but perhaps the combination may arouse some pleasing reminiscences in the minds of those who had arrived at sufficient age to be interested in bustles and whales—or whalers.

The arrival of some long absent vessel was an exciting event. First it was buzzed about—"A ship in the bay." She would not be visible from the town. The fact was first communicated by the hoisting of a signal on Gull Island Lighthouse, some three miles distant in the mouth of the harbor. Then her guns would be heard firing for a pilot. And finally her topmasts might become visible to the eyes of experienced old whalemen gathered in a group about the North Battery, each one eyeing her in turn through that ancient well-worn, canvas-covered spy glass. The North Battery, by the way, was not a fortification. It was a water-side grocery, where were kept pork, codfish, hams and rum, but more especially rum. The village temperance orators called it by all sorts of hard names, but it was a very comfortable place for all that on a cold Winter's evening. These authorities, who gathered thus together when a vessel was reported coming in, would exchange opinions relative to her name. We boys listened with respect. They would frequently enter the North Battery and look through another glass. Gradually the ship comes in sight. Her private signal is made out. The owners are in a condition of intense excitement. The agent is beside himself with bustle, and finally goes on board the sloop which carries off the pilot. Various wives, relatives and friends of the returning crew are watching the vessel, and fretting because she comes in so slowly. There are anxious faces among them too, for the boy who sailed away three years ago may be safe on board—or—but that thought is too harrowing to be dwelt on Nothing has been heard of the ship for nearly a year. And the mind of the bronzed, stout youth on the inward hound vessel may be engrossed with similar thoughts, as he coils away a rope and glances occasionally at the distant but familiar church-spires of his native town. Are all well at home?

The sloop comes alongside. Familiar faces appear over the rail. There are moments of hesitation before recognition; but soon is heard the exclamation, "Why, is this you?" and hands are grasped, and, perhaps, more welcome still comes the assurance, "All well at home."

Owing to the shallowness of the water fully loaded vessels could not come directly to the wharf. They were obliged to moor in the channel a mile or so distant, and the cargo removed in lighters. So, in about an hour after anchoring, when everything was snugly stowed away, three or four whaleboats with the ship's crew would he seen pulling for shore. The landing place would be crowded with eager and interested spectators. As the countenances of the returned whalemen became visible there were exclamations and cries of recognition. "Why that's Smith!" and "That's Brown!" Yes, it was really Smith and Brown, clad in variously patched canvas pants and dingy red shirts. Smith and Brown are pulling their last strokes. They leap out of the boat and clamber up on the wharf. The voyage is over. They gaze about with a look of surprised, smiling stupidity and suffer themselves to be shaken, and seized, and pulled and finally hauled into the North Battery, and everybody drinks some more rum.

Brown's parents live in a country village about six miles distant. Of course he is anxious to see them as soon as possible. So in an hour after landing, a horse and buggy is hired. Brown's natural feeling of happiness at returning is still more intensified by the few glasses of liquor he has drank. Unused to stimulant for so many months it has a speedy effect. He does not wait to furnish himself with new clothes. He jumps into the buggy in the old patched garments which have been aired in the sunny tropics and off the boisteroas Horn. Brown shows evidence also of more hoisterous horns within. He has had this self-same ride home in his mind's eye for months. He starts giving his "crab" a lively admonition with the whip. The main street of our town was very wide but it was none too wide for the rickety buggies driven by recently returned sailors. That course was generally of zigzag shape at first, as if the vehicle was beating up the street against a head wind and a very heavy sea. Very often after the lapse of half hour from the time of departure a horse with the shafts and two fore wheels might he seen coming back, making extraordinary time for the stable. The remainder of the establishment might be at intervals along the road, and Brown might be at the "Bridge" taking some more rum. The "Bridge" was a real bridge, but there was a bar-room near it. Sailors have a great passion for horse-flesh, but their skill in handling the reins, after a long cruise, is not always of the first order.

It used to be said that the superanimated buggies and rotten harness were more apt to be placed at the disposal of newly returned sailors than the better class of turn out. If it broke it was charged, and a good voyage was sufficient security for the damage. Well, somehody had to use the old buggies for the last time.

Those were stirring times during the Summer months while some twenty or twenty-five of the fleet were arriving, refitting and departing. Everybody was busy. The long wharf presented a scene of the liveliest activity. There were to be seen ships "hove down" to be caulked and coppered, their main yards quite touching the dock, ships seemingly torn to pieces only to bo made stronger and more sea-worthy, and ships newly rigged and painted, quite ready to set out on another long cruise. The women were employed making coarse sailor outfits. The boarding houses were crowded. Jack was flush. Jack had a high old time if it was brief. There were rows and fights, banged heads and bloody noses. Our constables often had their hands full. Many Portuguese shipped on the whaling vessels, becoming temporary residents among us for a few months. These gathered in knots on the street made a confusion of tongues increased by the gibberish of the South Sea Islander. The pounding of enormous coopers' hammers securing new casks was continually heard. The oil yards were filled with rows of great greasy casks, in which men thrust gauging rods, or drew up samples of oil with testing glasses to ascertain its quality. All the talk was of oil, of the price of sperm, of whale and of hone. It was oil here, there, everywhere. It was a very oily place. In the parlors might be seen carved whale's teeth and miniature ships, the result of some sailor's "schrimshawnderiug" during the monotonous passage home. And the mantlepiece was adorned with shells and coral from the far off sunny isles of the Pacific. Other curiosities, beautifully carved paddles and murderous-looking clubs and spears with edges of sharks' teeth, making one's blood run cold to look at them, were also seen. Ostrich feathers and eggs, skins from Patagonia, Esquimaux garments, kayaks and the skin of the white polar hear lay side by side. Every third resident had a present of a monkey or a parrot, both regarded with delight by the younger portion of the household and detestation by the older. The parrots frequently shocked the people by gross and profane language acquired on shipboard, not speaking much for the efficacy of the bundles of tracts with which the boys were presented on leaving home. The monkeys pursued a career of mischief until the cold weather set in, when they set off for other spheres on the galloping consumption. We took an intense delight in rummaging the cabins and forecastles of the newly arrived ships for curiosities. It was so nice to find shells, whales' teeth, or some partly finished article of sailor workmanship. These homes of tho seamen were very dark and very dirty recesses after the final evacuation by their occupants. The last day or two of a voyage is evidently not devoted to "cleaning house."

In time, some of our school companions went to sea. When it became known they had shipped they acquired new dignity in our eyes. They seemed partly heroes, partly adventurers, and partly martyrs. All of us had an intense desire to go on one whaling voyage—a desire not at all abated by the stories we heard told by the old salts on the long winter evenings, of narrow escapes from ugly whales, and of interesting adventures in the South Sea Islands. But we knew that the maritime rose was not without its thorn. Boys returning from these voyages told us how they fared on shipboard, how milk, fresh meat and vegetables were almost unknown, how they had to stand watch nights, how the captain and mates cursed and swore at the hands when things did not go right, and how they were served by that terrible monster, sea-sickness. We knew much more of the disagreeable pertaining to maritime existence than boys living inland, whose information had been gathered solely from such startling, outrageously defying maritime common sense works as the "Bloody Buccaneer" or "The Pirate of the Gulf." We knew it was at first an inevitable necessity to be a "green hand." We used to wonder how long it would take us to wear this sea verdancy off. In our juvenile discussions on the subject we scouted the idea of ever being homesick, or if we were so we vowed never to show it.

Yet all the privation and hardship (and it was kept prominently before our eyes from interested motives) in no degree lessened in us, but rather increased, the desire for adventure.

I am quite certain of one thing—if a boy has an intense yearning for the sea it is best to let him go. If he is not fitted for that life one voyage will cure him. If the sailor is born in him his place in life is to be a sailor. I have seen all manner of inducements put before boys and young men to prevent their going to sea. They were placed in enviable situations in business, and many of the privileges and luxuries which wealth affords were granted them. Seemingly they resigned all thoughts of such a step, yet the desire was still there. And when opportunity finally offered they gratified it. Some are born with fins and flippers, and it is cruel to keep a fish out of water.

Getting the crew on board previous to sailing was another interesting affair. It was the last chance to get drunk for a long time, and Jack made the most of it. There was much delay in getting him on board. Garrets, cellars, outhouses and all sorts of out-of-the-way places had to be searched for the missing man. And when finally secured he would defy the officers and use very outrageous language towards those autocrats of our burgh, the ship agents. He was not yet at sea, and wanted to make the most of his fast fleeting liberty. Often he tumbled overhoard, and was fished out and stowed away in the bottom of the boat which carried him on hoard, a miserable drunken mass of maritime humanity.

By the last of September, when the first frosts of Fall had commenced to tinge the leaves, the last vessel had departed. The Long Wharf, hut a short time since so busy, was quiet and almost deserted save by a few sloops and schooners. The money-making and money-spending season was over. The grog shops contained none but the old "stand-bys," no longer able to luxuriate in the generosity of the whaleman, once more upon the sea. The stagnation in business extended even to the boys, since we could no longer pick up shreds of old copper sheathing from the wharves and sell them at the junk stores at sixteen cents a pound. If a bolt or large piece occasionally found its way in our stock it was all in the way of business. We were sometimes forced to disgorge our collection of ore, ignominiously driven away, and accused of theft by the "bosses."

Alas! those stirring scenes of Summer are quite over. The wharves have gone to decay or sunk in the shifting sands. The oil-yards and cooper-shops, which during the winter were noisy with the busy hammer of the cooper as he drove on hoop after hoop, are silent, grass-grown and long deserted. The ships are for the most part condemned and broken up. Many of them saw their last of earth or rather of the sea, in this very bay of San Francisco. They helped form a portion of the "Rotten Row"—that dismal line of forlorn hulks familiar to the older residents of San Francisco. Some make the foundations of this city. Within a stone's throw of me reposes the Niantic, supporting a cheap lodging house. So also rest the bones of the Cadmus, which vessel, previous to her purchase out of the merchant service, brought over Lafayette on his triumpbal visit to this country. And of the boys who expected to be whalemen many are not whalemen—perhaps never saw a whale in their lives. "L' homne propose et Dieu dispose."

We went not down into the sea in ships, barques, brigs and schooners, for whales grew scarce and the few scarce ones grew wild. More and more years were required to make a voyage, and strange fluids were invented to make light. The hog contested with the whale; hence lard oil; the man of science brought us camphene, which showed up things in a brighter light than the nasty whale oil, and blew and burnt up more houses as well as people. The earth, too, was bored and pumped to death, until obliged to disclose the secret of her oleaginous treasures. And for those and some other reasons the glory and life of my native whaling port have departed, and I gain not my bread with the barbed harpoon and the keen edged lance.

LOCAL ARCHITECTURAL NOTES.

DURING the past year a vast amount of money has been spent in the erection of stores, insurance offices, banks, etc., and with three or four notable exceptions very little taste has been displayed by the owners and the architects, who have been employed. This is often no of fault the latter, but too frequently a great deal of capital is thrown away in useless and abortive attempts at ornamentation.

This is especially the case on Kearny street, where there are not more than two of the recently erected buildings which can lay any claim to beauty. Some few are perfectly plain, with no pretensions to ornament, and these have more merit in their simplicity than most of their neighbors which have, as a general thing, a cheap air of shabby gentility. The block last erected, on the corner of Pine and Battery streets, is of the same class, the details (the window caps, brackets, etc,) being very awkward and badly proportioned.

Of the Kearny street buildings, those on the Southwest corners of Sutter and Pine streets have a look of dignity and respectability. The general proportions of both are good; the details and decorations are quite neat, particularly in the former. The store on the Northeast corner of California and Kearny streets has good points, and is a little out of the beaten track. It is one of the best efforts of its architect.

Among the most extensive undertakings in the city, is the the new block for Murphy, Grant & Co., which affords an opportunity (second only to the Exchange) for its architect to distinguish himself. We are very sorry to feel obliged to say that we think it a failure; its extensive frontage on two principal streets, with the large amount of money evidently expended on it, should certainly have produced a grand and noble structure, an ornament to the city. As it stands, it is an immense box like affair, with a very monotonous succession of arches, the columns of which are short and "stumpy." The architraves are too broad and flat, particularly in the second tier, decorated with the "Corn Husk" arrangement. Then again, some portions of the cornices are carved, a useless expense, for the device makes uglier what would have been unobjectionable if it had been plain. Simple mouldings are certainly much more effective for the projecting members of an exterior cornice.

But the worst feature of all is the main cornice, which does not project more than two feet. The projection should be nearly double that space. This, with the bulky panels and corbels, spoils whatever of dignity or style the building would possess.

The Bank of California and the Insurance Offices are approaching completion. We shall allude to them more fully on a future occasion.

HOLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.—By referring to our advertising columns it will be seen that this importing and wholesale firm which has so long stood at the head of their especial branch of trade, that of stores and house furnishing hardware—in Sacramento and Austin, have established a business house in this city. This firm has done an extensive business with the interior merchants for year past, and without curtailing the business relations of their other houses, they now enter the broader field of San Francisco trade, determined to win their share of it.

LANDLORDS AND TENANTS.—Buyers and sellers, alike rush to the Real Estate and House agency office of Madison & Burke, 316 Montgomery street, for the satisfactory transaction of their various business demands. Those in want of houses are sure to get suited there, and those wanting tenants will there be most likely to obtain them—for Madison & Burke do most of the house-letting in San Francisco.

SPRING BONNETS.—Have you seen them? If not, go at once and inspect the new styles, with the new and seasonable trimmings, just received by Mrs. Butler No. 136 Montgomery street, under the Occidental Hotel. They are extremely neat and tasty.

CANDACE.

BY FREDERIC HOWE MARION.

I LOVED Candace when we went to school together. I loved her as a boy, and as a man, and I shall love her to my dying hour as tenderly, as utterly, as it is possible for one human being to love another. She had a pure, pretty face, with soft, dark hair and hazel eyes. All the color in her face was in the coral red of her little velvety mouth. It was just a child's sweet face all through her young womanhood.

I don't think any one else knew how pretty Candace was. She was one of a large family of children, and the parents were poor, and hard-working people. who, in keeping bread in the mouths, and shoes on the feet of their little ones, had their hands and hearts too full to consider such an unpractical thing as beauty. If the children were sound in limb' that was enough. Then out of her own family Candace was never much known, for she was always shy and retiring. When she came to womanhood, she passed so quickly from a child to a self-poised woman that there was never any opportunity for the bashful boys of Farmland to find her attractive. She was never their equal, and instinctively repelled them. Then her beauty was of too high an order to be recognized by them ; her arch, rosy smile I think she kept for me, and those she loved at home.

I lived on a hill, and she in a hollow, a mile from the village. Her father was the village blacksmith, and mine a farmer. By and by, her father was too old to work at the anvil, and then his oldest son took his place. I was not as ready to succeed my father when he tired at the plow. I wanted a literary life. I thought and wrote well for a boy of twenty, and I loved books and dreams. I had always meant to go to the city when I was of age, and learn something of its life, and find my place there. No one but Candace knew this. There was much discussion and some disquietude at home when I announced my intention, and then I went away. I had a father and a younger brother to leave, and Candace. With her there was no marked leave-taking.

I was fortunate enough to obtain, immediately, the situation as copyist to a literary man. I never knew the garret-starving experience of most young authors. I was also fortunate, or unfortunate, enough to immediately become M. Lorraine's protegé. He appreciated my order of talent, and patronized me to an extent that made me dangerously popular. Bohemia welcomed me, and I wrote the home folks that I was becoming as successful in New York as I could wish.

My work for M. Lorraine was not laborious. I had much time to myself, which I spent in luxurious dolce far niente in his green-house. The slumberous, perfumy atmosphere stimulated me to the composition of the sensuous, opium-fair, winy little poems which were received so favorably by the public. They were the very concentration of sweets—"sunny" rhymed with "honey," "mist" with "amethyst," and "fancies" with pansies." They were full of wine, and gold hair, and musk. They abounded in poetical metaphors, and were laden with the luxuries of all climes and ages, and meant—nothing. My poems were called gems and pictures, but no one ever accused me of meaning anything. My first critic was Candace.

She had one wealthy relative—an aunt who was rich and fashionable. Reviving a ghost of sisterly affection on hearing that her brother was a poor man, and had eight half grown children, she sent for the youngest girl. This was Candace.

Aunt and neice had never seen each other. Candace's first impression was that her aunt was a painfully unhealthy and tricked-out old woman, while Mrs. Linden was astonished at the beauty of her neice. Candace was only seventeen, and innocent and lovely as a flower, and Mrs. Linden, who had no daughters to show off in society, thought she had found a treasure. How she would triumph over Mrs. Leader, who flaunted her colorless blondes in their diamonds, and assumed that she led society! So Candace was thronged by masters of all the arts, that she might be fitted to come out in a year. She had a good English education—the result of her own efforts ; and Mrs. Linden calculated that another year would enable her to appear with the savoir vivre required. She had beauty enough for a queen ; no one need know that her father was a blacksmith, and if the girl pleased her she should be her heiress.

I heard this news from home, and immediately went to congratulate Candace. The Linden mansion was splendid. In the luxurious drawing-room, "a simple maiden in her flower,' Candace sat reading. She wore a plain black dress, a white ribbon looping back her curls, and, excepting the fine material of her dress, had hardly changed at all in a year. When Mrs. Linden, after a protracted but covert scrutiny of me, left us alone together, I said :

"Why do you wear a black dress, Candace? I should think Mrs. Linden would have you in cloth of gold."

"I did not want to change my dress. I wear it for little Ben, you know."

Her little brother was dead, and I had not heard. It made me remember that I had not written to her for several months. I tried to apologize. "I am so busy, you see, Candace."

"Yes, I presume you are. What do you write?"

"Poems," I replied, with a conscious pride. "You remember, I sent you a magazine containing one?"

"Oh, yes—'Spoils and Spices;' I thought at first it was Aldrich's. But what else do you write beside those kind of things, Walt?"

"Nothing else," I answered, somewhat sulkily, being hurt.

"Nothing else!" she repeated.

"No," said I ; "what else would you have me write? They are my forte, and, I assure you, very successful. You don't appreciate them, I think, Candace."

"I think they are very pretty," she answered, gently, seeing that I was annoyed.

"And they are a great deal more brilliant than anything that Aldrich ever wrote ; M. Lorraine told me so himself. I don't think myself they are so very much in his style."

"But, Walt," said the clear-eyed little thing, "they make me think of dead-ripe fruit. You eat the pear, or read the poem, and that's all."

"Your comparison is very lame," said I. "There's seeds in pears, remember."

"And there are none in your poems."

"You assume a great deal, Candace. How old are you."

"I'm not pretending to criticize you, Walt," said she ; "I don't know how ; but I do not like poems that are made up of pretty words, and don't leave me anything to think about Whittier doesn't write so.'

I replied banteringly. but she answered with so much spirit and good sense, that I was fairly vanquished, and willingly changed the subject.

I came away thinking that Candace was going to make a smart woman, but that we didn't suit each other as we had once done. I resolved not to think any more about her. There were other people who appreciated me better, and if I didn't suit her it couldn't be helped. I pleased others.

Yet, after all, the sight of Candace's pure face had impressed me very strongly, and I was more disappointed than I could understand by her comments. She only had expected much of me, as I had expected much of myself, and it was not pleasant to meet her and receive not a word of congratulation, especially as I had grown to regard my laurels as quite considerable.

I met her at the opera next, and when she went out early, the glittering crowd grew a hore, and the canzonets and arias palled on my ear. All winter I saw her, beautiful, gentle, alluring, and I went on worshipping her, and connecting with her all the sweet subtleties of love, idealizing her in my poems.

In the Spring, I received a note from Candace :

"DEAR WALT :—I am going from the city. If you would like to see me first, come up this evening. CANDACE.

I immediately went to Mrs. Linden's.

I saw that she had lost much of her girlish look, but she was still marked by a sweet simplicity. How clear her eyes were! Mine fell beneath them. How gentle her voice! Her kindness hurt me.

"Where are you going, Candace?"

"Home."

"Home? Are you going to leave your aunt?"

"Yes. Nelly is married ; there are my three little brothers, and mother getting old, and they need me."

I was appalled. Was it possible that she would leave such dazzling prospects as were hers, and go back to Farmland, with its poverty, and drudgery, and barrenness?

"Why, Candace, what can you be thinking of?"

"Why are you so surprised, Walt? I am sorry to disappoint Aunt Linden, but I cannot think of doing anything else ; it is clearly right."

"Right for you to bury yourself in that place, after what you have learned?"

"I have not learned anything truer than my love for my mother, Walt. Do you think anything here could recompense me for the thought that she was working beyond her strength, or any rule of fashion justify me in leaving her to care unfit for her, while I live in idleness? Walt," putting her hand on mine, "what are you thinking of?"

I was silent. She sat looking at me. Perhaps she knew better than I did what thoughts swept across me, and felt that no words would do me any good then. She only rose with me to say good-by, and spoke gently :

"Don't forget me, Walt."

I looked at her, and my face spoke my shameful confession. Her soft cheek paled—both her light hands crept over the one of mine she held.

"You will come home by-and-by, Walt?"

"By-and-by." And then I left her.

Did I go on, after that, with my loose, blase life? Yes. If she had been in the city, she might have helped me, but I was not strong enough to resist temptation alone, or break from the network of circumstances which surrounded me. The place I had made, held me. I had but one other, and that I was not true enough to enter. How could I, who was the pet of salons, and a fellow of literary popularity, go back to obscurity and the plow? I thought of Candace—yet I could not do it. She was stronger and better than I. That I confessed.

The changes that came diverted me from painful thought—though my convictions could hardly be called thought. The theaters, the opera season, the new works of art, new additions to our circle, and the adventures of old habituates, kept my attention employed. Then I was seldom alone. Wherever I might be, I could always find a Bohemian. We dined in squads. We gossiped and boasted in unison. We knew each other's vices, and, all in one boat, we pledged one another success. There may have been pure and earnest men amongst us, but I never knew them, and I do not believe there were any.

M. Lorraine was a violent-tempered man. I wondered, sometimes, if his violent displeasure would ever fall upon me, but for a year he always looked upon me good-humoredly. At last a mere accident incensed him, and he flew into a passion. It was simply the loss of some papers which had not been put specially in my care. My blood was young and warm, and words ran high. I considered myself insulted and quit his service. He revenged himself, by announcing that I had been dismissed.

In a few weeks, my funds ran low. I had had a good salary, but it's not the fashion for Bohemians to save any part of their income, and my porte monnaie began to have a very flat appearance. I could not obtain another situation. I made nothing but failures with my pen, and in a few months was wretchedly out of spirits, and completely out of pocket. I lingered along an incredible while, with no visible means of support, but pride incited me to keep up appearances, and I borrowed of Peter to pay Paul, and maintained a strict reserve on the subject of my resources, so that I believed no one knew my poverty, for a matter of months, every day growing more discontented, irritable and gloomy.

One night I stood at the door of a theater, waiting for a man who had promised to meet me there, when two young fellows came into the vestibule, and slowly passed.

"Walt Childreth," said one. "He's had his day. He's overboard."

"I thought Lorraine sounded his praises with a flourish. Seems to me I heard something about his writing an editorial notice of that long poem of his—what was it?—that Sterns published."

"Childreth's out in the cold now," interrupted the other, "and hasn't anything to stand on. It don't do a man any good to be patronized as Childreth was by a savant like Lorraine. I always said so, and—"

They were out of hearing. I gnashed my teeth with irritation, and strode away. The next day, I made an effort to have my poems published in book form. I went to Lee & Brown, whom I knew knew me well. Mr. Brown spoke with stinging plainness :

"You'll not get a publisher, Mr. Childreth. I have read your poems, and know them well, and they are not uncommon enough to bring the least profit to you or any one else. A man weighs in this world for what he is, not for what he would be, and the market is always crowded with mediocre matter."

A very round-about and impertinent way of saying "no," I thought ; but three other firms told me the same thing in a different way, and then I relinquished my plan, understanding that there was no hope of any relief for me in that direction. I sold my watch, paid my bills and went home.

I don't think I meant to do any more than to rest on my oars and then take a new start, in returning to Farmland ; but when I saw the old stone house, with the fine black branches of the dooryard oaks outlined against the sky, like a picture drawn in ink, a rush of pleasure went over me unlike anything I had known for a long time. My father met me at the gate. When I saw the smile of recognition on his aged face, I felt ashamed for my desertion of this faithful heart.

It was the return of the prodigal son. The fatted calf was killed, and the guests called in to be merry. Candace came, and with her Mr. Hudson, who had been her teacher, and who had come down with a message from her aunt, desiring her return.

"But I shall never return while my mother lives," said Candace. "My aunt has been more kind than she knows, even ; she has enabled me to brighten and enrich all our lives greatly, and here I must remain. I have my music and books, and mother enjoys singing and reading aloud so much that I wonder how we ever lived without them. I am sorry for Aunt Linden's disappointment ; but, Walt, I think our Will is displaying great musical talent, and if I can only persuade auntie to take him for a protege, instead of me, it will be a better thing for all of us."

Dear Candace! I know just how she looked at that moment—so kind, and sweet, and steadfast—for my eyes were full of her face.

"And what are you going to do, Walt? Have you come home to stay?"

"And be a farmer, and have a home and a wife, and make writing incidental to simple, earnest living? Yes, I think so."

"I am so glad!" she answered, looking straight into my eyes. And then I read how fully she knew me, and how she had feared for me, and how much we loved each other.

At Christmas I kissed her, my wife, under the mistletoe. How can the rest of my life be aught but good and happy with her?

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used by the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world It can be thrown a distance of three hundred feet, and will return and fall at the feet of the thrower. As the Australian boomerang is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever invented, so is the San Francisco BOOMERANG, at the corner of Washiugton and Dupont streets, acknowledged to be one of the greatest institutions of the city. The snug bar, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot puuches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum —in fact, everything about the Boomerang is perfect.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whose husband supposed she had absconded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, aad get one dozeu of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you waut to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 aud 27 Third street, east side, uear Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, aud to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determiued to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the Americau Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are takiug the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that Americau manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instrumeuts, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chauce to iuvest your mouey to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spriug Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagous from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evaus fifty per ceut. lower than auy other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examiue their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitau market.

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Associatiou for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputatiou, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatmeut, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
STEAMSHIPS FOR
NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,
WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR APRIL.

April 30th—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,
PRINTERS,
533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY
PRINTING?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento aad Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS
Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

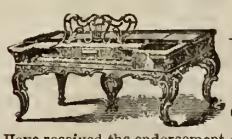
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of
PIANO-FORTES.
FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.
PIANOS TO RENT.
WALTER S. PIERCE'S
Piano Manufactory
Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.
Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.



THE FAMOUS
PIANOS
OF
Chickering & Son
Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's.
Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

PHOTOGRAPHY
IN ALL ITS BRANCHES
Executed in a Superior Style, at
GEO. D. MORSE'S
NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,
No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE
FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.
GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines have is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing.
H. A. DEMING,
137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.
Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA
COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)
NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

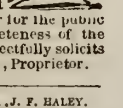
This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.
French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued

A. BONZI & CO.,
Italian Restaurant,
515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.
On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

THE NEW BRANCH
OF THE
CLIPPER RESTAURANT,
No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,
WILL BE OPENED ON
MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.



MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBlic that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J. STOCK, Proprietor.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.
MILLER & HALEY,
EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,
NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,
San Francisco.
SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED
To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium
IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE
HAT OR CAP,
AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.
Do not fail to have one of
LAMOTT'S HATS!
CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 1

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,

515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

THE NEW BRANCH

OF THE

CLIPPER RESTAURANT,

No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,

WILL BE OPENED ON

MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.

MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBLIC that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J. STOCK, Proprietor.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,

NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,

San Francisco.

SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

H T OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHOUT the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,

401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years (15th (1866) in San Francisco,) enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

AMERICA,

EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞ The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.... CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE CALIFORNIA

Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable, THOMAS MOONEY, President.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,

Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

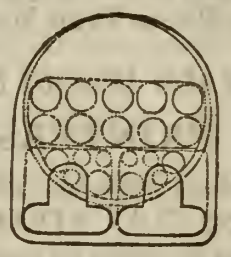
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN, } Proprietors.
JAS. AITKEN, }

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Missiou streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Belt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COAKLEDICE, } San Francisco.

MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for

WAGONS, TRUCKS,

CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,

CARRIAGES, COACHES,

EXPRESS WAGONS,

BUGGIES, SULKIES, Etc.

Also, Importers of

GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,

Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips, Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & CO.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyncken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sausome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 15 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 634 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS. CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

B. C. HORN & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF

FINE HAVANA CIGARS,

.....AND.....

VIRGINIA MANUFACTURED

TOBACCO,

AT THE OLD STAND,

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF

CLAY AND FRONT STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A WELL ASSORTED STOCK OF

HAVANA CIGARS,

CHEWING,

SMOKING, MANUFACTURED

.....AND.....

LEAF TOBACCO,

.....AND.....

SNUFF,

ALWAYS ON HAND.

Horns's Best,
Cabanas,
Bella Mar,
Ramon Rosales,
El Encanto,
Juan Martines,
La Favorita,
La Fama,
Republicana,
Carmelita,

Buen Fumar,
Adelina Patti,
Avellanda,
Comerciante,
Gen. Sheridan,
Manzafiars,
De Albuerne,
Castelo,
Gen. Grant,
La Rosa.

Century,
Forest Rose,
Solace,
Crumbs of Comfort,
Liberty Boy,
Young America,
Savory,
Standard,
Solar,
Sunnyside,

Golden Luxury,
Bouquet,
Big Lick,
Forest Rose,
Grand Trunk
Knickerbocker
La Flor de Tobac,

Nonpareil,
Our Pet,
Pride of the Union,
Queen of the Pacific,
Star of the West
Turkish,
Universal,
Wadawanuck,
Excelsior,

American Gentleman,
Scotch,
Rappee,
Maccaboy,
Tobac de Paris,

Nature's Beauty
Our Favorite,
Flowers of the Forest,
Fruit Juice,
Atlantic Cable,
Jewel of Ophir,
Jesse Hare Reed,
Nectar of Roses,
Washoe,
Signet.

Golden Apple,
Bouquet,
Pippin,
Pear Brand,
Horn of Plenty,
Black Hawk,
Melon,
M. B. Allen,
Citron.

☞ The facilities for importing from Virginia and Havana enjoyed by this house cannot be excelled by any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

IMPORTERS OF

Agricultural Implements,

MACHINES, HARDWARE, ETC.,

NOS. 17 AND 19 FRONT STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO,

NOS. 9, 11, 13 AND 15 J STREET,

(Near the Levee,) SACRAMENTO,

Eastern Office, 88 Wall Street, New York,

OFFER:

Buckeye Reapers, 5 and 6 feet; Mowers, 2 sizes.
Ball's Ohio Reapers; Mowers, 3 sizes.
Burt's Eagle Reapers and Mowers, double and single gear.
McCormack's Reapers and Mowers, hand and self-raking.
Manny Reaper and Mower, 5 feet cut—cheap.
Wood's Prize Combined Machines, 5 feet cut.
Kirby's Reapers and Mowers, 5 feet cut.
Wood's Prize Mowers, jointed and stiff bars.
Badger State Reapers and Mowers.
Russell's Junior Mowers.
Union Mowers, 2 sizes.
Champion Mowers.
Bay State Mowers.
Hame's Healers, iron wheels—genuine.
Hame's Headers, screw hub wheels—genuine.
Healer Wagons, screw hub wheels.
Pitt's Improved Threshers, 24 to 40-inch cylinders.
Aultman's Sweepstakes Threshers, 33 to 40 inch cylinders.
Pitt's Double Pinion and Iron Horse Power.
Portable Steam Engines, 5 to 20-horse power.
Wheel Wire Horse Rakes.
Revolving and Wire Horse Rakes.
Hay Presses, Hay Rope and Baling Wire.
Scythes, Snathes, Rakes, Cradles, Forks, etc.
Rubber and Leather Belting, all sizes.
Single Plows and Gang Plows.
Harrows, Horse Hoes, Cultivators.
Fan Mills, Grain Mills, Hay Cutters.
Wine and Cider Presses, Churns.
Broadcast Seed Sowers and Seed Drills.
Ox Yokes, Road Scrapers, etc., etc.

Samples of machines may be seen at their new warerooms. BAKER & HAMILTON,
Front street, between Pine and Market streets, San Francisco.

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 SANSOME ST. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,

NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches

AT

The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES

IN THE CITY

—Are to be found at—

HOADLEY & CO.'S,

533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,

San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO

WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine

Wines, Liquors and Segars,

NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,

Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

Main street, Petaluma.

WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,

San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS

Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,

cor. Sansome, San Francisco.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

HOUSEKEEPERS'

HARDWARE,
CUTLERY,
TINWARE,
WOODENWARE,
WILLOW-WARE,

And all the innumerables required by Housekeepers.

THE ONLY STORE IN SAN FRANCISCO OF THE KIND.

GOODS DELIVERED IN ANY PART OF THE CITY

THOS. CORBETT,
131 Kearny street,
Between Sutter and Post.

MRS. WINSHIP,
Fashionable Milliner,

NO. 23 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.

Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.

☞ Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

AGENTS WANTED FOR Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works, Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,
CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.

Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.

THEODORE MEETZ........................President
WM. ERZGRABER....................Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.......................Secretary

TRUSTEES.

FABIAN JOOST	HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT,	FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE,	PETER MEYER.

The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer

In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.

☞ All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,

HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.

DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,

B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham, William Smith, Marysville.

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED................1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

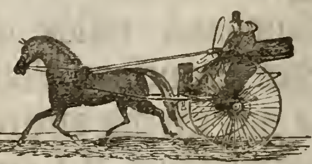
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S



NORFOLK STABLES,

ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.

Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand.
P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - - PROPRIETOR

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE: 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor. Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.

—ALSO—

The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.

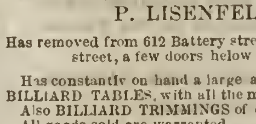
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.

JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM



Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description. All goods sold are warranted.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

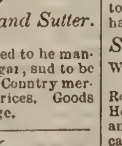
N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,



Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.

A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.

Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

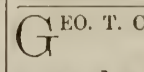
A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF



Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,

OPTICIANS

THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined

SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.

Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.

Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.

N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 and 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

JACOB SHEW,

Pioneer Photographer

612 CLAY STREET,

North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CHARLES MITCHELL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF LUDWIG IGEL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of LUDWIG IGEL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Ludwig Igel, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JACOB R. MAYER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 523 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Dated April 13th, A. D. 1867.

A. W. BOWMAN,
Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ROBERT CARTER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratix of the estate of Robert Carter, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratix, at the place of transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, John F. Finn, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

GRACE CARTER,
Administratix of the Estate of Robert Carter, deceased.
Dated April 12, 1867. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate left unadministered of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator as aforesaid at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Doro & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 12th, A. D. 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Thomas A. Kimball, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Administrator.
ap13-5t.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY A. WALSH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at at the office of Crane & Boyd, Attorneys at Law, in the city and county of San Francisco, the place of his transaction of business.

Dated at San Francisco, March 25th, 1867.

JOHN TOWNSEND,
Administrator of Estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased.
Crane & Boyd, Att'ys, S. W. cor. Clay and Montgomery streets. mh30-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HORACE COLE, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of HORACE COLE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within nine months and twenty-one days after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator with the will annexed, at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 4th, 1867.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Horace Cole, deceased. ap6-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of J. C. BEIDEMAN, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of the Judge of said Court, made this day, notice is hereby given that Monday, the 22d day of April, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, being a day of a regular term of said Court, to-wit: of the April Term, A. D. 1867, at the Court room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, has been appointed for hearing the petition, this day filed, of Bernard Kennedy, praying for a decree authorizing and directing John W. Brumagim, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate left unadministered of J. C. Beideman, deceased, to convey to the said petitioner certain real estate situated in said city and county, and particularly described in said petition, upon the payment to said Administrator of the balance of the purchase money of said real estate; at which time and place all persons interested in said estate may appear and contest said petition by filing their objections in writing.

Dated March 22d, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
Messrs. Drake & Hent, Attys. for Petitioner.
mar23-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by J. W Brumagim, the Administrator of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 5th, 1867. ap6-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Michael Lynch, the Administrator of the estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w
R. W. HENT, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMINS. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al, defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on the 10th day of September, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on TUESDAY, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors, David Whipple and William Whipple, of, in and to all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the southerly line of Pine street, 111½ feet easterly from the south-east corner of Pine and Taylor streets; running thence easterly along said line of Pine street 26 feet; thence at a right angle southerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet; thence at a right angle westerly 26 feet, and thence at a right angle northerly and parallel with Taylor street 137½ feet to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, No. 6 Montgomery Block, in said city and county, from this date till Tuesday, the 23d day of April, 1867, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned.

ROBERT L. HARRIS,
Guardian of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-4w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Breeze, the Administrator of the estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, praying for an order for the sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts of the deceased and the charges and expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Adm'r. mh30 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion, and would be most for the interest of all concerned to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the family allowance, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why no order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned. Executors of the Last Will and Testament of JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the store of A. Crawford, No. 27 Market street, San Francisco, that being the place of the transaction of business by said Executors of said estate.

A. CRAWFORD, } Executors.
D. N LUNDT, }
Dated March 30th, 1867. mh30-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of BENJAMIN P. GREEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Curtis, Administrator of the estate of Benjamin P. Green, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the claims against the estate, and the expenses of administration;

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the twenty-second day of April A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 22d, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 22d day of March, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
F. A. Fabens, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
mar23 4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, JOHN G. HODGE, at Nos. 418 and 420 Clay street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated April 6th, 1867.

JOHN G. HODGE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Francis S. Wood, deceased. ap6-5w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased.

Pursuant to an order of said Court, made on the 4th day of April, A. D. 1867, notice is hereby given that Tuesday, the 23d day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, and the Court-room of said Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the Will of said PATRICK GAFFNEY, deceased, and for hearing the application of Wm. A. Quarles, Public Administrator, for the issuance to the said petitioner of Letters of Administration with the will annexed, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
Dated at San Francisco, this April 5th, A. D. 1867.
J. F. FINN, Esq., Att'y for Petitioner. ap6 3w

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

BLACK CROOK!
BLACK CROOK!!
BLACK CROOK!!!

THE WORLD RENOWNED BLACK CROOK!—SPLENDID COSTUMES AND SCENERY!!

This, the most gorgeous spectacular play ever presented in the United States, will be performed at

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE,

This Afternoon.....April 20th,

—WITH—

MISS SALLIE HINCKLEY,
MISS ROSA SIEGRIST,
MISS EMMA MILES,

A full Corps de Ballet, and the Opera House Stock Company.

BLACK CLOOK will be played every night until further notice.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25
☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS.

GRAND FESTIVAL

....TO BE HELD....
AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,
....ON THE....
Evenings of May 22d and 23d, 1867,

For the Benefit of the POOR OF SAN FRANCISCO; also in aid of TWO CHURCHES, on which occasion will be distributed a Complete Series of American Silver and Copper Coins—cost over $16,000. TICKETS, $2 50.

REPITON & BUMPUS, Managers.

LIST OF PRIZES TO BE DISTRIBUTED AS ABOVE:

No. 1—Complete Set of American Silver Dollars. No. 2—Complete Set of American Silver Half Dollars. No. 3—Complete Set of American Quarter Dollars. No. 4—Complete Set of American Silver Dimes. No. 5—Complete Set of American Silver Half-Dimes and Three-Cent Pieces. No. 6—Complete Set of American Copper Cents, from the first year of issue, 1723, to the last, 1867. No. 7—An assortment of U. S. Half Cents, nearly all dates. No. 8—Large Bronze Medals of all the Presidents of the United States. No. 9—Silver Cabinet Medals of Washington. No. 10—A Splendid Lot of Ground in the Harvey Brown Tract.

Ladies and gentlemen wanted to act as Agents. Liberal commission given. Apply to

REPITON & BUMPUS, Managers,
No. 626 Montgomery street, Montgomery Block.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine

WANTED!

A GIRL 10 or 12 years of age, to live in a small family (no children). A good girl can find a permanent home by applying at No. 327 Third street, between Harrison and Folsom, or by leaving address at this office. References required.

JAMES C. PARKINSON JOHN J. MAHONEY.

PARKINSON & MAHONEY,

GILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS
—OF—
LOOKING-GLASS AND PICTURE FRAMES,

No. 333 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco. All kinds of Oval Frames. Lithographs and Engravings kept constantly on hand. Pictures cleaned and varnished. Old Frames regilt.

ARRIVAL

—OF—
MADAME LAURUSTINUS,
The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europe, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

DRY GOODS
AT REDUCED PRICES!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

ARE OFFERING

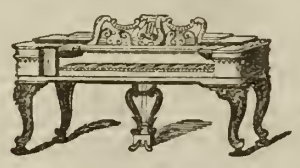
AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES,

Black Silks,
Plaid and Plain Poplins,
Normandy and Ottoman Cloths,
Foulard De Laines and Challys,
Alpacas and Merinoes,
Prints and Ginghams,
Organdies and Lawns,
Grenadines,
Marseilles, etc, etc.
Linen and Cotton Sheetings,
Linen and Cotton Shirtings,
Table Damask and Napkins,
Towels and Towelings,
Lace and Muslin Curtains,
Flannels and Blankets,
Marseilles Quilts,
Mourning Dress Goods,
Kid Gloves,
Cloth for Cloaks and Men's and Boys' Wear,
Cloaks, Basques, Mantillas and Shawls,
Hosiery, suitable for Men, Ladies and Children.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 BATTERY STREET, BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE.

THE CELEBRATED PIANOS



—OF—
J. B. DUNHAM, F. C. LIGHTE & CO.,
AND ERNEST GABLER,

Are warranted for FIVE YEARS, and indorsed by the LEADING PIANISTS of AMERICA as SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS.

SOLE AGENTS— C. WIEDERHOLD & CO.,
685 Market street, near Third.

THE OPPOSITION STEAMSHIP

AMERICA

WILL SAIL

Thursday, April 25th,

AT 11 O'CLOCK, A. M.,

To connect with the Splendid New Steamship

NEVADA

FOR NEW YORK.

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE

HAVE IN STORE, EX LATE ARRIVALS, A FULL stock of

STOVES AND RANGES,

METALS, WIRE, IRON PIPE,
LEAD PIPE, BRASS GOODS, HOSE,
HOLLOW-WARE, TIN-WARE,
TINMEN'S STOCK AND TRIMMINGS,
TOOLS AND MACHINES,
Plumbers' Goods,
LIFT AND FORCE PUMPS,
Hansbrow's Patent
SHIP, FARM AND MINING PUMPS,

Which they offer to Dealers at the lowest market rates.

112 AND 114 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE MOST PERFECT CUTTING MACHINE EVER MADE

HUBBARD PRIZE MOWER

The Excelsior Mower of the Day.

The Makers of this Celebrated Machine have finally been enabled to increase their manufacturing facilities to such an extent, as to equal the Eastern demand, and permit of a full stock being kept at San Francisco for the wants of the Pacific Farmers.

This Machine took the FIRST GOLD MEDAL PREMIUM from
EIGHTEEN COMPETITORS,
At the Great Public Trial of MOWERS held at Utica, New York.

Farmers and Dealers, send for a pamphlet, and consult your own interests by examining this Machine before you make your purchases for the season.

ADDRESS

WM. B. ISAACS,

Office of the Russel & Erwin Manufacturing Company,

106 AND 108 BATTERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. C. E. KLEPZIG,

MANUFACTURER
—AND—
DEALER IN

GUNS, PISTOLS,
Sporting Apparatus,
AMMUNITION
AND GUN MATERIALS,

No. 733 Washington Street, San Francisco.

Gilding and Silver Plating of all kinds of metals; also, Silver or Plated Ware reburnished.

OLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
STOVES, TIN-PLATE,

SHEET IRON, LEAD PIPE, PUMPS, ZINC, WIRE, AND

HOUSE FURNISHING HARDWARE.

MANUFACTURERS OF

TIN, SHEET-IRON AND COPPER WARE.

Nos. 13 and 15 Front street.....San Francisco
Nos. 176 and 178 J street.....Sacramento
Main street.....Austin, Nevada

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF San Francisco. In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.

Order of Publication on application for order of sale.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Quarles, administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 20th day of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 17th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Probate Court, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Petitioner. ap20-5t

A. J. SWEETSER,

Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic
Song and Cage Birds,

CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.

No. 519 Kearny street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
APRIL
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

A Youth's History of California. By Lucia Norman. Published by A. Roman & Co.
The Pacific Base-Ball Guide for 1867. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Genius of Solitude. By Wm. R. Alger.
Amendments to the Internal Revenue Law. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Tristan. A Novel. By Edward Spencer.
Bankrupt Law of 1867.
Unspoken Sermons. By George MacDonald.
Our Father's Business. By Thomas Guthrie.
Madame Recamier's Memoirs, translated by Miss Luyster.
The Good Report: Lessons for Lent. By Alice B. Haven.
Peter Killip's King.
The Diamond Cross. By Wm. B. Phillips.
The Children's Treasury.
Our Mutual Friend: Diamond Edition, illustrated.
Our Convicts. By Mary Carpenter.
Watson's Practice. Abridged. By J. J. Meylor, M. D.
Angular Curvature of the Spine. By Benj. Lee, M.D.
Guide for Using Medical Batteries. By A. C. Garratt, M. D.
Curfew Chimes. By J. R. MacDuff, D. D.
Cruise of the Shenandoah. By C. E. Hunt.
Mosby and his Men. By J. M. Crawford.
The Criterion. By A Cleveland Coxe.
The Tent on the Beach. By John G. Whittier.
New America. By Wm. Hepworth Dixon.
The Market Assistant. By Thomas F. De Voe.
Sequel to Ministering Children.
Jacobus on Genesis, 2d vol.—Covenant to the End.
The House of Israel. By the Author of "Wide Wide World."
The Parish Hand-Book. By Thomas Richey, D. D.
Sewell's Readings for Lent—New Edition.
Out of Harness. By Thos. Guthrie, D. D.
Played Out—a Novel. By Annie Thomas.
Venetian Life. By W. D. Howells—New Edition
Hours of Work and Play. By Frances P. Cobbe,
Elements of Logic. By H. W. Day.
School day Dialogues. Compiled by A. Clark. A. M.
Memoirs of the Confederate War. By H. Von Brocke.
A Guide for Passing Lent Holily. By Avrillon.
Youman's Observations on the Scientific Study of Human Nature. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Speeches and Addresses. By H. Winter Davis, of Maryland.
The Book of Perfumes. By Eugene Rimmel.
The Village on the Cliff. By Miss Thackeray.
Woodburn Grange. By Wm. Howitt.
Kaloolah. By W. S. Mayo, M. D.—New Edition
A Rosary for Lent.
Cumming's Last Warning Cry.
The Papacy. Abbe Guette.
Irving's Traveler. Putnam's Railway Classics.
Ingemisco. By Fadette.
The Huguenot Galley Slave.
Humboldt's Letters to a Lady.
Injuries of the Spine. By J. Ashhurst, Jr., A. M., M. D.
Headland on the Action of Medicines. New Edition.
Financial Economy of the United States. By John A. Ferris, A. M. Published by A. Roman & Co.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,
Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

J. O. HANSCOM. H. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO { T. PANDERGAST. W. W. HANSCOM.

Etna Iron Works!

S. E. corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,
Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,
MANUFACTURE
STEAM ENGINES,
QUARTZ-MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,
Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting
PISTON PACKING,

Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,

The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.

TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,

Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables.

All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.

SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES"

None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.

Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

☞Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 23. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 27, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Spiritism Practically Viewed; Glimpses of Bohemia, by an Old Stager; Literary Gleanings and Gossip; Local Architectural Notes. LION'S MOUTH: Black Crook and Black Rook; The Old "Bulletin" Office; Captain Worden's Reception; Aid for the "Flag;" Spring; A Letter for a Sinful Hebrew; Dramatic Affairs, etc. SELECTED: The Legal Profession; Cockney Writers; Plays and Players; Honeymoonshine, etc. Poetry—Cable Hymn, by John G. Whittier; Nonfulfilled, Saturn.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me" A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

A Settler for a Sinful Hebrew.

Dr. Streutzel having advertised for sale 1,000 acres of land adjoining the Rancho del Pinole, Mrs. Mary B Cornwall expresses her opinion of his conduct in so doing, and enters an objection to his possessing the land "on account of his sins." She publishes the following:

"We would say that land is all taken up, improved by lawful settlers, who have settled there in good faith, knowing that the land was outside of all exterior boundary of ranches, and was the public domain. So, if persons want to bring themselves into trouble, we want them to do it with their eyes open. As Moses viewed the Promise Land from Mount Pisgah—but on account of his sins, God said he should never possess the land—it is our opinion as a body of settlers, and many others too, that that Hebrew, on account of his sins, will never possess the land at the Straits; but as it is very mountainous, he need not go to Pisgah to view it; he can get a peep at it from Mount Cornwell, on the same land." MRS. MARY B. CORNWALL.

We do not think that Mrs. Mary B. Cornwall's reasoning is sound. There is a great deal of difference between Moses and Doctor Strentzel. If her only hope of the Doctor's failing to gain possession of the land, rests on the special interposition of the Almighty, "on account of his sins," that hope is a broken reed. We would earnestly advise Dr. Streutzel not to go to Mount Cornwall if he values his personal safety; Mrs. Mary B. Cornwall, although she reads her bible, is evidently not the kind of woman to trifle with, and the Doctor might meet with a settler sufficient to send him the other side of Jordan—the Spiritual Jordan—to give an account for his sins.

General Kiernan.

We fear the Call is backing down on its best subscribers, the Irish. On Tuesday evening, General Kiernan was announced to deliver a lecture at the Academy of Music. The Call thus cruelly reports his appearance at the Academy for the purpose of apologizing to an audience "principally composed of the Irish Battalion:"

"General Kiernan, who is quite a well-dressed young man, appeared on the stage, and announced that both his manuscript and wardrobe were destroyed at the Cosmopolitan fire, and, consequently, he could not make the appearance or deliver the lecture he expected."

And isn't that a nice way to be speaking of General James L. Kiernan, United States Consul to China? It's him the Call does be calling "quite a well-dressed young man." And next it says "General Kiernan spoke ten minutes, and not in an effective manner.", It's mighty reasonable the Call is to expect a man who has lost his senses in a raging fire, and who hasn't a line of writing of the elegant lecture he had prepared, or a shirt to his back left him, to speak in an effective manner. There's a place which, maybe, is a trifle hotter than the Cosmopolitan Hotel was on Tuesday evening, and if the landlord takes a paper, sure the first journal he'll be axin' for will be the Morning Call.

Oppressive and Irritating.

The following thoughtless paragraph which we find going the rounds of the press, will probably lead to scores of divorces:

"It is said that a portion of a raw onion, eaten just before retiring to rest, will insure refreshing sleep to persons suffering with lungs overburdened with oppressive and irritating matter."

There is no denying the fact that any wife whose husband eats raw onions before retiring to bed, will complain of "suffering from lungs overburdened with oppressive and irritating matter." We can imagine few substances with which the lungs can be charged, more oppressive and irritating than is the peculiar odor of the onion. The action recommended in the above paragraph would, if persevered in, be deemed excessive cruelty and sufficient grounds for a divorce in a great many courts of law in California.

Waterfalls Doomed.

Since the terrible news from England with respect to chignons and waterfalls, many of the ladies of San Francisco have discarded their dead hair ornaments. It is shocking to think of a lady having "gregarines"—or other insects—in her head. and the Lancet declares that all the dead hair which is made into chignons and waterfalls is liable to be infested with unpleasant things. It is all nonsense for the ladies to boil their chignons—boiling won't kill gregarines.

Black Crook and Black Rook.

The event of last week was the production of the Black Crook at Maguire's Opera House on Monday. The Metropolitan management claimed that this so-called Black Crook was really their Black Rook, a play which they had written for them in New York by James Schonberg, and on Tuesday applied to Judge Deady of the U. S. Circuit Court, for an injunction. The case was set for Friday, and in the mean time the piece was allowed to be played at the Opera House. The Opera House management applied for an injunction to restrain the Metropolitan management from playing the Black Rook, which they claimed was a pirated copy of the Black Crook, the sole right to play which, Mr. Maguire had purchased in New York from the author, C. M. Barras. Judge Deady denied the motion of the Metropolitan magagement on the grounds that their Black Rook was really a stolen copy of the Black Crook. He also denied the motion of the Maguire's Opera House management, giving a very weak reason for so doing. It is a well known fact that C. M. Barr is owns the copyright of the Black Crook, and is entitled to the protection of the law for his property; but Judge Deady denies this protection on the grouud that the Black Crook is an improper play. He says:

"This Court does not pretend to be the conservator of the public morals in this respect. This is a matter for the local legislatures. But in giving construction to the constitution and laws, when legitimately called upon to do so, it is the duty of all Courts to uphold public virtue and discourage everything that tends to impair it. It cannot be denied that this spectacle of the Black Crook merely panders to the prurient curiosity by very questionable exhibitions of the female person. The lawfulness of such an exhibition depends upon the laws of the place where it is exhibited. But when the author or proprietor of the spectacle asks the power of this Court to protect him in the exclusive right to make such an exhibition, under the copyright law of Congress, the matter assumes a very different aspect I am strongly impressed with the conviction that an injunction should not be allowed in this case, on the ground that the spectacle is not "suited for public representation" —not fit to be exhibited—within the meaning of that word as used in the Act of Congress, and on the further ground that it is not within the scope of the power of Congress to encourage the production of such exhibitions, as they neither promote the progress of science or the useful arts.'

Now the fact of the matter is that neither the Black Crook nor the Black Rook is in the slightest degree immoral. The ladies of the ballet are rather over-dressed than otherwise, and these plays depend for their attractiveness on their gorgeous scenery more than anything else. It is represented that Judge Deady, when a boy, promised a maiden aunt on her death bed that he would never go to a theater, and that he has kept his promise. He read sad accounts in the New York papers of the very short dresses worn by the ladies of the ballet in the Black Crook when it was produced at Niblo's, and jumped at the conclusion that the play was in itself immoral.

The Old "Bulletin" Office.

That venerable nuisance which has for so long blocked up the mouth of Merchant street, the old Bulletin office, is demolished. The gain to the community is immense; but irreparable the loss to hill stickers. The lack of veneration for ancient buildings, characteristic of the American people, is evinced by the indifference manifested at the removal of this unsightly pile. There might have been some decent show of respect, on the part of the Bulletin, in consigning that rude pile of bricks to oblivion. Great is the stir made at the laying of the corner stone of any public edifice, but who is there to heave a sigh, or, indeed, heave anything, when it is demolished, save bricks and mortar by the hard hands of day laborers. Sic transit gloria domi.

Passing by the melancholy, and, withal, slightly oderiferous locality, yesterday, we picked up a brick. So little poetry is there in the minds of our countrymen as not to realize the purpose of an humble individual carrying off a brick. It was for a memento. In time, that brick will be valuable. It will have a place among the relics of the early civilization of San Francisco. Know we not that which we do? Are we not reflective?

Upon this brick is placed the following inscription: "Brick from the old Bulletin office, which for years stood like a decayed tooth in the mouth of Merchant street. The time of the foundation of this sepulchre is not positively known, Suffice it to say, Anno Domini ——. Demolished April 26, 1867. May it never arise upon this earth again, save in imagination."

Yet, a practical and mercenary man, seeing the care taken of this future relic, followed us, espied out our motions, wormed himself into our confidence, and now announces his determination of hauling off, in the dead of night, a whole cart load of bricks, the sale of which for relics, in the course of a year or two, will yield him a handsome pecuniary return!

Divorces.

Eight women were granted divorces from their husbands, in the San Francisco Courts. One of these injured females got rid of a drunken husband, four had been willfully deserted, one proved that her husband had been unfaithful to her, one had been cruelly treated, one whipped and deserted. It is quite probable that six out of these eight desolate females will be married next week.

A Luxury.

The intensely Democratic Colusa Sun, declares that "laboring men will learn very soon that 'loyalty' is a luxury they can ill afford." Probably the editor will next suggest that "honesty" is also too expensive a luxury for hard times.

Spring.

The weather has been warm during this week. Perspiration has been considerably indulged in. An occasional zephyr raises a cloud of dust which, settling on the moist cuticle of men and women, induces irritability and a disposition to profanity. Occasional linen coats gleam among the array of sombre black garments ever surging up and down Montgomery street. There is a tropical luxuriousness in the atmosphere. But it is liable to be chased away by one of our home-made cold blasts. Delightful weather, this, for laziness. Delightful to recline under shady trees, the freshness of the Spring verdure meeting the eyes, the warbling of birds the ear, and the perfume of Spring flowers the nose. In remarks of a poetical nature mention of the eye and ear is always allowable. The olfactory organ is alluded to in a round-about way, 'perfume' 'fragrance,' etc. Give the nose a show. Too long has this useful, and often prominent, member been denied admittance to the poetic page. After all, there is a vast amount of humbug in pastoral laziness. Go forth into the country and recline under a shady oak. Ten to one you sit on a nest of ants, or a nasty worm lets himself down on you from above by a line which he spins out of himself, or you see a snake, or a bull or an ugly cow eyes you from afar in a suspicious and dangerous manner; or you are contaminated with poison oak, or the grass is damp and the dampness whispers "rheumatiz." Spring is quite endurable in a cosy, little parlor, the windows opened to admit the fresh air, the blinds closed denying admittance to the glare of the sun, the room mildly scented with the perfume of flowers, the last periodical and the morning papers convenient, also a widow and lunch. That will do for Spring.

Aid for the "Flag."

Everyone loves the Flag. The Flag receives presents from everyone: from the banker to the lowly vender of peanuts, who, with a voice choking with emotion, exclaims "God bless you, sir," as he thrusts a sample of his stock into the editor's hand. On Thursday, the Flag received three presents. J. J. Knowlton, so well-known so many newspaper men and printers in this city, presented an "historic inkstand" to the Flag, an inkstand into which, the Flag says, pens had been dipped by such shining lights of literature as Frank Soule, Rockwell, C. B. McDonald and John R. Ridge. We understand that the Flag does not intend to send this "historic inkstand" to Washington, but will "hang on to it." It intends to abolish jugs in the office, and depend entirely for inspiration on this "historic inkstand." It says:

"Be it, then, for the present owner to keep down the Tartarean imp that may be lurking within, ready to pop out and let fly his stinging darts to wound the sensibilities and embitter the existence of those who deserve to be happy. Be it rather the well-spring whence may flow the gentler sentiments of Friendship, Love and Truth; of Faith, Hope and Charity, of Peace on Earth and Good will to men."

The next present the Flag received, this lucky Thursday, was some delicious "national ink" to put in its "historic inkstand," and finally it received a bunch of flowers from a little girl called Lillie. The Flag is now reaping the reward of its quiet behavior, and we feel assured is convinced it is much more comfortable to be "good" than to be wicked. Thoughtless and cruel people say that the Flag is so sick that it ought to be "good."

Captain Worden's Reception.

Captain Worden, the hero of the Monitor-fame (we will not repeat the description of this naval engagement which has been worked into so many notices of Captain Worden) has experienced the honor of being reviewed by the citizens of San Francisco, But why should the reporter of the Alta work himself up into a fit of glorification, and deliver himself regarding, not the gallant captain, but San Francisco and her noble people thus:

"He now revisits under very different circumstances the rich and powerful city which has so magically sprung into existence from the rude hamlet it was when he first saw it.

San Francisco, never a laggard in testifying its appreciation of genuine merit, through her chief dignitaries placed at his disposal the use of her civic temple, in which to receive the congratulations of the people, who nobly availed themselves of the opportunity."

In an article apparently devoted to the naval hero, how skillfully is a eulogy thus worked in of the citizens of our noble city. "Citizens who nobly availed themselves of the opportunity!" How noble on the part of our noble citizens! Not a word is said either regarding the captain's personal appearance. But this deficiency is amply atoned in the mention made of Sergeant Blitz "in dress coat, lilac gloves and bearing his official baton." Who is particular about hearing aught of Captain Worden when Sergeant Blitz chooses to make his appearance in a dress coat, lilac gloves and official baton? The city first and her distinguished guest afterward. Always look out for number one.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Wide-spread affliction and dismay has been caused by the mysterious disappearance of one of the most respected members of the Eureka Typographical Union. For the past three weeks his many friends have sought him and have been utterly unable to gain any clue to his fate It is feared that he may have been murdered. Jack, George J. Foster's dog, was the handsomest, most intelligent and gentlemanly dog in San Francisco. He never passed an old friend without recognizing him, and, on the other hand, was ready to use his teeth when insulted by some degraded biped's venturing on undue familiarity with him. If the Pound-master has slain Jack, let him never pray more. There is no pardon for such a sin. "Gentleman Jack" is no more seen on the street, and his many friends mourn his loss. At the time of his disappearance, he was between five and six years of age.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

AMONG the most entertaining of recent publications, is the volume containing the memoirs and correspondence of Madame Récamier. Besides furnishing very agreeable reading, the book is exceedingly valuable for the new light it sheds upon the characters of many distinguished men. The correspondence consists, in great part, of letters from personages who are now historical. Victor Hugo, Queen Hortense, Madame de Stoël, General Bernadotte, Wellington, Chateaubriand, and Lucien Buonaparte, are a few of the great names that figure in these memoirs and correspondence. As may be imagined, the volume abounds in anecdote and gossip, but the anecdote possesses a value beyond its power to interest or amuse, and the gossip is of the quality that helps us to a better understanding of history.

Madame Récamier (neé Bernard) was born in Lyons, in the year 1777, and was the daugther of a notary, who is described as a man of "handsome person, narrow capacity, and of feeble character." Her mother was a singularly beautiful blonde, lively and spirituelle, clever and graceful; she had a great faculty for business, engaging in successful speculations, and amassing a fortune. The daughter was sent to a convent to be educated, where she remained until her parents removed to Paris. When a mere child, the little Julie gave promise of the rare beauty for which she was afterwards distinguished, and it is to be wondered at that she was not spoiled by the admiration which it inspired.

HER MARRIAGE.

Of her mysterious marriage, Madame Récamier's biographer thus speaks:

"In 1793, M. Récamier asked for the hand of Juliette Bernard. He was forty-two, and she but fifteen, yet she received his addresses without either fear or reluctance. Madame Bernard thought it her duty to lay before her daughter all the objections to a marriage involving such disparity of age. But Juliette had known M. Récamier for several years; he had always been kind and gracious to her as a child—giving her her prettiest playthings; and, having no doubt that he would prove to her a very indulgent husband, she accepted the future that was offered her, without the least apprehension. Moreover, the tie between them was never anything but a nominal tie. Madame Récamier received from her husband only his name. This fact may create astonishment, but I am not bound to explain it. I have only to bear witness to the truth of a statement which could have been confirmed by all M. and Madame Récamier's intimate friends. M. Récamier's relations to his wife were of a strictly paternal character. He treated the young and innocent girl who bore his name, like a daughter whose beauty charmed his eyes, and whose celebrity flattered his vanity. They were married in Paris, the 24th of April, 1793.

This marriage took place at the hight of the Reign of Terror, at the darkest hour of the revolution, the very year of the murder of the king and queen. All society was then broken up, and all relationships annihilated. The sole care of each person was to bury himself in oblivion, so as to escape, if it were possible, the fate incessantly overtaking his friends and neighbors."

HER WONDERFUL BEAUTY.

For four years after her marriage, Madame Récamier lived in seclusion, not going into society. During this period she seemed to have emerged from childhood into the full splendor of early womanhood. Her personal attractions, and their effects, are thus described:

"A figure, flexible and elegant; a well-poised head; throat and shoulders of admirable form and proportions; beautiful arms, though somewhat small; a little rosy mouth; pearly teeth; black hair, that curled naturally; a delicate and regular nose, but bien-francais; an incomparable brilliancy of complection; a frank, arch face, rendered irresistibly lovely from its expression of goodness; a carriage slightly indicative of both indolence and pride, so that to her might be applied St. Simon's compliment to the Duchess of Burgundy:

'Her step was like that of a goddess on clouds.'

Such was Madame Récamier at eighteen.

Wherever she went, her beauty called forth a murmur of admiration, curiosity, and enthusiasm. The success of a woman did not depend at that time on the decision of an exclusive society that the revolution had swept away. Salon life no longer existed. People met each other only in public, at the theaters, in gardens, and subscription balls; and at all the places, Madame Récamier's presence was looked upon as an event. It was the epoch of a very decided revival of art, which, through the influence of David and his school, had extended to all ranks, affecting, in its idolatry of beauty, pagan forms. All these circumstances will serve to explain the quickness with which the beauty of Madame Récamier became not only famous but popular. Among many instances of the enthusiasm she excited, I shall cite but one.

When public worship was re-established, Madame Récamier was solicited to hand around the purse at St. Roch, for some charitable object. She consented; and, when the time came for the collection, the church was crowded to overflowing. People mounted on chairs, pillars, on the altars of the side-chapels, and it was with the utmost difficulty, that the object of all this excitement, protected by two gentlemen, could penetrate the crowd, and hand round the purse. The collection amounted to twenty thousand francs."

The first time she saw Napoleon was on the occasion of a triumphal fête, given by the Directory in 1797, in honor of the return of the conqueror of Italy, when she divided the attention of the crowd with the hero of the day, a circumstance which seems to have excited his jealousy. "She was greeted," says her biographer, "with a long murmur of admiration. This sound did not escape Buonaparte. He turned his head quickly to see what it was that could divert attention from him, the hero of the assembly. He perceived a young woman dressed in white; and he gave her so harsh a look, that she hastily sat down."

SHE FASCINATES THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

No one, who is not an Englishman, can read the life of the accidental victor of Waterloo, without being disabused of the idea that he was in the better sense, a great man. Some of his characteristic traits are well illustrated in the following incidents narrated by Madame Récamier's biographer:

"Madame Récamier was undoubtedly flattered by the homage paid her by the Duke of Wellington; but all his military glory and political importance could not make her think him either animated or interesting, and, no matter what Madame de Staël may have said, she did not try to exert an influence which, without a doubt, she could have easily obtained over the English general.

When he called to see her the day after the battle of Waterloo, she confesses that this unexpected visit disturbed her. It was her patriotism that was wounded; and this feeling was the more honorable in one who, having been proscribed by Buonaparte, had a right to rejoice in the defeat of her persecutor. The duke mistook the cause of her emotion; he attributed it to enthusiasm, and, therefore, said to her, alluding to Napoleon, 'I have given him a good beating.' This remark, from the lips of a man like Lord Wellington, disgusted Madame Recamier; and she closed her door upon him. A boastful temper, it must be acknowledge, was not a characteristic of the duke; but, at this period of his career, he did not escape the intoxication of success. It may, perhaps, be remembered, that, after the battle of Waterloo, he had the royal box of the opera opened, from which he, with his aides-de camp, would have witnessed the play, had not the indignant murmurs of the pit warned him af the impropriety he was committing.

I find among the notes, rightly termed 'insignificont,' from the conqueror of Waterloo, the one referring to M'lle de Lespinasse's letters. The style and spelling do not show in this hero any great command of the French language:

Paris, October 20 1814

J' étais tout heir á la chasse, madame; et je n'ai reçu votre billet et les livres qu'á la nait, quand c' était trop tard pour vous répondre. J'espérais que mon jugement serait guide par lo votre dans ma leclure des letires de M'lle Espinasse et je désespèrce pouvoir le former moiméme. Je vous suis bien oblige pour la pamphlete de Mme. de Staël. Votre très-obeissant et fidèle serviteur. WELLINGTON.

[TRANSLATION.]

I was away hunting all day yesterday, madame; and I did not receive your note and the books until evening, when it was too late to reply to you. I was hoping that my judgment would be guided by yours in reading M'lle Espinasse's letters, and I despair of being able to form one myself. I am very much obliged to you for Madame de Staël's pamphlet,

Your very obedient and faithful servant,

WELLINGTON.

LUCIEN BUONAPARTE ENAMORED.

The woman who could venture to "shut her door" upon the Duke of Wellington, just after the battle of Waterloo, was, of course, an exceptional member of her sex. But she had long before repelled the advances of a still more embarassing admirer.

"In the Spring of 1799, Madame Récamier, already established at Clichy, accepted an invitation to dinner for her husband and herself from M. Sapey, at Bagatelle Among the guests was Lucien Buonaparte, who was immediately impressed with Madame Récamier's beauty, and made no effort to disguise his admiration. He accompanied her in a walk through the gardens of Bagatelle, and, when she left, asked and obtained permission to visit her at Clichy. He presented himself there the next day.

Lucien Buonaparte was, at that time, twenty-four years old. His features were regular, but less strongly marked than those of Napoleon, whom he resembled. He was taller than his brother; and, though he was near-sighted, his smile and expression were pleasant. Bambastic and every consequential. he showed, by his manner, that he was sensible of the growing greatness of his family. He did everything for effect; and while his dress was carefully studied, it was not in good taste.

His passion for Récamier developed rapidly, and he was not slow in devising a means to express it. There is something in extreme youth and innocence that daunts the boldest man. Madame Recamier had not only never loved, but this was the first time that she saw herself the object of passion. On receiving a first love-letter, she was for awhile a little disturbed; but her instinct of womanly dignity, and the complete indifference she felt for Lucien, almost immediately suggested to her the proper line of conduct to pursue.

Lucien had given to his declaration the form of a literary composition. Madame Récamier determined not to understand the epistle of Romeo's, and gave it back to him the next day, in the presence of others, praising the talent of the author, but advising him to reserve himself for higher objects, and not waste in works of imagination, the time which he might more usefully devote to politics. Lucien was not discouraged by the ill success of his romantic fiction. He renounced his borrowed name, and wrote letters to Madame Récamier, in which he spoke openly of his ardent passion. She then saw, that the only thing for her to do was to show the letter to her husband, and ask his counsel and support. She wanted to forbid Lucien Buonaparte the house, and proposed to M. Récamier to do so. He commended the virtue of his young wife, thanked her for her confidence, and begged her to continue to act with the same prudence and wisdom she had already shown; but represented to her, that to close his door upon the brother of General Buonaparte, and openly to break with a man in so high a position, would seriously compromise, and perhaps ruin his banking house. He concluded by saying, that it would not do to drive Lucien to despair; yet, at the same time, she must not grant him nothing."

SNODGRASS IMPEACHED.

A gentleman signing himself "W. A. Chandos Fulton, writes a letter to the New York Weekly Review, in which he says: 'In an exceedingly interesting and graphic, though rather highly-colored account of 'Poe's Death and Burial,' which appeared in the March number of Beadle's Monthly, as a sort of addendum to Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith's able and valuable paper on his his life, character, and genius, Dr. Snodgrass says he 'was one of only three, or perhaps four, persons—not counting the undertaker and the drivers of the hearse and a single carriage, which made the entire funeral train of the author of 'The Raven'—who followed the body to the grave.'

Poe's biographers have little to say on the subject of his death and burial. What have they much to say about, save that which might well have been left unmentioned? It is quite probable, therefore, that Mr. Snodgrass' account will be accepted by future biographers; and, if report be true, there are no less than half a dozen gentlemen engaged, at the present time, upon the life of Edgar Poe.

[Accept, dear readers, Mrs. Oakes Smith's suggestion, and hereafter drop the name Allan. The late Mr. Willis never mentioned it. Why, I fancy, is obvious.]

There is another account of Poe's burial, from which it would appear that Mr Snodgrass took no part in the obsequies at all. This account is furnished by Henry Herring, in a letter to the editor of the Baltimore American. Mr. Herring (undoubtedly the 'Mr. H——' alluded to by Dr. Snodgrass, in the first part of his letter) was an uncle of Poe; he married Eliza Poe, the sister of David Poe, Jr., father of the author of "The Raven." Mr. Herring says: 'I furnished a neat mahogany coffin, and Mr. Nelson Poe the hack and hearse. Mr. Nelson Poe, Judge Nelson, and myself, together with Charles Suter, the undertaker, were the only persons attending his funeral.'

Clearly one of these gentlemen is cursed with a treacherous memory. Or is there some ill-will between Messrs. Herring and Snodgrass—that causes the former to ignore the latter, and the latter to merely indicate the former by his initial?"

THE AUTHOR OF "ST. ELMO."

It seems that Miss Augusta J. Evans, the "great Southern authoress," has been accused of being "an infidel." A reverend gentleman, from the peculiarities of whose style, and the felicity of his Latin quotations, we should infer that he too might be one of the luminaries of Southern literature, comes to the rescue of the lady in an article in the Louisville Journal, and emphatically denies the charge. He says:

"Some of my friends have suggested that Miss Evans is an infidel, or inclined to be one.

No! no!! no!!! She is no 'beautiful tyrant! fiend angelica!!' She is a Christian, and 'Beulah' is a Christian book.

Go on Sabbath to St. Francis street Methodist Church, Mobile, Alabama. You will find an elegant church, a fine, intellectual looking congregation, in the pulpit, a man whose personnel, voice, rhetoric, logic—all will impress you, and a fine choir led by Miss Augusta J. Evans.

Instead of her being an infidel, such as DeQuincy depicts in Mrs. Lee, making her scepticisms 'buoyant by the gay feathering of many splendid accomplishments,' she is a meek Methodist—a Martha at the feet of Jesus. There is nothing transcendental about Miss Evans. She don't affect to be an angel. She is purely humanly—womanly.

She dresses plainly, talks unaffectedly, suits her conversation to her company, and overwhelms you with the idea of her exceeding common sense. She can talk to you in all the modern language and all the terminology of metaphysics, but she won't unless you have an ear for it. She can give a man of antiquarian taste an inkling of all the traditionary lore of Tarquius, Korans, Richter, etc.; but if you prefer she will talk to you about the morning paper or the raising of vegetables. She will sit down to the piano, if you like music, and sing psalms or ballads, or play funeral marches or quicksteps, as you may prefer. She is one the very finest performers on the piano. Miss Evans rises with the lark, and is fully as cheerful. She helps her mother adjust the household, and has an eye to the domestic literary education of her younger sisters, of whom there are several.

A life-like portrait of our rare talented countrywoman will grace the American department in the grand Exposition at Paris. Thither, too, our authoress, in propria personnæ, will bend her steps, herself the noblest contribution America can make to the World's Fair. Miss Evans is now a fine healthy woman, about twenty-seven years of age. Possessed of a high order of intellect, a refined taste, a softness of manner, a tenderness of heart, and a trustful Christian faith, she is, indeed, a queenly woman."

The reverend gentleman further states that Miss Evans is now "devoting the high energies of her nature" to the erection of a monument (to cost $20,000) to the memory of the Confederate dead; also, that her home, "though not palatial, is tastefully rural," and that it is "the literary Mecca toward which high and noble natures turn their footsteps." All this doubtless is highly creditable to the qualities of Miss Evans' "head and heart," but it would seem as though, in consideration of the starving multitudes of the South, it might be as well to "devote the high energies of her nature," and the $20,000 alluded to, to the relief of the Confederate living, rather than the glorification of the Confederate dead.

SATURDAY notes—our salaries.

SATURN.

'TIS noon's bright stillness—on the cliff he lies;
Within his dreamy ears a hushing sound
Of distant waves; the air and arching skies
Seem breathing ceaseless sighs that die around.

Far down, a summer plain of waters spreads,
Blue from the deep horizon to the bay,
Where the white marge of ocean's mantle sheds
In lacy folds the seeming silent spray.

Round him the solitudes of sun-warm downs,
The close minute-flowered turf, more soft than moss,
Whose breeze-blown wilds the blazing day embrowns,
Haunt of the light blue wing that flits across.

O'er the wide pavement of the seas below,
No eyes but his with such lulled pleasure look;
Time knows no other of his shinging brow,
His life on Time's vast sands the single brook.

What shall he do who ne'er beheld his like,
But watch the deep to violet change and green;
Or note the sudden gust descend and strike,
Setting the fretted swell with diamonds keen.

Approaching voice or step he ne'er hath heard;
The chalk's white hastions huilt upon the sea
Send forth the skimming, glossy purpled bird,
The night-black cormorant, or velvet bee.

The rush of some sea-monster breaks the deeps
Into white flashes of the quarried blue;
The shoal in darkly-rippling thousands leaps,
Or stoops on long gray wings the snowy mew.

And this is all.—Within his mind he turns,
Pacing its mighty courts, a silent life,
A searching soul, the lonely flame that burns
Before great Jove, or earth's Titanic strife.

CHARLES DICKENS AS A READER.

A WELL-KNOWN American actor, sojourning in London, sends home a description of a reading by the great novelist, from which we take a brief extract. The letter was first published in the Boston Transcript: "The personal appearance of the man was an object of the greatest curiosity to me, and I was somewhat surprised when, with a nervous, hurried step, yet easy, self-possessed manner, a gentleman, with grayish hair and eyes, a deeply-lined face, with heard and moustaches of gray, appeared upon the rostrum before me. My heart was in my throat, and I was so fully contented with the sight of the man, that I could have accepted that pleasure alone as my entertainment. There was a slight buzz of inattention from the numerous and very fashionable house; but it would have done you good had you seen how, with a look and a long pause, he silenced and subdued even the haughty aristocrats to who Mr. Dickens is 'not a gentleman.' He was their lord, then. He began with his Christmas story of 'Dr. Marigold,' which, I am happy to say, I had not before read (thus I had a double pleasure), and I cannot pretend to describe how gracefully and charmingly he passed from the humorous to the serious parts of the story, causing a laugh, or drawing a tear at will. He seemed himself to enjoy the good points, and at times paused to laugh, with the most winning of faces, at a good point, or to wipe away a tear, as he told of the return of 'Sophy' and her child. Had you heard the expression he threw into the words, 'in a cart,' it would have given a new meaning to the story.

"Critically speaking, I should say that Mr. Dickens is not an elocutionist. His voice lacks moderation, and is harsh in the upper notes; his great merit consists in the enthusiasm with which he reads—a certain facility of expression about the mouth and eyes—and, of course, a thorough knowledge of the subject; he does not consult his notes at all, but recites from memory. The audience was a tremendous one, every part of the vast hall was filled, and the toilets of the nobility were very fine. Altogether, neither Morly or myself will soon forget this evening's pleasure. I could not go to bed without sitting down to say to you all I felt on seeing and hearing a man we both so much admire."

BEAUTY OF OLD PEOPLE.—Men and women make their own beauty, or their own ugliness. Lord Lytton speaks of a man "who was uglier than he had any business to be;" and, if he could but read it, every human being carries his life in his face, and is good-looking, or the reverse, as that life has been good or evil. On our features the fine chisel of thought and emotion are eternally at work. Beauty is not the monopoly of blooming young men and of white and pink maids. There is a slow-growing beauty, which only comes to perfection in old age. Grace belongs to no period of life, and goodness improves the longer it exists.

THE young Lord Belgrave, grandson of the Marquis of Westminster, is thirteen years old, and, if he lives to inherit his patrimony, will be the richest man, by far, in the world. When what is now the fashionable section of London, known as Belgravia, was but a sheep-farm, the first marquis was leasing lots at ninety-nine years. By the time the heir to the Westminster estates attains his majority all these leases will lapse, thereby adding an almost incomputable amount of ground rent to the estate. The present income of the property is said to be £1,000 a day; ten years hence, it will be worth ten or twenty times this amount!

HONEYMOONSHINE.

A PROSE BALLAD.

My own!

Well, I'm not so sure of that. Of course, I don't mean to say that there was anything incorrect about the bans, or that there is any flaw in the contract; but you see Clara never would give up the portrait of that insipid idiot, Cousin Gus Not that I am jealous of Gus; but Clara has never asked me to give her my carte de visite; and then there is Clara's sweet-tempered maternal, who is continually hinting, since we came back from Geneva, that I shall be her daughter's death. Why did I not at first make sure that Clara was an orphan before I followed her cab home from that ball?

It was a charming ball all the same. or I should say, anyhow. When you know that a girl's card is full for every dance, and when the girl—who must be pretty, or her card would not fill—gives you to understand that she will throw over any number of waltzers rather than leave you outside, it is enough to make any man's head turn. And on that occasion wherever she went my eyes followed; and as my eyes were only capable of limited volution, my head turned, and no one came in or out of the ball room without my looking up to see if it was Clara. Of course, I did not call her Clara then. I think it was the lemon-ice so happily married to a glass of champagne that did it.

My own! my beautiful!

Well, I am not so sure about that, either. I thought any quantity of false, black hair, would fail to deceive me. But Clara had a way of towzling her chignon which would have caught Truefitt himself; and when I first discovered that hairy lump of vanity attached to that very comb I had so often wished, in sportive mood, to pull out surreptitiously, that I might behold in all their wavy splendor those locks that—those locks that were a continual feast to my craving eyes—when, I say, I discovered the feast to be a movable one, I felt much as I do on arriving at the sea shore on some sunny day, when I have pictured to myself a calm sea and a prospcrous voyage equal to Mendelssohn's, and find a nasty droppy swell that would upset an East Indiaman or unhinge a black cook.

My beautiful! my true!

Well, I am not altogether certain of that either. What a fuss Clara's mother used to make about her girl's complexion! I never felt the force then of her lamentations about what it had cost her—Heaven knew—to bring up her girls. It will cost me a great deal more to bring Clara down. By the way, my wife said that was tooth-powder which I saw in the drawer where that ghastly back-hair was lying; lying is the word. Now, I've a shrewd notion tooth-powder ought not to be labelled, "Madame Leah's Blush-reviver." That reminds me, I never saw till the other day that miniature of Clara in her girlish days. Why, her hair was nearly black then! Can it really be that living in the country and going out without a hat on can turn black hair to gold? Gold! Well, I don't know that I should call it gold now, but it certainly is an unhealthy straw color. I have observed, toward the end of the week, the roots of her hair seem darker. I must find out that, too. After all, I may be doing her a wrong.

My own! my devoted one!

Am I quite certain of that, too? Of course, I never supposed wives were created to look after buttons. Adam, lucky dog, had no shirts to want them. That's a mere joke that those funny writers who are still bachelors will have; but I had expected—I've no doubt is was foolish—that some one would think now and then, say on Sundays, about making my tea in the morning, I had so often pictured to myself the domestic charm of a breakfast tete a tete—you will say it was weak of me—pressing her to take this, and being amiably forced to try that. Of course, it would be unreasonable to expect to have everything. Then there's Clara's health; so I must not complain if she does breakfast in bed; at least so the doctor says. And then again, how I enjoy a little music in the evening, just when a good glass of claret and a slice of saddle have put me into a good-humored calm, which a little more would turn to a siesta! Clara will sing when that irrepressible obstacle, Cousin Gus is here. He is a connoisseur; but I don't understand music. No; but I used to adore Clara when she sang "Per che" something, and still could go on my knees to her when she condescends to open her larynx; but she never does when we are alone—at least not musically.

My treasure still! my ever-loved!

Well, I think it is not quite so. I am sure I was much more spooney on—well, I won't mention names; but if she hadn't thrown me over—heartless creatures they all are—I should never have followed Clara's cab home from the ball. Ah, how different that would have been! But it's no use making oneself miserable. I don't suppose it makes any difference to her; her husband's a baronet now, and she has four horses and a large family. No, Clara, I won't! It is wrong, very wrong. I won't think of her; only of you, dearest. There's that mother coming to stay the week. The week! Last time it lasted seven months. That was before marriage. What will it be this time! I fear I am not young enough to apply for a queen's messengership; but I might emigrate to the Salt Lake.

My own forever!

THE CEMETERIES OF PARIS.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, writing from Paris, describes the cemeteries of that city:

There are only three cemeteries in Paris, the largest and most celebrated of which is the Pere Lachaise, so called from having been owned by the Jesuit confessor, of Louis XIV., Lachaise, who possessed a country residence on its site. The grounds are about two hundred acres in extent, and, though used as a cemetery only about sixty years, the place is now as crowded as any part of old Paris. The visitor realizes at once the appropriateness of calling it "a city of the dead," for it is laid out with paved streets and little sidewalks, very much like the great live city whose dead it shelters. Over the greater portion of the tombs are built little chapels of marble, with doors of open iron-work or stained glass, and fitted up inside with altar, crucifix and candles, and one or two chairs, according to the size of the chapel.

There are, besides, a great many magnificent monuments, but nearly all the graves, except those with only a simple and unpretending headstone, have the peculiarity I have mentioned. From an eminence at the back of the cemetery we obtained the finest view of Paris, but in the foreground were the crowded streets of the dead city, suggesting reflections which were, I hope, appropriate to the spot. There are over twenty thousand monuments in the grounds. If I were to undertake to mention the names of eminent personages whose remains repose here, I should have no room left in this letter for anything else. We had only time to visit a few of the most remarkable monuments, and I have not room even to speak of all these. The most interesting spot in the place is the tomb of Abelard and Heloise, which is a gothic chapel of considerable size, in the style of the thirteenth century, formed out of the ruins of the Abbey of Paraclete, of which Abelard was the founder, and Heloise the first abbess.

The chapel contains the sarcophagus which was constructed by the order of Abelard shortly before his death. It represents the ill-fated pair lying side by side. It is a practice with lovers to visit this grave and decorate it with fresh flowers and wreaths, and it was thickly covered with these offerings when we saw it. Nearly all the tombs, indeed, were decorated with flowers and wreaths of yellow immortelles. We walked through the quarter set apart as a burial place for the Jews, and stopped at the tomb of the actress Rachel, which, like so many of the others, was a chapel, though of rather larger size than the average. The walls were entirely covered with names of visitors scratched on the stone—a very unpleasant sight; yet I dare say a compliment was intended by every one who took the trouble to inscribe his name.

SCANDAL.—The way in which some good sorts of people are betrayed into scandal is not by forging a false story, but by telling what they do not know to be true. There is not so much lying in the world, as the want of solicitude about the truth. Another tosses the firebrand to us and we toss it along. Let such people remember a sentence of Barrow: "There is no great difference between the great devil that frameth scandalous reports, and the little imps that run about and disperse them."

WHEN the modest Alexander Dumas was about to be examined as a witness at a trial in Rouen, he was asked his name and profession. After giving the former, the meek author added—that were he not in the birth-place of the great Corneille, he would have called himself a dramatist! "Sir," said the finely ironical Judge, "do not hesitate, there are degrees in everything."

OLD Tom, a spirited New York actor, while visiting a brother artist who lodged in the seventh story, at the top of the Thespian House, was internally affected by a sling—not of "outrageous fortunes," but of Schiedam gin. He avowed that the draught was highly exciting, andexceedingly mellow-dram-attic.

ALL mental growth is organization, not accretion; it comes from within outwards, and does not consist in enlargement by external application—aggregation.

ADVERSITY has ever been considered as the state in which a man most easily becomes acquainted with himself—particularly, being free from flatterers.

AT Wallack's Theater in New York, a new drama by Boucicault—"The Flying Scud"—is in preparation.

"Speech is silver, but silence is golden." Hence the expression, hush-money.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XIII.—"CRUEL AS THE GRAVE."

HAD Stewart Routh had the least suspicion of the extent or his wife's knowledge of his life at Homburg, he could not have been lulled into the false security in which he indulged on his return to London. He perceived, indeed, that Harriet closely noted the state of his spirits, and silently observed his actions. But he was used to that. Harriet had no one to think of but him, had nothing to care about but him; and she had always watched him. Pleasantly, gayly, before;—coldly, grimly, now; but it was all the same thing.

He had told her little concerning his schemes, but she considered this reticence due to her own withdrawal from her former active participation in the business of his life, and it was an additional inducement to her to hope Routh was taking the resolution which she desired. "When we get back back to London, I will think about it," he had said, and she clung to the hope, to the half promise in the words. He was surely settling affairs, so as to enable him to avoid the bursting of the storm. The tacit estrangement between them would account for his doing this silently; his vile temper, which Harriet thoroughly understood, and never failed to recognize in action, would account for his denying her the relief of knowing his intentions. Many small things in his daily life, which did not escape the quickened perception of his wife, betokened a state of preparation for some decided course of action. The time of explanation must necessarily come; meanwhile, she watched, and waited, and suffered.

The inevitable end drawing near, and Harriet had been utterly unprepared for the second shock, the second unexpected event which had befallen. She had opened George Dallas' letter with the Paris postmark almost without apprehension. The time for the thing she feared had not yet come; and here was a thing she had never feared, a possibility which had never presented itself to her imagination, brought at once fully before her. She had done this. One moment's want of caution, in the midst of a scene in which her nerves had been strung to the highest tension, and this had been the result. Had no other clew existed, these few lines of writing would furnish one leading unerringly to discovery. Supposing no other clew to exist, and Routh to pretend to inability to identify the writing, there were several common acquaintances of Dallas and Deane who could identify it, and render a refusal the most dangerous step which Routh could take.

She sat for several minutes perfectly still, her face colorless as marble, and her blue eyes fixed with a painful expression of terror, under the shock of this new discovery. She had had no worse apprehension than that the letter would announce the day of George's intended return, and for that she was prepared; but this! It was too much for her: and the first words she uttered showed that her mind had lost its strict faculty of reasoning: they broke from her with a groan,—

"I — I it is who have destroyed him!"

But, even now, weakness and exaggeration had no long duration in Harriet Routh's mind. By degrees she saw this in its true light, an alarming, a terrible coincidence indeed, an addition to the danger of their position, but not necessarily a fatal catastrophe. Then she saw new light, she caught at a new idea, a fresh, bright hope. This would avail with Routh; this would drive away his irresolution; this would really inspire him with the true conviction of their danger; this, which would throw the whole burden of identification upon him; this, which would establish a strong and intimate link between him and the dead man; for the "articles to be purchased" named in the memorandum of which George had sent her a copy were simply shares in companies, with every one of which Stewart Routh was connected. Only George's ignorance of such matters had prevented his recognizing the meaning of the memorandum.

And now Harriet rose; and as she paced the room, the color came back to her cheek, the light came back to her eyes. A new life and fresh energy seemed to spring up within her, and she grasped George's letter in her hand, and struck it against her bosom with an action of the hand and a responsive movement of the breast which was almost triumphant. This thing which she had done, which had looked like ruin, would be her way of escape.

Routh's refusal to return home immediately annoyed, puzzled, and disheartened her. Why was he so hard to move, so difficult to convince, so insensible to danger? His plea was business; if this business was what she hoped and believed it to be, that of preparation, he should have come home to learn the new and urgent need for its expedition. Why was he so hard to her? Why had he not thought for her wishes, no compassion on her suspense? Harriet could not but ask herself that, though she strove against the deadly suffering the answer brought her.

Thus the time wore on drearily, until Harriet carelessly took from the table the slip of paper which contained a whole revelation for her.

Of the hours which succeeded she could not have given an account herself. How the fury of jealousy, of love betrayed, of faith violated, was reawakened within her, and inflamed to the wildest and most desperate pitch; how she writhed under the shame and the scorn which her husband's baseness forced her to feel. She had had profoundest pity, readiest help, for the criminal; but for this pitiful, cowardly, cruel liar nothing but contempt—nothing. Ah! yes, something more, and that made it all the harder—coutempt and love.

This woman was here, then—here, in London, on the spot to ruin him, lured hither by him. His false heart planned, his guilty hands dug the pit into which he was to fall; and now his feet were close upon the brink. This rendered him deaf and blind; for this he had basely deceived her, his best, his only friend; for this he had come to regard and treat her as his enemy; and now Harriet had to make a desperate effort indeed to rally all her strength and courage. She had to put the suffering aside, to let all her hopes go, to face a new and almost desperate condition of affairs, and to think how he was to be saved. It must be in spite of himself. This time, it must be in defiance of himself.

She had passed through a long period of suffering—if time is to be measured by pain—before Routh came home. She had not nearly thought it out; she had only reached a resolution to be patient and peaceful, and to conceal her knowledge of his treachery if any effort could give her the strength to do so, when she heard his key in the lock, and the next moment his hand on the door handle.

There was confusion in the expression of Routh's shifty black eyes, some embarrassment in the tone of his voice. They were slight; but she saw and understood them. Her heart gave one angry bound under the paper which lay securely in her bosom, but her steady face took no change from the pulsation.

"Sorry I couldn't get back. I got away as soon as I could," said Routh, as he threw aside his coat and put his hat down. Harriet pushed a chair toward him, and he sat down before she answered—

"I am sorry, too, Stewart. I can hardly think any business can have equaled in importance such an occurrence as this."

She put George Dallas' letter into his hand, and eagerly watched him, while, with a face convulsed by anger, hatred, and all unholy passions, he read it.

If she could have seen his heart! If she could have read the devilish project that filled it! If she could have seen that in the discovery of the new and urgent danger he had seen, not blind to that danger indeed, but catching at the chance included in it, a means of realizing his atrocious plot against her! If she could have distinguished, amid the surging, passionate thoughts and impulses which raged within him, this one, which each second made more clear—

"This is my opportunity. All is settled, all is right; she and I are safe. I have triumphed, and this cursed letter gives me a better chance than any that I could have formed or made. This infernal idiot is always my curse and my dupe; however, he has done me a good turn this time."

If Harriet, watching the changes in her husband's countenance, could have read these thoughts, she might have interpreted aright the ferocity which blazed in his wicked eyes, while a cynical sneer curled his lip, as he flung the letter violently on the floor, starting up from his chair.

Harriet had seen Routh in a passion more than once, though only once had that passion been directed against herself, and she was not a woman, even when its victim, to be frightened by a man's temper. But she was frightened now, really and truly frightened, not, however, by the violence of his rage, but because she did not believe in it. She did not understand his game; she saw he was playing one; why he feigned this fury she could not comprehend, but she knew it was feigned, and she was frightened. Against complicated deception of this kind she was powerless. She could not oppose successful art to the ingenious skill with which he was courting his own ruin, to save him. She could not disentangle this thought from the confusion in her brain; she felt only its first thrill of conviction, she only shrank from it with swift, sharp, physical pain, when Routh turned upon her with a torrent of angry and fierce reproaches.

"This is your doings," he said, the violence of his assimulated anger hurrying his words, and rendering them almost unintelligible. "I owe it to you that this cursed fool has me in his power, if the idiot only finds it out, and knows how to use it, more securely than I ever had him in mine. This is your skill and your wisdom: your caution and your management, is it? Like a fool, I trusted a woman—you were always so sure of yourself, you know, and here's the result. You keep this pretty piece of conviction in your desk, and produce it just in the nick of time. I don't wonder you wanted me home, I don't wonder you were in such a hurry to give me such a proof of your boasted cleverness."

Her clear blue eyes were upon him; his restless black eyes shifted under her gaze, but could not escape it. She did not release him for an instant from that piercing look, which became, with each word he spoke, more and more alight with scorn and power. The steady look maddened him, the feigned passion changed to real rage, the man's evil face paled.

She slightly raised her hand, and pointed to the chair he had left; he kicked it savagely away. She spoke, her hand still extended. "Stewart, I do not understand you, but I am not taken in by you. What are you aiming at? Why are you pretending to this violent and unreasonable anger?"

"Pretending!" he exclaimed, with an oath; "it is no pretence, as you shall find. Pretending! Woman, you have ruined me, and I say—"

"And I say," she interposed, as she slowly rose, and stood upright before him, her head raised, her steady eyes still mercilessly set on his, "this is a vain and ridiculous pretence. You cannot long conceal its motive from me; whatever game you are playing, I will find it out."

"Will you, by —— ?" he said, fiercely.

"I will, for your own sake," she answered, calmly. And, standing before him, she touched him lightly on the breast with her small white hand. "Stop! don't speak. I say, for your own sake. You and I, Stewart, who were once one, are two now; but that makes no change in me. I don't reproach you."

"O, don't you?" he said. "I know better. There's been nothing but whining and reproaches lately."

"Now you are acting again, and again I tell you I will find out why. The day of reproach can never— shall never—come; the day of ruin is near, awfully near—"

"You've taken care of that."

"Again! You ought to know me better, Stewart; you can't lie to me undetected. In time I shall know the truth, now I discern the lie. But all this is vain. Read once more." She took up the letter, smoothed it out, and held it toward him. He struck it out of her hand, and cursed her.

She looked at him in blank amazement for a moment, and then said:

"You are not drunk again, Stewart? Your are not mad? If you are not, listen to me, for your fate is rushing upon you. The time may be counted by hours. Never mind my share in this new event, never mind what you really think, or what you pretend to think about it. It makes my appeal to you strong, irresistible. This is no fit of woman's terror; this is no whim, no wish to induce you to desert your harvest-field, to turn your back upon the promise of the only kind of life you care to live. Here is a link in the evidence against you, if suspicion lights upon you (and it must), which is of an incontestable strength. Here, in Arthur Felton's writing, is the memoranda of the shares which you bought, and paid for with Arthur Felton's money. Stewart! Stewart! are you blind and mad, indeed, that you stay here, that you let the precious time escape you, that you dally with your fate? Let us begone, I say; let us escape while we may. George Dallas is not our only foe, not our only danger—formidable, indeed; but remember, Stewart, Mr. Felton comes to seek his son; remember that we have to dread the man's father!"

The pleading in her voice was agonizing in its intensity, the lustrous excitement in her blue eyes was painful, the pallor of her face was frightful. She had clasped her hands round his arm, and the fingers held him like steel fetters. He tried to shake off her hold, but she did not seem aware of the movement.

"I tell you," she continued, "no dream was ever wilder than your hope of escape, if those two men come to London and find you here; no such possibility exists. Let us go; let us get out of the reach of their power."

"By——, I'll put myself out of Dallas' reach by a very simple method, if you don't hold your cursed tongue," said Routh, with such ferocity that Harriet let go her hold of him, and shrank as if he had struck her. "If you don't want me to tell Mr. Felton what has become of his son, and put him on George's trail myself, you'll drop this kind of thing at once. In fact," he said, with a savage sneer, "I hardly think a better way out of our infernal blunder could be found."

"Stewart! Stewart!" She said no more.

"Now listen to me, Harriet," he went on, in furious anger, but in a suppressed tone. "If you are anything like the wise woman you used to be, you won't provoke a desperate man. Let me alone, I tell you,—let me get out of this as I best can. The worst part of it is what you have brought upon me. I don't want George Dallas to come to any serious grief, if I can help it; but if he threatens danger to me, he must clear the way, that's all. I dare say you are very sorry, and all that. You rather took to Master George lately, believed in his prudence, and his mother, and all that kind of thing; but I can't elp that. I never had a turn for sentiment myself; but this ou may be surc of,—only gross blundering can bring anything f the kind about,—if any one is to swing for Deane, it shall e Dallas, and not I."

A strong shudder shook Harriet's frame as she heard her husband's words. But she repressed it, and spoke,—

"You refuse to listen to me, then, Stewart. You will not keep your promise,—your promise which, however vague, I have built upon and lived upon since we left Homburg? You will not 'think of' what I said to you there? Not though it is a thousand times more important now? You will not leave this life, and come away to peace and safety?"

"No, no; a thousand times no!" said Routh, in the wildest fury. "I will not,—I will not! A life of peace and safety; yes, and a life of poverty, and you—" he added in a tone of bitterest scorn and hatred.

A wonderful look came into the woman's face, as she heard his cruel and dastardly words. As the pink had faded into the white upon her cheeks, so now the white deadened into gray,—into an ashen ghostly gray, and her dry lips parted slowly, emitting a heavy sigh.

He made a step or two toward the door, she retreating before him. And when he had almost reached it, she fell suddenly upon her knees, and flung her arms round him with desperate energy.

"Stewart," she said, in a whisper indeed, yet in a voice to be heard amid a whirlwind, "my husband, my love, my life, my darling, don't mind me! Leave me here; it will be safer, better, less suspicious. Go away and leave me. I don't care, indeed. I don't want to go with you. Go alone, and make sure of your safety! Stewart, say you'll go,—say you'll go!"

While she was speaking, he was striving to loosen her hold upon him, but in vain. A short, brief warfare was waged in that moment in his soul. If he softened to her now, if he yielded to her now, all was undone. And yet what love was this,—what strange, and wondrous, and potent kind of love was this? Not the kind of love which had looked at him, an hour or two ago, out of the rich black eyes of the American widow, that had trembled in the tones of her voice. But a vision of the beauty he coveted, of the wealth he needed, of the freedom he panted for, rose before Routh's bewildered brain, and the strife ended. Evil had its own way unchecked henceforth to the end.

He raised his right arm and struck her heavily upon the face; the clasp of her hands gave way, and she sank upon the floor. Then he stepped over her, as she lay prostrate in the doorway, and left the room. When she raised herself she pushed back her hair, and looked round with a dreary amazement upon her troubled face, and she heard the key turned in his dressing-room door.

The day had dawned when Harriet Routh went gently up stairs to her bedroom. She was perfectly calm. She opened the window-shutters and let the light in before she lay down on her bed. Also, she unlocked a box, which she took from her wardrobe, and looked carefully into it, then put it away satisfied. As she closed her eyes, she said, half aloud, "I can do no more; but she can save him, and she shall."

At one o'clock on the following day, Harriet Routh, attired, as usual, in simple but ladylike dress, and presenting an appearance on which the most impertinent of pages would not have dared to cast an imputation, presented herself at No. 4, Hollington Square, Brompton. Mrs. Bembridge lived there: but Mrs. Bembridge was not at home, and would not be at home until late in the evening. Would the lady leave her name? No; but she desired Mrs. Bembridge might be informed that a lady had called, and would call again at the same hour on the morrow, who had found an article of dress lost, at Homberg, by Mrs. Bembridge, and which she would restore to Mrs Bembridge in person, but not otherwise.

As Harriet was returning home, she walked down Piccadilly, and saw Mr. Felton and George Dallas alighting from a cab at the door of the house in which their lodgings had been engaged.

"Very fair, too," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, when she received Harriet's message from her maid, "and very natural she should expect a reward. Ladies often take advantage of that kind of thing to give money to the poor. I shan't grudge anything she may ask in reason, I shall be so glad to get back my golden egg."

To be Continued.

Warm Swimming Baths.—There is nothing more conducive to health and comfort, at this warm season of the year, than frequent bathing. For this reason we call attention to the superior advantages offered to bathers at the Warm Swimming Baths of Mr. Nash, on the corner of Powell and Filbert streets, opposite Washington Square. They are admirably conducted, and are supplied with dressing rooms, bathing dresses, conveniences. On each Wednesday from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M., the baths are reserved exclusively for the lady patrons. Each lady, by the way, must bring her own bathing dress. See advertisement.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works.—Parties wanting fire-proof Doors, Shutters, Bank Vaults, etc., are referred to the card of Mr. John Upstone in to day's paper, who has had eighteen years of California experience in their manufactory. His works are located corner of California and Drumm streets.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

At Maguires Opera House, the Black Crook, though put on the stage in magnificent style, failed to raise the furore which was confidently anticipated. We very much fear that the reason why the Opera House was not crowded last week, was this: The Black Crook, though a very beautiful scenic spectacle, did not satisfy the public, which had its imagination excited beforehand by long accounts of the immorality of the Black Crook as produced in New York. After to-night, this play will be withdrawn. The Black Crook excitement will be speedily forgotten. Only one person in San Francisco has discerned anything immoral in the play, and he had not seen it: Judge Deady was sure that a representation of Paradise with "women lying round loose" must be immoral.

On Monday night, Miss Helen Western, of whose talent and beauty such flattering accounts come to us from the East, will make her first appearance in San Francisco at Maguire's Opera House, as "Cynthia," in the Drama of the Flowers of the Forest, which will be produced with a strong cast, Miss Kate Denin playing "Starlight Bess," Mr. McCullough "The Wolf," Harry Jackson "The Kinchin," and Willie Edouin "Cheap John." The New York Tribune, of July the 13th, thus speaks of Miss Western:

"Miss Helen Western is a young lady who represents a very popular type of beauty, and, therefore, fulfills the principal conditions considered necessary for the effective performance of the French Spy; she is tall, supple and plenteously proportioned from the crown of her head to the soles of her feet. A large audience awaited her first appearance on Monday evening, and large audiences will, doubtless, continue to attend her during her engagement. Her personation of the character of "Mathilde" does not materially differ from the conventional one. It is of the bold, bounding and brawny style. Miss Western, at periods of particular excitement, intensifies the effects similiar to those which Edwin Forrest has inveuted for the expression of emotions too deep for intelligible utterauce. These and other powerful points in the performance were recognized by the audience on Monday night with stormy enthusiasm, and Miss Western was several times called before the curtain to receive pæans from all parts of the house."

The Black Crook will be played this afternoon and evening. The chief artistes of Maguire's Italian Opera Company will arrive on the next steamer, and subscription lists will be opened next week.

William A. Birch, whose capital protean entertainment entitled "A Tour of Europe" pleased all who witnessed it, has been requested by many of our leading citizens, who feel that his talent was not properly brought before the public, to give his entertainment at Dashaway Hall. Accordingly Mr. Birch will unroll his "Tour of Europe, and give his capital impersonations of various eccentric characters on next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings.

On Tuesday evening, Mme. Otille Genee will make her first appearance at the American Theater.

The Guatemala Opera Troupe, otherwise the Bellini Family, arrived by the last steamer. They come consigned to Siguor Bianchi, who will shortly take measures to introduce them to the public.

The Willows Gardens, always a favorite Summer resort, were opened most successfully last Sunday, under the management of Mr. Welch.

During the present oppressively warm weather, the shady groves of Woodward's Gardens are sought by hundreds who are glad to escape from the heat and dust of the city.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy's lectures, at the Mechanics' Institute Hall, are very popular. She will lecture Sunday evening on "The Future State and its conditions from a Spiritualistic Point of View." A lecture will be delivered in the morning, as usual.

The number of visitors to the Anatomical Museum has greatly increased since the advent of fine weather and interior visitors. Strangers seldom fail to visit the Museum.

Touchstone.

California Buggies.—That old established firm, Pollard & Carvill, on Webb street, between Sacramento and California, have been busy for months past in manufacturing to order some of the finest buggies that ever run on wheels for the famed "Dexter" Stables, on Bush street, adjoining the Occidental Hotel. These specimens of California work when placed in competition with the best imported articles received the reward of favorism from the veterans of the turf and the road. They have also received orders from some very fine family and private vehicles.

Philadelphia Brewery.—This, the largest and most complete brewery on the Pacific Coast, is now entering upon its eleventh years' business with a greater popularity than it has ever before enjoyed Messrs. Hoelscher & Wieland, the proprietors, are now brewing near 20,000 barrels of lager beer per month; thus five wagons are scarce y sufficient to deliver their city demand; while orders from the interior and Mexico force them to test the brewing capacity of their immense establishment to its utmost extent. Great is the beverage called "Lager."

The Sick are Cured without medicines better than with them, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

WHEN WOMEN VOTE.

When women vote our stump speakers will have need of change in style. What is to be the salutation? "Fellow-citizens" is too cold: moreover, citizen has acquired a masculine limitation, so much so that, prominent as women were in the French Revolution, the distinction of citoyenne was never lost. We suggest "fellow-creatures," the sex being already used to creature as a term of endearment. The closer the stump orator can bring himself to his audience the better; the formal "ladies and gentlemen" for a beginning would freeze his whole speech to the temperature of a lecture. It will be very necessary to learn, before attempting a political campaign, how women like to be talked to. Married men, especially those who have kept well the respect and affection of their wives, will have the advantage. In fact, the man who has never made love will be good for nothing on the stump. To become a master in the art of stump speaking will need more apprenticeship than passing through the lecture room of a professor of rhetoric. Teachers of elocution will have to revise their rules; Demosthenes and Cicero and Burke and Webster will cease to be useful models, for what is recorded of their sayings were uttered to influence men; if we could get at how these great lights shone in their private homes, what they said when seeking wives or when soothing wives, that might be of some use to us. Cold logic must be banished from the stump; we shall have to impress that unnamed faculty, higher than the reasoning powers, which jumps at conclusions. Appeals to the spread-eagle and to the memories of our Revolutionary grand sires will no longer serve as staple material; one dash in a speech of love for little children will be worth more than any quanty of veneration for great men, dead or alive.—Round Table.

General James Longstreet, one of the ablest of the rebel leaders, has written to the New Orleans Times on the "political situation." He says that the point to be kept in view is, that the people who fought for the independence of the South, are "a conquered people," and adds, "recognizing this fact fairly and squarely, there is but one course left for wise men to pursue, and that is to accept the terms that are now offered us by the conquerer. There can be no discredit to a conquered people for accepting the conditions offered by their conquerors, nor is there any occasion for a feeling of humiliation. We made an honest, and I hope I may say a creditable fight, but we have lost. Let us come forward, then, and accept the ends involved in the struggle. Our people earnestly desire that the constitutional government shall be re-established, and the only means to accomplish this is to comply with the requirements of the recent Congressional legislation." This is the manly and sensible view of the "situation." But the civilians, especially those who edit Democratic newspapers do not share the frank and soldierly spirit of Gen. Longstreet. They are by no means disposed to "come forward and accept the ends involved in the struggle."

Pay for Magazine Writers.—The Springfield Republican, in its literary gossip, tells us: "The Atlantic pays generally five dollars per page for prose, though some writers receive much more than this. Edmund Kirk got one hundred dollars for his 'Chicago Conspiracy.' The market value of poetry seems to vary a good deal. One poet says, that for some of his best productions he has received from the Atlantic only five dollars, while, for far poorer ones, ten dollars have been awarded him. Those who have had experience in bargaining at this establishment, for the sale of literary wares, opine that the price paid therefor, depends a good deal upon the mood of the editor-in-chief; if he is in good humor, the seller is liberally compensated; otherwise, not. Harper's rates are about the same, five dollars per page for prose. Northern Lights (when it lived) paid three to five dollars per page. Fitz-Hugh Ludlow received sixty dollars for his capital story, 'Fleeing from Tarshish.'"

Ladies Water Cure.—The Pioneer, and only Water Cure in San Francisco—No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. It is entirely useless for Ladies to subject themselves to the plague of flies, mosquitos, and other nuisances which abound in the country; and sacrifice the comforts, pleasures and conveniencies of Home to obtain scientific Water Cure treatment. Dr. Bourne's long experience enables him to adapt a successful home treatment even in extreme cases. *

Asphaltum Sidewalks.—The city is adopting these best of sidewalks and have had them laid on the four corners of Sansome and Jackson streets. The work was done in the best manner by M. Bonnet of the north-east corner of Montgomery and California streets. We are pleased to hear that Mr. Bonnet has contracts for numerous other sidewalks in different portions of the city.

Talor's Saloon.—Who among the southenders of the city has not heard of this rehercle saloon and its choice beverages, Taylor's has outlived the existence of a half-dozen rival establishments, and is known as one of the few saloons outside of Montgomery street where the "choice brands" can always be obtained

Bargains.—Meagher Taaffe & Co., announce in our advertising columns certain styles of Ladies Dress Goods which they now offer at greatly reduced rates. They have also reduced the prices of certain domestic dry goods. See their advertisement.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia.—Guaranteed cures, for a stipulated fee, without medicine, by Dr. Bourne's pleasant, certain, and rapid method. No. 10 Masonic Temple. *

Electricity.—The use of Dr. Bourne's powerful and superb battery may be had at a charge of only four bits—10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

REMOVING stage and theaters, and the actors and actresses, and the talk about the stage, and the readable books of memoirs, what a blank would be left!

Insensibly the theater influences us more than we imagine. Our novelists and romancists have a hankering to write their chapters in dramatic form, and your true forcible writer, when he comes to an exciting piece of business, will, if he have any skill, conjure up a stage before him, light up scenery and footlights, and see the whole in busy action. Our women dress themselves as for the stage, and for stage effect. Stage talk and stage gossip, proposals for new plays, green-room rumors, critics, who does not love these things? They have a dim and indescribable charm. Above all stage memoirs, the anything but brief chronicles of the time, make almost fascinating reading. For here garrulity, a vulgar vanity and candor, blend with a dramatic abundance of detail, that give a unique value. Some are good, some bad, some utterly worthless, because written with a genteel affection and unfaithfulness. But they are curious nevertheless.

Old Cibber's Apology has been put at the head of the list. It is in truth a book apart from the rest, and of almost a philosophical quality. But, to get well behind the scenes and see all the littleness of that day, we should take up Mrs. or Miss George Anne Bellamy. A more curious, rambling book: purposeless, dateless, yet full of color and detail. Execrable English, the language of a housemaid turned into a fine lady by fine clothes and plenty of money.

The works of actor writers would fill many a shelf. We have Chetwoode, perhaps the oldest, Victor, Hitchcock, Edwin, Reynolds, Michael Kelly, Lee Lewes, and many more; but from them stand out two of remarkable merit, admirable, graphic, honest, accurate, and most entertaining,—Tate Wilkinson and O'Keefe.

Tate is really a remarkable book, and for perfect genuineness, and for power of expressing the turns and workings of the human mind, may be set beside Boswell. Even his unconscious perversions of the truth are transparent, and make the book more honest. It is a series of pictures, and we see Foote and Garrick, lords and ladies, London and Dublin. That this unique book should not have been better known is suprising; but it has grown very scarce.

This was the day of strolling companies. England was divided into theatrical circuits, which the country managers "went" regularly, like the gentlemen of the law. Engaged by one of these, Wilkinson, freed from Mr. Garrick's tyranny, found his way to Portsmouth. His picture of the palace is full of drumming and drilling, with the fleet lying out in the roads, and "the gallant Rodney" on shore. It was all drawbridges and lines, and military gates and posts, where the visitor was stopped and questioned. Officers of the navy and army filled the streets. The little theater of the palace was sure to have support from such a constituency.

But the company was a strange and motley one. A Mr. White was jeune premier, who lisped, and pronounced Garrick "Gaa-ick;" Moodey, newly come from Jamaica; a stout Mrs. Osborne; a Miss Kitty White, whose mamma was the amusement of the profession for her rambling talk and strange blunders. There were crowded houses. The officers were glad to know the droll Wilkinson, and even "the gallant Rodney" was specially courteous to him. One night, when he was playing Hamlet, and Moody, as Gravedigger, was shoveling away, up to his middle, the manager plucked him by the sleeve, and whispered horridly, "Take care, for Mr. Garrick is in the pit!" We may conceive the sensation behind the scenes, every one thinking that the eye of "the London manager" was on him or her. It was near the end of the play, so Wilkinson could not well make out the great actor in the pit, and went home to supper and bed, thinking the whole was a mistake. But next morning came a message from the Fountain Tavern, with Mr. Garrick's compliments to Mr. Wilkinson, would he come and breakfast with him? Surprised and overjoyed, the actor hurried away, and was greeted heartily at the Fountain Tavern by his old manager. Nothing could have been more charming, or even engaging, than Garrick's behavior. He was out, he told the other, on a little holiday, staying with Doctor Garney, at Wickham, some eight miles off,—an old friend to whom this visit had been promised for years. Doctor Garney was a retired physician, who had made his fortune, and was greatly respected in that part of the country.

Mrs Garrick was there also; and Mr. Garrick said he had been charged by her and the doctor to make Mr. Wilkinson fix his own day, and come out to them. "A visit," added Mr Garrick, kindly, "which we shall all return." After breakfast they went out to walk and see the town, the great Mr. Garrick leaning on Mr. Wilkinson's arm—"an honor I dreamed not of." They went on to the ramparts, saw the dockyards, and all the time Mr. Garrack was asking about his young friend's prospects, and how he was doing, and congratulated him on being such a favorite. Indeed it needs not Mr. Wilkinson to tell us that "whenever Mr. Garrick chose to throw on the dignity and feeling and [illegible] surrounded by business, to perplex him, he had it in his power to render himself a most pleasing, improving and delightful companion." It was in such good spirits that he had a bottle of hock made into a cool tankard for luck.

On the appointed day, Wilkinson drove out to Doctor Garney, dressed in gold lace, like a gentleman. He was received by Garrick, as he says, "like his son." The doctor and his wife were "good" people, and made him welcome. So did Mrs. Garrick. "She was, in truth, a most elegant woman; grace was in her step." Garrick showed him the place, which was charming, "a little paradise," with exquisite views, gardens, conservatories, and a lofty observatory built by the doctor himself. He "ran and skipped like a lad of twenty." He delighted Wilkinson by complimenting him on his dress, only objecting to the buckles, which were too large for the mode, and rather like a sailor's. The actor's heart was rejoiced at being treated "like a man of fashion" at dinner. Garrick spoke of the benefit night, and said to the doctor and his lady that he would take it as an obligation to himself if they would give their patronage to his friend, Mr. Wilkinson. At ten o'clock, after a pleasant game on the bowling-green, Mr. Garrick saw him out to his chaise, gave him some parts to study, and said he hoped there would be no impropriety in bespeaking a play for Friday, July 27; "and we desire, Wilkinson, you will fix on a favorite character, and do your best for the credit of both: and damn it, Tate, Mrs. Garrick expects you will have a dish of tea ready after her jaunt, by way of relaxation" (this was an allusion to his Monologue): "and if you disappoint us, Doctor and Mrs. Garney and all the party will be very angry. So take care!" And thus ended a very happy day for the young actor.

We may conceive the sensation Wilkinson's news produced in the company. But Wilkinson was not to have the lion's share, as he had hoped. There was a sort of émeute, each actor being eager to play his favorite and most conspicuous part, so as to catch the eye of the London manager.

Mr. White, the jeune premier, very dirty and unshaven about his face, and lord of morning gin, asked, with bitter contempt, "who is Mr. Gaa ick? Mr. Gaa-ick has no command over the Portsmouth company. I think Mr. Gaa-ick cannot be displeased with my Macheath, though I want no favor from Mr. Gaa-ick."

All combined against Wilkinson's monopoly, and the Beggar's Opera was fixed on as giving a fair chance to all. But Mr. Wilkinson was to have his Monologue and the Author, as his share.

All the genteel people of the neighborhood hearing of the "bespeak," and that Mr. and Mrs. Garrick were coming in, crowded to the little box-office; and when Friday night came round there was really a full house. The Beggar's Opera began, but the great party had not come. The first act went by, the second began; and the actors and audience began to grow dissatisfied, thinking they had been led there under a false pretence. In particular, Mr. White was scornful and angry, some of the best bits of his Macheath having been played. But, toward the end of the act, the party from Wickham entered, and took their places with the eyes of the whole house on them. It was noticed that Mr. and Mrs. Garrick and party paid the closest attention, and applauded heartily. We may be sure that night was long remembered at the Portsmouth little theater; and it seemed a fresh picture, and its primitiveness and rustic character, coming after the London worldliness, must have been enjoyed by Garrick himself.

After the play, there was a supper at the Rainbow Tavern, at which various local persons of distinction came in and paid their compliments to Mr. and Mrs. Garrick. Before them all, Mrs. Garrick very delicately and kindly thanked Wilkinson for his performance. At some time past midnight she retired, having to sleep at the house of one of Dr. Garney's friends, these good people "not hearing" of her staying at a tavern. Mr. Garrick, who, says Wilkinson, "never failed in attention to his lady," would not suffer her to go with the servant, and wrapping himself in a handsome sea captain's cloak which belonged to Wilkinson, attended her up the street. When he returned, he said he was quite pleased with his walk, as it had made him acquainted with Mr. Wilkinson's snug roquelaire, which he thought would be exactly the sort of thing for him during the Winter months between Southampton street and the theater, and save him many a sedan-chair journey. He therefore commissioned Tate to get him one in Portsmouth, and bring it up to London.

It was a very pleasant night. They sat till past three. Great consideration and homage was paid to the illustrious guest, who never showed to such advantage. The whole of this scene does, indeed, exhibit the guest of the good honest Garneys unrestrained, not "stuck up."

Later the actor, wishing to pay a complimentary visit to Doctor Garney, determined to ride out. His description of his adventure is delightfully naive and graphic.

"I had seldom," he says, "used myself to that mode of traveling; for though I had frequently gone from London to Hampton Court and Richmond, yet it was generally in a post-chaise." The ostler of the Fountain brought to the door a very fine-looking horse and asked him if he rode much. The other "assured him the contrary." "Because I beg, then, sir, as you are not a jockey, that I may take those spurs off." He then set off, and for the first mile or so, which was through streets and over drawbridges," "I found it a very delicate matter, either by giving the horse his own way or checking him, to keep him within the power of my art of horsemanship. By degrees, the horse seemed wisely to comprehend that his own self-will and sagacity were superior to his rider's. My ignorance was manifest to the animal, and as he was fully convinced I assumed a government to which I was not by any means competent, he was determined on rebellion, and to himself usurped the reins of power."

Having achieved two miles with safety, the horse suddenly set off with fury, throwing his rider into an abject state of alarm, which was increased by finding it a narrow road, and the London wagon lumbering on leisurely in front, "at which," says Mr. Wilkinson, "this dreadful beast rushed, so that the wheel stopped and checked my right leg, and brought me to the ground, and on my fall the horse's hind hoof struck my jaw, and made it bleed most plentifully. Providentially the men stopped the wagon, but almost against their will, for they could not conceive from the fury of the beast and the supposed misguided rage of the rider, but I was some foolish mad fellow eager to show my horsemanship, neck or nothing." The wagoners were half angry, half amused. "They only damed me for a feul; for they were right sure I mun be mad to ride dumb beast to fright the wagon, like." But when Tate explained it was an accident, they laughed heartily, and said "I should never win the King's Plate at Newmarket." Wilkinson was then helped on the horse's back, who had been grazing all this time, and reassumed the reins. "I determined to be very steady, and not venture on the perilous canter any more; a gentle trot at the most was to suffice, and that with all precaution. We were jogging on as if by mutual agreement, when an officer, going on to Hilsea Barracks, came flying by, calling out, 'Your friend Scott dines at Hilsea; do come to dinner, Wilkinson,' and went galloping on. My fiery-footed steed, scorning to be outdone in courtesy, obeyed the summons with the utmost swiftness, while, Gilpin like, I held by the pommel of the saddle, expecting every instant my neck would be broke. I was at the last gasp with this devil of a horse, for the officer had no thought but I was determined to outride him, and be at Hilsea the first; but on seeing the turnpike, I cried aloud, 'Shut the gate! Murder! Murder! For God's sake shut the gate!' At first they did not comprehend me; but, on observing my awkward manner of riding on this my flying horse, and my continued cry of 'Shut the gate,' they did so before I got to it; and then another fear arose, which was, that of the horse's despising the barred gate and leaping over it. Fortunately the creature, either in pity to my fears or regard for his own limbs, or from the custom of stopping at the gate (which I cannot pronounce), halted there, and that suddenly, on a supposition, maybe, that the king's duty was necessary to be loyally paid, to which he was possibly daily accustomed, and to my astonishment in the midst of horrors he pleasingly surprised me by so doing, for he seemed equal to any mad exploit whatever.

From the turnpike-man he got a glass of water, and set off again "on the irregular paths of Portsdown;" and here he naturally reckoned the animal had "settled to reason," but on the up hill, down dale, once more he began more swift than ever. "For me to expatiate on the wonders I this day performed in the noble art of vaulting horsemanship might make young Astley fearful of a rival, and dare me to a trial of skill." It ended by horse and rider tumbling down an uneven hill, and rolling over to the bottom. A more humorous description, in which there is quaintness, and naïveté, and perfect candor, cannot be conceived. It makes a very fair specimen of this curious actor's memoir.

O'Keefe's recollections appeared in the year 1826, yet they struck back a marvelous distance. He, too, only cares to tell what he saw, and writes without that pomp of words and affectation which is the blemish of the modern personal memoir. He gives a series of little glimpses of life a hundred years ago, which show us the colors and dresses, as if painted pictures. He saw the days of the old Dublin Theater, when old Lord Trimlestown was driven about in a superb chariot painted over with "boys in the Flamingo style," the gift of Marshal Saxe. "Drapier's heads" were still the popular sign, swinging over his head as he walked, and an old Captain Debrisay walked about the street "unremarked" in the dress of Charles the Second's day. In London, he saw the mob attack the Moorish ambassador's house on suspicion of his having put to death one of his slaves, and beat him and his people all down the Haymarket. He saw Churchill walking about, "a large man of athletic make, dressed in black, with a large black scratch-wig." He was in a coffee-house in St. Martin's Lane one morning when the newsman came in and laid No. 45 of Wilkes' North Briton on the table. Later, standing at Charing Cross, he noted a tall slender figure in a scarlet coat, large bag, and fierce three cornered hat, carefully picking his way across the street through the mud. That was

"Jack Wilkes." But his picture of Ireland in those days makes us sigh and look back wistfully. There were no gypsies, no poor-rates, and no pawnbrokers. The great pride of a countrywoman on a Sunday was to have three or four waistcoats. The milkmaid sang as she milked; and if the song stopped, the cow began to kick the pail. They all cut each other's turf, and dug each other's potatoes, lending the car or horse. The grand object was to have the half-penny of a Saturday night, the piper's fee, who played for the jig. In Dublin, so eager were the authorities to encourage the linen manfacture, that the fees for the yearly carriage licenses were set apart to buy spinning-wheels; and once a year these were set out at the top of St. James street, and distributed gratis to every one who came. These were charming times, when "my lord's" or "the squires'" was known as "the big house," and had its fool and running footmen; and O'Keefe often saw these latter skimming along the road in a white jacket, blue silk sash round the waist, black velvet cap and silver tassel, a frill round the neck, and a seven-foot staff, tipped with silver, through whose aid they leaped the ditches. Will those days ever come again for ould Ireland?

Curious in their own way are the stange, rambling, vain, and vulgar recollections of Miss George Anne Bellamy, daughter of Lord Tyrawly. The center of all is, of course, the writer; but this becomes an end and aim to which everything is distorted. Histronic vanity is a special department in the collection of human weaknesses; yet, with this disadvantage, her story is valuable and characteristic from its sheer outspoken vanity, which overcomes every inducement to affectation. We see Garrick in his Dublin town playing at Smoke Alley Theater, and the recherché of all recherchés; we see "Peg" Woffington in the green-room, and Miss Bellamy and that actress "having it out" in a battle royal behind the scenes, about their dresses as the Rival Queens. We see how, on benefit nights, the stage was "built up" with an amphitheater that reached to the flies, so that when the curtain rose there were nearly as many before the foot-lights as behind. Thus the actor, to "come on," had to force his way through a crowd at the wings; and the charming Cibber, dying as Juliet, had a whole crowd of admirers seated on chairs quite close round the tomb. Did an actor drop his hat or glove, a friendly spectator was seen to go forward gravely, and hand it to him. There was no end to the conventional absurdities of the stage in the last century. When the hero was near his end, two of the stage servants appeared with a small strip of carpet, which they solemnly laid in the center, so that he might die in comfort. But in the case of an inferior actor, writhing and working in agonies, clawing and tearing at the ground, as was then fashionable, it was found that he had quite wrapped himself up in stript of carpet. "Gold tickets"—happy days for actors!—were then in vogue, every man of fashion who patronized the stage sending his ten and twenty guineas on benefit night. We see Doctor Young, Mr. Foote (whom we see best of all in Mr. Forster's essay), Sheridan the actor, Quin, "Counselor Murphy," Doctor Johnson, and a host more. The King of Denmark came to see Jane Shore, and—not so very unnaturally—fell fast asleep. Then the lively Miss Bellamy, putting extra energy into her part, drew up close to his box, and called out, "O thou false lord!" which aroused him, and amused the house. She passed through the strangest vicissitudes; now, being "abducted" at the stage door; now going to Paris and living sumptuously; now, ending miserably in a debtor's prison.

Crinoline in France.—For some months past the much-abused crinoline has been gradually decreasing its dimensions, and the new form of skirt has necessitated a total change in its form. Cages now measure round the edge from two yards and a half to two yards and three-quarters in width; there are no steels whatever at the top, and above the cage a well gored narrow petticoat is worn, and above this a second white petticoat, which is elaborately trimmed. As the fashion of long trains necessitates the frequent exhibition of the petticoat when moving about a room, this second skirt is ornamented with Valenciennes lace and rich embroidery. These under garments prove very costly; so the more moderate substitute for those rich decorations a trellis-work formed with fine white braid, and a star embroidered in satin stitch in the centre of every lozenge of the trellis-work. This ornament is braided and embroidered in the flounce of the petticoat, and is very easily worked. Petticoats for evening wear are made within an inch as long as the dresses, and it should be borne in mind that the train of a skirt now measures at the very least three-quarters of a yard.—Paris Correspondent of "The Queen."

Paris, it is expected, will attract at least a million of visitors during the course of the exhibition. Admitting that every foreigner expends an average of five hundred francs while he stays, that makes five hundred millions, which, in the space of a few months, will circulate and fructify.

The Empress of the French, at a recent ball, wore a number of black diamonds, and has set the fashion for these articles. Mount Diablo may take the hint.

UNFULFILLED.

I.

OUR little table is spread for two,
With quaint old china, gold and blue,

Weird things are wrought on the homely walls,
As the conjuring firelight climbs and falls.

In the corner my ready sea chest stands,
Filled to the brim by the busiest hands.

Wife mirrors her face in the silver tongs;
I think of the morrow's rude sea-songs.

"I have pictures, love," she says, "that gleam
From a troubled easel—last night's dream.

"A ship ashore on a cruel reef,
And a woman ringing her hands in grief.

"She kneels in prayer; a whirling wheel
Grows out of the dead ship's plank and keel.

"She stands in the spinner's toiling place,
Till the rose in her cheek hath lost its grace.

"Her lessening form is changed to wool,
Yet the hungering spindle ne'er is full.

"A weed-grown raft keeps company
With a vacant boat on a sailless sea."

How apt is woman's thought to build,
Where a varying dream may darken or gild!

II.

Life flies; my last sea-voyage is done;
Or wind, or calm, to me 'tis one.

Tea things are set for a golden few;
Again our china, quaint and blue.

The conjuring home-light climbs and crawls
O'er dainty laces and India shawls.

Wife mirrors her face in the silver tongs:
I think of yesterday's glad sea-songs.

"Tell, love, I pray, of the ship on the reef,
And the woman wringing her hands in grief;

"Of the spinner whose white arms changed to wool,
And the hungering spindle that ne'er grew full."

There are tears imprisoned within her eyes,
Which are loosened soon, as her voice replies:

"Woman will dream, and man will build,
And each will have prophecies unfulfilled."

—Hiram Rich.

COCKNEY WRITERS.

TO a certain set of writers who flourished at the earlier part of this brilliant century, and who were supposed to live in close intercourse with each other, and to have many attributes of mannerism in common, one of the wits of Edinburgh applied the unalluring denomination of the Cockney School. It was a name sufficiently significant of ridicule to frighten away bashful admirers, and had just so much of that kind of one-sided justice which belongs to satire, as not to seem to the ordinary public an unfair definition.

We know not how it is that among civilized nations England stands alone in imputing to that development of the national intellect more peculiarly metropolitan, the defective liberality, whether in the culture of letters or in the survey of men and manners, which in other countries is rather ascribed to the denizens of provinces. Cicero finds a want of "urbanitas," in those writers who lived remote from the Roman capital, and narrowed their views of the world to the limited range of a coterie. It is praise to a French author to say that on life and manners he writes like a thorough-bred Parisian; it is the reverse to praise an English author on such subjects to say that he writes like a thorough-bred Londoner. To him we impute exactly the same spirit of clique—the same partial estimate of himself and the privileged few with whom he lives in sympathy of taste and reciprocity of compliment, which are the alleged characteristics of a provincial genius.

The Cockney is the archetype of the Londoner east of Temple Bar, and is as grotesquely identified with the bells of Bow as Quasimodo with those of Notre Dame. In the men on whom this metropolitan distinction was conferred, including writers not less remarkable than Hazlitt, Leigh Hunt and Charles Lamb, we cannot honestly affirm that there was no element of cocknification. Though differing much from each other in character and in direction of intellect, they agreed in this—they all so far rejected the urbanizing tendencies of a great metropolis, that they moved in as small a circle as if they had lived in a country town. In their publications they quote and praise, quarrel and make it up with each other, as if, like the Chinese, they confined the map of the civilized world to their celestial empire, and inscribed on the space left outside of the circle, "Corners of earth inhabited by barbarians." The "Waverly Novels" can excite no interest in Lamb: it is a matter of doubt whether he was ever seduced into reading them. Hazlitt, indeed, succumbs to their enchantment, but atones for such praise as he bestows on the fictions by declaring that "he despises their author as the meanest of mankind." Lamb has a lofty disdain for such a comparative pigmy as Byron. Hazlitt does not openly share in that disdain, but he implies it by the sneer with which he accompanies the stinted measure of his praise. According to him, Byron "seldom gets beyond force of style," and "his poetry consists mostly of a tissue of superb commonplaces."

With the contemporaneous literature of the continent the professors of this school reject all acquaintance; among the rising generation of writers in England it is only their own Alumni whom they deem worthy of notice. Those they regard with indiscriminate favor—equally kind to a Sheridan Knowles and a Janus Weathercock. Hunt, the least exclusive of the coterie, in vain commends Shelly and Keats to the cordial welcome of his associates. Hazlitt speaks of Keats, indeed, when Keats was dead, with a certain civility, such as a strong man compassionately bestows on a promising though sickly child. But of Shelley, in Shelley's lifetime, his criticism is that of stern contempt. According to him, Shelley "is not a poet, but a sophist, a theorist, a controversial writer in verse; he gives us for representations of things rhapsodies of words; he paints gaudy, flimsy, allegorical pictures on gauze, on the cobwebs of his own brain" (Hazlitt's "Plain Speaker: On People of Sense")—an estimate of Shelley, from which Lamb does not greatly differ. In fact, when the chiefs of this oligarchy commend to our reverence the men of their own day, they compliment each other—Hunt praises Hazlitt, Hazlitt praises Hunt; Lamb praises both, and by both is praised. We must make one honorable exception to this exclusive co-admiration. The Cockney School acknowledged the genius of the Lake School, and paved the way to that appreciation of Wordsworth and Coleridge which the pertinacity of critics has at least wrung from the passive assent of the general public. But this so-called Cockney School was, in much, an offshoot from the Lake School. Wordsworth and Coleridge exercised a predominant power over the minds of Hunt, Hazlitt and Lamb, and served greatly to determine the point of view from which the two latter regarded the form and substance of contemporaneous poetic creation. And perhaps they found in the homage they rendered to the great Poets of the Lake School an excuse for the depreciation of other contemporaries more popularly admired.

Of the three eminent writers to whom this unlucky appelation of Cockney was popularly assigned, Hazlitt deserved it least in the literal sense of the word, and most in the symbolical. In the literal sense of the word he did not, indeed, deserve it at all. Hazlitt was no Londoner. By origin he was Irish; he himself a native of Shropshire. But in the symbolical sense of the word, he was the most obnoxious to the ridicule it conveyed, partly because, once identified with a set of writers to whom it was applied, he stood forth the most aggressive and the most provocative, and carrying out into the fullest display the sins attributed to the Cockney School. He of the three best answers to his own sprightly and accurate definition of Cockney: "Your true Cockney," saith Hazlitt, "is your only true leveller. Let him be as low as he will, he fancies he is as good as anybody else." The faults of Hazlitt were the more disagreeble because the man was one of those warm-blooded creatures whom we wish to like if they will but let us. And though he does his best to prevent our liking him, it is not in his power to prevent any one who knows the English language from admiring.

The Next Deluge.—A French work recently published maintains that every ten thousand five hundred years the waters of the sea pass from one pole to the other, submerging and overwhelming, in their passage, the earth and all its inhabitants. According to the author of its theory, M. Paul de Jouvencel, the last of these delnges occurred four thousand years ago; the next one is due in six thousand years more. M. Jouvencel recounts this great cosmical drama with the vigor and effect of an eye-witness. Six thousand years—sixty centuries—then only are left to us wherein to do our whole world's work, and to complete and perfect the civilization which has yet hardly dawned upon the greater number of mankind! Sixty old men may touch hands across the interval between the present moment and the last hour of the world as it exists; then all will be finished, all consumed; all will disappear! The sea for ten thousand five hundred years, in its immeasurable depths, will crush out our history, and leave nothing of it all but a few fossils! So, at least, says M. Jouvencel.

What the Cloak Makers Say.—Mr. William Pickford, Cloak Manufacturer, with O. & J. Mowbray, 269 Grand street, New York, uses five Grover & Baker Machines in his business, and considers them superior to any other machines for cloak-making, on account of the elasticity and firmness of the stitch, and the capacity of the machines for embroidering.

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

Lord Dundreary has given his opinion with regard to that much vexed question—marriage with a deceased wife's sister. "I think," says he, "marriage with a detheathed wife'th thither ith very proper and very economical, becauth when a fellah marrith hith detheathed wife'th thithter, he hath only one mother-in-law."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1867.

SPIRITISM PRACTICALLY VIEWED.

THE belief in the possibility and the actual existence of some sort of intercourse between the material and the immaterial world is not a new one. The question "Do spirits appear?" has been a favorite subject for discussion in the debating societies of many successive generations, and we see no reason for believing that it will ever lose its attraction for youthful disputants, until debating societies shall have become obsolete institutions. Neither does it at present seem probable that the question will ever be removed from the field of controversy, by the discovery of evidences or arguments so conclusive as to leave no room for reasonable doubt.

About the middle of the present century, the subject developed a new phase, in the rise of modern Spiritualism —or more correctly, of modern Spiritism. This system, or belief, has spread with great rapidity, and made numerous converts, but none among the class of minds whose verdicts are potential in the world of philosophy and science. Its proselytes, indeed, are by no means confined to those whom it would be accurate to class as ignorant or illiterate; on the contrary, the great bulk of them consists of men and women possessing a considerable share of intelligence and culture—enough to enable them to take an unaffected interest in questions of an abstract and semi-philosophic character, though not enough to give value to their reasonings or conclusions on such questions. It is from this very class, that a system like that of Spiritism might be expected to draw its recruits. Entire ignorance is often quite as effectual a protection against delusion as great knowledge. It is those who are respectable for intelligence and acquirements, who are readers but not thinkers, whose minds are busy but untrained, and keen rather than powerful or capacious—it is always such as these that prove the readiest dupes of the plausible heirophants of new religions and new philosophies.

In support of the proposition that affirms the fact of intercourse between the living and the spirits of the departed, the champions and teachers of the new system have now, for over a quarter of a century been furnishing such proofs as they could command; and during this time they have accumulated a body of peculiar literature, imposing in bulk, if not remarkable for value or excellence of quality. Yet the evidence adduced seems to have made but little permanent impression upon the world at large, though from its nature, it ought, one would imagine, to be capable of being made decisive beyond question or cavil, if there is any truth in the claims of Spiritism. For nearly thirty years the "phenomena" have been witnessed, in public, and private, in every considerable community in the land, yet nothing has been settled; and the old question, "Do spirits appear?" seems as far as ever from a decisive solution. True, we are assured that hundreds of thousands of proselytes have been made, but among them all there is not a single name that carries, or that ought to carry the weight of authority on such a subject. Judges, and legislators not a few, and even a Congressman or two, are said to be included in the list of the more illustrious converts; but American judges and Congressmen are by no means the class of persons who are best qualified to investigate understandingly and thoroughly the phenomena of a system that occupies a position on the mysterious debateable ground disputed between psychology, physical science and supernaturalism. The opinion, after due examination, of a single man of science and scientific training, like Dr Draper, Dr. Holmes, Professor Agassiz, Dr. Youmans, or any other eminent savan, would be more valuable, and would deservedly carry greater weight with it, than that of all the members of Congress and all the members of the Supreme Court of the United States to boot. But no man of this stamp has ever given his endorsement to Spiritism, so far as we are advised. Aside, however, from its thaumaturgic and its philosophic pretensions, Spiritism claims to be "a religion," and as such the sucessor of Christianity.

The more enlightened of the expounders of the the new system do not, indeed, indulge in the scurrilous attacks upon popular orthodoxy to which the less respectable class of itinerant lecturers and table-tippers are so much addicted; but they hold that Christianity has accomplished its mission, as the Mosaic dispensation accomplished its own, before the coming of Christ. They do not assail orthodoxy with coarse vulgarity, nor vituperate its priests as impostors and hounte banks; but they hold up the new system as something purer, higher, and better adapted to the present state of society and the present needs of human nature.

Viewed as a positive religious system, Spiritism offers neither a single new article of belief, nor a single new precept of morality. It has no authoratative teaching of any kind. Its living evangelists differ without end among themselves, each having a creed or a "philosophy" of his own, which he promulgates in a strange and uncouth jargon peculiar to the sect. The messages which it brings us from the unseen world are, if possible, still more confused and contradictory; all are equally silly and unedifying. Professor Hare, the great scientific stalking-horse of the order, is honored with interviews with the august shades of Bacon, Sweedenborg, Washington, and Jefferson; Judge Edmonds communicates freely with a still larger array of the illustrious dead; and all the Banners of Light and Banners of Progress which are the organs of the new religion, come to us full of communications from some of the grandest intellects that ever were embodied—but they teach us nothing. Not one new fact or principle in science or philosophy; not one pregnant sentence of warning or instruction; not one valuable lesson for the conduct of life, has found its way to us from the farther shore, through the priests of the new faith. Bacon and Newton have spoken—but alas! they have exchanged the noble language habitual to them when in the flesh, for a jargon that could not be distinguished from that of the peripatetic lecturers. Coleridge and Shelly have communicated verses—but they were such as the Sunday newspapers would refuse to publish. Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln have all returned to earth, impelled, it is fair to presume, by the desire to make some worthy or useful communication; but through all the storms of civil war, and the gloomy perplexities that attended and followed it, no wise suggestion for the benefit of the land they loved and the great nation which they helped to found or to preserve has ever found its way from them to us.

The same question propounded at half a dozen different circles, is answered in as many different ways. If you inquire as to the condition of the departed, in the other world, or in regard to any controverted point of theology or philosophy, no two responses agree. No future event has ever been foretold, and we believe there is no authenticated case of any fact being communicated that was not already known to the inquirer.

These considerations are not adduced to show that the phenomena of Spiritism are not valid, or that the alleged communications do not really come from spirits. They are adduced to show that the system can make no just pretensions to the character either of a religion or a philosophy, and that for all practical purposes it is utterly unprofitable. Silly as are the "communications," we cannot logically aver that they do not come from the disembodied dead. We cannot dogmatize about spirits, because we have no knowledge whatever concerning them. They may, sad as such a theory seems, deteriorate intellectually after death; or it is possible that the difficulty is in the imperfect power of communication; or finally, the spirits that assume to respond when the great and unforgotten dead are called for, may be meddlesome impostors who try to pass themselves off for their betters. We do not, therefore, undertake to controvert the alleged phenomena of Spiritism, nor deny that they are produced by spirits. Granted that the wonders of table tipping, rope-tying, "spirit-painting," etc., are indubitably real, we insist that they are also indubitably worthless. The spirits do nothing useful that cannot be much better done by those who are still in the body. They paint no pictures that can compare with those of Nahl or Brooks; they give us no poems equal to those of half a dozen of our local writers of verse; their communications on metaphysical and philosophical themes, when intelligible, which is rarely the case, provoke the laughter of all who possess any acquaintance with those subjects; their rope-tying feats are rivaled by the professed thaumaturgists, and in lifting tables, and throwing furniture about, any able-bodied porter can surpass them. The only thing in which the spirits outdo the performances of the most ordinary men is in the quality of the ineffable transcendental twaddle which they talk and write, and the hitherto undreamed of abysses of bathos which they have sounded. In efforts of this particular kind, it must be confessed that the spirits (if we are to accept the "mediums" as their faithful interpreters) have achieved a success hitherto unrivaled by mortal ingenuity.

That "there is something in Spiritism," we will not undertake to deny; that there is anything in it that is practically useful or good, we are unable to perceive. If it has any use or value at all, it appears to be of the same sort possessed by the art of the thaumaturgist or the conjuror. Its feats of rapping, table-tipping, rope-tying, etc., may like those of the prestidigitutor, excite curiosity and wonder, but they are less entertaining, and afford no instruction.

But if spiritism is scarcely respectable as a system of thaumaturgy, it is ridiculous as a philosophy, and utterly contemptible as a religion. Amazing indeed must be the ignorance or the imprudence that can seriously institute a comparison between the religion that Jesus enjoined his apostles to preach to all the world, and the rhapsodical mysticism of Andrew Jackson Davis, Fishbough, and Harris, that can assure a Congress Hall audience that the faith devoutly held by a Gladstone, a Guizot, a Newman, and a Beecher, a faith reverenced if not professed by all the best and greatest intellects of our time, is so absurd and so monstrous as to be a fit subject for the scurril jests of every illiterate and low-bred charlatan whom nature has furnished with just enough of intellect to qualify him for vituperation and table-tipping.

LOCAL ARCHITECTURAL NOTES.

THE new building just completed for the use of the congregation of St. James' Church was opened for the first time for religious services last Saturday evening.

The style of this structure is decidedly English throughout. While it resembles, in its general arrangement the "New Jerusalem Church" on O'Farrell street, it differs greatly from that structure in its details and treatment; presenting some points unlike anything here, though often seen elsewhere.

As one enters, the most noticeable feature is the absence of plastering, the walls and ceilings being finished with boards laid diagonally, exposing to view all the timber of the frame. All the woodwork is unpainted, but varnished, and as there are many windows furnishing ample light, the effect is very good.

The Church is divided into a central nave with side aisles, by clustered columns, supporting the roof with arches in each direction. The open timber truss of the main roof is very good, but all the ribs of the other arches are too thin in section, looking like inch boards, and presenting a very meagre appearance in comparison with the columns of two feet diameter which are the best design in the whole work. The same fault is noticeable elsewhere. The window sash seem to have been cut out of thin boards, all of which tends to produce an effect of cheapness which we think might have been avoided without extra expense. The pews, or benches are open, and of an inelegant pattern.

The architects have evidently been required to do much with very little money, and the church as a whole is very creditable. Had they exercised a little more artistic ingenuity in some few points, the interior would have been a fine one. As it is, the chancel is very bald and shed-like and the ornamentation behind the alter is nothing less than abominable, being in fact strongly suggestive of that of a Chinese Joss House.

The exterior has decided character, and is rather attractive even without the tower, which we presume will be added at some future day.

The entrance form the street is too abrupt, lobbies will have to be provided; for our summer winds and dust must be considered in such buildings.

Trinity Church is steadily advancing toward completion. It will be one of our most prominent buildings, owing to its size and location if to nothing else.

The Eastern critical journals do not speak in very high terms of Mr. Alger's new work, The Solitudes of Nature and of Man. The Philadelphia Literary Gazette is the only exception that we have noted. The author commences by treating of the solitudes of the desert, the prairie, the ocean, the pole, the mountain and the river. Then, passing from external nature to man, he speaks of the solitudes of individuality, grief, love, occupation, selfishness, genius, and death." The dangers and the uses of solitude are the subject of the third part, while in the fourth we have a series of sketches of lonely characters, beginning with Buddha and Confucius and ending with Comte and Jesus. The characterization of Jesus is substantially the same as M. Renan's, and is evidently inspired by, if not borrowed from him. Mr. Alger admits that "the Nazarine" has probably contributed "more than any other person to aggrandize the idea of man in the human race;" but the gospel narratives of Him are said to contain "chasms, inconsistencies, and incredibilities" which put "insurmountable difficulties in the way of sure knowledge" of what he was, and did, and said. He was "not unlike others in kind, though superior in degree," and "could never have dreamed of the mediæval doctrine of the atonement, could never have expected to be deified, nor have wished to be personally worshipped." The book is not remarkable for force or originality, and the style is diffuse and somewhat too florid for the subject.

The Oakland News has made the discovery that a "First-Class Magazine" or "Literary Review" is needed in California. "At present," it declares, "much that would be eminently worthy a place in the pages of a review, is contributed to the daily papers. Surrounded as it is with shallow and senseless articles, it is often disregarded by the intellectual reader, who can expect to find but little gold amid so much dross." The News may be correct, but it has not hitherto been our good fortune to find in "the daily papers" any of the kind of articles that would be "eminently worthy of a place in the pages of a review," unless, indeed, an exception me made in favor of the Times' famous "book reviews."

[For the Californian.]

GLIMPSES OF BOHEMIA.

BY AN OLD STAGER.

I PROPOSE, in a series of papers, which, however, I will not stipulate to furnish with regularity, to relate some of my experiences as a writer for the press, and a publisher's general utility drudge, at a time when the "mob of gentlemen who write with ease" existed exclusively on the other side of the Atlantic, and when on this side a very moderate share of literary talent could be made to go a great way. To this condition of things I owe the misfortune of having been a professional writer, for had the standard been as high at the time I speak of, as it is to-day and the supply of clever writers as large, I should now, in all probability, be a respectable country doctor, with a reasonable share of prosperity, and a sound constitution, instead of an invalided journalist, prematurely worn out by twenty-five years of drudgery that yielded at best no more than a subsistence, and of which no fruit remains to me, either in money or reputation.

It is the desire to do something toward dispelling the perilous illusions that allure so many young men of fair, but not remarkable ability, from practical pursuits in the hope of gaining literary distinction, that has prompted me to the disagreeable task of narrating a few of my own experiences and reminiscences having some connection with journalism and bookmaking.

This I propose to do in the way that will involve the least amount of trouble to myself, for writing has become more than ever a toil to me, since a few years disuse. You must, therefore, be prepared to find these papers discursive, unconnected. and not always chronological in the order of events; nor shall I make any attempt at that finish of style which is looked for in the CALIFORNIAN, and which is now-a days an indispensible qualification of professional metropolition journalism—even in San Francisco.

In short, I shall tell my story, or so much of it as I think proper to tell—in my own way, writing, as it were, in dressing-gown and slippers, concerning myself solely for the matter; and leaving the manner to take care of itself.

The notions of the outside world, in regard to the practical part of authorship and journalism, and the lives and ways of writers, bear about the same relation to the truth, that a boy's ideas of a first-class desert island, where all the choicer vegetable, floral and animal productions are liberally represented, do to the patch of coral rock covered with its inch or two of soil, and glorying in a score of sickly, scrubby, fruitless cocaonut trees.

And this allusion to deserts island reminds me of the circumstance to which I think I can trace the earliest germ of the mischief that has made my life a practical failure. When I was about eleven years old, and was attending the "Academy," which was the pride and boast of my native village, the excellent, but indiscret Principal offerred a "prize" for the best composition, the field being open to all the pupils great and small, numbering about thirty. Maternal vanity is the blindest and most unreasoning of all mortal weaknesses, and it decreed that I must be a competitor. Help there was none. Because I sometimes became so absorbed in the 'Three Spaniards,' or "Rinaldo Rinaldini," (alas! for the children of our time, who have no fascinating literature of this description) as to refuse to go out to play of a Saturday afternoon, my mother had taken it into her head that I was destined to be a genius, a notion which was confirmed past all possibility of shaking it, by the circumstance of my falling through an air hole in the ice, and being fished out after I had gone down the traditionnl three times. with barely enough breath in me to render restoration possible. It was "a miracle" she insisted, that Jake Darter should have happened to be passing, and that he should have been able to get me out alive. And so she was certain that I was reserved for great things, a conviction which she more than once imparted to my aunt in a confidential whisper unduly audible, considering the presence of the subject of the flattering prophecy.

Accordingly, I was now expected—nay, required, to win the prize. That I could fail, was not viewed as one of the possibilities. The lawyer and the minister were to decide upon the merits of the productions; but I have not a doubt that had they decided against me, my mother would unhesitatingly have attributed it not to my incapacity, but to that of the judges. I, however, by no means felt the same confidence, and I well remember how the sanguine assurance of my mother disturbed and frightened me. There is nothing so dreadful as to have impossibilities expected of you by those who love and over-rate you—unless you are an ass, and share the illusion yourself. Whittier would probably be pained by the assurance from wife or sister that he was a greater poet than Tennyson. But would Mr. Tupper? I suspect not; in fact I can fancy the author of "Proverbial Philosophy" enjoying such reverent and wife-like homage from the partner of his bosom, and accepting it simply as his due. Child as I was, I clearly saw my mother's illusion; and the consciousness that it was an illusion, together with the certainty I felt that I was quite unequal to what was expected of me, caused me more than one nightmare. About the time that this fatal prize was offered, I was reading—or rather devouring—the "Swiss Family Robinson," and when I had finished it, I cried because there was no more to read. That wonderful and impossible desert island, with its utterly preposterous productions, seemed to me more attractive than the orthodox Paradise, and had my Sunday School teachers promised me a heaven after that pattern, I fancy I might have developed into one of those juvenile saints who, like Mr. Brocklebanks's "good little boy" in "Jane Eyre," have a greater enthusiasm for "texts" than for sugar plums. As it was, the glories of the heavenly city of the apocalyptic vision, with its jasper walls and streets of shining gold, were less attractive to my imagination than the earthly and unspiritual charm of the bounteous isle of the Swiss Castaways with its inexhaustible museum of vegetable and animal wonders, its ostriches, "onagers," tiger-cats, flamingoes, bustards and buffalos. But I am availing myself somewhat too early and too liberally of the privilege of being discursive and garrulous, which I have claimed. Dwelling upon the astounding adventures of Fritz and his brothers, my imagination gradually began to shape out variations of the same theme. I feigned to myself that in company with Johnny Martin, my schoolmate and especial chum, I had gone to sea and been shipwrecked upon one of those islands that abound in the story books, where "all the comforts of a home" can be enjoyed without cost or labor. Of course, the "wreck" got conveniently lodged between a couple of accommodating rocks, where it remained until it went to pieces in a gale which washed ashore in the most providential manner, all sorts of articles calculated to promote the comfort of youthful castaways, including divers kegs of powder (which had in some miraculous way escaped damage from salt water,) and a formidable assortment of cutlasses, double-barreled guns, pistols, and blunderbusses. With the traditional luck of all desert islanders whose adventures have been recorded in authentic history, we struck cocoanuts, bread-fruit, oranges, oysters and a long catalogue of luxuries, as fast as they were desirable. We built a hut, explored our island, encountered and conquered the usual variety of wild beasts, and finally, when that sort of thing began to grow tame, the "savages" duly made their appearance to keep up the excitement, and give us an opportunity to bring our fire-arms into play and illustrate our prowess.

This juvenile romance having already shaped itself in my imagination, what more natural than that when at my wit's end for a "composition" I should write it out and submit it to the committee, in lieu of an essay on Friendship, Ambition, or one of the four seasons? I did write it out and send it in; and in an evil hour the prize—a gilt-edged, morrocco-bound copy of Rassalas—was awarded to me. This event was the first link in the chain of my destiny, or to use a Hiberuian metaphor, it was the first screw in the coffin of my career. Squire Sharp and the parson having pronounced my performance the best out of a score of rival efforts, and the latter having endorsed upon my manuscript the flattering legend; "The within, considering the age of the writer, is highly creditable, and gives promise of literary talent," is it to be wondered at that under the intoxicating influence of success I should begin to share my poor mother's conviction that I was a genius?

The nearest town boasted a literary weekly, published every Saturday, and entitled the Rural Repository, the Poet's Corner of which was sacred to the original effusions of the "Gifted Hopkinses" of the county. It is from the day when my earliest attempt at verse, entitled "Lines Written on the Summit of Academy Hill," (a poetic license for our garret, where in fact said "Lines" were painfully elaborated) appeared in the "Repository" that I date the second momentous epoch of my ill-starred career.

Of course, a youth who had given such brilliant evidences of precocious talent, must have the benefits of a "college education," no matter what self-denial, and pinching economy at home might be necessary to accomplish so desirable an object, and accordingly after having gone through the regular curriculum at the Academy, and received what further preperation in the way of Latin, Greek, and Mathematics as was requisite, at the hands of the minister, I was consigned to the care of an uncle living at Schenectady, and having passed the ordeal of the preliminary examination, was admitted to the full honors of a Freshman at old Union, just as I was entering upon my seventeenth year.

And now, the discipline of the institution, and honest devotion of study might have saved me, and imparted to my mind a healthy practical tone. But as fate would have it, one of the institutions of the college was a monthly magazine, written and published by the students, with occasional contributions from members of the faculty. This was entitled the Parthenon, and it must be still well remembered by the old graduates of Union, not a few of whom, by the way, are now residents of San Francisco.

Before the first fortnight of the term had expired my versifying gift was discovered by the junior editor of the college periodical. I am not sure, however, that the discovery was not facilitated by some hint or allusion from me, for already an unwholesome vanity had been developed in me by my precocious village reputation; and the sinister influence which the young artist in Dr. Holmes' new story in the Atlantic tells his sweetheart is often exerted by the rhyming habit, was at work.

And so I became a contributor, and gradually a regular contributor to the Parthenon, in which I soon found myself taking more interest than in the honest discharge of my college duties. The time that should have been devoted to preparing for recitations was lost in scribbling tales, verses, and miscellaneous disquisitions on every conceivable subject, for I read eagerly and omniverously, and as fast as I gained a little superficial knowledge in any new direction, I brought it into use for writing purposes without waiting to assimilate it. Meantime my neglected studies became every day more distasteful to me, and of course my class standing suffered in consequence. But a spell was upon me, the strange glamour of which I seemed unable to resist: and I became a lotus-eater, and gave myself up to the fatal intoxication with a vague voluptuous consciousness of wrong and evil and impending calamity, that nevertheless failed to rouse the will, or stimulate to resistance.

So a year and a half passed away, during which I read much and variously, studied little, thought less, and wrote reams on reams of rubbish, a small portion of which appeared in the Parthenon, the rest being reserved, as of too high a quality for a college magazine, and destined to be used as the germ of something greater—for already I was secretly revolving lofty achievements in literature.

But near the middle of my Sophomore year, I was suddenly recalled to my senses—temporarily at least. A letter came from home, which revealed, but did not tell, by what cruel sacrifices my year and a half of weak self-indulgence and wasted time had been purchased, and what further sacrifices were contemplated in order to enable me to —— go on writing verses and common-places for the college magazine. This roused me from my dream. I was sick of myself, my conduct, and my pursuits. I passed a sleepless and remorseful night, and the next day packed my trunk and set out for home. Thus ended my college career; and here I will conclude this prefatory paper, reserving my first real Glimpse of Bohemia for another communication.

A VERY extraordinary series of papers is now being published in the London Reader, reviving the wild and distempered ideas of the Gnostics' God is represented much as in Browning's Setebos, or in one of the choruses of Swinburne's Atalanta, that is, as "the Supreme Evil."

The "doctrine" of the series of papers seems to be, that the Bible was inspired, and the world is governed by a God who is not either "Almighty," or "all-good," an inferior deity, or demiurgos, as the Gnostics designated him, who was limited by matter and circumstances. In one of the papers the writer says, "God is prejudiced against some persons, and partial to others. He does not deal fairly. I think he has always had a grudge against my family." The whole tenor of the essays seems to indicate a half serious, or perhaps a half insane desire to revive the intellectual nightmare of Gnosticism.

MAJOR WILLIAM HARNEY has received a highly flattering request, signed by the leading members of the San Francisco Bar without distinction of party, that he would permit his name to be used as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, Wm. Loewy, Esq., having declined to be a candidate for re-election. Major Harney has expressed his willingness to accept a nomination. He has for many years been connected with the County Clerk's office, and the experience thus acquired has well qualified him for the position for which he may now be regarded as a candidate. Backed by the almost unanimous endorsement of the Bar, and possessing great personal popularity, Major Harney will, if nominated, be morally certain of securing an election.

ASTOUNDING!—In the opinion of very many, the periodical literature of England is superior to that of America.—Oakland News.

Can this be true? Are there in reality persons—nay "very many persons" who hold an opinion so monstrous and so unpatriotic? If so, let a vigilance committee be organized at once, that the disloyal wretches may be hunted down and hanged as traitors.

AN eminent member of the San Francisco Bar, yesterday, compared Judge Deady's decision in the action brought against Gen. McDowell to that of Judge Burnett in the Archy case. The opinion is all in favor of the General, and the decision against him. The law is given to the North, and the nigger to the South.

NEW novels are promised, as serials in Temple Bar, from the pens of Mrs. Edwards and Mr. Sheridan LeFame. The work of the former will be called "Steven Lawrence, Yeoman." A new novel by Edmund Yates is also to appear in the same periodical.

"WEBFOOT," your communication came to hand too late for publication.

CABLE HYMN.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

O lonely bay of Trinity,
O dreary shores, give ear!
Lean down nnto the white-lipped sea
The voice of God to hear!

From world to world his coursers fly,
Thought-winged and shod with fire;
The angel of His stormy sky
Rides down the sunken wire.

What saith the herald of the Lord?
"The world's long strife is done;
Close wedded by that mystic cord,
Its continents are one.

"And one in heart, as one in blood,
Shall all her peoples be;
The hands of human brotherhood
Are clasped beneath the sea.

"Through Orient seas, o'er Afric's plain
And Asian mountains borne,
The vigor of the Northern brain
Shall nerve the world ontworn.

"From clime to clime, from shore to shore,
Shall thrill the magic thread;
The new Prometheus steals once more
The fire that wakes the dead."

Throb on, strong pulse of thunder! beat
From answering beach to beach;
Fuse nations in thy kindly heat,
And melt the chains of each!

Wild terror of the sky above,
Glide tamed and dumb below!
Bear gently, Ocean's carrier dove,
Thy errands to and fro.

Wave on, swift shuttle of the Lord,
Beneath the deep so far,
The bridal robe of earth's accord,
The funeral shroud of war.

For lo! the fall of Ocean's wall
Space mocked and time ontrun;
And round the world the thonght of all
Is as the thonght of one!

The poles unite, the zones agree,
The tongues of striving cease;
As on the Sea of Galilee
The Christ is whispering, Peace!

—(From the Tent on the Beach.)

THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

THERE is a proverb, "that no man departs more from justice in affairs than a lawyer; no man observes less the regimen of health than a doctor; no man bears less the remorse of conscience than a divine." It is said of lawyers that

"For fees to any form they mould a cause,
The worst has merits and the best has flaws!
Five guineas make a criminal to-day,
And ten, to-morrow, wipes the stain away."

Again, "his soul is in fee—his understanding is on the town. He will not swear to an untruth to get himself hanged, but he will assert it roundly by the hour to hang other persons if he finds it in his retainer." So learnedly did Jude Cade discourse about "that parchment" that when his troops entered London they pulled down all the inns of Court, burnt the temple with its libraries, murdered all the students and "practicers" that they could meet with. In times gone by "that parchment" was regarded with as great a horror as "villainous saltpetre." It has been customary "since the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" to make puns upon and to satirize the legal profession. It is told of Ben Jonson that, in going through a church in Surrey and seeing the poor people weeping over a grave, he asked one of the women why they wept? "Oh!" said she, "we have lost our precious Justice Randell—he kept us all in peace, and kept us all from going to law: the best man that ever lived." Thereupon Jonson wrote the follwing epitaph for his tomb:

"God works wonders now and then,
Here lies a lawyer, and an honest man."

The numerous satires that have been written about the lawyers, and the puns made at their expense, were doubtless intended in many cases merely to create a laugh for the time begin. Still it is not to be concealed that they have had the effect of awakening and keeping alive in the mind of the uneducated a prejudice against the whole profession—indeed, not only among the ignorant, but among all those who ——"ne'er advance a judgment of their own

But catch the spreading notions of the town."

It is not uncommon to hear persons say that no honest man can be a lawyer; many regard the profession as repugnant to Christianity and sound morals. Even men of enlarged and liberal views upon other subjects have joined in the crusade against it, and because an advocate accepts a retainer upon either side have characterized such a procedure, as "intellectual and moral prostitution."

No more radical error ever existed than to suppose that a man, in accepting the law as his profession, must necessarily become dishonest and immoral. Many men who adopt it may be so, but it results not from the law. It is an inherent depravity in the particular individuals. They would be rogues in any profession. These qualities are inconsistent with a natural law education. God, to discover and enforce his laws, has made an immediate and direct revelation, which is called the revealed or divine law. "Upon these foundations," says Blackstone, "the law of nature and of revelation, depend all upon human laws." Thus, in order to a correct understanding of his profession, the student must commence with the text book of Christianity, wherein the law of nature is declared so to be by God himself, and follow it up by the moral systems laid down by ethical writers. Macklin at one time intended his son for the bar, and entered him at the temple; "and what book do you think I made him begin with?" said the veteran, in telling the circumstance, "why I'll tell you sir—the Holy Bible!" "The Bible, Mr. Macklin, for a lawyer?" "Yes, sir," replied Mr. Macklin, "the properest and most scientific book for an honest lawyer, as there you will find the foundation of all law and morality."

Without a thorough and well-grounded knowledge of the elementary principles of the law of nature, as of laws in general, no man can become an eminent advocate. It, therefore, becomes an essential part of a law education. But few, we imagine, are disposed to contend that those books which contain natural and divine law, and treat upon moral ethics, are calculated to make man immoral and dishonest. The tendency is the opposite. They lay broad and deep the foundation of morals, of honor, and of integrity. Not only is the beginning, but also the progress of a law education antagonistical to immorality. The law is a study which, in the language of Sir William Jones, "requires the whole man, and admits of no concurrent pursuits."

The lawyer is compelled to labor years and years in the acquisition of knowledge necessary in his avocation. Apart from his legal study, which is almost endless, he is required to profess a knowledge of general subjects embraced within the sciences, the arts, general history, and medical jurisprudence, together with an intimate knowledge of man. The effect of such studies cannot be otherwise than wholesome and salutary upon well-governed minds. They create a healthy tone, liberalize and enlighten the mind. We think, then, there is nothing in the incipient steps that lead to admission to the bar that has an immoral tendency. Whence, then springs this immoral allegation? We can attribute it to no other cause than the circumstance before mentioned: that lawyers allow themselves to be retained on either side of a controversy. Is this right or wrong? We think it is right.

No lawyer has a right to condemn a person arrested for crime without an impartial hearing. His case should only be determined after a full and fair investigation of all the facts and circumstances that can weigh either for or against him This can only be accomplished by giving him the benefit of counsel of equal ability with the public prosecutor. Men are frequently charged with crime who are entirely innocent—some of a higher when they are only guilty of a lesser crime. In both cases a series of connecting circumstances may be brought against the persons accused, that upon ex-parte statements induce many to believe in their guilt, but which an impartial examination, with the aid of practiced counsel, will place in their proper position.

It is a golden rule, "that one side of a story is good until the other is told." It is the duty and province of counsel to elicit truth, which can only be done by bringing to the aid of a prisoner all palliating circumstanees, and subjecting to a severe and rigid cross-examination the witnesses for the prosecution. Neither is a lawyer nor a public justified in assuming a man to be guilty because he is charged with crime. Strong circumstances are frequently presented, preliminarily contained, perhaps, in a single affidavit, upon which a party is arrested. Now it may be, and is not unfrequently the case, that the accuser is a person who, when his true character is developed, is found to be utterly worthless and depraved, and prompted to the act by a revenge for some private grievance, and is not entitled to belief. In such cases, nine times out of ten, without the benefit of counsel, the accused would be unable to disentangle the web which surrounded him.

Lord Erskine has justly said that "if the advocate refuses to defend from what he may think of a charge or defence, he assumes the character of a judge: nay, he assumes it before the hour of judgment, and in proportion to his rank and reputation puts the heavy weight of, perhaps, a mistaken opinion into the scales against the accused. Such a course surely could not be just. It would defeat the benevolent presumption of our law that every man is presumed to be innocent until found guilty."

"There is, undoubtedly," says Coleridge, "a limit to the exertions of an advocate for his client. He has a right, and it is his bounden duty, to do everything for his client that his client might fairly do for himself, and to do it with all the effect which the exercise of any skill, talent or knowledge of his may produce."

"Justice," says Sydney Smith, "is found experimentally to beat promoted by the opposite efforts practiced and ingenious men, presenting to the selection of an impartial judge the best arguments for the explanation and establisment of truth. It becomes, then, the decided duty of an advocate to use all the arguments in his power to defend the cause he has adopted, and to leave the effect of those arguments to the judgment of others." This is all the advocate assumes to do. He hears his client's case. Is informed of all the circumstances for or against him. He comes into court and states his client's case to the jury. He watches the progress of the trial with a legal eye, and sees that no irrelevant or improper testimony is admitted, and when the testimony is closed sums up in a clear and logical manner the strong and weak points of the case, and leaves the final determination in the hands of the court or jury. Judges are human, and it often occurs that they err in ruling upon points of law in regard to the exclusion or admissibility of testimony upon which hangs the fate of the prisoner. Without the aid of counsel these errors pass for sound law, and condemn a person to unjust or unmerited punishment.

Deprive an accused of counsel, and accusation would be conviction. It cannot be done until the world grows honest without making our courts of justice despotic engines, and placing the innocent at the mercy of the guilty. The prejudice against the profession for the reason stated is unjust, ungenerous and unmanly. No man, we think, can calmly and dispassionately examine the subject without arriving at the same conclusion.

The importance of lawyers is not properly understood and appreciated. They are not only essential for the promotion of justice, but from the bulwark between despotism and republicanism. Destroy the profession of its character and influence, and you remove one of the principal safeguards of public liberty. They check the approach of tyranny in our rulers, and resist all arbitary exercise of power on the part of our judges. As a tree is judged by its fruits, so let the profession be by its acts. In England, "at the bar and on the bench have been found those who in the worst and darkest times have nobly vindicated the supremacy of the laws, and despite the ambition of despotic sovereigns and the fury of licentious demagogues have defended the rights of the people." To no man are the liberties of England more indebted than to Sir Edward Coke.

In this country our best statesmen and patriots have been and are lawyers. They watch every encroachment made upon the rights of the people, and their voices are first heard in denunciation of all measures having a tendency to subvert their liberties. The history of our country is the history of eminent lawyers. It would be curious to know the number who have risen by the law in this country. The number is great. The people, since the first formation of their government, have been in the habit of bestowing their places of trust, emolument and honor upon lawyers. They have rarely betrayed the trust confided to them. From what we have said, we would not be understood as saying that there are not men in the profession who, in the language of Milton, "are allured to the trade of law, grounding their purposes not on the prudent and heavy contemplation of justice and equity, but on the promising and pleasing thought of litigious terms and fat fees," for there are many—but it is contended that a large majority of the bar are not of that class. That for the most part it is composed of gentlemen of ability, courteous and affable in their deportment, and of as high honor and strict integrity as are to be found in any other profession. In this view we are sustained by the history of the past and the present.

EUGENIE AT A BALL.—At the court ball, which took place last month, upward of three thousand guests were assembled in the saloons of the Tuileries. The Empress looked beautiful, and all the more so that, attired in richer and more matronly materials, there was not that appearance of light and flowing drapery, which rather deteriorates from the effects of good looks in middle life, than helps to impart a juvenile appearance to those who adopt them. A magnificient yellow satin robe, looped back over a white satin underskirt, was relieved by bouillonés of tulle, over which fell sprays of variegated flowers, feathered, here and there, with diamond knots. Similar flowers and diamonds were placed in the hair, round the bertha, and on the shoulders; and a marvelous compound of flowers, diamonds, and rubies, and emeralds, were arranged in a sort of girdle, which formed a basque of a unique description. Says a correspondent: "There were many lovely women around her, and scattered over the handsome suite of rooms; but, without reference to her rank or position, the Empress Eugénie shone more splendid than all; and it seemed no marvel that such a dazzling vision of life and beauty should exercise unlimited power over any poor mortals brought within range of her sphere of influence."

FRENCH(Y) ITEM.—We quote from a Paris paper: "The snow seems to have kept the earth warm, and forced Spring forward like a precocious child. The buds are bursting forth vigorously, and flowers are plentiful and cheap. Epicurean luxury has found a new use for flowers. Violets are eaten with cream and sugar. The other evening, at an Apician dinner, given by a merchant prince, they were forthcoming. They were very nice; the violets taste as they smell."

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used by the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world It can be thrown a distance of three hundred feet, and will return and fall at the feet of the thrower. As the Australian boomerang is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever invented, so is the San Francisco BOOMERANG, at the corner of Washington and Dupont streets, acknowledged to be one of the greatest institutions of the city. The snug bar, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot punches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum —in fact, everything about the Boomerang is perfect.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whose husband supposed she had absconded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, and get one dozen of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you want to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 and 27 Third street, east side, near Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instruments, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEMICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
STEAMSHIPS FOR
NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,
WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR APRIL.

April 30th—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco,

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

---

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA
COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)
NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

A. BONZI & CO.,
Italian Restaurant,
515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

THE NEW BRANCH
OF THE
CLIPPER RESTAURANT,
No. 414 Market street, between Battery and Sansome,
WILL BE OPENED ON
MONDAY, APRIL 1ST, 1867.

MONS. J. STOCK INFORMS THE PUBlic that he has fitted up this branch restaurant for the convenience of those living in the southern part of the city, and hopes that his long established reputation as a caterer for the public will be a sufficient guarantee of the completeness of the arrangements of this New Branch, and respectfully solicits their patronage. J. STOCK, Proprietor.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.
MILLER & HALEY,
EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,
NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,
San Francisco.
SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED
To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST-CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium
IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE
HAT OR CAP,
AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of
LAMOTT'S HATS!
CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,
PRINTERS,
533 Clay street, San Francisco.
B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to ordor.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street

DO YOU WANT ANY
PRINTING?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS
Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of
PIANO-FORTES.
FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.
PIANOS TO RENT.
WALTER S. PIERCE'S
Piano Manufactory
Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.

THE FAMOUS
PIANOS
OF
Chickering & Son
Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agents'.
Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
[200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

PHOTOGRAPHY
IN ALL ITS BRANCHES
Executed in a Superior Style, at
GEO. D. MORSE'S
NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,
No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE
FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.
GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines have is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A DEMING,
137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal.

THE MEERSCHAUM PIPE.

BY " GRIS," (FAT CONTRIBUTER).

Meerschaum pipes are all made from the foam of the sea. There is no question about it; but, then, there is a great difference in foam. It isn't always a good day for the sea to foam when the pipe-makers go down to the beach to make the pipes, and buyers foam about it, but it can't be helped. It seems singular that anybody should want foam at the mouth, but there are numbers who do, it seems; paying heavily for this adjunct of madness, and getting madder as they doubt the genuineness of the foam.

There is very little made on meerschaum pipes. It is expensive going to the sea-side to get the foam, and it takes a great deal of it to make a pipe. One hundred and twenty-six gallons make a pipe—so if you know how much foam one gallon will make, you can estimate the amount you will require for your meerschaum.

The wooden stems to meerschaum pipes are not made from the waste foam, as many suppose, neither are the cases found floating around on the foamy waste, already liued. The liniug has to be put in afterward.

The cost of meerschaum pipes range any where from what you can buy one for to any sum you are a mind to pay. As a general rule, the more money you pay for one the more money you have squandered, and the least possible sum that you can get one for the better you are satisfied afterward We have had a great many of them, but the one we were the most contented with, all things considered, was one that was given us. It wasn't very good foam, either, but we never uttered a complaint. We wouldu't look a gift pipe in the mouth, and it was in the mouth the most of the time.

While the meerschaum pipe remains white it is not surrounded with a hundredth part of the interest that it commands when it is colored, which isn't very different from the estimate certain philanthropists put upon objects of human charity, when appealed to in their behalf. It is a long and arduous process, coloring a meerschaum, aud it requires a heap of perseverance to accomplish it. The perseverance of some people runs only in that direction. We have known men who were discouraged at the slightest obstacles in ordinary affairs exhibit the greatest persisteuce in this.

We once knew a man to struggle for yeers to color a particularly obstinate meerschaum pipe. He smoked incessantly. He tried all the different kiuds of tobacco; put a "button" in it, boiled it in tobacco juice, but all to no avail. It wouldn't color. He grew morose and sour, shut himself up by himself and smoked and smoked, and smoked, muttering savagely from betwen his clenched teeth "Color! I say, D—n ye. I'll c-o-l-o-r ye!" He gave up all business, and devoted himself wholly to smoking, determined, as he said, to color that pipe or die in the attempt. One day he failed to make his appearance at breakfast. His room was opened, and there he sat in his chair, dead, the fatal meerschaum clutched tightly between his teeth. The meerschaum was as white as when it first emerged, Venus like, from the foam of the sea, but the man was turned to a rich, dark brown. The meerschaum had colored him.—Cincinnati Times.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufactorers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candles sold by us are warranted to be manufactored from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE GREAT
New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S
White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood. and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kiduey Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK
EVERY TWENTY DAYS!
Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA,

EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on
MONDAY, - - - APRIL 15th, 1867,
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship NEVADA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞ The MOSES TAYLOR will sail May 4th.

For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE CALIFORNIA
Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable.

THOMAS MOONEY, President.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,
Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,
Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

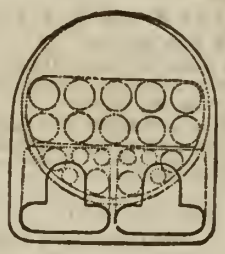
Manufactorers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN, } Proprietors.
JAS. AITKEN, }

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactored to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Pressos of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white Iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

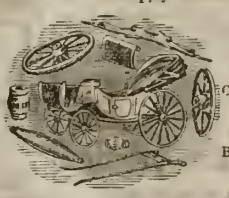
WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, ETC.

Also, Importers of
GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES.
Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & CO.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale mannfac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Monigomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Plorr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Savann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hotchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R G Brown, 116 Montgomery
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

VENTILATION AND CONSUMPTION.

A physician of long practice writes respecting pulmonary affections:

The lungs are made to breathe cold as well as warm air—indeed, air of any temperature from zero to one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, just as the face is made to bear exposure to the external atmosphere. How could the lungs be protected? if they require protection, which they do not. Domestic animals that live out in the open air winter and summer are freer from colds than those who live in warm stables, and men who are much exposed, and constantly breathe air at low temperature, are less liable to colds and influenza than those who live constantly in warm rooms. All who have horses are aware that to keep a stable warm is the surest way for the inmates to suffer from constant colds.

I may mention two facts that aptly illustrate the evils of defective ventilation. Some years ago I was riding in the Highlands of Scotland with a local proprietor, when we came upon a village of well built stone houses with slated roofs, which strongly contrasted with the miserable shanties or hovels generally met with. On my complimenting him on his rebuilt village he told me that he acted for his best in erecting these good weather proof houses for his tenants, but that, singular to relate, they had proved more unhealthy than the miserable dwellings which their occupants previously inhabited. Fever and other diseases had proved rife among the latter. On examination I found that the windows were fastened and never opened; and I have no doubt that their comparative unhealthiness was in reality owing to their being quite weather-tight, and consequently unventilated. In the miserable hovels they previously inhabited, if the rain of heaven came in, so did the pure air.

The other fact is narrated by Professor Hind in a recent interesting work on Labrador. Consumption appears to be all but unknown to the natives living wild in the fastnesses of this desolate region, in tents made of spruce branches imperfectly lined with skins, and more or less exposed on all sides to the external air; although they are exposed to famine and every species of harship. But when these natives come down to the St. Lawrence to take a part in the fisheries, occupy well-built houses, and, being well paid, live in comparative luxury, most of them in the course of a year or two become consumptive and die miserably. I am fully impressed with the idea that the developement of the disease under these circumstances is the result of their living in close houses in a vitiated atmosphere, as it no doubt is in our own towns.

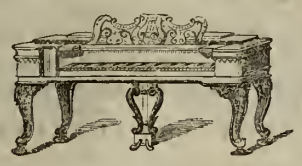
GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

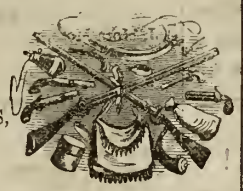
McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs Blam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

THE CELEBRATED PIANOS


—OF—
J. B. DUNHAM, F. C. LIGHTE & CO.,
AND ERNEST GABLER,
Are warranted for FIVE YEARS, and indorsed by the LEADING PIANISTS of AMERICA as SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS.
SOLE AGENTS— C. WIEDERHOLD & CO.,
685 Market street, near Third.

J. C. E. KLEPZIG,
MANUFACTURER
—AND—
DEALER IN
GUNS, PISTOLS,


Sporting Apparatus,
AMMUNITION
AND GUN MATERIALS,
No. 733 Washington Street, San Francisco.
Gilding and Silver Plating of all kinds of metals; also, Silver or Plated Ware reburnished.

HOLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
STOVES, TIN-PLATE,
SHEET IRON, LEAD PIPE, PUMPS, ZINC, WIRE, AND
HOUSE FURNISHING HARDWARE.
MANUFACTURERS OF
TIN, SHEET-IRON AND COPPER WARE.
Nos. 13 and 15 Front street.....San Francisco
Nos. 176 and 178 J street.....Sacramento
Main street.....Austin, Nevada

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.
LOCKE & MONTAGUE
HAVE IN STORE, EX LATE ARRIVALS, A FULL stock of
STOVES AND RANGES,
METALS, WIRE, IRON PIPE,
LEAD PIPE, BRASS GOODS, HOSE,
HOLLOW-WARE, TIN-WARE,
TINMEN'S STOCK AND TRIMMINGS,
TOOLS AND MACHINES,
Plumbers' Goods,
LIFT AND FORCE PUMPS,
Hansbrow's Patent
SHIP, FARM AND MINING PUMPS,
Which they offer to Dealers at the lowest market rates.
112 AND 114 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

J. O. HANSCOM. H. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO { T. PENDEROAST. W. W. HANSCOM.
Etna Iron Works!
S. E. corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,
Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,
MANUFACTURE
STEAM ENGINES,
QUARTZ MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,
Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting
PISTON PACKING,
Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.
HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,
The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.
TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,
Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables.
All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.
SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES"
None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.
Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.
☞ Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

BAKER & HAMILTON,
IMPORTERS OF
Agricultural Implements,
MACHINES, HARDWARE, ETC.,
NOS. 17 AND 19 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO,
NOS. 9, 11, 13 AND 15 J STREET,
(Near the Levee,) SACRAMENTO,
Eastern Office, 88 Wall Street, New York,
OFFER:
Buckeye Reapers, 5 and 6 feet; Mowers, 2 sizes.
Ball's Ohio Reapers; Mowers, 3 sizes.
Burt's Eagle Reapers and Mowers, double and single gear.
McCormack's Reapers and Mowers, hand and self-raking.
Manny Reaper and Mower, 5 feet cut—cheap.
Wood's Prize Combined Machines, 5 feet cut.
Kirby's Reapers and Mowers, 5 feet cut.
Wood's Prize Mowers, jointed and stiff bars.
Badger State Reapers and Mowers.
Russell's Junior Mowers.
Union Mowers, 2 sizes.
Champion Mowers.
Bay State Mowers.
Haine's Headers, iron wheels—genuine.
Haine's Headers, screw hub wheels—genuine.
Header Wagons, screw hub wheels.
Pitt's Improved Threshers, 24 to 40-inch cylinders.
Aultman's Sweepstakes Threshers, 33 to 40 inch cylinders.
Pitt's Double Pinion and Iron Horse Power.
Portable Steam Engines, 5 to 20-horse power.
Wheel Wire Horse Rakes.
Revolving and Wire Horse Rakes.
Hay Presses, Hay Rope and Baling Wire.
Scythes, Snathes, Rakes, Cradles, Forks, etc.
Rubber and Leather Belting, all sizes.
Single Plows and Gang Plows.
Harrows, Horse Hoes, Cultivators.
Fan Mills, Grain Mills, Hay Cutters.
Wine and Cider Presses, Churns.
Broadcast Seed Sowers and Seed Drills.
Ox Yokes, Road Scrapers, etc., etc.
Samples of machines may be seen at their new warerooms. BAKER & HAMILTON,
Front street, between Pine and Market streets,
San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.
The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.
A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.
THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!
NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.
HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.
HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,
For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.
For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.
☞ Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
cor. Sansome, San Francisco.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.
LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.
Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.
W. G. JONES, - - - - PROPRIETOR

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF
MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.
(706 SANSOME ST. 706)
SAN FRANCISCO.
BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 KEARNY STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco
STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.
The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the
SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.
Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

AT THE REGULAR
RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES
C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.
☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.
WHOLESALE PRICES.

IF there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

MY PIPE AND I.

We are content, my pipe and I.
  The air is thick with storm to-night.
  The clouds have hid the stars from sight,
And the wind sighs mournfully,
  But in the fire-light's genial glow
  We kiss and bid all sorrow go—
We are content, my pipe and I.

We are content, my pipe and I.
  Out in the stormy world we know
  Here is a friend and there a foe,
And cold neglect goes by;
  But in the warmth the fire-light lends
  We kiss and know that we are friends,
And are content, my pipe and I.

We are content, my pipe and I.
  Let those who will, seek after fame
  And sear their hearts for a sounding name,
That soon enough shall die;
  We will not with ambition soar,
  But kiss and love each other more,
And be content, my pipe and I.

We are content, my pipe, and I.
  Free from friendships false as fair,
  Hid from envy, hate and care,
To-night we build our castles high;
  And in the fire-light's ruddy glow
  We kiss and bid all sorrow go—
We are content, my pipe and I.

A NOVEL IN ONE CHAPTER.—Violetta started convulsively, and turned her tear-drenched eyes wildly upon the speaker; for to her there seemed something familiar in those low, rich tones. Their eyes met; his beaming with love and tenderness, hers gleaming with wild uncertainty.

"Violetta!"

"Allendorf!"

The girl sank from excess of joy upon his noble heart, throbbing with pure, holy, delicious love of other days.

Allendorf bent tenderly over her and bathed her pure, white temples with the gushing tears of deep, though subdued joy.

While doing this, Violetta's father, Rip Van Snort, was seen approaching the lovers with a shillelagh.

Allendorf saw the aged patriarch, and with one mighty leap cleared the banisters, and rushed down stairs. But Van Snort was not thus to be "done." He went after the flying Allendorf: and, just as he was turning the corner of the red barn, gave him a crack with the shillelagh that placed him on the other side of Jordon.

Violetta, driven to distraction, threw herself upon the grass, and, for a long, long hour, was dead to every consolation.

WHY is billiards the most democratic game in the world? Because it brings all players to a level.

Rule for a lady billiardists. Always play for a kiss when there is a chance for a score.

How to renovate a seedy billiard cloth. Go to bed on the table and you will soon have a fine nap on the cloth.

Why is a billiard stick like a public prosecutor? Because its duty is that of a cue sir—(accuser)

"There's nothing like leather," says the proverb, and certainly for billiard cues it is the only tip-top article

When is a fat billiard player not fat? When he goes to lean over the table.

When are billiard players like soldiers making a charge? When they give points to their antagonists.

What does an affected billiard player strike before he strikes the ball? He strikes an attitude.—Billiard Cue.

A. J. SWEETSER,
Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic
Song and Cage Birds,
CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.
No. 519 Kearney street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

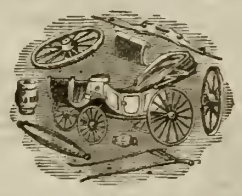
THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.
J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.
RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

MRS. WINSHIP,
Fashionable Milliner.

NO. 23 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.
All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.
Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.
Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
Headley's Great Work!
The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,
Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.
In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.
E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,
CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.
Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.
THEODORE MEETZ.....President
WM. ERZGRABER.....Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.....Secretary
TRUSTEES.
FABIAN JOOST, HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT, FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE, PETER MEYER.
The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best
Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer
In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.
All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

A. FOLSOM,


Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with prompt ness, and at prices to suit the times.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA
IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:
Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc
Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.
Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.
Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.
AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.
They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.
UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $750,000
The California Lloyds,
HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.
LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.
DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham, Marysville.	William Smith,

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.
Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,
ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON, SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.
Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.
W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

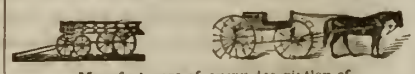
Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.
LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.
RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,


Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the best, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.
N. B.—All candles sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Auchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL-KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDRO, - - - - PROPRIETOR

THE MOST PERFECT CUTTING MACHINE EVER MADE

HUBBARD PRIZE MOWER

The Excelsior Mower of the Day.

The Makers of this Celebrated Machine have finally been enabled to increase their manufacturing facilities to such an extent, as to equal the Eastern demand, and permit of a full stock being kept at San Francisco for the wants of the Pacific Farmers.

This Machine took the FIRST GOLD MEDAL PREMIUM from
EIGHTEEN COMPETITORS,
At the Great Public Trial of MOWERS held at Utica, New York.

Farmers and Dealers, send for a pamphlet, and consult your own interests by examining this Machine before you make your purchases for the season.

ADDRESS
WM. B. ISAACS,
Office of the Russel & Erwin Manufacturing Company,
106 AND 108 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,
OPTICIANS
THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined
SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.
Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.
Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.
N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.
Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM
Billiard
TABLE
MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
His constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CHARLES MITCHELL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.
Dated April 11th, 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF LUDWIG IGEL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of LUDWIG IGEL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated April 11th, 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Ludwig Igel, deceased. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JACOB R. MAYER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 523 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
Dated April 13th, A. D. 1867.
A. W. BOWMAN,
Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ROBERT CARTER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratix of the estate of Robert Carter, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratix, at the place of transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, John F. Finn, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.
GRACE CARTER,
Administratix of the Estate of Robert Carter, deceased.
Dated April 12, 1867. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undereigned, JOHN G. HODGE, at Nos. 418 and 420 Clay street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
Dated April 6th, 1867.
JOHN G. HODGE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Francis S. Wood, deceased. ap6-5w

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF San Francisco. In the Probate Court.
In the matter of the estate of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.
Order of Publication on application for order of sale.
On reading and filing the petition of William A. Quarles, administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.
It is ordered, That all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 20th day of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.
And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 17th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.
Witness my hand and the seal of said Probate Court, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1867.
[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Petitioner. ap20-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Thomas Breeze, the Administrator of the estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, praying for an order for the sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts of the deceased and the charges and expenses of admiuistration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Adm'r. mh30 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by J. W Brumagim, the Administrator of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 5th, 1867. ap6-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HORACE COLE, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of HORACE COLE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within nine months and twenty-one days after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator with the will annexed, at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.
Dated April 4th, 1867.
J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Horace Cole, deceased. ap6-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned. Executors of the Last Will and Testament of JOHN J. TAYSEN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the store of A. Crawford, No. 27 Market street, San Francisco, that being the place of the transaction of business by said Executors of said estate.
A. CRAWFORD, } Executors.
D. N LUNDT, }
Dated March 30th, 1867. mh30-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY A WALSH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at at the office of Crane & Boyd, Attorneys at Law, in the city and county of San Francisco, the place of his transaction of business.
Dated at San Francisco, March 25th, 1867.
JOHN TOWNSEND,
Administrator of Estate of Mary A. Walsh, deceased.
Crane & Boyd, Att'ys, S. W. cor. Clay and Montgomery streets. mh30-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate left unadministered of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator as aforesaid at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.
Dated April 12th, A. D. 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Thomas A. Kimball, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Administrator. ap13-5t.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No. 5 of the 100-vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.
The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.
And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.
Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by Michael Lynch, the Administrator of the estate of JOHN P. HILL, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30-5w
R. W. HENT, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion, and would be most for the interest of all concerned to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the family allowance, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court-room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated March 29th, 1867. mh30 5w

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CARS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

Last two representations of

BLACK CROOK!!!

Will be given at

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE,

This Afternoon and Evening..April 27th,

—WITH—

MISS SALLIE HINCKLEY,
MISS ROSA SIEGRIST,
MISS EMMA MILES,

A full Corps de Ballet, and the Opera House Stock Company.

The Beautiful and Fascinating

HELEN WESTERN

Will appear on

MONDAY EVENING.....APRIL 29th.

In Buckstone's drama of the

"Flowers of the Forest."

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette.....50 | Upper Circle.....25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

THE CENTRAL PARK OF THE PACIFIC.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery,

Museum, Gymnasium

.....AND.....

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THESE BEAUTIFUL GARDENS ARE VISITED DAILY by hundreds of the pleasure seeking public, and all agree in pronouncing them the best and only first class suburban resort on the Pacific coast.

The extensive grounds are covered with the rarest trees and shrubbery, making it a most desirable spot for small parties wishing to enjoy a Pic-Nic.

New attractions are being constantly added.

These Gardens are accessible by the Howard, Market and Folsom street cars. Entrances on Mission and Valencia streets, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth. OPEN EVERY DAY.

Admission 50 cents. Children under 12 years, half price.

GRAND FESTIVAL

....TO BE HELD....

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL

....ON THE....

Evenings of May 22d and 23d, 1867,

For the Benefit of the POOR OF SAN FRANCISCO; also in aid of TWO CHURCHES, on which occasion will be distributed a Complete Series of American Silver and Copper Coins—cost over $16,000. TICKETS, $2 50.

REPITON & BUMPUS, Managers.

LIST OF PRIZES TO BE DISTRIBUTED AS ABOVE:

No. 1—Complete Set of American Silver Dollars. No. 2—Complete set of American Silver Half Dollars. No. 3—Complete Set of American Quarter Dollars. No. 4—Complete Set of American Silver Dimes. No. 5—Complete Set of American Silver Half-Dimes and Three-Cent Pieces. No. 6—Complete Set of American Copper Cents, from the first year of issue, 1723, to the last, 1867. No. 7—An assortment of U. S. Half Cents, nearly all dates. No. 8—Large Bronze Medals of all the Presidents of the United States. No. 9—Silver Cabinet Medals of Washington. No. 10—A Splendid Lot of Ground in the Harvey Brown Tract.

Ladies and gentlemen wanted to act as Agents. Liberal commission given. Apply to

REPITON & BUMPUS, Managers,
No. 626 Montgomery street, Montgomery Block.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between lifornia and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between Cali rnia and Pine

JAMES C. PARKINSON JOHN J. MAHONEY.

PARKINSON & MAHONEY,

GILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS

—OF—

LOOKING-GLASS AND PICTURE FRAMES,

No. 333 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco. All kinds of Oval Frames. Lithographs and Engravings kept constantly on hand. Picturea cleaned and varnished. Old Frames regilt.

ARRIVAL

—OF—

MADAME LAURUSTINUS,

The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europe, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

Correspondence.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 16th, 1867.

☞Major William Harney—Dear Sir:—The undersigned, members of the San Francisco Bar, are informed that the present official incumbent of the office of County Clerk, Wm. Loewy, Esq. declines to be a candidate for another term. As members of a professiou at all times greatly dependent upon the County Clerk's Office for the efficient transaction of business and the protoction of the interests in our hands, we feel that for County Clerk of the City and County there is needed a man of integrity, industry, and experience in the manifold and often perplexing duties of that office. Believing you to be especially well qualified to succeed Mr. Loewy as County Clerk, we hereby request yon to allow your name to be used as candidate for the office referred to, und we fully endorse your claims to it as paramount to those of uny other person.

With respect, truly yours, etc.

Wm H L Barnes,	Hall McAllister,
Cutler McAllister,	S M Wilson,
A P Crittenden,	Crockett, Whiting & Naphtaly,
E B Mastick,	John B Felton,
H H Haight,	John H Saunders,
Edward J Pringle,	Daniel Rogers,
John T Doyle,	Robt C Rogers,
Crane & Boyd,	Thompson Campbell,
Sharp & Lloyd,	J D Hambleton,
Jarboe & Harrison,	Asher B Bates,
E R Carpentier,	Cobb & Tevis,
William Barber,	W W Cope,
William H Sharp,	Wm P Dangerfield,
John B Harmon,	J A Woodson.
Wm C Tompkins,	Gunnison & Beatty,
D P Belknap,	Wm D Piersou,
Jos W Winans,	Charles Wittram,
Sidney L Johnson,	Fredk Wittram,
Churles Sidney Johnson,	J W Brumagim,
Henry B Janes,	John L Love,
S W Holliday,	F E Felton,
Thomas B Bishop,	Theodore H Hittell,
Elisha Cook,	George E Whitney,
James D Thornton,	Clark Churchill,
T J Bergin,	S B Axtell,
Walter Van Dyke,	Wm Hayes,
Henry E Highton,	A N Drown,
Churles McC Delaney,	E A Lawrence,
Campbell, Fox & Campbell,	E A McKinstry,
George G W Hoge,	Grey & Brandon,
C H Parker,	G Frank Smith,
Sydney V Smith,	Gregory Yale,
I N Thorne,	Delos Lake,
James Mee,	P G Buchan,
M H Myrick,	Wm H Culver,
A Williams,	N B Mulville,
J M Seawell,	J T Finn,
J C Stebbins,	George J Wight,
R G Rowley,	R A Redman,
J H Blood,	F A Fubens,
J B Manchester,	W C Burnett,
John Wade,	J H Wade,
F R Larkin,	R F Morrison,
James Nichols,	J P Dumeron,
C G Howard,	George Turner,
F M Smith,	W W Chipman,
R Guy McLellan,	George R Parburt,
Columbus Bartlett,	Edward MacKinley,
Earl Bartlett,	Edward P Bachelor,
H H Byrne,	W P. Moffat,
Frank Kennedy,	W Hastings,
Henry K Moore,	H J Howe,
James McCabe,	Hale Rix.
Washington Bartlett,

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20th, 1867.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your valued favor of the 16th inst. I beg you to believe that I appreciate the high compliment you have paid me. None can understand better than you the responsible duties of the County Clerk of this City and County, and for that reason I feel the more satisfaction with the preference you have expressed that I should succeed Mr. William Loewy in the event of his declining again to be a candidate for the office referred to.

If my friends nominate me, and the people elect me, I shall be glad to be the next County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and will endeavor to fulfil your reasonable expectations.

Yours truly. &c.,
WILLIAM HARNEY.

To the Members of the San Francisco Bar.

D. A. MACDONALD, } { J. MCGILL,
J. H. MACDONALD, } { H. CHIPMAN.

D. A. MACDONALD & CO.,

SAWING AND PLANING MILLS,

AND MANUFACTURERS OF

DOORS, SASHES, BLINDS AND MOULDINGS,

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Finishing Work for Buildings constantly on hand, and got up to order.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

Dentist,

No. 205 Third Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.

North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

☞WONDERFUL BUT TRUE.—MADAME REMINGTON, the world-renowned Astrologist and Somnambulistic Clairvoyant, while in a clairvoyant state, delineates the very features of the person you are to marry, and by the aid of an instrumebt of intense power, known as the Psychomotrope, guarantees to produce a perfect and life like picture of the future husband or wife of the applicant, with date of marriage, occupation, leading traits of character, etc. This is no imposition, as testimonials without number can assert. By stating place of birth, age, disposition, color of eyes and hair, and enclosing fifty cents and stamped envelope addressed to yourself you will receive the picture by return mail, together with desired information.

Address in confidence, MADAME GERTRUDE REMINGTON, P. O. Box 297, West Troy, N. Y.

There cometh glad tidings of joy to all,
To young and old, to great and to small;
The beauty which was once so precious and rare,
Is free for all, and all may be fair.

By the use of

CHASTELLAR'S

WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL,

FOR IMPROVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.

The most valuable and perfect preparation in use, for giving the skin a beautiful pearl-like tint, that is only found in youth. It quickly removes Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Blotches, Moth Patches, Sallowness, Eruptions, and all impurities of the skin, kindly healing the same, leaving the skin white and clear as alabaster. Its use cannot be detected by the closest scrutiny, and being a vegetable preparation is perfectly harmless. It is the only article of the kind used by the French, and is considered by the Parisian as indispensable to a perfect toilet. Upwards of 30,000 bottles were sold during the past year, a sufficient guarantee of its efficacy. Price only 75 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of order, by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Excelsior! Excelsior!!

CHASTELLAR'S

HAIR EXERMINATOR, FOR REMOVING SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

TO THE LADIES ESPECIALLY, THIS INVALUABLE depilatory recommends itself as being an almost indispensable article to female beauty, is easily applied, does not burn or injure the skin, but acts directly on the roots. It is warranted to remove superfluous hair from low foreheads, or from any part of the body, completely, totally and radically extirpating the same, leaving the skin soft, smooth and natural. This is the only article used by the French and is the only real effectual depilatory in existence. Price 75 cents per package, sent post paid, to any address, on receipt of an order by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Whiskers and Mustaches!

FORCED TO GROW UPON THE SMOOTHEST FACE face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

Beauty!

Auburn, Golden, Flaxen and Silken Curls,

PRODUCED BY THE USE OF PROF. DE BREUX FRISER LE CHEVEUX.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets, or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London, with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

Powell Street

WARM SWIMMING BATHS!

N. E. Corner Powell and Filbert Streets,

OPPOSITE WASHINGTON SQUARE.

J. M. NASH.....PROPRIETOR.

WARM AND COLD BATHS from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. daily, with every appliance usually connected with a well-ordered Gymnasium for the development of Health and Muscle.

The only Complete Swimming Bath on this Coast.

Another advantage connected with this establishment, not usually found in Swimming Baths, is, that the water is Continually Changing, Fresh Water running in and out Constantly.

Single Baths, including Towels and Bathing Dress. 25 cts
5 Bath Tickets, " " $1

Call and Try Them. The Kearny Street and Montgomery Street Cars pass the door every five minutes.

The Baths are reserved for Ladies every Wednesday, from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. Ladies to supply their own Bathing Dresses.

I will guarantee to impart a thorough practical knowledge of Swimming in one month. Terms for the Course, $10.

J. M. NASH.

PIONEER IRON SHUTTER WORKS

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

DRY GOODS

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

HAVE OPENED

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES,

Black Silks,
Plaid and Plain Poplins,
Normandy and Ottoman Cloths,
Foulard De Laines and Challys,
Alpacas and Merinoes,
Prints and Ginghams,
Organdies and Lawns,
Grenadines,
Marseilles, etc. etc.
Linen and Cotton Sheetings,
Linen and Cotton Shirtings,
Table Damask and Napkins,
Towels and Towelings,
Lace and Muslin Curtains,
Flannels and Blankets,
Marseilles Quilts,
Mourning Dress Goods,
Kid Gloves,
Cloth for Cloaks and Men's and Boys' Wear,
Cloaks, Basques, Mantillas and Shawls,
Hosiery, suitable for Men, Ladies and Children.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
LICK HOUSE.
WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 BATTERY STREET, BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

615 WASHINGTON STREET, 615,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

THE OPPOSITION STEAMSHIP

AMERICA

WILL SAIL

Saturday, April 27th,

AT 11 O'CLOCK, A. M.,

To connect with the Splendid New Steamship

NEVADA

FOR NEW YORK.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN JENNER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Jenner, the Executor of the last will and testament of Ellen Jenner, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heirs and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 3d day of June, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs and devisees of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said third day of June, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 23d, A. D. 1867.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Att'y for Executor. ap27-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, William Rowan, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said William Rowan, at No 532 Merchant street, Room No. 3, in the City and County of San Francisco.

WM. ROWAN.
Administrator of the estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, Aprd 26th, 1867. ap17-tf

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 24. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 4, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Judge Deady and the Press; Ravages of a Bore, by Prentice; Art Notes, by Astræa; Literary Gleanings and Gossip. LION'S MOUTH: All About a Monkey. Horrors of the Telegraph; Butchers and Snobs: A Gloomy Corner; The Heathen Church of St. James; The "Bulletin" Annihilated, Dramatic Affairs, etc. SELECTED: Skirmishing in the Shenandoah; Wanted! New Poets; Marie Stewart; "Black Sheep." Poetry: A Dream Picture, by Charles Warren Stoddard.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale" IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

The Heathen Church of St. James.

If the Daily Dispatch of April 30th may be believed, the new church of St. James which was theretofore supposed by the public to be a Christian institution, is to be a sort of half-heathen, half-Christian establishment—a sort of compromise between heathenism and Christianity. The Dispatch tells us that there is in the chancel window a "pelican drawing blood from his breast to feed her offspring." Not to speak of the heathenism grammar, the pelican itself whether male or female is not a Christian bird. Then we are told that "on either side is a phœnix." Now a phœnix is most decidedly a heathen bird, a bird which has no right to spread itself in the chancel window of a Christian church. "Thus bad begins and worse remains behind." The Dispatch says:

"In the scene of the ascension are pictures of Mercury, who was first to know of her risen Lord, and the apostles who witnessed His glorious transfiguration."

A picture of Mercury is very much out of place in the chancel window of a Christian church. Mercury, the god of thieves, ought not to be introduced in a picture of the crucifixion even for the sake of the thieves crucified on the right hand and on the left. If the Dispatch means to insult Mary Magdalene by calling her "Mercury," we can only say that its conduct is indecent and reprehensible, and that even if Mary Magdalene had seven devils cast out of her, that is no reason why she should be insulted by the Daily Dispatch of San Francisco. We care little about the pelican, we could have passed over the phœnix in silence, but we cannot allow any newspaper to talk of Mercury in connection with Mary Magdalene, without entering a protest.

Reconciled to his Pilgrimage.

It is comforting to know that the reporter of the Alta is reconciled to his pilgrimage on this planet. He says in yesterday's paper:

"Last Sunday one of those happy little incidents took place, such as occasionally occur, as if to reconcile us to our pilgrimage on this planet, on the occasion of the presentation by the MacMahon Grenadier Guard of a full-rigged (miniature) propeller to their commander, General T. N. Cazneau, as a token of their appreciation of the services he has rendered them."

Now we believe in a merciful over ruling Providence, but we cannot believe that the MacMahon Grenadier Guard gave General Cazneau a toy boat in order that the reporter of the Alta might be reconciled to his pilgrimage on this planet. However, we are glad that he derived comfort from the occurrence, and trust that he may some day be cheered on his journey through this vale of tears by being himself presented with a little boat. As the next paragraph acknowledges the receipt of "A fine mess of trout, both large and small, caught in a neighboring county by a lady contributor," the reporter ought to be quite happy. When lady contributors are fishing for the reporters of the Alta, those hard worked gentlemen ought not to grumble about their pilgrimage on this planet.

Horrors of the Telegraph.

The telegraph is terribly short and rough-spoken—if not always plain-spoken—in its utterances. It too often blurts out to a wife, "your husband died to-day," without any accompanying words of condolence Telegraph condolence is expensive. In Thursday's Bulletin the following dispatch appeared:

"NEW YORK, May 1.—An old man, a patient at the Charity Hospital, had his eyes gouged out, and was then strangled by his attendant. The latter has been arrested."

This is very horrible. The San Francisco public could well have waited for a detailed account of this occurrence to reach them by mail. It was scarcely worth while to telegraph that an old man, a sick old man, a nameless old man who was an inmate of the Charity Hospital, had his eyes gouged out and was afterwards strangled on the first of May. It is to be hoped that the occurrence is one which does not frequently take place in the Charity Hospital, but its infrequency does not make it worthy of being telegraphed. It is some comfort after reading the above melancholy and horrifying dispatch to come upon the cheerful news, a little lower down in the column: "Plain mess-beef closed buoyant."

A Gloomy Corner.

The corner now occupied by the charred shell of the Cosmopolitan Hotel. It is, indeed, dreary and desolate. The main entrance, once ever resounding with the tread of passing feet, is closed and barred. The reading-room, dimly seen through the dust-stained, plate-glass windows, is no longer filled with strangers. The office, the heart of the immense caravansary, is silent. Bells no longer tingle. Waiters no more rush to and fro, or sit idly in the hall and scan us impertinently as we pass. Upstairs, the spacious halls are no longer filled with the sound of voices of children, romping and playing, or rustling silks. The shoulder straps, the Generals, the Colonels, the Majors, Judge This and Senator That have departed, and expose their boot soles, to the passer by, at the front windows of the Occidental. The ever-waiting coaches and carriages are gone. Above yawn rows of shivered and charred windows. What little is seen is but a glimpse of blackness and desolation, of scathed and blasted apartments, which in turn have been tenanted by many happy and, perchance, unhappy couples. Within these walls the mission of the generally inconvenient chambermaid is over. Her beds are burnt up. There are blackened shreds of lace curtains fluttering by the open windows. The crash of plates, the rattle of knives and forks no longer fill the dining-room. No appetizing sounds are heard. The dinner hour comes and goes, but there is no glare of gas, naught save pitchy darkness. The silent-footed, white-jacketed attendants trot about no more with savory dishes, neither gather they in groups enjoying moments of stolen gossip while in one corner of the apartment some anxious, angry and hungry guest swears internally at their sublime indifference to the pressing needs of his stomach. Fair women no longer sweep in and out, visiting the dining-hall ostensibly for gastronomical purposes, yet much more desiring to see and be seen. No more shrinkingly enters the country bride, catching her first and last glimpse of fashionable life at our fashionable hotel. There is no rattling and rolling of arriving and departing coaches to and from the river boats or the ocean steamers, nor strapping or unstrapping of opulent looking trunks, or the banging of the same on the sidewalk. The guests have all fled. There are no more board bills made out. The Fire King put up at the Cosmopolitan, and, although finally ejected, he left it a ruin!

Butchers and Snobs.

When Mr. McCoppin made a fool of himself last Monday, he said among other foolish things:

"He has been asked to classify his constituents into clean and unclean. To distinguish between the owners of clean shirts and greasy smocks. To choose between the honest butchers and their greasy palms and the snobs who claim superiority over them. According to the report of the gentleman who traveled up Brannan street when the sidewalks were undulating, he should discard those honest hard-working men for the sake of well dressed fops, who dipped their finger nails in scented water every morning before they said their prayers. He should not do it."

Now Mr. McCoppin's nose may possibly be a sufficiently well instructed nose, "to distinguish between the owners of clean shirts and greasy smocks;" but Mr. McCoppin will not—as long as he is a Supervisor, follow his nose. Of course, any man who claims superiority over an "honest butcher" with a "grensy palm"—or a bloody palm for that matter—is a snob. Then Mr. McCoppin repeats as if it were a fact, the funny lie concerning the reporter of the Bulletin—"the sidewalks were undulating"—and asks whether "he should discard these honest hard-working men for the sake of well dressed fops, who dipped their finger nails in scented water every morning before they said their prayers," and then boldly declared "he should not do it." It would, indeed, have been vile in Mr. McCoppin to have preferred gentlemen who washed their hands with bay rum or Florida water before saying their prayers, to his constituents who dipped their hands in blood and never said their prayers. There is manliness in a greasy palm, there is heroism in bloody hands, there is something grand in greasy smocks. If "well-dressed fops" don't like the smell of putrid blood, let them hold their aristocratic noses. Down with the clean-shirted sweet-scented aristocracy. The butchers are the true men of the country, heroes who are not a bit afraid to tackle the boldest sheep that ever baaed. The sports of ancient Rome are revived in Butchertown. The butchers are our only gentlemen.

The "Bulletin" Annihilated.

At the session of the intelligent Board of Supervisors on Monday, after Mr. Shrader, the butchers' champion, had in the most—not gentlemanly but—Supervisorlike manner, accused the reporter of the Bulletin of having been too drunk to walk straight on the occasion when he visited the filthy slaughter houses at the Potrero, Mr. McCoppin took up the cudgel, or the pole ax, for the butchers. He said.

"If the Bulletin had not been annihilated that night by Mr. Tittel (Mr. Tittel had blackguarded the Bulletin for its very just remarks on his expensive building contracts), he might have something to say about the slur upon a portion of his constituents (the butchers.) If that unfortunate paper was not demolished altogether by the scathing eloquence of the gentleman for the Eighth, (it was not), if it did come out to-morrow, (it did), it would surely be in a mangled form," (it wasn't.) All the brick layers, all the butchers, and all the Supervisors cannot annihilate the Bulletin, but they all have the privilege of talking nousense and swearing at it.

All about a Monkey.

While at North Beach a few days since, studying natural history at the free menagerie, we beheld a break in the usual routine of the imprisoned bipeds and quadrupeds. One of the long limbed, long tailed, ring-tailed monkeys worked himself free of his fetters. Finding himself at liberty, his first action was to make a dash at the apple stand and seize an apple. Then he commenced his flight, holding the apple in one claw and making use of the other three as propelling agents. We beheld and admired the foresight and sagacity of that caricature, and perhaps descendant of the originators of humanity. Why, on finding himself free, did he not use all his power and time in getting away? Was it not that reason or instinct taught him that he might need provisions for the long journey to that tropical clime whither he would return? So we argued as we watched him running up the street, taking an occasional bite at the forbidden fruit. We wished he might get away. All our sympathies were with our apple snatching friend. What a fine time he would have had roaming at large over the city, peeping in at garret dormitories, terrifying young men and maidens, giving rise to suspicions of burglaries, foraging in neglected cupboards, rushing along housetops at night, imagined to be a somnambulistic acrobat, and ascending telegraph poles by the light of a waning moon, looking like Puck at work with his girdle.

But this was not to be. This apple proved too great a temptation. He stopped to eat it. He was cornered, caught, and ignominiously dragged back. When thus on his way to prison, he looked neither to the right or left; he seemed neither dejected or downfallen, but gave himself up entirely to the eating of the purloined fruit. The little monkeys and the big monkeys all stood erect and chattered as their brother was brought back to slavery. Even the bears aroused from their usual apathy, regarded him with as much interest as a bear can regard anything, except cake, peanuts, apples and other delicacies. But he didn't care. He didn't seem to regard himself as a martyr, or an unfortunate, on his way to chains and slavery. He devoted himself entirely to the apple. He acted like a philosopher. He had failed to escape, but the apple was left, and he would make the most of that before his angry keeper deprived him of it A man under such circumstances would have looked around and courted sympathy from the bystanders, by putting on an air of suffering, patient resignation. Not he. Figuratively his actions said, "I have failed in this attempt to escape. Better trick next time. The apple is still left however. Let us make the most of the present. Man is inhuman and revengeful. He may take from me this fruit or what is left of it. It is good. Things might be worse. There may be other chances for escape." We admired the wisdom of our ring-tailed friend, and departed amused and instructed by his example.

Struggling to Attain Respectability

The editors of the Flag strive hard to convince the public that they are really esteemed by some people. When little girls send them nosegays they publish acknowledgements, and when they are invited to picnics they inform the public of the fact. Yesterday they made the following formal announcement:

"The editors of this paper hereby make known that they have received an invitation to be present at the picnic of the Rincon Girl's Grammar School, which is to occur to-day, at the grounds of the Company on the Encinal."

That's right. When the editors of the Flag are invited into respectable society they should "make known that they have received an invitation."

Idiotic Telegram.

The trifling and idiotic tendency of the age is more than ever evinced by a recent dispatch from Portland, Oregon, published in all the city dailies to the effect that on Saturday morning, April 27th, at two A. M., a man was found on the steps of the Methodist Church in a somnambulistic state, nude with the exception of his bare shirt. "When awakened he ran like a deer up Taylor street, and disappeared." He might more properly have run for a tailor than for Taylor street. But seriously was it for the transmission of such intelligence as this that Morse caught and harnassed the lightning?

The Right to Labor.

The liberal minded working men of Chicago have decided that if a man in that city persists in attempting to work more than eight hours a day, he must be prevented from doing so by force. Many hundreds have given up their rights to labor, and do not intend to work even one hour a day; but expect to eat at the expense of their strong minded fellow-citizens who have expressed so much interest in their bodily welfare.

High-menial.

An interior paper has the following item:

"To those who would witness the interesting ceremony of tying the hymenial knot will attend at the Episcopal Church this morning at 6 o'clock precisely."

A notification of the untying of the hymenial knot would fill the Episcopal Church at three o'clock in the morning.

The Cause.

The Bulletin is active and energetic for the purification of the city from foul atmospheres arising from bone boiling and slaughtering establishments. It first awoke to a realization of the advantages of pure air on the removal of the ancient but pungent pile which so long blockaded Merchant street.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XIV.—"INFORMATION RECEIVED."

WHEN George Dallas knew that his meeting with Clare Carruthers was imminent, he told his uncle one of the two circumstances of his life which he had hitherto concealed from him. As George expected, Mr. Felton received the communication with some seriousness "A little while ago, George," he said, "this might have upset the new and good understanding happily established between Mr. Carruthers and yourself, but I am in hopes it will not do so now. I think the old gentleman's nature is fine and forgiving when one gets beneath the crust, and I am not afraid now. The chance of seeing the young lady, not in his presence, for the first time—that would have been awkward and dangerous indeed—is most fortunate. You must make your peace with her in the first instance."

When Mr. Felton had left George alone at Sir Thomas Boldero's house, he had done so with intention, and without any purpose of returning. "Meet me at my rooms afterward," he had said to George. "And tell Miss Carruthers I will take leave to call on her at Mrs. Stanhope's this afternoon." George agreed, promising that he must look in at The Mercury office first, but would then be at his uncle's service. Left alone, he had applied himself, in a condition of extreme mental discomposure, to thinking of what he should say to Clare, and how he should say it. He had almost arranged a satisfactory programme before she came; after—well, after—he did not speak or look in the least like what he had intended, and if any one had asked him for an account of their interview (which no one did, it was destined to be utterly forgotten and overwhelmed in the tide of events), he would have been quite incapable of satisfying the demand.

The interview lasted long, and when, at its close, George Dallas put Clare Carruthers into her cousin's carriage, her face was closely veiled, and the little hand which lingered in his had not yet done trembling. As he stood on the doorstep and watched the carriage out of sight, the young man's face was pale and agitated, but full of deep and sacred happiness too. An expression of resolve and hope, of courage and power, was upon his features, such as they had never before worn. Had he recalled the resolution he had taken for the time when Clare Carruthers should know Paul Ward as George Dallas, and had he renewed it, with fresh heart and energy, not unaided now by circumstances, not frowned upon by fate, no longer friendless? However that may have been, he carried a humbled and grateful heart with him, and felt himself a widely different man as he entered the dingy precincts of The Mercury office, to what he had been the last time he had crossed that threshold.

Mr. Cunningham was "in," and not only could see George, but was particularly anxious to see him.

"I was just writing to you, old fellow," he said, leaving off shaking hands with George, and beginning to tear up a brief and scrawly manuscript on flimsy which lay before him. "You have come in time to save me trouble and fourpence sterling."

"Anything about the business I wrote to you about?" asked George.

"Just that, sir. Of course I attended to it at once, and put Tatlow on to it on your account. They're said to be cautious chaps, the detectives, and of course it wouldn't pay for them to be said to be anything else; but I'm hanged if I ever believed it before. You may talk of depth, but Tatlow's unfathomable. Has the job from you, sir, per medium of your humble servant, and flatly declines to report progress to me; goes in for doing business only with the principal, and when he comes to me not a word can I get out of him, except that he must know the address of a certain individual named Paul Ward."

"Paul Ward!" exclaimed George.

"Yes, Paul Ward! Great fun, isn't it, George? And I really could not resist the joke of quizzing the detective a little bit. I was immensely tickled at the idea of your employing the man, and his looking after you. So I told him I knew Mr. Dallas was acquainted with a gentleman of that name, and could give him all the information he required."

George could not laugh, but he tried to smile. Nothing could lend the subject of his uncle's suspense and anxiety even a collaterally amusing effect for him, and this statement puzzled him.

"What on earth can I have to do with the matter?" he said. "The man must be traveling very far indeed out of the right tracks. No one in the world, as it is pretty plain, can be more ignorant of Felton's affairs than I am. He must be on a totally wrong scent; and if he has blundered in this way, it is only waste of time and money to employ him."

"Well," said Cunningham, a little disappointed that George did not enjoy the keenness of the capital joke as much as he did, "you must settled all that with him yourself, and find out from him, if you can,—and, by Jove, I doubt it,—how Paul Ward has got mixed up in your cousin's affairs (if he has got mixed up in them,—and, mind, I don't feel sure even of that,—he certainly did not say so) without your being a party to the transaction. I just gave Tatlow your address in Piccadilly, and told him you'd be there in a day or two."

"What did he say?" asked George, whose sense of mystification was increasing.

"Said he should call every day until you arrived,—no doubt he has been there to-day, or you'll find him there when you get home,—and disappeared, having got all the information I chose to give him, but not what he wanted; which is, I take it, the correct thing to do to a detective who observes the laws of discretion too absolutely."

Cunningham was laughing his jolly laugh, and George was wondering what Tatlow meant, when the entrance of a third individual on office business interrupted the friend's talk. George took leave, and went down stairs. Arrived at the door, he stopped, ran up the first flight of dirty stairs again, and turned into a small room, dimly lighted by a dirty skylight, to the right of the first landing. In this sanctuary, strong smelling of dust, size, and printer's ink, lay files, bound and unbound, of The Mercury. A heavy volume was open on the clumsy thick-legged table which filled up the centre of the room. It contained the files of the newspaper for the first half of the current year.

"Let me see," said George, "she was not quite sure about the 22d; but it must have been about that date."

Then he turned the leaves, and scanned the columns of advertisements, until he found in one the warning which Clara Carruthers had sent to Paul Ward. His eyes filled with tears as he read it. He called up one of the office people, and had a copy of the paper of that date looked for, out of which he carefully cut the advertisement, and consigned it to the keeping of the pocket-book which he always carried about him. He placed the little slip of printed paper in the same compartment in which Clara Carruthers' unconscious gift had so long lain hidden. As George threw open the doors of the hansom in which he had been driven from The Mercury office to Piccadilly, Jim Swain came to the wheel, and, touching his tousled head, asked if he might speak to him.

"Certainly," said George, getting out; "any message from Mr. Routh?"

"No, sir," said Jim, "it's not; it's something very particular, as I 'ad to say to you this long time. It ain't rightly about myself—and—"

"Never mind, Jim; you can tell me all about it in the house," said George, cheerily. "Come along." He opened the door with his key, and let himself and Jim into the hall. But there Mr. Felton met him, his face grave and careworn, and, as George saw in a minute, with some additional lines of trouble in it.

"I'm so glad you have come, George. I found letters here when I got back."

"Letters from New York?"

"Yes."

George left Jim standing on the mat, going with his uncle into the room he had just left.

Mr. James Swain, who was accustomed to pass a good deal of his life in waiting about on steps, in passages, at horses' heads, and occasionally in kitchens, and to whom the comfortable hall of the house in Piccadilly presented itself as an agreeable temporary abode, considered it advisable to sit down and attend the leisure of Mr. Dallas. He had been for some minutes engaged, partly in thinking what he should say to Mr. Dallas, partly in counting the squares in the tiles which floored the hall, hearing all the while a subdued sound of voices from the adjoining room, when a strange sort of cry reached his ears. He started up, and listened intently. The cry was not repeated; but in a few moments Mr. Felton came into the hall, looking frightened, and called loudly down the lower staircase for assistance. Two servants, a man and a woman, came quickly, and in the mean time Jim looked in at the open door. In another minute they were all in the dining-room in a confused group, gathered round an arm-chair, in which was lying the insensible, death-like figure of George Dallas, his collar and necktie torn off, his waistcoat open, several letters on the table before him, and a card on the floor at his feet.

It was a very complete and dead swoon, and there was no explanation of it; none to be given to the servants, at least. Jim Swain did not touch George,—he only looked on; and as, at the suggestion of the woman, they opened the window, and pushed the chair on which George was lying within the current of air, he picked up the card, over which one of the castors had passed. It was a small photographic portrait. The boy looked at it, and recognized, with surprise, that it was the likeness of Mr. Deane,—that it was a fac-simile of a portrait he had looked at and handled a very little while ago. He put it down upon the table, and made to Mr. Felton the business-like suggestion that a doctor had better be sent for, and he had better be sent to fetch him, which was immediately acceded to.

When Jim returned, bringing with him a general practitioner, he was told that Mr. Dallas had "come to," but was "uncommon weak and confused, and crying like a child when he wasn't shivering," so that Jim felt his chances of an interview were small indeed.

"I can't see him, of course, and I wanted to most partic'lar. He brought me in hisself."

"Yes, yes, I know," said the male domestic, with importance; "but you can't see him, and there's no good in your waiting about here. Look around at eleven to-morrow, and I'll see what can be done for you."

Jim had nothing for it but to go disconsolately away. So he went.

While George Dallas and Clara Carruthers were talking together at Sir Thomas Boldero's house in Chesham Place, while the hours—never to be forgotten by either—were passing over them, the same hours were witnessing an interview not less momentous for Harriet Routh and her beautiful foe.

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge was ready to receive her visitor; and as her coquetry and vanity were omnivorous, much as she despised women, and sincerely as she enjoyed the knowledge of her power to make most of them envious and miserable, she had dressed herself very carefully. She was just a little bored by her present mode of existence. Routh could not be much with her; and though she had brought herself to believe that she really did feel an absorbing passion for him, somehow or other it left a good deal of her thoughts and her time unabsorbed, and she did not exactly know how to dispose of either. The romance of this kind of incognito life was all very well in its way, which was a pleasant way, and as far as it went, which certainly was very far, but not quite far enough. And she did get horribly bored, there was no denying it. When Routh's daily letter had been read—for she exacted that of him, of him who hated letter-writing, and whose hard actuality of nature needed all the incitement of her beauty, her coquetry, and her artfulness to rouse him to sentiment and give his language the eloquence of love,—she had nothing but novels to fall back upon, and the vague prospect of a supplementary note or two, or trying on a new dress, or thinking what theater she would go to, or what direction her afternoon drive should take. She was glad of the chance of seeing a new face, though it was only a woman's; and then the reason for receiving her was so sound, it was impossible Routh could object. Indeed, she could not see the force of his objections to her going out more, and seeing people in general; it could not matter now, and would sound better hereafter than this hidden residence in London; however, it could not last long, and it was very romantic, very.

No. 4 Hollington Square was one of those London houses which every one knows, furnished for people who takes houses for the season, prettily flimsily, sparingly, a house which tenants with money and taste could make very striking and attractive, which tenants without money and taste would find very tolerable in its original condition. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge possessed both, and as she made it a rule to have every advantage procurable by the use of either, the drawing-room in which she awaited the coming of her visitor was as pretty and coquettish a room as could easily have been seen. She had chosen a becoming costume, and an equally becoming attitude; and she looked beautiful indeed, in her rich morning-dress of black silk, faced with rose-colored satin and costly lace. The masses of her dark hair were coiled smoothly round her head, her white arms were without a jewel to turn the eye from their shapely beauty. She glanced at one of the many mirrors in the room as the page announced "a lady," and felt perfectly satisfied.

The room was long and narrow, though not large; and as Harriet walked from the door to the hearth-rug on which Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge stood, having gracefully risen in an attitude especially intended for her visitor's admiration, that lady had time to observe her appearance, and to experience a certain vague sense of discomfort not altogether unlike alarm. She saw a face which she remembered, but with which she could not connect any distinct recollection; a pale, fair, determined face, with smooth light-brown hair framing a broad, low brow, with keen, piercing blue eyes, which looked steadily at her, and never dropped their fine fringed lids, blue eyes in which power, will, and knowledge dwelt, as the shallow-souled woman they looked at, and through, felt, but did not understand. A face, so fixed in its expression of irremediable woe, a face so lost with all its self-possession, so full of despair, with all its might of will, that a duller intellect than that of a meager-brained woman must have recognized a story in it such as happily few human beings have to tell or to conceal. Harriet did not speak, or make any sign of salutation; but when she had quite reached her, Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge recovered herself, and said, with all her accustomed grace:

"I am so much obliged to you for calling. Pray take a seat. I think I know to what I am indebted for the pleasure of your visit;" and then she sank gracefully back into her low chair, and smiled her very best smile. The very best of those suited to the feminine capacity, of course. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had quite a different set of smiles for men.

"I am quite sure you do not," said Harriet, in a low, firm voice, and without availing herself of the invitation to be seated. "I am quite sure you have no notion of my business here. You shall know it; it is important, but brief."

"Madam," said the other, sitting upright, and turning slightly pale. Harriet extended her hand with a gesture habitual to her, and said:

"Stay. You must hear me for your own sake. You will do well to hear me quietly, and to give me your very best attention. If I do not make the impression on you which I desire and intend to make, there is one other person beside myself who will suffer by my failure, and that person is you."

She dropped her hand and drew her breath. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge looked at her with frightened, distended eyes, speechless.

"You think I have come on a false pretext, and I have done so, to a certain extent. You lost an article of ornament or dress at Homberg?"

"I did—a locket," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge a little relieved, and glancing unconsciously toward her silver purse, which was at hand, and through whose meshes gold shone.

"I know, but I have not brought you your locket. You lost something else at Homberg, and I have brought it, to prove that you had better hear me, and that you must." And then Harriet laid upon the table, near by the side of the silver purse, a crushed and faded flower, whose rich, luscious blossom had been of the deepest crimson in the time of its bloom, when it had nestled against a woman's silken hair.

"What is it? What do you mean? Good God, who are you?" said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, shrinking back as Harriet made the one step necessary to enable her to reach the table.

"I am Stewart Routh's wife," she replied, slowly, and without changing her tone, or releasing the other woman from her steady gaze.

This time Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge sprang to her feet, with a face as white as death.

"Don't be frightened," said Harriet, with the faintest glimmer of a contemptous smile, which was the last expression having relation to Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, personally, that showed itself in her face, until the end. "I did not come here to inspire you with any fear of me; I did not come here on your account, or on mine; but for another motive."

"What, what is it?" said her hearer, nervously reseating herself.

"My husband's safety," said Harriet; and as she spoke the words, Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge felt that an illusion was rolled away from her forever. He belonged to this pale, stern woman, whose unsparing eyes were fixed upon her, whose unflattering voice had not a tone of doubt or weakness in it. In every line of her countenance was the assertion of her right, against which the other felt powerless, and in whose presence her self-confidence was utterly subdued.

Calm and still, Harriet Routh stood before her, her head bent forward, her hands clasped and pressed steadily against her waist.

"I have no time to lose," she said, "and the briefest explanation will, in this case, be the best. When that flower fell from your hair over the balcony at the Kursaal at Homburg, it fell at my feet. I was on the terrace beneath. If once, during the time you and he stood there, my husband had looked away from you and over the rail, he would have seen me. But he did not. I had come to that particular spot accidentally, though I was there that night because I suspected, because I knew, that he was there with you, and I would not condemn him unseen, unconvicted."

Cowering before her, her pale face in her shaking hands, the other woman listened.

"I heard all he said to you. Don't start; it was very pretty. I know it all by heart; every intonation, every hesitation—all the lying gamut from end to end. I heard all the story he told you of his marriage; every incident, every declaration, every sentiment, was a lie! He told you he had married a poor, passionate, silly girl, who had compromised herself through her undisciplined and unreturned love for him, for pity—for a man's pity for a woman. A lie. He told you his wife was an oddity, a nervous recluse, oblivious of all but her health and her valetudinarian fancies; that she had no love for him, or any one; no mind, no tastes, no individuality; that his life was a dreary one, and the oscillation of a heart which had never been hers toward so irresistible a woman as you (and he was right, so far; you are very, very beautiful. I saw that, and granted it to myself, at once), was no sin, no dishonesty, against her. All a lie. Look at me, if you have the little courage needed for looking at me, and tell me if it could be true!"

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge looked at her, but only to drop her head into her hands, and moan in the presence of the white face and the steady sparkling blue eyes.

"This was the lie he told you concerning me. The lie he told you about himself was more important in its results; and as it flattered you, of course you gave it ready credence. No doubt you believe it still, though you must know him better now. He told you a story of his misunderstood, undervalued life; of family pride, and grandeur, and wealth—of family ties severed in consequence of the charitable, chivalrous, self-sacrificing marriage he had made; of obscurity nobly born, and toil willingly encountered, of talents unremittingly exercised without fame or reward, of high aspirations and future possibilities, if only the agency of wealth and the incentive of love might be his. And this flimsy tale caught your fancy and your faith. It was so charming to fill the vacant place in the misunderstood man's life, so delightful to be at once queen and consoler, to supply all the deficiencies of this deplorable wife. It was just the programme to catch the fancy of a woman like you, beautiful, vain, and empty."

There was neither scorn nor anger in Harriet's voice; there was merely a dash of reflection, as if she had strayed for a moment from the track of her discourse.

"But it was all a lie," she went on. "His story of me, and his story of himself, were both equally false. Into the truth, as regards myself, I do not choose to enter. It is needless, and you are as incapable of understanding as you are indifferent to it. The truth about him I mean to tell you for his sake."

"Why?" stammered the listener.

"Because he is in danger, and I want to save him, because I love him—him, mind you, not the man you have fancied him, not the persuasive, bland lover you have found him, no doubt; for I conclude he has not changed the character he assumed that night upon the balcony; but the hard, the cruel, the desperate man he is. I tell you,"—she drew a little nearer, and again Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge shrank from her—"he is a swindler, a liar, and a thief; he has lived by such means for years, was living by them when he married me. They are failing him now, and he feels the game is up here. What his exact plan is, of course I do not know; but that it includes getting you and your fortune into his power I have no doubt."

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge shivered now under the unsparing gaze. If only this woman would turn her eyes away from her, she thought, in the midst of her fear and amazement—the eyes that pierced her, that suffocated her, like the gripe of a fierce hand upon her throat! She did not know his plan. No; but who could look at her and doubt that, if she chose to know it, she could force the information from her hearer? Who could listen to her cold, even tones, and dream of resisting their implacable power?

"Whatever his plan may be," Harriet continued, "he is entirely absorbed in it, and he is indifferent to all beside. Mind, I don't say you count for nothing in this: you are too vain to believe, I am too wise to say, anything of the kind. But your beauty, which he likes, would never have tempted him to an insane disregard of his safety, would never have kept him here when the merest prudence should have driven him far away. He wants you, but he wants your money more urgently and desperately. He needs time to win you and it, no matter how he means to do it, and time is what he has not to give, time is the one stake it is ruin to him to risk in this game. Do you hear me? Do you understand me?"

The blank, white face feebly looked a negative.

"No. Then I will put it more plainly. My husband, your lover, the man who is trying to ruin you in reputation, that he may have the power to ruin you in fortune, is in imminent danger. Flight, and flight alone, could save him; but he refuses to fly, because he will not leave you."

"What—what has he done?"

"He has been concerned in a robbery," said Harriet, with perfect composure, "and I know the police are on the right track, and will soon come up with him. But he is desperate, and refuses to go. I did not know why until yesterday, when I found you had followed him from Homburg—by arrangement, of course. Tush, woman! don't try to deny it. What does it matter to me? A lie more or less, a villany more or less, makes no difference in him for me; but I knew then why he was obstinately bent on waiting for his fate."

"I—I don't believe you," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge; and she half arose from her chair, and stretched her hand toward the bell. But Harriet stopped her by the lifting of a finger.

"O yes, you do," she said, "you believe me implicitly. You have been afraid of this man—even when he has flattered you, and won upon you most; you have never felt sure of him, and you know I am telling you the truth. But you are weak, and you would like to think you had not been quite so egregiously deceived. I cannot, for his sake, leave you this comfort. You lost a locket at Homberg—a golden egg-shaped toy—with two portraits in it, one of yourself, the other of a young man, a countryman of yours, an admirer. You prized the thing, you showed it to my husband, you talked of its value—is this true?"

"Yes, yes, it is true—what then?"

"This then: he stole that locket from you, as he sat by you, in your carriage, and talked sentiment and compliment to you. He stole the locket—it does not sound nice or heroic; he stole it, I tell you."

"Impossible—impossible!"

"Am I in the confidence of your mind? Do I know the contents of your jewel-case? But this is folly, this is tence; you know in your soul that I am telling you the truth. And now for the reason of my telling it. If you think I am a jealous woman, come here to expose my husband to my rival, and take him from her by even such desperate means, you make my task harder, by giving me blind folly to deal with. I came with no thought of myself or you; though I do indeed save you by coming, I have no care, no wish to do so; you are nothing to me but a danger in his path. That his safety will be yours too, is your fortune, not my doing. I care not, it might be your destruction, and it would be all one to me. I am not jealous of you; you are nothing to me, and he has long been lost to me. But he must not be lost to himself too, and for that I am here. I can do nothing with or for him more, but you can: he loves you, after his fashion, and you can save him."

"I—I save him—from what? how? what do you mean? If you have told me the truth, why should I, if I could?"

Calmly and contemplatively Harriet looked at her: calmly she said, as if to herself—

"And I am sure he thinks you love him! Wonderful, very wonderful! but," she went on, with quicker utterance, "that does not matter. You can save him. I will answer your last question first; to convince you that this must be done, for your own sake, will save time. You did not know his character until now, but I think you know something of his temper; I think you understand that he is a desperate man. Suppose you break with him now—and your mind has been made up to do that for several minutes—suppose you determine to save yourself from this swindler, this liar, this thief, to keep your character, and your money, and your beauty for a different fate, do you think he will let you go? How do you propose to escape him? You don't know. You are terribly frightened at the idea. I have come to tell you."

"You are a dreadful woman—you are a wicked, dreadful woman," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, with a moan.

"Yes," said Harriet, "I am a wicked, dreadful woman, but you need not fear me, though you have done me some wrong too, even according to your code, I think. Rouse yourself, and listen to me while I tell you what you must do."

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge tried to obey her; she shook back her hair which had fallen over her face, and looked up less scared, and more intelligent.

"If my husband has not left England by to-morrow," said Harriet with clear, distinct emphasis, "it will be too late to save him from the clutches of the law. Nothing will induce him to leave England while you remain here. What?" she said, with a sudden rush of burning red into her face and an indescribable fierce change of tone and manner. "What? You were going, were you—and together? Tell me instantly—instantly, I say—what is this I see in your face?"

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge caught at Harriet's gown, and stammered—

"Don't, Don't; I'll tell you."

"Do you think I am going to strike you or kill you; do you think I would touch you with one finger?" said Harriet, in her former tone, and drawing her dress from the woman's grasp with a quiet determined movement. "Tell me instantly, and don't fear. You were going away—and together? Where were you going, and when?"

"To New York—on Saturday."

Harriet Routh turned abruptly from her, and for one minute's duration of awful silence her face was hidden. Then, with a sound like a sigh and a sob, but such a sound as the listener had never heard before, she resumed her former position. The other dared not look at her for many minutes. When she did, Harriet's face fixed itself forever on her memory as the ideal of the face of one who had died of sheer pain.

"Thank you. The acknowledgment at least is brave and true, and makes the rest easy. Am I to conclude you do not wish to carry out this arrangement?"

"O no, no. For God's sake, save me!"

"In saving him. Yes. You must leave England to-night, and he must follow you to-morrow. Don't be frightened; I said follow, not meet you. You must really go. No pretence will avail. He could not be deceived in this. You must cross the channel to-night, and telegraph to him to-morrow from some French town, which you can leave on the instant, if you choose. This is your own affair. You may return to England to-morrow night, if you please, and reach Liverpool in time to sail for New York on Saturday. Thus you will escape him, and be free. He will not follow you against your will to New York, where you are protected by your friends and your position. You have but to write and forbid his doing so."

"I think—I think I understand you," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, in a voice full of submission and entreaty; "but how am I to account for going away?"

"At what hour do you expect him here to-day?" asked Harriet, in a business like tone, without noticing the question.

"At nine in the evening."

"It is now nearly three. The tidal train for Folkstone starts at six. Your arrangements for next Saturday are all made, of course?"

"They are." Wonder and fear, and a strange sense of dependence on this dreadful woman, were growing on Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge with every moment.

"Then all is easy—if you can trust your maid."

"I can, implicitly; but what must she do?"

"Settle everything here, and take your luggage to Liverpool. You will not be able to make an hour's delay on your return; you must go straight through. You must travel without a servant for once—no—take your page; he is better out of the way—"

"I will do as you tell me; but you have not said how I am to account for going."

"No," said Harriet, absently; "but that will be easy. He will think you a fool, and easily frightened, but your vanity must bear that—it's not a heavy price to pay for safety."

There was a pretty writing-table in the room, covered with elegant trifles. Harriet approached it, and opened a blotting-book. Some sheets of thick perfumed paper, with dainty monogram and motto, lay within it. On one of them she wrote as follows:

"All is discovered. Your wife has been here, and has terrified me by her threats. Our scheme must be abandoned. I cannot stay an hour here, not even to consult you; I am in fear of my life. Come to me at once, to Amiens. I leave to-night, and will telegraph from thence. If you do not join me on Saturday morning, I will conclude you have given me up."

She rose, and desired Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge to take her place.

"Copy that," she said, briefly; but before the other took up the pen, she read the lines, and exclaimed:

"I dare not—I dare not; he will kill you."

"That is my business," said Harriet, fiercely. "Write."

She copied the letter slowly, and trembled as she wrote, folded, sealed, and directed it.

"When is it to be sent?"

"When I have seen you off. I will take care he receives it," said Harriet, as she put it in her pocket. "Now go and give your directions, and make your preparations."

They looked at each other for a moment, and Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge left the room without another word. When she was alone, Harriet sat down by the table wearily, and covered her face with her hands. Time went on, but she did not move. Servants came in and went out of the room, but she took no notice. At length, Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge entered in traveling dress, and with a paler face than any mirror she had ever looked into had ever reflected. At the same moment a carriage came to the door.

"You are quite ready?"

"I am."

"It is time to go."

"Let us go. One minute. Mrs. Routh, I—I don't think I quite knew what I was doing. Can you forgive me?" She half extended her hand, then drew it back, as she looked into Harriet's marble face.

"Forgive you! What do you mean? You are nothing to me, woman; or, if anything, only the executioner of a sentence, independent of you."

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge did not attempt to speak again. As they went out of the door, a telegram was handed to her. It was from Routh:

"Impossible to see you to-night. Letter by post."

She handed the paper silently to Harriet, who read it, and said nothing until they were seated in the carriage.

"Does that make any difference?" then asked Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, timidly.

To you, none. Possibly it may to me; he need not know so soon."

Not another word was spoken between them. Harriet stood on the platform at the railway station until the train moved off, and as Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge caught the last glimpse of her stern white face, she threw herself back in the carriage, in which she was fortunately alone, in an hysterical agony of tears.

Routh did not come home that night; he sent a message that business detained him in the city, and that he wished his letters and some clothes sent to him in the morning.

"This is well," said Harriet; "he is making his preparations, and he does not wish to see me before he must. The night can hardly pass without my hearing or seeing George."

Late that evening Harriet posted the letter which Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had written. But the evening and the night passed, and George Dallas did not come or send. The hours were full of the agony of suspense for Harriet. They brought another kind of suffering to Mr. Felton and his nephew.

At eight o'clock that evening, George Dallas, alias Paul Ward, as the police phrase had it, was arrested at Mr. Felton's lodgings, charged with the murder of Mr. Felton's son. George's agent had done his work well, and the notes changed at Amsterdam, which the old bookseller's death had released from their hiding-place and put in circulation, had furnished the clew to Mr. Tatlow's initials; they had been paid to him by the Liverpool Bank; they were indorsed in full, with date too, by Paul Ward.

"And in case," said Mr. Tatlow, who had a turn for quotation, "neater, completer, in every feater, I don't think I ever was in."

(To be Continued.)

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

IN one of its March issues, the New York Nation while reviewing Whittier's "Tent On the Beach" stated, as an inference from certain lines of the poem, that Whittier seemed to regret the time and energy which he had expended in his work as a reformer, and to wish that he had devoted himself more exclusively to literature. This supposed regret of the poet is not shared by his critic, who says:

"We are glad, then, and we think the poet not unfortunate, but fortunate, that in the anti-slavery cause he found a theme to rouse into fervor his moral feelings; and that now in his age, when memory can aid his powers with the charm she is able to fling over the past, he has had time to write for us his beautiful "Snow-Bound," a poem the secret of whose beauty lies partly in the faithfulness with which the details of the farm-house life are drawn, and partly in the soft and tender lights which memory throws over the picture. For thus while doing most for man, he has done best for himself."

In the following very characteristic letter to the editors of the Nation, the Quaker poet repudiates the idea that he ever for an instant experienced the feeling attributed to him by his critic:

"To the Editor of The Nation:

"I am very well aware that merely personal explanations are not likely to be as interesting to the public as to the parties concerned; but I am induced to notice what is either a misconception on thy part, or, as is most probable, a failure on my own part to make myself clearly understood. In the review of "The Tent on the Bench," in thy paper of last week, I confess I was not a little surprised to find myself represented as regretting my life-long and active participation in the great conflict which has ended in the emancipation of the slave, and that I had not devoted myself to purely literary pursuits. In the half-playful lines upon which this statement is founded, if I did not feel at liberty to boast of my anti-slavery labors and magnify my editorial profession, I certainly did not mean to underrate them or express the shadow of a regret that they had occupied so large a share of my time and thought. The simple fact is that I cannot be sufficiently thankful to the Divine Providence that so early called my attention to the interests of humanity, saving me from the poor ambitions and miserable jealousies of a selfish pursuit of literary reputation. Up to a comparatively recent period my literary writings have been simply episodical, something apart from the real object and aim of my life, and whatever of favor they have found with the public has come to me as a grateful surprise rather than as an expected reward. As I have never staked all upon the chances of authorship, I have been spared the pain of disappointment and the temptation to envy those who, as men of letters, deservedly occupy a higher place in the popular estimation than I have ever aspired to.

"Truly thy friend,

"JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"AMESBURY, 9th Third Month, 1867."

Our American critics seem to have taken courage to speak out in a less uncertain tone touching the merits of Artemus Ward as a humorist, since his hearty endorsement in England. His premature death may also have something to do with this fuller acknowledgement of his literary merits. We hear but little now, of that small and literal criticism, that judged the quality of his humor by such a senseless standard as its mere form, and that affected so lofty a contempt for all that class of writers who with malice prepense take liberties with the alphabet,—a class by the way, which these fastidious conservators of the dignities should remember, includes Dickens, Thackeray, and Hood, as well as Lowell, Ward, and Nasby. Not only did our humorist meet with more thorough appreciation in England than he found at home—we speak of the higher literary circles in both countries, for though our indigenous critical oracles feared to compromise themselves by any praise of him that was not dashed with a spice of condescending patronage and pretty evenly balanced by qualifying clauses—but he seems during his short stay in London to have made many warm personal friends, among the higher social circles.

His funeral was attended by most of the principal London literati, by the Savage Club, of which he had been chosen an honorary member, and by a large number of gentlemen connected with the Press. A London paper says that as the coffin was lowered into the grave, "a number of ladies closed around it and showered beautiful flowers" upon it; also that as many as 2,000 persons were in the cemetery, of whom a large number were ladies.

The only poetical tribute to the memory of the deceased, that we have seen, is also of English origin. It is from the London Spectator, and is so perfect an imitation of the peculiar rhythm and accentuation Swinburne's Dolores, that but for the initials attached to it, one might infer that it was from his pen;

ARTEMUS WARD.

I.

Is he gone to the land of no laughter,
This man that made mirth for us all?
Proves death but a silence hereafter
From the sounds that delight or appall?
Once closed, have the lips no more duty,
No more pleasure the exquisite ears;
Has the heart o'erflowing with beauty,
As the eyes have with tears.

II.

Nay, if aught be sure, what can be surer
Than that Earth's good decays not with Earth?
And of all the heart's springs none are purer
Than the springs of the fountains of Mirth,
He that sounds them, has pierced the heart's hollows,
The places where tears are and sleep;
For the foam-flakes that dance in life's shallows
Are wrung from life's deep.

III.

He came with a heart full of gladness
From the glad-hearted world of the West—
Won our laughter, but not with mere madness,
Spake and joked with us, not in mere jest;
For the man in our heart, lingered after,
When the merriment died from our ears,
And those that were loudest in laughter
Are silent in tears.

J. R.

March 9.

AMERICAN MANNERS.

Of late years it has rather gone out of fashion to glorify ourselves on the score of the vast achievements (in so brief a period) of "American Literature." But the time when it would have cast a shade of suspicion upon a man's patriotism to doubt that Mrs. Sigourney was the greatest of female poets, or that the "Old Oaken Bucket," and Drake's "American Flag" were the finest lyrics in the language, is within memory of men yet living. In those days it would have been tantamount to treason to suggest that Miss Sedgewick, J. K. Paulding, Percival, and their contemporary writers were not embodments of the highest order of genius; and each of the score or so of "authors" that our country could boast loomed up in in the literary horizon with all the prominence of a feeble twinkler in a cloudless heaven, when "only one is shining in the sky." But with the dawning of a higher culture, and the elevation of our critical standard, we have given up bragging about our literature, and fallen back upon our clippers, our "free institutions," our inventions, the Mississippi River and Niagara Falls, in full confidence that here, at least, we are on safe rallying-ground, and can defy European competition. "American manners" too, have been insisted upon by divers of our more patriotic newspaper correspondents and writers for the periodicals, as furnishing a point for favorable comparison between ourselves and foreigners, more especially with the English. Mr. Geo. B. Woods, in a recent article in the New York Leader, intimates that this is in his opinion ground which it is rather indiscreet to take. He says:

"The observer of society who shuts himself up in his lodgings and gets his notions of life from day to day, and month to month, by taking in the Daily Advertiser and the Atlantic, may fondly cherish the belief that we are a well-bred people, and feel a wholesome indignation at the caricatures of Mr. Dickens and Mrs. Trollope, or a sincere rejoicing that the times when we were open to their criticisms have gone by forever. Our literature has grown, our artistic tastes have developed, our politics have become purified, many of our crudest characteristics have been toned down, in the last twenty years; but no one who goes about his kind can help seeing and lamenting that, however gratifying may be the culture of some cliques and the refinement of some communities, in the point of manners, we have advanced very little beyond the age when the acutest of modern observers could find no better national types than Elijah Pogram, Jefferson Brick and Hannibal Challop.

These gentlemen would tell us that this people, sir, have been too busy in extending our boundaries and our currency, settling our prairies and our Rebels, to attend to matters of such minor consequence as our manners. But the eloquence of Elijah Pogram cannot persuade us that this subject is of trivial importance; and the shrewdest thinkers realize that, not only in the estimation of foreigners who scrutinize us when they visit America and when we travel abroad, but in our own national self-respect and our progress toward that height of civilization and morality as a people which is our goal, this matter of manners is an element hardly second in importance to any other."

In regard to the illustration of the general lack of consideration for the privileges or the comfort of others, which may be nightly witnessed by a close observer, at any of our American places of amusement, the writer justly observes:

"At the loftiest tragedy or the rarest concert there is always a sufficient minority who forget the first of the virtues, and come straggling in with various degrees of tardiness to spoil the first portion of the programme as far as the majority are concerned; and always a larger proportion to join, from five to fifteen minutes before the close of the entertainment, the hideous stampede started by some acute observer who has detected the approach of the denouement and flees from it with his followers as from a pestilence. Then between these left and right wings of the army of the ill-bred who thus assault the enjoyment of their neighbors, there are always the couple who come to flirt and not to hear, the mother who brings her teething baby to the play and enjoys the performance through its cries with calm serenity, the man who has seen the play before and heralds every incident in trumpet whispers to an enduring companion, the man who hums and beats time to all the music, and the man who rises to a long struggle with a tight-fitting overcoat in the midst of a tableau which he hides from fifty pairs of interested eyes, when by waiting three minutes to the end of the act he would disturb nobody. The general submission to these outrages upon courtesy and the rights of the majority may indeed be adduced as a proof of the extreme politeness of the community; but there is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and a simple and stinging rebuke to these violaters of the general comfort would be a good deed in the cause of manners, and in no way an offence against them."

THE "ARISTOCRATIC CLASSES" NO EXCEPTION.

This constant cropping out of American ill-breeding is not, Mr. Woods asserts, confined to any particular social grade. "Fashionable" audiences are as careless of others, as selfish, and as vulgar in their modes of exhibiting their selfishness, as those from whom such things might be more naturally expected. Indeed, he thinks that the manners of Japonicadom are, in some respects, more offensive than those of the classes that make no pretension to fashion or aristocracy. Many of our readers will probably be inclined to think that

Mr. Wood is yielding to a taste for the sensational in the following—especially in the statement in regard to Professor Blot, the Police, and the aristocratic ladies of New York :

"The audience at the opera or at one of Ristori's performances is guilty of as many violations of taste as the spectators of the Black Crook, and the most ill-mannered assemblage of people we have ever seen in Boston was made up of the creme de la creme of Cambridge and its dependencies, who had taken tickets by subscription to aid and compliment an amateur protege. Sex and position do not keep the skirts clear ; for M. Blot's first class here was formed of the choicest material, yet he was forced to contemplate calling in the aid of a policeman to keep the ladies from devouring him instead of tasting his specimen dishes, and from spoiling each other's dresses in their eagerness."

No class is exempt from this taint, according to the writer. It exhibits itself in our courts of law, our pulpits, our colleges, our halls of Legislation. It is "as uncommon to find a mistress who knows how to speak to a servant" as it is to find an "American or Irish servant who comprehends her own position." The whole people share the odium of this charge, and must bear it until "progress in civilization gives a right to repudiate it." This is very plain talk, and there is a vast deal of truth and good sense in it. Our gallant custom of vacating our seats in the railway cars for the accommodation of everything that wears crinoline, is by no means enough to constitute us a polite, well mannered people. But notwithstanding that most of Mr. Woods' points are well taken, as the lawyers say, it is fortunate that they do not come from a foreign observer of American society. There is nothing more exasperating or more offensive to the national vanity in Mrs. Trollope's book, or in the "American Notes," than several of the counts in Mr. Woods' indictment.

THE SINGLE EXCEPTION—THE NEGROES THE BEST MANNERED PORTION OF OUR POPULATION.

Our author, however, finds one class in America that constitutes an exception to the general rule, and this exception he thinks "sufficiently notable to be made and marked with emphasis." The exception he says, "Is in favor of that despised and wronged black race which through all its misfortunes and in spite of all its weakness has maintained a propriety of manners which might well furnish a lesson to those who detest and those who patronize it. Of course Cuffee would not shine in the drawing room, and Dinah might be as uncomfortable a neighbor at the opera as the fair damsel who knows how to flirt, but not how to whisper ; but these people have the rare faculty of preserving a bearing suitable to their place. The most amiable and stately lady may fail to elicit anything but surliness and impudence from Bridget ; but whoever knows how to treat her servant properly may be sure of respectful behavior from the black domestic, whether she comes from an apprenticeship of slavery or freedom. No other servants in America seem able to maintain their dignity without insolence, to obey orders implicitly without slavish subservience. The doubter need only go from one of our own hotels where colored waiters are employed to one where they are not, to perceive the contrast—a contrast so important and so material as to make all the difference between comfort and annoyance, between a repast eaten with a relish and a meal awaited with impatience and received with disgust."

MR. ABBOTT AT COURT.

The eastern journals, both literary and political, have been making themselves exceedingly merry over the figure cut by the Rev. Mr. Abbott, the Harper's own exclusive "historian," at the Court of Louis Napoleon. Mr. Abbott, it will be remembered, is the author of the series of papers constituting the literary curiosity published by the Harpers some years since with profuse pictorial illustrations on wood, under the title of "The Life of Napoleon Buonaparte." In this work, the Rev. Author did not seem to be so solicitous to exhibit in a striking light, the brilliant genius of his illustrious subject, as the loveliness of his moral character. Other historians had represented him as a great captain, entitled to rank with Hannibal and Cæsar ; but Mr. Abbott portrayed him rather as a philanthropist, a philosopher, and pretty nearly a saint, insomuch that the persons who should gather their ideas of the first Napoleon from the Harpers' Pictorial History, would most naturally associate him in their minds with Howard, or Montesquieu, or Fenelon, or rather with all of them, since Mr. Abbott's Napoleon is a many sided being who unites all forms and modes of greatness.

This book having proved a "great success," Mr. Abbott concluded to work the Napoleon vein a little farther. Accordingly he repaired to Paris, obtained an interview with the Emperor, told him that he, Abbott, designed to do him, the Emperor, the same justice before the world, that he had done his great kinsman in his former history. Louis Napoleon seemed pleased at the prospect of being canonized ; and he treated his American visitor with such distinguished consideration that the latter could not keep his amazing good fortune to himself. Accordingly he sat down, and wrote a full account of all the honors he had received at Court, to a friend in New Haven. The "friend" of course published the letter, and it is this that has furnished a text for the wits and satirists of the New York and Boston journals. The following from the Tribune may serve as a lively specimen of the style in which Mr. Abbott's tormentors are poking fun at him :

"It isn't every Yankee who can storm the doors of the Imperial palace, and intrench himself in the Imperial closet ; and it is a little queer that while the royal residence has been broken into oftener than any other human habitation in Paris, the person to break into it the most successfully should be an American clergyman. Other visitors in other times the august occupant of the hour would have kicked out, if he could; but our conquering compatriot was received, as he takes pains to inform us, 'with the most gratifying cordiality.' * * * The letter should have been published in Harper's Magazine, with pictorial illustrations. 'He received me by the fireside,' says Mr. Abbott, touchingly. A picture of the fireplace, with the great American upon one side and the great Frenchman upon the other, would have sold an enormous edition of the magazine. Considering all that they have done for Mr. Abbott, the Franklin square people have a reasonable right to complain that the Livy of their pages did not send the narrative directly to them ; and there is a pleasure in thinking that he has a more elaborate effort (with cuts) in reserve.

The first thing which His Imperial Majesty did after receiving Mr. Abbott, 'in one of the interior parlors of the palace,' was to thank him for writing the Life of Napoleon I., and 'for the justice done by my pen to the Emperor.' That so great a man should be obliged to wait for historical justice until the advent of so small a one, will remind the reader of the lion who was caught in a net, and of the mouse who liberated the mighty prisoner. * * * *

Mr. Abbott, being face to face with the Emperor, made a long speech, of which he inserts a report in his letter. The subject of this speech was the life and adventures of Louis Napoleon. 'When I reflect,' said Mr. Abbott, 'upon the birth of your Majesty in Paris,' etc., etc. The historian must have gone on reflecting for about half an hour. He reflected upon Strasbourg and Boulogne, upon the Castle of Ham, upon the Mexican question, and upon a number of other disagreeable subjects ; but the imperial host stood it all, apparently without irritation, and submitted to be soaped with the best possible grace ; nor does he appear to have winced even when Mr. Abbott most unnecessarily lugged in the coup d' état by the head and shoulders, and protested that it was beautiful. But this was not all. Being in for it, this Christain minister determined to go the entire animal. As he had swallowed so much, he made no bones of Mexico, vowed that it was a shame that the Mexicans would not submit to Maximilian, declared that his own Government 'had made a great mistake' in not lending moral support to the Empire, and then being seized by a spirit of prophecy, he predicted 'a state of chronic anarchy' into which these most unreasonable Mexicans must be plunged. Imperial Majesty listened and 'expressed his assent,' which was a very handsome thing to do. We wonder what he was thinking of when he expressed it ?"

A GREAT CHOCOLATE MANUFACTORY.—Messrs D. Ghirardelli & Co. have an extensive establishment for the manufacture of chocolate in this city, at Nos. 415 & 417 Jackson street, that is probably not surpassed in the completeness of its appointments and the excellence of the article manufactured, by any simular establishment in the world. All the processes by which the raw cocoa bean is transformed into chocolate ready for domestic use, are performed by machinery driven by steam, and it is curious and interesting sight to witness them. All these processes are conducted at this establishment, in the neatest manner conceivable, and the article of chocolate produced is much superior in purity and delicacy of flavor to any that is imported. Indeed, the quality of the article suffers by a sea voyage. The nuts used at this manufactory are the famous ones imported from Soconosco, the finest in the world. For cheaper kinds of chocolate, nuts from Nicaragua and Guayaquil are used. Messrs Ghirardelli also prepare a very superior article of coffee, put up in packages, which has only to be introduced into general use to acquire a great reputation with all consumers who can appreciate the difference between South American coffee, and pure old Java.

In the vaults of the extensive warehouse where the manufacture of chocolate and the preparation of coffee are carried on, is a wine cellar, containing some delicious varieties of wine not to be found elsewhere in this city ; among the rest, the famous Marsala brand, from Sicily, which combines the flavor of Sherry with that of Madeira, but is pronounced by connoisseurs superior to either.

Chocolate is the most healthful and nutritious of all beverages in use for the morning meal. Unlike tea and coffee, it does not affect the nerves injuriously, and it contains a large percentage of nutrition. In England it is rapidly becoming popular, and its more general use with us, as a substitute for coffee, would result in a vast diminution of the amount of nervous debility by which Americans are, above all other people, afflicted.

SICKNESS is an affliction that waits on us all. None are exempt and there none but need relief from its attacks. Whoever can furnish this becomes our benefactor. A conviction prevails that Dr. Ayer does it. Disorders of the blood have been healed by his Sarsaparilla, and affections of the lungs by his Cherry Pectoral, too frequently and too distinctly to be disputed. His Ague Cure is said, by those who use it, to never fail. Reader, if you must have medical aid, take the best of medicine. Poor remedies are dear as good are cheap, at any price you have to pay for them.—Charleston Courier.

BOXES.—One peculiarity of the trade of San Francisco, is the immense amount of boxes used for the packing of fruit, and in the various carrying demands of certain merchandise. We are informed that Hobbs, Gilmore & Co., who have for more than a dozen years past been extensively engaged in the manufacture of boxes, are now making over 50,000 boxes per month. This firm have always stood at the head of their branch of business, which has grown to be an enormous one.

POISON OAK.—The only reliable and certain cure for oak poisoning is by Dr. Bourne's method—practiced now during fourteen years. "Dr. Bourne's method," the greatest boon to those who suffer from this wretched disorder. Dr. Bourne does not intend to permit any "thimble-rigging" allopath or hydropth to rob him of the merit of the discovery and introduction of his only scientific mode of treating oak poisoning. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

MISS Helen Western made her debut at Maguire's Opera House, on Monday evening, before a large audience ; she chose to make her first appearance in the character of "Cynthia" in the play of the Flowers of the Forest. Miss Helen Western is decidedly handsome, and her figure is remarkably well-developed. Ever since her arrival in this city she has been suffering from a severe cold which causes her voice to sound harsh and inflexible. A cold, however, would not affect Miss Western's reading any more than a bad pen would serve as an apology for bad spelling, and I must say that this actress read all the parts which she has as yet undertaken very badly indeed. She has evidently not learned her profession in the highest schools of dramatic art. Her attitudinizing is often stiff and ungraceful, and there is too much of it. In "Miami" in Green Bushes, which was played on Wednesday, Miss Western appeared to greater advantage than in the first mentioned piece or in Satan in Paris, which was played on Tuesday.

In The Flowers of the Forest, Harry Jackson, who is seldom afforded an opportunity of displaying his talent as a low comedian, convulsed the audience with laughter by his admirable impersonation of "The Kinchin ;" he was nearly as happy in his representation of "Jack Gong" in Green Bushes. In this play Mr. Herne gave the public one of the best bits of Irish acting ever witnessed on the stage ; his "Wild Murtough" was a capital conception carried out in an original manner. Last night Miss Western took her first benefit, appearing as "Thisbe" in The Actress of Padua, and in an afterpiece called Little Paul. This afternoon and evening Miss Western will appear as "Miami," in The Green Bushes. On Monday, The French Spy will be produced.

The subscription list for the Italian Opera Season, at the Academy of Music, is now open. The following artistes will compose the company : Madame Stella Bonheur, Signor F. Limberti, Signor S. Milleri, Signorina Brambilla, Signor Mancusi, Signorina E. Bellini, Signor Eugenio Bellini, and Signor and Signor Bianchi. This should prove a strong troupe, and it may be hoped that the coming Season of Italian Opera will prove the most successful ever given in this city.

On Tuesday evening, an entertainment was given at Lincoln Hall, for the benefit of the Fourth Street School, the proceeds being devoted to purchasing extra charts, etc., etc., for the school. J. H. Warwick exhibited his "Stereoscopticon," and recited "Sheridan's Ride." After this Miss Flora Woodford, a talented little girl of about nine years of age, recited Whittier's beautiful poem, "Barbara Freitche," in a manner which called forth loud applause from all present. Her clear, young voice was heard to great advantage, and her style of reading was natural and pleasing.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy will lecture as usual to-morrow morning and evening, at Mechanics' Institute Hall. These popular lectures are always largely attended, and thoroughly enjoyed by the audience'

TOUCHSTONE.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.—These delightful pleasure grounds are in beautiful order at present. The museum contains many interesting curiosities, the menagerie of wild beasts attracts many visitors, and there is no place in the vicinity of the city where a few hours can be spent with so much pleasure and profit.

ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.—Visitors to this city make a point of paying a visit to the collection of wonders to be found at the Pacific Museum, and derive both entertainment and instruction from an inspection.

IS NOT afraid to guarantee cures in almost all cases, because he has had twenty-five years' experience—practical—working for his patients, and studying disease as it affects the various temperaments, its causes, and the ever-varying conditions of sufferers. This is Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Always on the square, the sick people discover. Cures by a most pleasant and rapid method, without medicine or any species of chicanery. *

We call attention to the card of I. H. Small, machinist, and builder of engines, mill and mining machinery. One speciality in Mr. Small's business is the improved, newly patented, wood planer for surfacing lumber, which has been put up and placed in successful operation by Mr. Small in a number of mills in this city and interior, with most satisfactory results.

CARRIAGES, WAGONS, ETC.—Larkins & Co., practical manufacturers of these articles, have greatly increased their business since their removal to their new factory on Market street, between Second and Third. Larkins & Co.'s vehicles have always borne an excellent reputation for the superiority of their workmanship, strength and finish.

OVER one hundred Engines have been made at John Lochhead's Steam Engine Works, on Beal street, near Mission, in this city, within the last fourteen years. Mr. Lochhead makes the construction of steam Engines of every description an especiality, and warrants his work to give perfect satisfaction in every particular. See advertisement on 13th page.

HOUSE HUNTERS DIRECTORY.—What houses are to rent, where they are located, on what terms, etc. For information of this kind go to Burke & Madison's House and Real Estate Agency, 316 Montgomery street, where you will be sure to find a house to suit you.

SKIRMISHING IN THE SHENANDOAH.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

THE risks and chances of the soldier in actual war are strange, indeed. Some men seem to carry charmed lives into battle, and pass through its accumulated horros as safely as though the work were no more dangerous than the mock Lanciers of the drawing-room. Like Murat and Ney, they may always be found at the front, in the thick of the fight, often with uoiforms cut to rags by the hail of lead, and with powder-blackened faces; but they always emerge from the fray with honor and without harm. There is another class and a very nnmerous one, who are the predestined targets of the foe; colonels, captains, and privates, who are continually receiviug the most grievous and dangerous wonnds, which would be sufficient to put common men on the pension-list for life, but which their burly constitutions and vigorous vitality enable them to overcome. Once out of the hospital they are instantly back at the front, and the very next engagement will see them carried again from the field with ugly holes in their bodies, but only to fight out another fight with Death, vanquish him again, and again return to duty. Scores of such men I have in mind—noble fellows, whose splendid example and dauntless courage contributed in the aggregate in no small measure toward the success of our arms. May they all, in their old age, have a happy fireside, and troops of grandchildren among whom they may

"Shoulder the crutch, and show how the fields were won."*

It so happened that after three years of active service in the field, attended by the usual number of hair breadth escapes, the very last hostile shot that I heard fired in the war nearly proved fatal to me. Some curious and interesting circumstances connected with this adventure make it worth telling, and will make pardonable the necessary recurrence of the personal pronoun in the nurration.

It was in November, 1864. The battle of Cedar Creek had been lought and won, the war in the Shenandoah was practically at an end, and our army was still camped on that ever-glorious field, master of the situation. The Presidential election had passed, creating the usual amount of excitement in camp as well as at home, and the cold, wet Virginia winter was setting in. No active operations were anticipated, and the army was far from its base of supply, so that a position somewhat nearer Harper's Ferry became almost a necessity. On the early morning of the ninth of November the army moved back beyond Newton, a distance of several miles. The three corps were put in position in three lines east and west across the pike, the Nineteenth being in advance, and formed across an irregular range of hills. Pickets were advanced to the village, and the men fell to work, constructing winter quarters, and making themselves generally comfortable.

But it seemed that the enemy were not willing that we should enjoy our ease just then. Their disastrous defeat of the month before had dispersed their infantry in all directions, and most of it was probably never rallied again; but there was a nucleus of some thousands of disciplined cavalry, under bold leaders like Rosser, burning for a favorite opportunity to retrieve the honor of the rebel arms in the Valley, and quite willing to incur any reasonable risk in doing it. This was the enemy that hung on the rear of our column as it retired from Cedar Creek, and when its commander had satisfied himself, after two days' observation, that Sheridan intended to quarter here, he deployed his regiments along the whole length of our front, and, masked by thick woods, prepared for a demonstration.

My position at this time was on the staff of one of the division generals. On the morning of the twelfth, the officer of the day rode up to the headquarters in hot haste to announce that the rebel cavalry was skirmishing briskly with our pickets, and that appearances indicated the presence of a large body of them in the woods.

"The devil fly away with them!" sententiously observed the adjutant-general. "How can I ever get a consolidated report made out if these fellows continue to trouble us? I don't think they will; but I'll see the General."

He did so, and returned with directions to the officer of the day to watch the front narrowly, and report anything new or suspicious. In less than half an hour after his departure we plainly heard dropping carbine and musket shots from the direction of Newtown, and presently back came our officer to report that the rebels were showing a strong line, and that he feared his pickets would be driven. The General now appeared and heard the intelligence.

"This needs attending to, of course," he said. "Captain L——, send an officer to each brigade commander, with orders to be ready to have his command under arms at a moment's notice, and another to General Emory with the news. Ride rapidly, gentlemen."

It fell to my lot to carry the intelligence to corps headquarters, a mile to the rear. It was a clear, frosty morning, with such an atmosphere as makes life tingle hilariously in the veins, and renders mere existence a blessing. The yellow and gold of the leaves and fields shone pleasantly in the tempered sunlight, and to the right and left the long mountain ranges lifted their brown sides from the valley, and walled in the delightful Shenandoah country, the garden of Virginia. I gave rein to my spirited gray, and she flew clattering down the pike, bringme in a few minutes to a cluster of tents on a hill over which the headquarter flag flouted. I broke in upon a group of happily indolent staff-officers, smoking their pipes, cracking their jokes, and enjoying the full pleasure of military abandon, and quickly put a new aspect upon the hour. The news was communicated to General Emory, and that old war-horse sallied out at once, and with the usual number of expletives and adjectives, in which no complimentary mention was made of the rebels, he ordered his staff to mount and accompany him to the front.

"Go and tell Sheridan," he said to one of them; "and you" (to me) "tell Dwight to get his division under arms, and join me immediately on the picket line."

I left corps headquarters in the usual effervescence of hurried preparation, and galloped back to deliver this last order. I found our staff buckling on their sword belts, in anticipation of it; and the horses were led out as I came in. An orderly had been sent back during my absence to report that the pickets were skirmishing incessantly; and occasionally we could hear a faint rifle shot. The General was in the saddle a few moments after my arrival; and, as we all mounted and rode out, the General, staff, and orderlies, we formed quite a cortége,

To the right and left of the pike, the regiments were falling into line as we rode rapidly past. The pickets were all astir as we drew near. They had collected rails from the neighboring fences, inclosed themselves in barricades, and were standin vigilant, half a dozen together in each of these miniature fortifications. The officer of the day informed us that the enemy's cavalry had all withdrawn into the woods a few moments before. Our Generals took their position on a high hill near the pickets, whence they could see with their glasses every thing that passed; and very soon a regiment came down the road, and diverging from it passed out to the left of the town. An order came for two of the staff to follow, and observe the result, and Captain T——and myself were sent. Instead of following the cavalry, literally speaking, we skirted the town to the right, and paused on a little knoll, in the shadow of several houses, which gave an excellent opportunity for observation. Here we found a dozen bold fellows from the picket line who had obtained permission to creep out and watch for a shot. They were sitting or lying on the ground, watching the woods opposite us with unceasing vigilance. The edge of this wood was about five hundred yards away; the ground between hollow and broken, and sloping from both sides to the bed of a creek that traversed it. As we rode up, one of the scouts sighted his rifle and fired with a quick aim. Lowering it from his shoulder, he peered with half-shut eyes through the smoke that drifted off-

"Hit him, Zeke?" inquired a corporal.

"Cant tell," answered the Vermonter, with a drawl. "It's a critter that comes out to the edge, on a brown hoss. He may come to often."

The sharp whistle of a ball overhead seemed to indicate that Zeke had waked up somebody, at all events. As he twisted off the end of a new cartridge, he glanced up at us, and said, with a chuckle.

"Don't believe, captains, you'd better set thar long on them horses. You're a good mark, now I tell you. Bullets been comin' in here right lively this mornin'. Better get off."

Zeke's advice was no doubt good; but we could not mind a little exposure then. Taking out our glasses, we intently studied the wood opposite. At first, I could make out nothing but a conglomeration of gray, brown, and red; but after a moment's scrutiny I plainly saw horsemen moving about; and occasionally one rode out beyond the trees for a single instant.

"Look carefully to the right of that tall, dead trunk," T——quickly said, lowering his glass. "The rascals are there, and a good many of them."

The spot he indicated seemed to be a small opening, where the wood formed an angle. I looked, and discovered a large body of cavalry, which I roughly estimated at not less than fifteen hundred, formed in column by company, but entirely motionless.

"They mean mischief," said T——"Where's our people?"

Our regiment had just appeared in the hollow beyond the town, and was still moving out. I comprehended its danger in an instant, and would have ridden out to warn its commander; but at the moment the rebels burst out from the wood, charging down towards the pike in column, firing their carbines as they came, and cheering loudly. Our scouts gave them a small volley which I think emptied more than one saddle: and as they came on their direction was somewhat changed, so that they seemed to be charging directly into the town, and the carbine-balls rattled against the old buildings behind us. The scouts hastily made for the rear, and T——shut up his glass, and gathered up his reins.

"We had better go and report," he said, with his dry smile. "We can't do any good here, but we can get gobbled or shot, easy enough. By Jove, that was a close one!"

A bullet sung past his ear, cutting short his speech, and lopping a small twig from a tree near us. We rode back through a hollow, which for a moment sheltered us from stray bullets, and thence plunged into a corn-field. We emerged from it near the pickets, who were still standing watchfully erect with rifle in hand. More cavalry were coming down the pike, and several horsemen were scampering across the fields, carrying orders to different parts of the picket line. Several of our cavalry-men had straggled through the town after the first shock of the contending squadrons, with or without wounds, and were recounting what they had seen to the pickets. An officer on a black horse rode out of another part of the corn field, and met us as we headed toward the pike, anxious to discover how the skirmish was progressing at the left of the town. He was an undersized man with close cut hair, a heavy beard and mustache, a rosy face, and an eye like a hawk. He wore now a cap and a blue overcoat, with no mark of rank whatever, and with a single orderly following him. Had T——and I never seen him before, we might have taken him for some inquisitive staff officer, like ourselves; but we had seen that hawk-eye on the battle field too often to mistake it, and our caps were both raised together.

"Good morning, gentlemen," was his salutation, given in a cheery, almost laughing voice. "I thought I'd come out and see what these fellows are going to do."

He cantered leisurely toward the hill, where we had left Generals Emory and Dwight, which he did not leave during the remainder of the day.

"Who s that?" asked one of the pickets, a recruit, of the veteran next him.

"That? Phil Sheridan, of course."

Riding along the line, we crossed the pike, and to the east of it we found a wild scene of excitement. The rebel cavalry brigade had pounced down upon our single regiment, just at the outskirts of the town, and driven it back with some loss. There was something of a fight, as our men yielded the ground, and for ten minutes or more there was a brisk rattle of carbines; but our people were pressed back, and as they were driven through the town and the fields to the left of it, the ranks became disordered, and many galloped back precipitately, while the enemy followed in the pursuit. Several grey-jackets rode along to the end of the street and discharged their carbines toward us. Some of the cavalry officers were laboring frantically among the fugitives to bring them again into line; one, in particular, who I afterward learned was the chaplain, was exhorting the men to stand up to the work.

"No man who has a carbine will go any further back," he said. "I haven't any, but I mean to stay!"

Our pickets were all ready to give the rebels a vigorous reception the instant they appeared, and an officer had been dispatched to request that an infantry regiment might be sent out; but I was satisfied that the rebels did not mean to press their advantage. The movement was intended rather as a reconnoissance than an attack; and having felt our line, they fell back again to the wood. Our discomfited cavalry regiment was rallied, the wounded sent to the rear, and T——and myself galloped over to the headquarter hill to report. There we found Generals Sheridan, Emory, Dwight, and L. A. Grant, of the Sixth Corps, with their staffs; and, in a few moments, Torbet, the chief of cavalry, came up. Sheridan's greeting was quaint and characteristic.

"Well, Torbet," he remarked; "don't you mean to get some men killed to-day?"

The words sound a little cruel now; but they were not intended so at all. They became a by-word among the men, who understood them as an expressive manifestation of Sheridan's belligerent spirit. As Rosecrans once said of him, "He fights—he fights!" and those who have heard him talk in his sharp and abrupt, but ringing sentences, will understand me when I say that his language fights, too.

The afternoon came on with a cold, bleak wind, which searched piercingly under our blue overcoats. Some of the orderlies brought a pile of rails, and kindled a huge fire, around which we all collected. Sheridan stood with his back to it, studying the face of the country. I conjectured from the general expression of his face, that he was forming a plan to draw the enemy into a position where they might be advantageously attacked. A whole cavalry division now came down the pike, but Sheridan did not desire to use it directly in front. After a short coulerence with General Torbet, it moved far over to the right, and was soon lost behind the hills. A few moments after, General Emory was directed to send a brigade of infantry obliquely to the right; by which we readily understood that it was desirable to ascertain whether the enemy had any infantry.

"Keep a bright look out for your left flank," were Sheridan's parting words. The brigade moved out in line in splen-

*The recovery of Lieutenant Colonel Lewis, Twelfth Connecticut volunteers, was one of the anatomical curiosities of the war. At the assault on Port Hudson, in the Summer of 1863, he was struck by a grapeshot which passed entirely through the chest. From the effect of this apparently fatal wound, he lingered for months in the hospitals and was finally sent home to die; but instead of dying, he recovered health and strength, returned to his command, and led his regiment with great bravery at Cedar Creek.

did style, straight across the fields, and over toward that frowning forest. Were the enemy still there—and would they attack? We should soon know. We could see the brigade for more than a mile, when it looked like a dark parallelogram creeping toward the woods, and watched intently to see the flash of rifles bursting out from behind the trees. But we did not see it. The rebels chose not to attack, and the reconnoissance returned within two hours. To complete the experiment, another brigade was ordered to move to the left of the town, and past it, up to the point where the cavalry fight of the morning had occurred. It was one of Dwight's brigades, and he chose to accompany it; and it so happened that I was the only member of his staff left to accompany him, the others being on duty on the picket line, or with other detachments. And it was while engaged in this way that the incident occurred which is in some respects the strangest of a long military history.

The brigade moved up in line from its encampment, and kept on to the front, its right flank just skirting the town, but none of the men, except a small party of flankers, overlapping it. As we reached the pike, the General looked at the troops to satisfy himself that their march was with the proper formation, and in the right direction, and then said:

"We shall find it better riding through the town. We will go that way and join the brigade beyond."

Newtown is like most of the smaller places of the Shenandoah Valley—a long straggling street of wooden houses and shops, with a few detached dwellings. Its principal street was the pike, and of, perhaps, fifty rods in length. At the end of the first third of it is a bend, and the street beyond cannot be seen by those coming from the north until this bend is passed. As we rode along, I observed that every shutter was closely drawn, and that not a living object appeared on the street. The sound of musketry had driven the inhabitants to their cellars, and the town was as quiet and silent as a graveyard at midnight. It was an unnatural silence, and seemed intensified rather than broken, by the sound of our voices and of our horses' hoofs. Just before we had reached the bend of the street, keeping our animals at a walk, a cavalry soldier passed us at a slow canter. He rode a gaunt, grey horse, and wore a blue overcoat, with a carbine at his saddle. He passed us without a word, and then turned his head to look at us. He was thin-faced and bony, and not particularly noticeable. I should never have bestowed another thought on him, but for the incident that followed. We turned the angle, and the horseman was gone. The houses at this point were close together, and with no openings between by which the man could have disappeared, except through one of the yards; and had he dismounted to open a gate, we must have overtaken him.

"Where's that man?" the General asked.

"I should like to know. He was——"

Two carbine reports, in quick succession, interrupted me, and two bullets went overhead. The aim was a close one, and the span that at that distance separated us from death was fearfully short. Our horses wheeled about and galloped back some distance before we could gather up the bridles and check them; and the suddenness of the thing was such that our wits were all wool-gathering for an instant.

"It must have been somebody in one of the houses," the General said. "Send those flankers up to search them."

A corporal and six men came over into the street, at the double-quick, at my call, my Vermont friend, Zeke, among them. After I had hurriedly explained the matter, they divided into two squads, and searched the houses on both sides of the street, but could find nothing suspicious. There were no soldiers, no arms, and the inmates were in every instance cowering affrightedly in the basement. Nor could they discover any thing of an enemy in or around the town. The brigade returned, after half an hour, reporting no rebels in the vicinity, and everybody but the pickets enjoyed their sleep that night. There was no more alarms, for the remnants of Early's army soon withdrew entirely from the lower Valley.

There is, of course, but one plausible explanation of our misadventure. The man who passed us in the street was undoubtedly a rebel spy, who, in the confusion of the morning's fight, being dressed in a blue coat, had taken the opportunity to mingle with our fugitives, take a tour of inspection along our advanced line, possibly to look at Sheridan and the Generals on the hill, and was then on the way back to report at rebel headquarters what he had seen. He could easily learn from the pickets that General Dwight had just passed out, and if any opposition were made to his going, he could successfully represent himself as his orderly. I have little doubt that something of this kind did actually happen. And after finding himself well outside our lines, on his way to his friends, the idea occurred to him that the killing of a Union brigadier, commanding a division, would be a capital conclusion of the day's adventures; and the attempt followed. What saved us, I can not divine; we were preserved from what, under the circumstances, would have been but little better than assassination, by some interposition in some way that passes all conjecture. The unaccountable disappearance of this rebel seemed mysterious, at first thought, but he rode a powerful horse, no doubt used to leaping fences; and I think now that had our flankers hunted through the cornfield, they would have unearthed the game. Twilight was close at hand, and he must have slipped away under its cover. The audacity of the spies and scouts of both armies in the Valley, was almost incredible, and is well illustrated by the above incident.

But I was never made a rebel target again. Although in the service seven months after this affair, I never heard the whistle of another hostile bullet.—Beadle's Monthly.

MARIE STUART.

ON February 8th, 1587, was the execution of Mary Queen of Scots. On no point of history, perhaps, has there been a more vehement difference of opinion than on her character and fate. How far she was guilty of the enormities laid to her charge (even to participation in the murder of a husband); how far she was implicated, when a prisoner, in conspiracies against the life of the Sovereign of the country, Queen Elizabeth; how for Elizabeth could, consistently with personal safety, and a regard for the religious welfare of her subjects, allow her rival life an opportunity to do mischief, are questions which can never be determined. Still, taking away the life of a woman, of one who had been twice a queen, who was a relative, and who had voluntarily thrown herself on her kindness for protection; who, moreover, was so lovely and lovable, both in prosperity and adversity, that all hearts rallied round her wherever she went—can imagination picture a more terrible necessity, if indeed it was one? According to the old traditions of history, too, it was a miserable act, miserably done; but later discoveries go to show that Elizabeth never put her signature to Mary's death warrant, the writing which passed for it all too fatally being a forgery by one Thomas Harrison, made at the instigation of Walsingham, whose secretary Harrison was. Long historical details are out of place here, but a brief summary of the beautiful but unfortunate Mary Stuart's life may give some interest to the above remarks.

She was the daughter of James V. of Scotland, and was born December 7, 1542, only eight days before the death of her father, and was thus a queen in her very cradle. In 1548, she was sent to the Court of France, to be bred up for an alliance with Francis, then Dauphin of that country; to whom, in 1558, she was married. He soon afterwards succeeded to the throne, but dying in 1560, this double queen of but 18 years old returned to Scotland, to assume the government of her native country.

All went well at first, though religions differences were very rife, and Elizabeth of England was jealous of her, partly because she and the Dauphin had, on their marriage, very unwisely had the arms of England as well as Scotland engraven on their plate and coinage, and thus asserted the claim of Mary to the English throne. It was also well known that the Roman Catholics of England did not allow Elizabeth's right to inherit, her father's divorce from Catherine of Arragon never having been sanctioned by the Pope, so that Elizabeth's fears of possible intrigues and conspiracies were not much to be wondered at. Outward civilities were kept up between the two queens, nevertheless, but Elizabeth having opposed or thwarted every proposition for a second marriage for Mary, the latter, in 1565, took her own way, irrespective of any opinion, and married her cousin, Henry Darnley, son of the Earl of Lennox, a weak-minded, unprincipled youth, whom she found she could not respect. His great desire was to obtain what was called in Scotland the "Crown Matrimonial," which would have invested him with the full rights of King of the country. But this Mary could not grant alone, and could scarcely ask, for a drunkard and a fool! But the miserable Darnley, attributing her refusal to the influence of her Italian secretary, David Rizzio, a young man who had been promoted from a humble condition to be a favorite and companion of the queen, had the unfortunate youth stabbed and slain in her presence by a band of ruffians, nobles though they were, as she with four others sat at supper in a room in Holyrood Palace. It was a brutal and cowardly act, and all the more so that Darnley had unscrupulously used Rizzio's influence with the queen to promote his own marriage.

Three months after this horrible tragedy, Mary's son (afterward James I.) was born, and not many months later, viz., just before the close of the year, Darnley was seized with a dangerous illness at Glasgow, to which place Mary went to nurse him, but not till "the violence of the distemper was over." On this occasion, what Sir Walter Scott calls "an apparent reconciliation," was effected between the ill-assorted pair, and they returned together to Edinburgh in January, 1567, the Queen and infant prince to Holyrood Palace, Darnley, i. e., the King, to a religious house called the "Kirk of Field," just outside the walls of the city, the assigned reason for their living separately being the danger of infection to the child; the disease being called small-pox, though by some attributed to effects of poison.

Who shall reveal the secret of what followed? Ten days after their arrival, viz., February 9, 1567, the Queen having quitted her nursing to be present at a masque in Holyrood Palace, the "Kirk of Field" was blown up about midnight by gunpowder, and the dead bodies of Darnley and his chamber-groom were found in the orchard adjoining. And as no rigorous, or scarcely decent investigation of this new tragedy took place, and Mary, in the May following, married the man whom the public voice had from the first proclaimed to be the murderer, she was naturally enough implicated in the accusation. There are those who believe the contrary, and think that the unhappy Mary was the victim of a deep-laid plot on the part of her enemies to throw the stain of their own guilt upon her shoulders. But her hasty marriage with the ruffian Bothwell, for whom, before the king's death, she had shown great partiality, stands confusingly in the way when we wish to believe her innocent.

At any rate, from that time Scotland was distracted by internal discord and misery. Bothwell escaped the storm of public indignation by flying to Denmark, and Mary was confined by the order of the Earl of Murray in Lochleven Castle. Of her escape thence, in 1568, the fatal battle which followed, and her still more fatal decision to take refuge in England, no one can ever write as Walter Scott has done in his story of "The Abbot." Yet, when asked by Murry, the publisher, to write biographies, and thinking of that of Mary Stuart as the only one he could easily do, he adds: "and that I decidedly would not do, because my opinion, in point of fact, is contrary both to the popular feeling and my own." Let the veil of uncertainty remain down, therefore. It is, perhaps, safest. Of Mary's almost nineteen years' imprisonment in England (for she never was a free agent) there is nothing to tell but sorrow and suffering, mixed up with political and religious intrigues. After a long wandering about the country (twelve years at Sheffield, and a shorter time in many other places), Mary was brought, in 1586, to Fotheringay Castle, in Northamptonshire, and was there executed on the day we now record in 1587, at the age of 45.

God not only "moves" but leads in a "mysterious way," and it may be that the lovely and unfortunate royal lady came purified from the long furnace of affliction to an extent her nature might not have admitted of under happier circumstances. Certain itis that her end became both a queen and a Christian: neither vindictiveness nor murmuring passed her lips in her last hours, but only piety and the tenderest charity; so that no one can read of her cruel death without tears of sorrow, if not of anger.

A necklace of pearls set in gold, which was formerly worn by the ill-fated Mary, is in possession of the Duke of Norfolk, and gives the impression that the throat of the wearer must have been slender.

PHYSIOGNOMY.—To "find the mind's construction in the face" has ever been a desideratum with philosophers. Aristotle was the first who attempted to reduce physiognomy to a science, and establish it upon fixed principles. He defines it as "the science by which the dispositions of mankind are discovered by the features of the body, especially of the countenance."

Cicero often availed himself of this belief, very general among the Romans, to bring contempt or suspicion upon a criminal by pointing out the rogue in his face.

Addison affirms that he was wont to frame a notion of every man's humor or circumstances from his looks. He says: "When I see a man with a sour, riveled face, I can not forbear pitying his wife, and when I meet with an open, ingenuous countenance I think on the happiness of his friends, his family, his relations."

Cowper remarked: "I am persuaded that faces are as legible as books, only with these circumstances to reccommend them, that they are read in so much less time, and are much less likely to deceive us."

Southey maintained the same doctrine.

Bacon said: "The lineaments of the body do disclose the disposition and inclination of the mind in general; but the motions of the countenance do not only so, but do further disclose the present humor and state of the mind and will. Yet this rule is not infallible, and the countenance is by no means an unerring index of the internal emotions."

With some, the true character is revealed only under strong excitement, and others by a long course of hypocrisy have changed their faces into masks. Take, for instance, the fixed composure of Talleyrand, who affirmed that "language was made to conceal thought."

ARTEMUS WARD'S story of the showman's daughter's artist-lover originated in a remark of Dan Setchel's. Both Artemus and Daniel boarded at a house in New York wherein resided a young lady of uncertain age, whose unconcerned regard for a young clerk, also boarding there, led her to remark that the aforesaid clerk had mistaken his vocation. "You should have been a painter," said she, "and a glazier," said Setchel, looking up quietly from his paper.

A GIRL who lost her beau may as well hang up her fiddle.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1867.

JUDGE DEADY AND THE PRESS.

THE Sacramento Union and the Bulletin have recently had a spirited passage at arms on the merits of the judgment in the case of McCall versus McDowell, the former paper denouncing the decision as unjust, and reflecting upon the motives of the judge, while the latter defends the judge, but wisely refrains from any discussion of the merits of the judgment.

The Flag, impressed doubtless by the exuberant vivacity of the Union's attack—a vivacity quite unwonted in that sober journal—and by we know not what striking feature in the Bulletin's defense, has admiringly alluded to their keen encounter as "a war of giants," at the same time reproaching the Times for having had nothing to say on the subject, and hinting that it was a prudent wish to keep out of the way when such formidable blows were being exchanged that had restrained the last named paper from mingling in the fray.

Having ourselves failed to perceive any exhibition on either side, of such a degree of prowess as could reasonably excite the alarm even of the most timid spectator, we think it but just to attribute the neutrality of the Times to good judgment rather than undue timidy, and to give it credit for a sensible disposition to attend to its own proper business as a newspaper, leaving the courts to attend to theirs as regularly constituted legal tribunals, competent to deal authoritatively with all matters falling within their jurisdiction.

There are few things more absurd in principle or more mischievous in practice than the attempts of public journals to review the decisions of courts; but among the few that are so, is the practice adopted by certain papers of commenting upon cases not yet decided, and of attempting by arguing their merits, to influence public opinion in advance of the verdict or decision. The gross impropriety and the great wrong of such a course as was pursued in regard to the Duane case some months since, by the two most respectable and influential daily papers of this city, ought, one would think, to be apparent to every mind of ordinary candor and intelligence, without argument or reflection. Such a course was not only a shocking injustice to the accused man, in jeopardy of his life, as tending to deprive him of his right to a fair trial upon the evidence; but it was also an insult to the court having jurisdiction of the case, as intimating the belief that it was either an incompetent, a partial, or a corrupt tribunal, from which there was reason to fear that justice could not be expected.

The Union at one time enjoyed the reputation of being the ablest paper in the State, and it is still ranked among the two or three to which the highest share of ability and influence is conceded. If, therefore, when a journal of its grade and character undertakes to criticise the opinions of judges, and to review and reverse the decisions of courts, it exhibits an utter incapacity to deal intelligently with matters of this kind, by falling into the most palpable errors, and the most mischievous blunders; if it displays an ignorance of even the elementary rules by which judicial tribunals are guided, and argues the gravest questions of law in a spirit so shallow, and a style so flippant as to deprive its conclusions of all weight with the considerate and thoughtful—if a paper of the high standing of the Union does this, what are we to expect from those of inferior ability, and what value ought we to attach to the legal arguments and the legal decisions of journalism in the aggregate?

As a matter of fact, the Union has, in the review of Judge Deady's decision, which excited the enthusiastic admiration of the Flag, satisfied all the conditions of the above supposititious case and furnished a striking practical demonstration of the utter worthlessness of newspaper discussions of strictly legal questions.

The opening sentence of the Union's article is amusingly characteristic of the American journalistic style of dealing with judges and courts. It expresses with delightful naivete a sublime consciousness of universal knowledge, and of ability to handle at the briefest notice and in the most authoritative manner all questions, scientific philosophical, political, military, legal, and theological. One cannot sufficiently admire the curt and confident air with which the writer addresses himself to his task. "The American judiciary," thus he commences—"must be taken in hand." It is not Judge alone, that is to be "taken in hand" and reformed by the Sacramento journalist,—it is the entire American judiciary. "The Judges" we are told, "not to put too fine a point upon Deady alone, nor the United States Circuit Court in California it, are overdoing the sensation business," and are also "divorcing law and justice."

By this latter charge, the writer must have meant, (if indeed he was any more conscious in his mind of a definite meaning than is a newly fledged ornament of the stump in the full glow and fervor of his declamatory eloquence) that it is the business of judges to administer abstract justice instead of actual law, when there exists, or when he fancies that there exists a conflict between the two. But every legal tyro knows, that if law and justice are divorced, the responsibility rests, not upon the judge, but upon the legislator; and that the remedy is not to be sought in the usurpation of legislative powers by the judiciary. The absurdity of berating a judge whose sworn duty it is to interpret and administer the law as he finds it, because his decision does not conform to his critic's ideas of what is equitable in principle, must be sufficiently apparent to any mind imbued with even an elementary knowledge of the principles of the common law.

Under the English system, and under ours which is derived from it, the judge is not an equitable arbitrator, free to decide as may seem right and just to him. He must decide according to law, not according to abstract justice, following authority and precedent, not theoretical principle. If he finds that law and justice are "divorced," he is not responsible for the separation, as the Union assumes him to be.

Another convincing proof in the eyes of the Union that Judge Deady has erred in his decision is, that "the creatures who cherished the name and the deed of John Wilkes Booth, and regard assassination as a rightful Democratic expedient for attaining political ends" are delighted with it. Here we have a novel standard by which to test the soundness of the decisions of courts. The argument that an opinion or a doctrine must be false because some bad men share it, is often advanced in politics, but we believe that it has never had much weight in the courts. Indeed, we doubt whether it ever occurred to Gen. McDowell's counsel to urge upon the court in his argument in behalf of his client, the consideration to which the Union attaches so much weight, to-wit: that a finding in favor of plaintiff would cause great rejoicing among copperheads, whereas the contrary decision would have the desirable effect of making all disloyal malignants feel as miserable as they deserve. Had the learned counsel adopted this line of argument, we suspect Judge Deady would have told him that it was his business as a judge, to endeavor simply to ascertain the law applicable to the case, without regard to the circumstance whether, when declared it would please copperheads, or annoy them.

These comments are not made with a view of defending Judge Deady's decision, to go into a discussion of the merits of which would be to imitate that which we are condemning in the Union. They are made to show how unsatisfactory and superficial such discussions in the columns of a newspaper are certain to prove, and how much more they are likely to resemble a political campaign article than a legal argument.

"We are not," says the Bulletin, "of those who hold that judicial decisions are above the frankest public criticism." No one denies the right of newspapers to criticise judicial decisions after they are made. The question is as to the value of such criticism. Can discussions of grave and complicated legal questions in column articles be thorough? Are they likely to be dispassionate, candid, and free from the taint of political bias or clique interests? The Bulletin is in favor of "the frankest public criticism" of the judgments of courts; but it is at the same time in favor of another thing which all experience shows is inconsistent with such criticism. "We contend," it goes on to say, "that to assail the judiciary personally, and to question the motives of a decision that happens to run counter to popular feeling, is calculated to lessen the incentives to judicial independence, and to put a premium upon subserviency. It is of much more importance to the welfare of society and the administration of justice that Judges should be always independent and honest than invariably correct in their decisions. Occasional errors of judgment do only limited harm, and may be repaired; but subserviency is a vice that demoralizes and affects injuriously every interest of society." But are not these evils inseparable from the practice of reviewing the decisions of judges in the newspapers? Do not the papers that attack the judgments or courts invariably question the motives of the judge? The Union has done so in the present case, and the Bulletin rebukes the Stockton Independent for having sinned in like manner.

The fact is, as we think the Bulletin will perceive upon a more thoughtful consideration of the matter, that the only cases where newspaper criticism of judicial decisions can have any value or usefulness, are precisely those where they do question the motives and the character of the judges. Where judges are corrupt or incompetent, or where they act with partisan bias, an appeal to the public through the Press is legitimate and may result in good. But to appeal to the public from the decisions of judges whose honesty and competency are conceded, is a palpable absurdity. It assumes that editors are qualified to correct the legal blunders of competent judges, which is absurd; and it also assumes that the general public is qualified to pass intelligent judgment upon strict questions of law, which is still more absurd. The editorial counsel are not qualified to present the argument adequately, and the popular audience do not constitute a competent tribunal. Undoubtedly the Press has a right to "criticize frankly" a legal decision of the Supreme Court, or a scientific decision of the French Academy; and so has a boys' debating club, or a ladies' sewing circle; but the criticism, however "frank," is likely to prove as unedifying in the one case as in the other.

ART NOTES.

THERE are but two places in this city where an artist can make a public exhibition of his work; neither of them, however, being at all adapted for this purpose. How poor an opportunity they offer for the display of a painting may be judged from the fact that their windows, close upon the street, are the best position they afford. Occasionally a public sale of pictures is held at some auction room in the heart of the business portion of the city, best fitted for the rapid sale of shoes or homestead lots, and after a short and slightly advertised exhibition, a horde of cheapening hawkers and peddlers is drawn together to buy whatever may be forced upon them, the few positively unsaleable works they fail to bid in being kept upon the walls till the next auction. The opportunities offered on these occasions for a proper view of the paintings to be sold have always been so meagre, and the collections, with rare exceptions, so devoid of merit, that those who desire to buy what is valuable in art and to pay a fair equivalent are seldom attracted, and never induced to purchase.

It is under such disadvantages as these that our artists continually labor, both in the exhibition and sale of their pictures. What they greatly need, and what they should procure for themselves, is a proper gallery, situated so centrally and in such an accessible spot that it may be readily and frequently visited by ladies—who are, indirectly, the best patrons of art—and so that men of business may give it an occasional passing call. Here, rather than to the frame store, artists should send their pictures to be displayed to the public and sold. If such a gallery cannot be kept permanently open then at least some room, offering the same facilities, should be provided for regular artistes' sales, and opened freely to the public, its pictures being exhibited and advertised for a sufficient length of time to give the papers an opportunity to notice, and the people a chance to examine and buy. Such a course has been successfully pursued in the Eastern cities, and the artists have been able to dispose of their works to their satisfaction. A proper harmony of spirit and union of labor on the part of the profession here, would ensure the same success; and the expense of the undertaking, which need be but little, would be fully repaid by the quick sales and increased prices. The names of Nahl, Keith, Wandesforde, Marple, Denny, Arriola and Brooks would be a guaranty to the public that the collection would be well worth examining, and would draw together, on sale day, an appreciative group of bidders.

Among the most noticeable features of the last week, is an oil portrait exhibited at Snow & Roos'. It is the work of Gutierrez, whose card tells us that he is a historical and portrait painter. Whatever he may be, he has given us a refreshingly life-like picture, which, if it be not beautiful, casts the blame upon the subject rather than the artist. Its great charm lies in its apparent truthfulness to nature; the sitter seems to have posed himself, unconsciously, in the first chair that was handy when he became tired of standing, and wears just such garments as one would expect him to appear in upon the street. The painting is devoid of all meretricious effects, free from the conventional tapestry, the time honored table and the well known plush covered chair; is excellently colored, and in its execution shows a power that throws quite in the shade anything we have lately seen in portraiture.

It is the first picture by this artist that has been brought to our notice; his name and fame are new to us; but if his general workmanship fulfills the promise held out by this specimen, we hope to call attention to much of it in the future.

Keith's charming water-color sketch of Oakland scenery, mentioned by us a few weeks ago, is on exhibition at the same place. It is a fresh and vivid piece of coloring. The scene is a simple roadside view, containing no striking features, but exhibiting strong and well rendered effects, and presenting a careful and accurate study of our native oaks.

Waudesforde, who is always a truthful and painstaking artist, has at Jones & Wool's a view of Borax Lake. We do not think the scenery well calculated to make a remarkably pleasing picture, and we cannot rank this as among the artist's best work—but it evinces sufficient merit to place him at the head of our painters in oil.

Arriola's last work is a view of icebergs, but as we have never seen them in nature we are unprepared to speak of its accuracy. If only for the sake of maintaining the veracity of the many writers on the subject, we trust these magnificent mountains of ice bave more grandeur and brilliancy then is here given them.

Denny's view of the Potrero, lately displayed at Snow & Ross', is a fair representation of a naturally attractive scene, but will hardly bear examination—the rocks and grasses in the foreground have a decidedly raw and unfinished appearance.

A small fruit piece by Brookes, at the same place, is executed with considerable care and fidelity, but would be much improved by brilliant coloring. It is especially welcome from the fact that it is the first work of the kind that this artist has exhibited in many months.

A large painting by Frey, entitled tbe " Confession of Beatrice Cénci," may be seen at Snow & Roos'—as it is an exceedingly mournful subject, treated in a very mournful and decidedly second-rate manner, we do not like to dwell upon its many defects.

ASTRÆA

[For the Californian.]

RAVAGES OF A BORE.

BY PRENTICE.

CHAPTER I.

A MAN, James Wimpkins by name, was born inheriting from bis parents all the natural qualifications for becoming a bore.

He did become a bore, not merely a common bore but a most gigantic bore. In the Kingdom of boredom he was a great gun, a fifteen-inch columbiad, and nearly as fatal.

Wimpkins, favored with great fluency of speech, possessed an extraordinary memory. He was a pationt talker, but a most impatient listener. Self-esteem was in him well developed. So was firmness.

Wimpkins' parents early fostered tbe boraric tendency by making bim repeat to tbem the contents of bis story books.

Thereby was he indnced to believe that the buman race really liked the repitition of long stories. Tbe elder Wimpkinses cared nothing for the stories. It was the cleverness of their little boy they so much admired.

So, unwittingly, were they bringing up a scourge to bumanity.

CHAPTER II,

At tbe age of eighteen, James Wimpkins admired bimself more when talking than at any other time.

Relative to the comfort and general interests of bumanity, this would not have been so pitiful or even horrible bad not Wimpkins also become imbued witb the idea that others liked to hear him as well as he liked to bear himself.

His theory of the art of conversation was, that one of tbe parties should be a good listener, providing that that one was not James Wimpkins.

This theory he put in practice, assisted by tbree stories.

He once broke his arm. Small was the misfortune to him, compared to the misery which the recital of the various details of this accident inflicted on humanity.

He once enjoyed five minutes conversation with the Governor of the State. The Governor had mistaken Wimpkins for another man. Tbis constituted story number two.

Story number three, by far the most terrible, was tbat of a trip to California.

With these three stories he bored until the age of thirty. He bored the world with them in season and out of season. Like unto three deadly traps he kept these stories set ready to spring upou unwary listeners.

CHAPTER III.

Herein let us endeavor to illustrate the modus operandi by wbich Wimpkius so often destroyed the peace and happiuess of society.

Oue evening there happened a cboice little gatbering of friends at Mrs. Slaters.

There was Dr. Piper, a retired physician, and Mr. Bolls, a gentleman of wealth, most of whose time was spent in his library, and Miss Pike, who wrote and talked poetry, and Squire Squab, who liked to hear people talk wbo knew more than he did, even though he comprebeuded not exactly such conversation.

Relative to social enjoyment, tbe lines just tben bad fallen to tbis little company in pleasant places.

But a cloud was approaching of whose coming they knew not. Their enjoyment was short lived. Wimpkins, the giant bore, armed with his three stories was even then on his way to the fated domicil, chuckling over the ruin and misery whicb his coming was to accomplish. There came a ring at the door. Wimpkins entered. A chill fell upon the little party. Tbey sbuddered.

In her heart, Mrs Slater kicked most desperately at the interruption. Outwardly calm, though slightly pale, sbe said :

" Ah, Mr. Wimpkins, we are glad to see you. Be seated," and she handed him a chair, and wisbed that it and Wimpkius might disappear into the earth.

The assertion of the courteous hostess relative to the pleasure caused by Mr. Wimpkin's arrival, was a he, aye, and such a big lie that when the recording angel debited Mrs. Slater with it, he held up both hands in amazement.

Dr. Piper went on with the narrative of a difficult surgical operation in his former experience.

Wimpkins saw his opportunity. A pause ensued and he sprung upon that victimized company the story of his broken arm, wbich to all was known by heart.

Some wickedly wished it had been his neck.

The company bore the inflictiou with resignation and patience.

Generally, this narrative occupied one bour in duration, but on this particular evening in honor of the occasion, Wimpkins iutroduced new lies, variations, etc., which quite filled out the period of two.

So he successfully ruined tbe pleasure of one evening. The brilliant jests and sparkling repartees already evolved never saw the light.

And yet men are daily arrested for stealing loaves of bread, whereby no one's peace or comfort is materially interfered with, yet people like Wimpkins engaged in deluging poor bumanity with oceans of mental misery are allowed to prowl about unpunished.

CHAPTER IV.

Once there fell sick a friend of Mr. Wimpkins who kindly volunteered to nurse him. While all commended him for kindness and benevolence, none suspected his diabolical intent of boring that man to deatb in the guise of charity.

But it was his purpose. Wimpkins had never yet been able to obtain an unresisting victim to the story of his California adventures. Long bad he lain in wait for a sick man and now he had one.

The invalid friend died after experiencing a week of Wimpkins' care.

His physician talked of general debility terminated witb brain fever.

Brown had been bored to death. Wimpkins was a murderer. He followed witb complacency his victim to the grave, and in the very procession, encouraged by his success, endeavored to stab a fellow pall-bearer with the same story.

So for years Wimpkins perpetrated tbese outrages against society.

He bored a young woman into marrying bim. Sbe, too, died : bored to deatb.

His poor old father and mother bad long since gone down to their graves, sent prematurely thither by the filial serpent which they had fostered.

His brothers and sisters moved, en masse, out West, to escape his prosecutions.

The tbree stories previously mentioned were not his only resources. Tbey constituted the heavy artillery, but, in bis lesiure moments, he bored his fellow beings with what he ate and drank, his hours of retiring at night and arising in the morning, his garments, how tbey were made and what be paid for them, his complaints and bow he doctored them, and even his nails, embracing toes and fingers, how be pared them.

CHAPTER V.

The people residing in Wimpkins native town became, at length, so annoyed by his persecutions that their wise men took counsel together as to tbe means by wbich they might abate the nuisance.

Fiually, they resolved to import Wadkins, another celebrated bore from a neighboring city, and pit one against the other.

They did so ; but witb different result from tbose anticipated.

For tbe two bores did not, at first, attack each other, but turned their attention to the ill-advised people.

The town, in time, became depopulated, save by tbe two.

Eigbteen hours out of the twenty-four was at first the duration of their boraric labors. But this was beyond the limits of their strength. The time diminished gradually. Fifteen honrs, twelve, ten, eght, six, four, two.

Now the horrible pair, weak as infants, and in the last stages of attenuation, crawl from their respective houses and feebly bore each other for an hour.

Then they go back and bore themselves.

Wimpkius' three stories have become so shattered and broken up, that they have resolved themselves into a single, disjointed tale, without connection, without end.

Human rights cannot be invaded with impunity. Crime and iguorance bring their own retribution.

THE ACCOUNTS of recent proceediugs at the South, particularly in North and South Carolina, tend to show very clearly that a substantial and valuable gift was bestowed upon the freedmen in the right of suffrage. White orators, even in Charlestou, S. C., have learned to talk to negroes, as politicians always will talk to those who have votes, that is, if not respectfully, at least in a conciliatory strain. Evidently the right to vote has already secured to the negro protection against flagrant oppression, if nothing more. We need not be surprised by and by, to fiud South Carolina stump speakers addressing Cuffee in terms as flatteriug as those now used in a close canvas toward our adopted citizens. Tbe right of suffrage clearly amounts to something more than a right to votc.

[For the Californian.]

A DREAM PICTURE.

[Suggested by a painting of " Tamelpais from Angel Island," by W. Keith.]

HOW glorious thy dwelling place!
How manifold thy beauties are!
I do not reckon time, or space,
I worship thy exceeding grace,
And hasten as a flying star,
To reach thy splendor from afar.

The first flush of thy morning face
Is dear to me . thy shadowless,
Broad noon that doth all sweets confess :
But fairer is thy even fall,
When seem to cry with airy call
Thy roses in the wilderness.
Thy deserts blithely blossoming,
Decoy me for the love of Spring.
With all thy glare and glitter spent,
Thy quiet dusk so eloquent ;
Thy veil of vapors; the caress
Of Zephyrus, right cool and sweet—
I cannot wait to love thee less—
I cling to thee with full content,
And fall a-dreaming at thy feet.

Anon the sudden evening gun,
Awakes me to the sinking sun
And goldeu glories at the Gate.
The full, strong tides, that slowly rnn
Their sliding waters modulate
To indolent soft winds that wait
And lift a long web uewly spun.

I see the groves of scented hay,
And night is in their fragrant mass ;
But tassel-shadows swing aud sway,
And spangles flash and fade away
Upon their glimmering leaves of glass—
And there a fence of rail, quite gray,
With ribs of sunlight in the grass—
And here a branch full well arrayed
With struggling beams a moment staid—
Like panting butterflies afraid.

Lo ! shadows slipping down the slope
And filling every narrow vale,
The shining water growing pale—
The mellow-burning star of Hope
And in the wave its silver trope.
A slender shallop, feather-frail,
A pencil-mast and rocking sail.
The glooms that gather at the Gate ;
The sombre lines against the sky—
While dizzy gnats about me fly,
And over-head the birds go by,
Dropping a note so crystal clear,
The spirit cannot choose but hear.
The hollow moon, aud up between
An oak with yard-long mosses, green
In sunlight, now as dull as crape ;
The mountain softened in its shape,
Its perfect symmetry attained—
And swathed in velvet folds, and stained
With dusty purple of the grape.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

San Francisco, May 3, 1867.

THE New York papers seem disposed to undervalue tbe bumanitarian—or rather the animalitarian labors of the tender bearted, Mr. Bergh and bis coadjutors. The recent demonstration of these benevoleut gentlemen in favor of the pigeous and rabbits that are fed alive to Barnum's boaconstrictor, has furnisbed the occasion for mucb merriment. Mr. Bergb, impressed with tbe idea that the nervous susceptibility of rabbits causes them to endure great mental distress while awaiting their doom, especially in cases where the boa is slow in getting up an appetite, wanted to bave the monster fed witb rabbits that had been killed and put out of their misery before being thrust into his den. But it seems that his snakeship has no stomach for any meat that is not of his own killing. Furthermore it is maintained that the rabbits have no such fearful prescience of impending doom as is attributed to tbem, and that they have no idea of what is going to happen to them. The Round Table suggests that "as a matter of curious investigation it might reward experimeut to see whether the boa could not be converted into a frugiferous animal." If Mr. Bergh would honor San Francisco with a visit, we think he would find more flagrant evils to reform in the way of cruelty to animals, than the sufferings of rabbits in the boa's den. There are few better fields for the labor of such a beuevolent society as the one which Mr. Bergh is at the head of, tban tbis city affords.

OUR NATIONAL Legislature has been employing its wisdom on the important question of tbe kind of clothes that American representatives at foreign courts ought to wear. The result is a silly prohibition forbidding our ministers to wear court costume. The next thing will probably be an Act of Congress prescribing an intensely American and republican style of dress lor our representatives abroad. We would suggest a swallow-tail coat, with the stars and stripes upon one skirt, and the " bird of freedom " upon the other. Indeed this is not very unlike the costume, or livery, seriously proposed by Mr. Noell of Missouri.

A NUMBER of book-notices, and a criticism of Devine's fine bust of Broderick bave been crowded out of our to-day's issuc.

ASLEEP.

AN hour before, she spoke of things
That memory to the dying brings,
And kiss'd me all the while;
Then, after some sweet parting words,
She seem'd among her flowers and birds,
Until she fell asleep.

'Twas summer then, 'tis autumn now,
The crimson leaves fall off the bough,
And strew the gravel sweep.
I wander down the garden walk,
And muse on all the happy talk
We had beneath the limes;
And, resting on the garden-seat,
Her old Newfoundland at my feet,
I think of other times:

Of golden eves, when she and I
Sat watching here the flushing sky,
The sunset and the sea:
Or heard the children in the lanes,
Following home the harvest wains,
And shouting in their glee.

But when the daylight dies away,
And ships grow dusky in the bay,
These recollections cease:
And in the stillness of the night,
Bright thoughts that end in dreams as bright,
Communicate their peace.

I wake and see the morning star,
And hear the breakers on the bar,
The voices on the shore;
And then, with tears, I long to be
Across a dim unsounded sea,
With her for evermore.

WANTED! NEW POETS.

THE cheaper and more universal literature becomes, the more difficult it is for poetry to retain its position of supremacy. Great minds do not devote themselves to it as they used to do. There are other things to be done besides chiseling sentences, or even moulding splendid fancies into rhythm. Instead of being, as he once was, the paragon and instructer of his age, the poet is only one of a multitude of teachers and of prophets. Parnassus, instead of being reserved exclusively for the cultivation of the bay tree, is given up to a number of active and energetic squatters, who turn the romantic wilderness into arable land, and produce a variety of useful and healthy crops, which take precedence of the old ornamental laurel. To take a single instance, it is astonishing what a difference has been made to the manufacture of poetry by the modern development of the novel. Novel writing in a field that draws off yearly a score of sentimental and imaginative persons, who, if novels did not exist, might perhaps devote their energies to studying verses, and each of whom, after many years, and at the close of a long life, might conceivably have produced some fifty or sixty stanzas which prosterity would rather read than not. The temptation to write prose works of fiction, from a worldly point of view, is greater. The chances of ultimate failure are smaller, the immediate pecuniary return is more certain, the necessity for long study and laborious concentration is less; and prose is not only more easily produced, and more richly paid, but it is far less severely criticised, and is both a less ambitious and a more marketable speculation.

The progress of music is possibly one of the causes that must be taken into account in speaking of the decline of poetry-making. When Music, heavenly maid, was young, Poetry was grown up. The pair have insensibly changed places. Music has developed into a popular and intellectual science; great artists have appeared, one after another, whose productions will live, perhaps, as long as the productions of Æschylus or Sophocles; and sentimentality and genius are no longer driven to find expression for their thoughts in words. Beethoven and Mendelsshon have taken the place of poets in the nineteeth century. It is not, of course, true in the very least that music is a modern invention; but, like all other arts, it has benefited by mechanical progress, and has been increasing its hold upon the attention of the civilized world. It may also possibly be true that sentiment is more equable in these days, and finds more vent than it used to do upon simple objects of daily life. The world is always full of ups and downs, but, on the other hand, comfort and luxary increase daily among the educated classes; ordinary life is not so full, as a rule, of picturesque situations, and the course of true love frequently runs smooth. The result of this is that refinement and culture have a gentle and easy time of it. The fine and delicate feeling which used to be forced back on themselves are spent in making other people happy, in adding to the ease and elegance of life, and in smoothing down its rough edges. Even despairing lovers are going out of date, except in novels and upon the stage. Life is not in itself either a tragedy or a comedy any longer. It is a more or less rapid and comfortable railway journey, with pleasant companions, a constant change of scenery, and newspapers and refreshments at every station. Mingling with our fellow-creatures in this busy and pleasant way does not increase our chance of being poets. Nobody seems to have any reason for restraining his sympathies, or converting himself into a hermetically-sealed reservoir of sentimental steam. Life, as Longfellow tells us, is earnest and active, and accordingly the Psalm of Life itself is nothing but a very well-meaning, but badly-rhyming, piece of prose.

On the other hand, we do not see why the world need make itself unhappy because it generates few new poets. The old ones are good enough for those who care about poetry, and, if it were not, as Tristram Shandy says, for "the vanity of the thing," one might do without any additions to their number. Almost every feeling that the human breast is capable of entertaining has been expressed nearly to perfection. Every great passion has been portrayed, most characters are to be found in the poet's picture-gallery. Every man cannot have a Holbein or Rembrandt on his wall, but every one of us can keep "Hamlet" and "Romeo" upon our library shelves. Certainly, one does not like to think that our age is inferior, and if the charge of a dearth of new poets really was a reproach, it would be proper to resent it with dignity. We think it means nothing of the kind. If a new poet does appear we shall be glad to see him, and to watch his early performances with interest and enthusiasm; but English verses are likely every day to become more and more like Latin verses—useful, that is to say, as a means of self-culture or self-amusement, but comparatively an unimportant addition to the literary riches of the world.

A PRETTY FOOT.—What is prettier than a pretty foot? What is more captivating than a dear little boot covering a high instep, and coming down neatly over the toes, with a bewitching tassel dangling at the top of the close-lacing? In nothing is aristocracy so marked as in the pedal extremity, the thin nostril, the long fingers, the narrow palm, are evidences of gentle blood, but far less so than the round ankle, the high instep, the hollow beneath, through which, as the proud and high-bred Arabs say, a stream of water should be able to flow while the possessor is standing. The flat, splay foot, on the contrary, as surely tells of want of pedigree as its misshapen excrescences, its corns and bunions drive away affection. The horse shows the purity of his extraction by clean limbs, neat posture, and small hoof; and the same result is noticeable, more or less, in all animals. Men fall in love as readily with a seductive foot as with an attractive face; he finds in it a thousand expressive movements; its firm tread speaks of a decided character, its quick step denotes anger; its elasticity of motion assures him of liveliness and good humor; its hasty tread denotes impatience; its subtle glide signifies cunning; while the quiet but marked footfall guarantees him an affectionate disposition. The face often deceives with an alluring smile; it is taught or trained by design or habit; its openness is guarded and confined; but the foot speaks its own language, unrestrained and untutored; and the male sex owes a debt of gratitude to fashion for giving us back honest feet to the future adorners of human existence.

MR. MILLION DOLLARS.—A man may make a million dollars and be a man. For a man who has got a million dollars, you know, is a man—in New York, and I suppose in Boston. Everybody takes his hat off to Mr. Million Dollars. He is conciliated, he is respected; and if there is any prospect that the dew will be shaken of his branches, he is invited everywhere.

If a man has a million dollars he is a man; but he dies, and his million dollars is cut into four quarters, and four persons carry it off their several ways. Mr. Million Dollars, after an appropriate funeral, is buried, and there he lies; and in a few years nobody talks about him, nobody thinks about him, nobody hears about him. In fifty years the shrewdest man might go and read his grave stone, and find "Mr. Million Dollars.' "Who was he, and where was his money." And it would puzzle an antiquary to tell what those four heirs did do with it. It puzzled them after a few years to tell where it had gone to. He made his money; it gave him power and influence; he distributed it among his heirs; yes, he distributed it, and they squandered it; he died and went to dust, and that was the last of him, so far as this world is concerned. I don't know what become of him beyond.

MISS EMILY SHIRREFF, in her work on education, has remarked that in dealing with timid children the endeavor should be to encourage boldness and to ronse decision; to accustom them to responsibility, the latter being made a mark of honor; to excite sympathy for the great deeds of fearless and heroic natures. Fear, therefore, should never be appealed to, though, at the moment, fear is the readiest instrument to accomplish a particular purpose.

TICKNOR & FIELDS announce, among their forthcoming works, "Passages from Hawthorne's Note Books," in two volumes; Longfellow's translation of Dante—the "Inferno," to appear in April, the "Purgatorio" in May, and the "Paradiso" in June; also C. E. Norton's translation of Dante's "Vito Nuova."

A HYMN FOR ALL SEASONS.

FOR the beauty ever round us springing
From the Spring's first blossoms in the vales,
To the wealth of Summer flowers flinging
Incense to the loitering Summer gales,
For the wild bird's song which trills and gladdens,
We do praise Thee, veiling all which saddens!

For the ripening fruit when Autumn lowers,
For the ready harvest in the field,
For the pensive lingering of the flowers
While the vines their pendant treasure yield,
We do bear unto Thine altar holy
Fervent thanks and love, sincere and lowly!

For the Winter's snow that lieth lightly
On the old gray moss and forest tree,
For the glorious revelation nightly
Of the moon and stars that tell of Thee,
We do still in humble trust beholding,
See through all Thy love and power unfolding!

Ever new to us the seasons changing,
Ever fresh the song of bird and sea,
Never old the cloud through azure ranging,
Always grand the stars we nightly see;
Thus hath God, to feed man's restless yearnings,
Oped His universe to his discernings!

ANOTHER WESTERN WONDER.—The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa is what they call "Walled Lake," in Weight county, twelve miles from the Dubuque and Pacific Railway, and about one hundred and fifty miles west of Dubuque city. The water is from two to three feet higher than the earth's surface. In most places the wall is ten feet high; width at the bottom fifteen feet; at the top five. Another fact is the size of the stones used in its construction. The whole is of stone, varying in weight from three tons down to one hundred pounds. There is an abundance of stone in Weight county, but surrounding the lake, to the extent of five and ten miles, there is none. No one can form an idea as to the means employed to bring them to the spot or who constructed it. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland, half a mile in width, composed of oaks. With this exception, the country is a rolling prairie. The trees, therefore, must have been placed there at the time of building the walls. In the Spring of 1856 there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in that vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 1,900 acres; depth of water as great as 25 feet. The water is clear and cold; soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from and where it goes to, yet it always remains clear and fresh.

DEATH OF A BRIGAND.—The telegraphic wires at San Pancrazio, in Calabria, were set in motion lately to announce to the Government that the famous brigand, Filippo Zanoni (better known by the nickname of Maceion), had at last been captured by the Carabineers, but not without the deadliest fight, he having seriously wounded three of his assailants out of eight, and only yielding when mortally struck on the head by Sergeant Bacci. This celebrated assassin had committed ten murders, and made numberless depredations at the head of three bands, whose ranks he saw decimated and ultimately destroyed by the dreaded Bersaglieri. Twice he fled into the hands of the police, having been betrayed and sold by the peasants, and twice he succeeded in escaping from prison, adding to his calendar of blood by the assassination of his informers. At last he fell, but not without dearly selling his lawless life; however, certain names, written on bits of paper found in his pockets, brought the police on the track of some malefactors living at Pancrazio, in the midst of luxury, and eight of them were lodged in the Municipal prison in that district, to await an inquiry about their former life and means of existence.

"BURNED AT THE STAKE"—A DANGEROUS TABLEAU.—At a Society Fair in Granville, Massachusetts, lately, a young lady of the village, who took part in a tableau, was placed in what proved an unenviable and dangerous position, that caused much alarm among the numerous spectators present. The last scene represented the burning of a martyr at the stake, and the "victim" was chained to an erect post, around which, at what was considered a safe distance, fagots saturated with some inflammable fluid were piled. At a given signal the torch was applied, and the lady stood the ordeal for a time without flinching. But what was intended merely as an illusion proved in a measure a reality; the flames spread over a greater surface then was calculated, the lady's clothing took fire, and being secured to the stake no relief could be afforded except from the auditory. Her cries finally made her danger known, and she was released, not, however, until her arms and a portion of her head dress was severely burned.

THE New York Tribune has engaged Mr. Dickens to write a novel for its weekly edition, paying for it $25,000. Carlyle has also been engaged to contribute a single article to cover a page of the daily edition, for which he receives the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars. At that rate Carlyle receives but poor pay, while Dickens obtains magnificent compensation.

☞ WONDERFUL BUT TRUE.—MADAME REMINGton, the world-renowned Astrologist and Somnambulistic Clairvoyant, while in a clairvoyant state, delinestes the very features of the person you sre to marry, snd by the aid of an instrument of intense power, known as the Psychomotrope, guarantees to produce a perfect and life like picture of the future husband or wiie of the applicant, with date of marriage, occupstion, leading traits of charscter, etc. This is no imposition, as testimonials without number can assert. By stating place of birth, age, disposition, color of eyes and hsir, and enclosing fifty cents and stamped envelope sddressed to yourself, you will receive tne picture by return mail, together with desired informstion.

Address in confidence, MADAME GERTRUDE REMINGTON, P. O. Box 297, West Troy, N. Y.

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used by the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world It cau he threwu a distance of threc hundred feet, snd will return and fall at the feet of the thrower. As the Australisn boomerang is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever inveuted, so is the San Francis o BOOMERANG, at the corner of Washiugton and Dupont streets, ackuowledged to he one of the greatest institutions ot the city. The snug har, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot punches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum —in fact, everything about tne Boomerang is perfect.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whosc husband supposed she had absconded wss freely forgiven, whon he found she had only been dowu to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, snd get one dozen of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST over made in this city. Come esrly, if you waut to get a sittiug. Remember the Pisce—Nos. 25 and 27 Third street, east side, uear Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasscs, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case sliver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are takiug the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the casings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that Amerlcau manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instrumcnts, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

N. B.—An immense assortmeut of Japanese curiosities for sale.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishmeut on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

PIONEER IRON SHUTTER WORKS.

Estabiished 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Constsntly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No

Hsve received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selliug

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All sre invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the Germau Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT snd PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,

515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,

NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,

San Francisco.

SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Eugagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST-CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

HAT OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,

Have the Largest Office,

Do the most work,

And do it better

Than other offices

536 In this City,

Try them

With a Job,

And you will be

Satisfied the above

Statements are facts.

Their office is at 536

Clay St., below Montgom'y,

Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

REMOVAL.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

To the S. E. corner Montgomery snd Pine streets, San Francisco.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

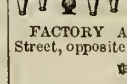
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constsnt supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workmsn, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

WALTER S. PIERCE,



Manufacturer and Importer of

PIANO-FORTES.

FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.

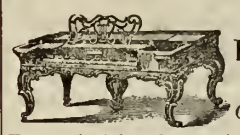
☞ PIANOS TO RENT.☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S

Piano Manufactory

Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.



THE FAMOUS

PIANOS

OF

Chickering & Son

Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's'.

Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES

Executed in a Superior Style, at

GEO. D. MORSE'S

NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,

No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE

FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines have is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A DEMING,

137 Kearny street, S. W, cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,

esrcornor of Sansoiue, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,

Carriage Manufactory,

NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,

Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.

A general assortment of new and second hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - PROPRIETOR

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

NEW SPRING BONNETS.

The revolntions in millinery have been so rapid and complete, during the last few years, that ladies feel more than the nsnal anxiety to know what is preparing for them in the future. what they have to fear, to hope for, or to expect.

The small sancer bonnets, now that the hair has been adapted to them, have become great favorites with all young, or comparitively young, women. They are convenient, easily made, cost next to nothing, and can therefore be renewed as often as the beautiful Rose Matilda pleases.

But this state of things, thongh a Paradise of millinery, is not a Paradise for milliners; their occupation is gone, and a change, and a very decided change, mnst therefore come sooner or later. The present aspect of the millinery sky is only indicative, it is not positive; but the indications are decidedly in favor of a retnrn to the orthodox style and shape.

The new spring styles cannot be called a "patch," a "plaster," or a "plate." They include a brim or crown, and a cnrtain or cape, the first and last small, to be sure, but suffi ciently pronounced to give the appearance of a bonnet. The crown is still the most important part of the strnctnre, and rests npon the top, instead of the back, of the head, the cape surmounting the chignon like a comb, and the brim serving as a frame to the face, and as cending in front, in some instances, like a tiara.

Bonnets trimmed with plaits are very popnlar. I will describe two that were made a few days ago. The first was the form called Marie Louise, which has a small, low crown. It was made of blue crepe mixed with blonde; two plaits of blue silk descended the back, and two smaller plaits crossed the front of the bonnet. The second was in the Marie Stnart form, pointed on the forehead. It was black velvet, with jet drops round it. At the edge of the front there was a small bow with three crimson velvet buckles; two plaits of crimson velvet terminating with jet drops, descending the back.

NEW SHORT DRESSES.

Short dresses are now an established institution. The late styles are straight round the edge and cut up at the sides, matching the short, straight paletots, which are also cut np on the sides. "Jasper" cloth, or silk, makes a pretty suit in this style, bordered with silk braid, worked with jet.

The lower skirt or petticoat may be plain or plaited, or striped straight or diagonally with velvet, according to taste. If the dress and petticoat are not uniform in color, the petticoat must correspond in color with the paletot. Purple petticoat and paletot, of marine blue, with black silk or poplin dresses, are in good taste, the trimming if any is used upon petticoat and paletot, being black.

Jet and beads promise to be as much used as ever, especially upon spring toilettes. Later in the season, beautiful straw trimmings, mixed with silk, jet and crystal, will be used upon both bonnets and dresses, excepting, of course, washing materials.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Blam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blum & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,

37 and 39 Webb street,

Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

THE GREAT

New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficnlty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valnable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and snre. Sold by all Drnggists and Dealers in Medicine genornlly.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,

401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Frsncisco.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] ensbles DR. BOURNE to Gusrantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES IN THE CITY —Are to be found at—

HOADLEY & CO.'S,

533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 223 Bush Street,

Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.

W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,

San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO

WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine

Wines, Liquors and Segars,

NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,

Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,

Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,

Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

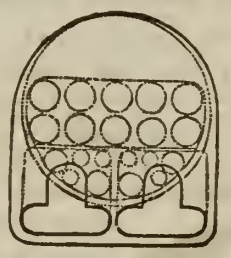
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN, JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydrsulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COBBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

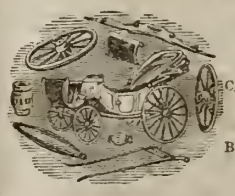
MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS, CARTS, OMNIBUSSES, CARRIAGES, COACHES, EXPRESS WAGONS, BUGGIES, SULKIES, Etc.

Also, Importers of

GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,

Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & Co.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Biskely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters' & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts., below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderbold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 320 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Sav' ann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

A STORY OF THE SEA.

Rough and ragged as a bear-skin,
But as warm, was Captain Bray,
Sitting in the rosy cabin
Of his little schooner Fay.
Smoothing out a wrinkled volume
With a wondrous careful hand,
Seeming not to feel the distance
We were rolling from the land.

Now he nods, and smiles, and whispers,
While his eyelids overflow!
Captain, pardon us for asking
What those hieroglyphics show?
And the Captain drew his coat-sleeve
O'er his face, and answered slow,
"Well, this little pile of paper
Is my log-book, you must know!"

Often had we heard of log-hooks
Writ by sailors on the deep;
But within the mystic volumes
Never chanced to get a peep.
So we craved this son of Neptune
Let us turn his volume o'er;
Lo! 'twas filled with rude, misshapen
Inky daubs, and nothing more!

"Ah! to you," he said, "they may be
Blots and scratches on the sheet;
But to me they speak a language
Ever eloquent and sweet.
For they bring to me my cottage,
Where the fire is burning bright—
Where my little one is lisping
Prayers for me, this stormy night.

"Very precious is this volume,
Full of houses, trees and men!
See this picture of a sailor;
Don't you know it? Look again!
Can't you see myself depicted?
And the child upon my knee
Is my little maid—my Mattie—
Who did everything you see.

"Every scratch, and mark, and picture,
Is the work of Mattie's hand;
Not a brighter little lassie
Lives—I vow, in any land!
Why, I never cross the ocean
But she adds a sheet to this,
Covered with her cunning pictures;
Every picture is a kiss!

"Not a time I turn them over,
But I feel her velvet cheek
Pressing mine—" and here the Captain
Grew so hoarse he scarce could speak.
"Ah! you do not know what comfort
From these leaves I always reap,
When between me and my Mattie
Rolls the cold and lonely deep!"

THE POPULATION OF EUROPEAN CITIES.—In 1866 censuses were taken in Great Britain and France, and the reports show the following population of the principal cities:

London	3,037,991
Paris	1,825,274
Liverpool	484,337
Glasgow	462,265
Manchester	358,855
Birmingham	335,798
Lyons	326,954
Dublin	318,537
Marseilles	390,131
Leeds	228.187
Sheffield	218,257
Bordeaux	194,241
Edinburg	175,126
Bristol	163,630
Lille	154,778
Toulouse	126,936
Newcastle-on-Tyne	122,277
Salford	112,904
Nantes	111,956
Hull	105,233
Rouen	100,673

To the Editors of the Californian—GENTS:—I have pleasure in making public the following report of the business of the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY for the month of April, just closed:

Number of policies issued	818
Average amount of each policy	$832 50
Net amount of premiums received	$12,400 23
Total Fire and Marine Losses	1, 985 00
Balance in favor of the Company	$10,415 23

The above, I trust, will give our friends satisfaction. Respectfully,

THOMAS MOONEY, President.

San Francisco, May 1, 1867.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

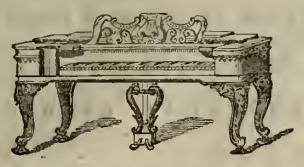
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

THE CELEBRATED PIANOS



—OF—

J. B. DUNHAM, F. C. LIGHTE & CO.,

AND ERNEST GABLER,

Are warranted for FIVE YEARS, and indorsed by the LEADING PIANISTS of AMERICA as SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS.

SOLE AGENTS— C WIEDERHOLD & CO., 685 Market street, near Third.

J. C. E. KLEPZIG,

MANUFACTURER

—AND—

DEALER IN

GUNS, PISTOLS,

Sporting Apparatus,

AMMUNITION

AND GUN MATERIALS,

No. 733 Washington Street, San Francisco.

Gilding and Silver Plating of all kinds of metals; also, Silver or Plated Ware reburnished.

HOLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

STOVES, TIN-PLATE,

SHEET IRON, LEAD PIPE, PUMPS, ZINC, WIRE, AND

HOUSE FURNISHING HARDWARE.

MANUFACTURERS OF

TIN, SHEET-IRON AND COPPER WARE.

Nos. 13 and 15 Front street.....San Francisco
Nos. 176 and 178 J street.....Sacramento
Main street.....Austin, Nevada

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE

HAVE IN STORE, EX LATE ARRIVALS, A FULL stock of

STOVES AND RANGES,

METALS, WIRE, IRON PIPE,
LEAD PIPE, BRASS GOODS, HOSE,
HOLLOW-WARE, TIN-WARE,
TINMEN'S STOCK AND TRIMMINGS,
TOOLS AND MACHINES,

Plumbers' Goods,

LIFT AND FORCE PUMPS,

Hansbrow's Patent

SHIP, FARM AND MINING PUMPS,

Which they offer to Dealers at the lowest market rates.

112 AND 114 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

J. O. HANSCOM. H. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO { T. PENDERGAST. W. W. HANSCOM.

Etna Iron Works!

S. E corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,

Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,

MANUFACTURE

STEAM ENGINES,

QUARTZ-MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting

PISTON PACKING,

Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,

The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.

TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,

Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables.

All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.

SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES."

None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.

Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

☞ Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma

H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

D. A. MACDONALD, J. H. MACDONALD. } { J. MCGILL, H. CHIPMAN.

D. A. MACDONALD & CO.,

SAWING AND PLANING MILLS,

AND MANUFACTURERS OF

DOORS, SASHES, BLINDS AND MOULDINGS,

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Finishing Work for Buildings constantly on hand, and got up to order.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens. North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by

M. BONNET,

Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES

Executed in a Superior Style, at

GEO. D. MORSE'S

NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,

No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE

FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines have is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A DEMING,

137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,
cor. of Sansome, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,

Carriage Manufactory,

NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.

A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 SANSOME ST. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & CO.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

IF there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

JOSH BILLINGS' ESSA ONTO SWINE. — Hogs generally are quadriped.

The extreme length ov their antiqnity has never been fully discovered; they existed a long time before the flood, and hev existed a long time since.

There iz a grate deal ov internal revenew in a hog; thare aiu't much more waste in them than thare iz in an oyster.

Even their tails can be worked up into whissels.

Hogs are good quiet boarders; they alwns eat what is set before them, and don't ask eny foolish questions.

They never hev enny disseaze but the meazles, and they never hev that but once; once seems to satisfy them.

Thare is a grate menny breeds amongst them.

Some are a close corporation breed, and some are bilt more apart, like a hemlock slab.

They used to hev a breed in New England, a few years ago, which they called the striped hog breed; this breed was in high repute among the landlords, almost every tavern-keeper had one, which he used tew show tew travelers and brag on him.

Some are full in the face, like a town clock, and some are as long and leau as a cow-catcher, with a steal-pinted noze on them.

They kan awl rute well; a hog that kant rute well, haz been made in vain.

They are a short-lived animal, and generally die as soon as they git fatt.

The hog can be larnt a grate menny cunning things, such as histing the front gate off from the hinges, tipping over the swill barrells, and finding a hole in the fence tew git into a corn-field; but thare aint enny length to their memory, it iz awful hard work for them tew find the same hole tew git out at, espeshally if yu are at all anxious they should.

Hogs are very contrary, and seldom drive well the same way yu are going; they drive most the other way, this haz never bin fully explained, bnt speaks volumes for the hog.

A CRAZY Second Adventist in Herkimer county, N. Y., has for ten years been feeding a big ox for a feast when Christ should appear. He has starved his other stock, and spent nearly all his property in purchasing food for that ox. The ox a few days since died of a surfeit, the owner having but two days before refused $1,000 for the animal.

GEORGE PEABODY was 72 years old on the 19th of February, and the anniversary of his birthday was celebrated at South Danvers, Massachusetts, by a banquet. Mr. Peabody stated that after his return from London he shonld take up his home at Salem, Mass.

A MANUFACTURER in New York city is filling an order for two thousand thimbles at eighteen cents per dozen, for the managers of a popnlar gift enterprise. "No blanks! Every ticket entitles the holder to a present!"

A. J. SWEETSER,

Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic

Song and Cage Birds,

CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.

No. 519 Kearney street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

CORNS!

DR. V. POPPER,

Surgeon Chiropedist

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

MRS. WINSHIP,

Fashionable Milliner.

NO. 23 POST STREET,

Between Kearny and Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.

Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.

Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

Headley's Great Work!

The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.

FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,

Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.

In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.

E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,

CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.

Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.

THEODORE MEETZ.....President
WM. ERZGRABER.....Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.....Secretary

TRUSTEES.

FABIAN JOOST, HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT, FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE, PETER MEYER.

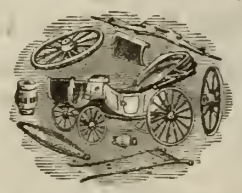
The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer

In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.

All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and nt prices to suit the times.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofuloos Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofnla in the blood, and are often soon curod by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsapari la, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,

HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.

DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham,	William Smith, Marysville.

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Sonthwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

IMPORTERS OF

Agricultural Implements,

MACHINES, HARDWARE, ETC.,

NOS. 17 AND 19 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO,

NOS. 9, 11, 13 AND 15 J STREET,
(Near the Levee,) SACRAMENTO,

Eastern Office, 88 Wall Street, New York,

OFFER:

Buckeye Reapers, 5 and 6 feet; Mowers, 2 sizes.
Ball's Ohio Reapers; Mowers, 3 sizes.
Burt's Eagle Reapers and Mowers, double and single gear.
McCormack's Reapers and Mowers, hand and self-raking.
Manny Reaper and Mower, 5 feet cut—cheap.
Wood's Prize Combined Machines, 5 feet cut.
Kirby's Reapers and Mowers, 5 feet cut.
Wood's Prize Mowers, jointed and stiff bars.
Badger State Reapers and Mowers.
Russell's Junior Mowers.
Union Mowers, 2 sizes.
Champion Mowers.
Bay State Mowers.
Haine's Headers, iron wheels—genuine.
Haine's Headers, screw hub wheels—genuine.
Header Wagons, screw hub wheels.
Pitt's Improved Threshers, 24 to 40-inch cylinders.
Aultman's Sweepstakes Threshers, 33 to 40 inch cylinders.
Pitt's Double Pinion and Iron Horse Power.
Portable Steam Engines, 5 to 20-horse power.
Wheel Wire Horse Rakes.
Revolving and Wire Horse Rakes.
Hay Presses, Hay Rope and Baling Wire.
Scythes, Snathes, Rakes, Cradles, Forks, etc.
Rubber and Leather Belting, all sizes.
Single Plows and Gang Plows.
Harrows, Horse Hoes, Cultivators.
Fan Mills, Grain Mills, Hay Cutters.
Wine and Cider Presses, Churns.
Broadcast Seed Sowers and Seed Drills.
Ox Yokes, Road Scrapers, etc, etc.

Samples of machines may be seen at their new warerooms. BAKER & HAMILTON,
Front street, between Pine and Market streets, San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma

H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

JOHN HAGAN,

Marble - Worker,

MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,

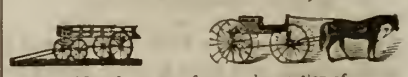
ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON, SAN FRANCISCO.

THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.

Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.

—ALSO—

The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.

A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.

JACOB SCHREIBER,

Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

HOELSCHER & WIELAND,

Proprietors.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to he found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.
Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

THE MOST PERFECT CUTTING MACHINE EVER MADE

HUBBARD PRIZE MOWER

The Excelsior Mower of the Day.

The Makers of this Celebrated Machine have finally been enabled to increase their manufacturing facilities to such an extent, as to equal the Eastern demand, and permit of a full stock being kept at San Francisco for the wants of the Pacific Farmers.
This Machine took the FIRST GOLD MEDAL PREMIUM from
EIGHTEEN COMPETITORS,
At the Great Public Trial of MOWERS held at Utica, New York.
Farmers and Dealers, send for a pamphlet, and consult your own interests by examining this Machine before you make your purchases for the season.

ADDRESS
WM. B. ISAACS,
Office of the Russel & Erwin Manufacturing Company,
106 AND 108 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,
OPTICIANS
THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT ESTABLISHMENT on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined.
SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.
Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.
Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.
N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

JACOB SHEW,
Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.
Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.
STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN
One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.
Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.
Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.
B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE CALIFORNIA
Building and Savings Bank,
CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.
Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000
WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.
LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE,
HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES
AND MERCHANDISE.
Deposits received at one per cent. per month.
Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.
Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

"OUR OPERA."
CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,
615 WASHINGTON STREET, 615,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petalnma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN JENNER, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.
On reading and filing the petition of William A. Jenner, the Executor of the last will and testament of Ellen Jenner, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heirs and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:
It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 3d day of June, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs and devisees of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, according to law.
It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said third day of June, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 23d, A. D. 1867.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Att'y for Executor. ap27-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased
Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, William Rowan, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said William Rowan, at No 532 Merchant street, Room No. 3, in the City and County of San Francisco.
WM. ROWAN.
Administrator of the estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, April 26th, 1867. ap17-tf

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.
It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by J. W Brumagim, the Administrator of the estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration;
It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on Monday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;
And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 5th, 1867. ap6-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HORACE COLE, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of HORACE COLE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within nine months and twenty-one days after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator with the will annexed, at his law office, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.
Dated April 4th, 1867.
J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Horace Cole, deceased. ap6-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CHARLES MITCHELL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.
Dated April 11th, 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF LUDWIG IGEL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of LUDWIG IGEL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated April 11th, 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Ludwig Igel, deceased. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JACOB R. MAYER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 523 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
Dated April 13th, A. D. 1867.
A. W. BOWMAN,
Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ROBERT CARTER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratix of the estate of Robert Carter, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratix, at the place of transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, John F. Finn, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.
GRACE CARTER,
Administratix of the Estate of Robert Carter, deceased.
Dated April 12, 1867. ap13 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against FRANCIS S. WOOD, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, JOHN G. HODGE, at Nos. 418 and 420 Clay street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
Dated April 6th, 1867.
JOHN G. HODGE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Francis S. Wood, deceased. ap6-5w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No. 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.
The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.
And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.
Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF San Francisco. In the Probate Court.
In the matter of the estate of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.
Order of Publication on application for order of sale.
On reading and filing the petition of William A. Quarles, administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.
It is ordered, That all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 20th day of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.
And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 17th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.
Witness my hand and the seal of said Probate Court, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1867.
[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]
WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEFFRIES, Deputy Clerk.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Petitioner. ap20 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate left unadministered of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator as aforesaid at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.
Dated April 12th, A. D. 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Thomas A. Kimball, deceased
WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Administrator.
ap13-5t.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CARL. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

The Beautiful and Fascinating

HELEN WESTERN,

Supported by THE GRAND COMBINATION COMPANY,

Will appear on

This Afternoon and Evening..May 4th,

In the play of the

"Green Bushes."

MONDAY EVENING.....MAY 6th.

First night of the

"French Spy."

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra $1 00
Parquette.....50 | Upper Circle.....25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

THE CENTRAL PARK OF THE PACIFIC.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery,

Museum, Gymnasium

.....AND.....

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THESE BEAUTIFUL GARDENS ARE VISITED DAILY by hundreds of the pleasure seeking public, and all agree in pronouncing them the best and only first class suburban resort on the Pacific coast.

The extensive grounds are covered with the rarest trees and shrubbery, making it a most desirable spot for small parties wishing to enjoy a Pic-Nic.

New attractions are being constantly added.

These Gardens are accessible by the Howard, Market and Folsom street cars. Entrances on Mission and Valencia streets, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth. OPEN EVERY DAY.

Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 years, half price.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

Between Jackson and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

between California and Pine.

JAMES C. PARKINSON JOHN J. MAHONEY.

PARKINSON & MAHONEY,

GILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS

—OF—

LOOKING-GLASS AND PICTURE FRAMES,

No. 333 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco. All kinds of Oval Frames, Lithographs and Engravings kept constantly on hand. Pictures cleaned and varnished. Old Frames regilt.

ARRIVAL

—OF—

MADAME LAURUSTINUS,

The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europe, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

Powell Street

WARM SWIMMING BATHS!

N. E. Corner Powell and Filbert Streets,

OPPOSITE WASHINGTON SQUARE.

J. M. NASH.....PROPRIETOR.

WARM AND COLD BATHS from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. daily, with every appliance usually connected with a well-ordered Gymnasium for the development of Health and Muscle.

The only Complete Swimming Bath on this Coast.

Another advantage connected with this establishment, not usually found in Swimming Baths, is, that the water is Continually Changing, Fresh Water running in and out Constantly.

Single Baths, including Towels and Bathing Dress..25 cts
5 Bath Tickets, " " $1

Call and Try Them. The Kearny Street and Montgomery Street Cars pass the door every five minutes.

The Baths are reserved for Ladies every Tuesday, from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. Ladies to supply their own Bathing Dresses.

I will guarantee to impart a thorough practical knowledge of Swimming in one month. Terms for the Course, $10.

J. M. NASH.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, . . . PROPRIETOR

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

AUCTIONEERS.

OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.

H. A. COBB, Auctioneer.

UESD Y.

TUESDAY.....MAY 7th, 1867.

AT 11 O'CLOCK, AT

Platt's Hall,

Bay View Park Track,

PORTION OF SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO,

COMPRISING SEVENTY BLOCKS

OF 200x600 FEET,

AND

Thirty-Five Hundred Lots,

OF 25x100 FEET.

The Survey and Subdivisions of the Tract have been made to conform with those of the South San Francisco Homestead Association, the Haley and O'Neill and Hudson Tracts, as will as all others south of the Potrero, thereby preserving a uniformity and system of streets at once desirable and convenient.

The opportunity here presented to Capitalists, Homestead Associations and others to obtain valuable Property in large tracts at Moderate Prices has never been equaled in this city, nor can it be repeated, as there is not a piece of property within the limits of the city having the same advantages of location, deep water frontage and accessibility.

The Potrero and Bay View Railroad will be completed on or before the First of July, and Horse Cars running to the property.

We are authorized by the owners to state that the property will be offered without limit or reserve and sold to the highest bidder.

TERMS:

1-3 Cash, 1-3 in One Year, 1-3 in Two Years.

Deferred Payments to bear interest at 9 per cent. per annum, and be secured by mortgage on the property.

Lithographed Maps of the property now ready for distribution at our office, and at the office of H. F. Williams & Co., 638 Clay street.

TITLE U. S. PATENT.

MAURICE DORE & CO., Auctioneers

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S STEAMSHIPS FOR NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MAY.

May 10th—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. J. T. Watkins, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
May 18th—MONTANA, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Harris.
May 30th—SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

JAMES H. BLETHEN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

WEDNESDAY, - - MAY 15th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship SANTIAGO, 2,500 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞The AMERICA will sail June 5th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

AUCTIONEERS.

OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.,

H. A. COBB, Auctioneer.

TUESDAY.

TUESDAY.....MAY 14th, 1867.

AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,

At Salesroom, No. 327 Montgomery Street,

CREDIT SALE OF

Alameda Property,

500 VILLA LOTS

On the Encinal, near Alameda Station,

ON THE RAILROAD, AND DIRECTLY FRONTING THE

ALAMEDA PARK HOTEL,

SIZE OF LOTS—Fifty by One Hundred and Fifty Feet.

TITLE PERFECT.

TERMS:

Extremely liberal—will be announced in a few days.

We present this splendid property to the public with every confidence that for country residence purposes, its equal cannot be found in the neighborhood of San Francisco.

Some of its great and peculiar advantages are, unequalled productiveness of soil for all manner of shrubbery and garden purposes; its grand old oak trees, unsurpassed in the State; its climate, the best in California, and its accessibility to business, the passage to and from the city being made at almost every hour of the day, by steam ferry and railroad, in 30 minutes.

The blocks are properly staked on the corners, and names of streets painted thereon, so that persons will have no difficulty in finding any locality.

☞Further particulars in a few days.

MAURICE DORE & CO., Auctioneers.

D. GHERARDELLIS & CO.'S Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.

CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Gherardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

San Francisco Mill.

HOBBS, GILMORE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

BOXES,

Market Street, between Beale and Main,

SAN FRANCISCO.

For Sale, Mahogany, Spanish Cedar, and other Fancy Woods.

I. H. SMALL, Machine Shop,

BUILDER OF

Steam Engines, Saw Mills, Mining Machinery,

Also, I. H. Small's Patent Boot Screwing Machine.

Gears of all kinds Cut at Short Notice,

And at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing of all kinds done with Promptness and Dispatch.

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WINE SALOON.

UNION SALOON.—C. H. Cordes is the proprietor of the Union Saloon, Market street, a few doors south of Fremont, where is to be found the choicest wines and liquors. Mr. Cordes prides himself on his Kentucky Whisky, which is very old and oily. The "Davis" brand whisky drinkers should by all means call and test this whisky. Hot lunch is set on the table from 10 till 2.

California Wines.

Vintage 1862.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS FOR SALE SOME very choice Wines, of the above named vintage. That connoisseurs, all interested in the development of this magnificent resource of our State, and the public generally, may be convinced that California is able to produce as good Wine (when properly treated and of sufficient age) as other parts of the Wine producing regions of the globe, attention is respectfully called to these Wines, by

A. S. LOWNDES, Wine Merchant,
311 Battery Street, S. F.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of DANIEL B. BARNES, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Stephen Smith, Administrator of the Estate of Daniel B. Barnes, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the third day of June, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of said deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said third day of June A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. O. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated May 3d, A. D. 1867. my4-5t5

There cometh glad tidings of joy to all,
To young and old, to great and to small;
The beauty which was once so precious and rare,
Is free for all, and all may be fair.

By the use of

CHASTELLAR'S

WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL,

FOR IMPROVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.

The most valuable and perfect preparation in use, for giving the skin a beautiful pearl-like tint, that is only found in youth. It quickly removes Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Blotches, Moth Patches, Sallowness, Eruptions, and all impurities of the skin, kindly healing the same, leaving the skin white and clear as alabaster. Its use cannot be detected by the closest scrutiny, and being a vegetable preparation is perfectly harmless. It is the only article of the kind used by the French, and is considered by the Parisian as indispensable to a perfect toilet. Upwards of 30,000 bottles were sold during the past year, a sufficient guarantee of its efficacy. Price only 75 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of order, by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Excelsior! Excelsior!!

CHASTELLAR'S

HAIR EXERMINATOR, FOR REMOVING SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

TO THE LADIES ESPECIALLY, THIS INVALUABLE depilatory recommends itself as being an almost indispensable article to female beauty, is easily applied, does not burn or injure the skin, but acts directly on the roots. It is warranted to remove superfluous hair from low foreheads, or from any part of the body, completely, totally and radically extirpating the same, leaving the skin soft, smooth and natural. This is the only article used by the French, and is the only real effectual depilatory in existence. Price 75 cents per package, sent post-paid, to any address, on receipt of an order by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Whiskers and Mustaches!

FORCED TO GROW UPON THE SMOOTHEST FACE face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

Beauty!

Auburn, Golden, Flaxen and Silken Curls,

PRODUCED BY THE USE OF PROF. DE BREUX FRISER LE CHEVEUX.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets, or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London, with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No. 25.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 11, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Some Account of the Russian Territory, by John Clerk; Gastronomical Reflections, by Prentice; Buzzards and Whitewashers; Devine's Bust of Broderick; A Plucky Manager. LION'S MOUTH: The Rural Schoolmaster; Dog Murder; A Muscular Professor; Chignons; Highly Important from Japan; Literary Gleanings and Gossip; Dramatic Affairs; Italian Opera, etc. SELECTED: Blobbs of Wadham; "Black Sheep." Russian Scandal; The Great Markets of Paris; Sketches, Paragraphs, Poety, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

[For the Californian.]

SUFFICIENT.

BY W. A. KENDALL.

I was talking with my sposa,
Who is simple and concise, about "thus and why;"
With hyperbole I sought to "pose" her;
'Tis my style; which I fear she does descry,
In a quiet way and dry,
Jndging hy her pithy chat,
And the look within her eye,
When she answers "Verbum sat."

Without notice long I bore it—
Thinking it by far the most sagacious plun
To pass over and ignore it
With that "lofty lordliness becoming Man"—
But her tongne so constant ran
To this bit of curtailed Latin,
Once, I own, I strove to ban
The verb that Verbum sat. in.

With oracular tone and manner,
I expostuluted thus: "It is customary, dear,
For pundits 'neath every banner,
To select words ponderous and very queer,
To express a plain idea:"
What did she reply to that?
Well, with just the slightest sneer,
She responded: "Verbum sat."

I, of conrse, got quite indignant,
And I rose erect and frowning stood before her,
Commencing: "Madam!"—(most malignant,)
"Thus to ridicule a lingual soarer"—
Here went her little foot down spat!
With vim that proved a floorer,
She re-echoed: "Verbum sat!"
And down upset I sat.

A Muscular Professor.

A discussion took place at the State Teachers' Institute on the subject of self-reporting by scholars. Mr. McChesney asked whether trusting children to give an account of their conduct during the day did not lead to the encouragement of habits of deceit. On this Professor Knowlton leaped with the agility and grace of a professional acrobat on the platform, and thus delivered himself.

"He was waiting for the discnssion to be opened in this manner. Are hoys to he kept away from the gymnasium, and the muscles retarded in development; are they to be prevented from approaching the water before learning to swim, or are they to use only dumb-bells stnffed with straw or feathers, or mimic bludgeons made of gauze and hair? If the latter were to be the case, then muscular strength would not exist. He believed pupils could resist evil as well as adults, and that the temptations of the school-room were as strong for the children as the seductions of the world were to those long in it. His experience was there was as much dependence to he placed on children as on those who pretended to great virtue."

That gymnasium talk is very pretty. The allusions to stuffed clubs etc., must have immense weight in proving that children can he trusted to speak the truth when it appears decidedly contrary to their interests to do so. Professor Knowlton would have created a greater effect on the minds of his hearers had he said, "Give 'em a chance to lie, boys and girls too, and if you catch 'em in lying spank 'em, or take 'em down to the station house and shut 'em up in the dark cell." Either the Alta's report of the Professor's speech must he a very faulty one, or he must have talked great rubbish. He, we suppose, conscious of his moral as muscular strength prays, "Lead us into temptation." He said: "He would feel mean to watch his girls, and therefore allowed them to report themselves." Of course "his girls" get spanked, when in spite of his not watching them he finds they have reported falsely. Professor Knowlton is evidently very radical in his notions with regard to both the muscular and moral training of children

Lines on the Sewer now being Constructed in Merchant Street.

O, unconth trench,
By the hard hands of brawny laborers dug,
And dug with oft profane remark
From the contractor's lips,
What relics from thy depths exhumed!
Stones, brick-hats, sticks and ancient stove-pipes,
Old tin and earthenware, old boots and shoes,
And shreds of clothing which did once adorn
Some man.
Thou talk'st of days gone by,
When times were flusher than we now can boast.
Thy lower strata speaks of '49,
When boats did land smack on Montgomery street.
That boot some pioneer once wore,
And cursed the corns it pressed,
As from the boat he jumped on shore.
Above is seen a board, there dropped in '52,
When men were shot and robbed, and throats were cut, and bodies nightly pitched into our noble bay.
Could each particular grain of dirt hut speak,
What volumes would be spoke,
"But this eternal blazon must not be to ears of flesh and blood."
Sleep on fair sewer, and farewell.

The Rural Schoolmaster.

We dropped in last Monday to witness the opening exercises of the State Teachers' Institute. We heard the teachers from the provinces welcomed to San Francisco. In honor of their arrival the wind got up and blew about just to show the rural schoolmaster how it occupies itself during the summer months, slinging dust and soiling linen. Lincoln Hall was thronged with dispensers of knowledge from Butte to Los Angeles. The rural schoolmaster evidently felt the difference between his own modest edifice of learning and the grandeur of the building wherein he was coralled to hear wisdom in mighty volumes fall from the lips of his Metropolitan brother. He teaches in no palatial edifice with broad stair cases and spacious halls. We behold the country school house on a little eminence devoid of trees. Oft is it accessible to cows. Around it the ground is trodden hard and bare. Scarred are the walls and desks, the traces of industrious knife-blades in the hands of pupils idle to learn, but persevering to whittle. He teaches in no Metropolitan climate. During the summer months he labors in an atmosphere ranging from 85° to 110°. Then do the herd of little children in his charge sweat and swelter, undergoing a process of fermentation which induces all manner of mischief. Pail after pail of water is brought into the country school house during the heated term and poured into the interior of simmering infants who ask to "get a drink" because they can think of nothing else to do, and whose capacity for the aqueous fluid drives the rural teacher nearly to distraction. The rural schoolmaster is at one moment engaged in launching some mental barque on the sea of the a, b, abs and the next vainly endeavoring to extricate a miserable and perspiring boy from the slough of vulgar fractions. Great are his trials. Parents imagine he can erect an edifice of mind as easily as they dig wells or build hen coops. They sometimes send a hard handed, rough boy, skilled in breaking colts and driving cattle, to school with one book. It may he an old book brought across the plains, one used in their school-boy days thirty years ago, with every third leaf torn out. From this volume this rural teacher is expected to imbue the rural scholar formerly of Texas or Pike County, with all the learning of modern times, the sophistry of the Grecian philosophers, the eloquence of the Roman orators, and the wisdom of the Egyptians. No wonder he should once a year visit San Francisco to draw from the inexhaustible founts of a Pelton, a Denman, or a Knowlton, fresh lessons in discipline and fresh supplies of wisdom and knowledge. Let him be taken then, kindly, and shown the ways of pleasantness and peace. Show him around. Show him the Mint and station house. Show him the harbor defenses, the resident generals and the menagarie at North Beach. Show him our men distinguished in law, in divinty, in poetry, in journalism, in politics, in rowdyism, in pugilism. Let his mind he refreshed, that he may return with renewed vigor to the arduous work of training aright the rural mind.

Chignons.

Since the London Lancet asserted that the dead hair which is worn in unsightly masses on ladies heads was infested by insects, many shameless writers have contradicted the statement. The Lancet now says that many chignons contain the seeds of ringworm, and also says that much of the hair used is "church-yard hair" pulled from the scalps of corpses. We hope that the ladies will in time be frightened into discarding this very ungraceful style of "ornament." In addition to gregarines, pediculi and the seeds of ringworm filling their heads, they ought to he alarmed at the idea that scalped ghosts may haunt them and demand the restoration of their stolen locks. Let them consider that in consequence of encouraging this fashion, they may, perhaps, be scalped after death, and their spirits be condemned to walk the earth bald headed, searching for their hair, which they may finally discover on the head of some horribly low person.

Dog Murder.

Good dogs are becoming very scarce in San Francisco. Curs are as plentiful as ever. Anxious to see the ravenous, savage animals which were captured and slaughtered at the expense of the city, we paid a visit to the Pound one day this week. Inquiring of the dog jailer i he bad among his captives a lame bull dog with a black spot over his right eye, we were invited to ascertain by personal inspection of the prison, if our dog (the coinage of our brain) were there. A wooden shutter was pushed back and we saw a small room containing some fifteen or sixteen dogs. Intelligent Scotch terriers, pet poodles, fine greyhounds, valuable setters and other varieties of the dog race were there; but there was not one dog that would bite, save under the most severe provocation. The instant the shutter was withdrawn, all the dogs, with one exception, rushed to the window and attempting to lick our hand, besought us in the most heart-rending tones to ransome them. The exception was a beautiful little King Charles spaniel, who sat still and appealed to us only with his eloquent eyes, while tears trickled slowly down his innocent nose. The scene was heart-breaking. All those dogs were to be murdered that morning. They had been condemned without trial, and were to die. Among that assemblage were the most attentive and careful of nurses, to whose charge children might safely he committed for hours, the most faithful friends whose affection no slights could estrange, and servants whom neither scanty fare nor ill-treatment discouraged. In civilized communities the "dog days" are, out of respect to old custom, observed by muzzling dogs for a few weeks. This is all right, there is no reason why the "dog days" should not be observed equally with St. Valentine's Day, May Day and the First of April. It is, however, rather absurd for the municipal government of a city in which there has never been a case of hydrophobia to pass an ordiance providing for the indiscriminate slaughter of all dogs found in the streets without muzzles. It is true that one or two naughty children have in the course of the last ten years been hitten hy dogs who doubtless knew who they were biting, and several weak-minded men have been frightened, but nevertheless the present slaughter of dogs is disgrace to the city and State. The man who does not like dumb animals is invariably a bad man, and the destruction of thousands of family pets which has taken place must grieve every humane and thoughtful person.

Highly Important from Japan.

The Alta of Thursday publishes part of a letter from a gentleman in Yokohoma. We should like to know the gentleman's name; he i evidently somehody of consequcnce. The Alta only vouchsafes the information that his name commences with a P. He wants an American newspaper in Yokohoma. He misses his morning paper. He says:

"I beg yon to send some good fellow over here to establish an American newspaper. I don't know enough about the expenses of a paper to be sure that it would pay, but the expenses of manual labor would be light, and I donbt not that every American, and probably most foreigners, in Shanghai and Hongkong would subscribe for it. I would he glad to give an American newspaper all the assistance in my power, if published in the American style and left at my door early in the morning, as I miss my morning paper more than anything."

P. will subscribe to an American paper if "left at his door early in the morning." This should be attended to. We trust that a company will be formed immediately with a good fellow at the head for the purpose of starting an American paper for P in Yokohoma. By all means let P's copy be left at his door early in the morning. With regard to the probability of the paper's paying, we assure P its of no consequence. There are hundreds of men in San Francisco ready to start papers without seeing the slightest prospect of their paying. If P would prefer a ready made newspaper we could spare him the Times, or the Flag, or the Dispatch, for the matter of that we could spare all our daily papers except the Bulletin and Alta. P wants something else. He says:

"Please tell your Postmaster that his Department should arrange for a mail from here to Europe, and also for sending mails from here to Shanghai by the Costa Rica, when she gets here."

Certainly. The Postmaster has been told what P wants, and he said that he was only sorry P didn't mention it before. Is there anything else that can be done to make this gentleman of consequence comfortable in Yokohoma?

King Alcohol's Army.

We have in San Francisco an association of total abstainers from intoxicating drink called the Temperance Legion. The members are captains, majors, lieutenant-generals, and ape the style of military men in the published orders. It appears from late telegraphic dispatches, that such a temperance army in New York if there was any fight in its members, might probably be called into service. The police have discovered an organized conspiracy of the rum-sellers to cause a riot, resist the excise law and whip the police. What a fine chance a conspiracy among the saloon keepers of this city would afford the bold Temperance Legion to distinguish itself. Then its seal which represents a party of men breaking open barrels, might represent the actual manner in which they "made war on King Alcohol."

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XV.—AT THE TIDAL TRAIN.

"THERE'S a job for you to-day, Jim," said the irreproachable Harris to Mr. James Swain, when he presented himself at half-past eight at Routh's house, according to his frequent custom.

"I didn't come after no jobs this mornin'," said Jim; "I come to see the missis."

"Ah, but you can't see her, she ain't up, and the job is particular wanted to be done."

Jim looked moody and discontented, but cheered up when Harris represented that he might see Mrs. Routh on his return. The "job" was the delivery of Routh's clothes and letters, as directed, at his chambers in Tokenhouse-yard. The boy was troubled in his mind, irresolute. George Dallas' sudden illness, the photograph he had seen, these things added to the perplexity he was in already. Perhaps he had better speak to Mrs. Routh first; he did not know; at all events, he might tell her what had occurred yesterday, without mentioning the portrait, and see what effect it had upon her. He had thought about it all, until, between his imperfect knowledge of facts, his untaught intelligence, and his genuine but puzzled good-will, he was quite bewildered. He had brought with him that morning, with a vague notion that it might perhaps be advisable to show it to Mrs. Routh, but a settled resolution to show it to Mr. Dallas, the object which he kept carefully secreted in the hole in the wall at home, and as he trudged away Citywards, carrying a small leather bag containing the required clothes and letters, he turned it over and over in his grimy pocket and grew more and more thoughtful and depressed.

Arrived at Tokenhouse-yard, the clerk took the bag from him, and suggested that he had better wait, in case Mr. Routh should require his further services. So Jim waited, and presently Routh came out into the passage. Jim's private opinion of Stewart Routh's character and disposition has been already stated; of his personal appearance he entertained an equally low one, and much opposed to the general sentiment. "An ill-looking, down-looking dog, I call him," Jim had said to himself more than once; "more like the Pirate of the Persian Gulf, or the Bandit of Bokarer, I think, than anybody as I knows out of his pictures."

More ill-looking, more down-looking than ever Jim Swain thought Stewart Routh when he spoke to him that morning. His face was colorless, his eyes bloodshot, his glance troubled and wandering, his voice harsh and uneven. He gave Jim a brief order to meet him at the London-bridge railway station the same evening, at a quarter to six. "I shall have a message for you," said Routh. "Be punctual, remember." And then he turned away abruptly and went into his room, shutting the door roughly.

"He ain't in the best of humors, even of his own, and they're none on 'em good," thought Jim, as he turned out of Tokenhouse-yard and took his way westward again, keeping his hand permanently in his pocket this time. A fresh disappointment awaited him at Routh's house. Mrs. Routh had gone out immediately after she had breakfasted. Did she know he wanted to see her? Jim asked. Harris was rather tickled by the question.

"I say," he remarked, "you're getting on, Jim; you'll be as impident as a cock sparrow presently. I didn't happen to tell her; but, if I 'ad, do you think she'd a stayed in to give you the chance?"

"Yes, I do; wot's more, I'm sure she would," said Jim, and walked moodily away, leaving Mr. Harris in a fine attitude of surprise upon the threshold. When that functionary finally left off looking after the boy, and shut the door, he did so to the accompaniment of a prolonged whistle.

It was only ten o'clock, and Jim had been told to go to Mr. Dallas' at eleven. The interval troubled him; he could not settle his mind to the pursuit of odd jobs. He did not mind "hanging about;" he would hang about Piccadilly till the time came. But when Jim reached the house in which Mr. Felton and Mr. Dallas lodged, he was surprised to find it an object of lively curiosity to a number of persons who were crowding the pavement, notwithstanding the active interference of a policeman, endeavoring to clear a passage for two ladies whose carriage was before the door, and one of whom was evidently in the deepest distress. Jim plunged at once into the heart of the concourse, and asked a number of eager questions, to which he received simultaneous but contradictory replies.

"He's dead!" "No he isn't." "He's his brother, I tell you; I heard the cook a-tellin' the milk-boy." "He ain't his brother; the old 'un's his uncle; and he's been and murdered his cousin. Such were a few of the sentences Jim caught as his curiosity and anxiety rose to frenzy.

"Wot is it? wot is it? Do tell me. Is anything wrong with Mr. Dallas?" he asked imploringly of the servant who had opened the door to the two ladies (who had at last succeeded in entering the house), and was just about to shut it in the faces of a few scores of anxious inquirers endeavoring to pierce the depths of the hall, and to see through the dining-room doors. "Don't you know me? I was here yesterday. I have been here before. I was to see Mr. Dallas at eleven. Can't I see him? Is he worse?"

The woman did know the boy, and she at once admitted him.

"Come in," she said; "I'll tell you inside. It's a deal worse than his health that's the matter." So Jim vanished into the house, a distinction which, being unattainable by themselves, was regarded with much indignation by the crowd. Temporarily dispersed by the active policeman, they gathered again, hoping the boy would come out, when they might pounce upon and extract information from him. But they waited in vain; the boy did not come out. The carriage still remained at the door, and in about an hour a gentleman of grave and busy aspect issued from the maddeningly mysterious mansion, stepped into the vehicle, and was driven rapidly away. The crowd was not in luck; no one heard the order given to the coachman. Then such silence and desolation as can ever fall on Piccadilly fell upon the scene, and the gay-looking, brightly-decorated house obstinately hid its secret.

The woman who recognized Jim told him the story of the events which had occurred, in the hall, speaking in a hurried whisper and with much genuine womanly compassion. Jim heard her with a beating heart and shaking limbs. As the boy leaned against the wall, regardless of the damaging properties of his tousled head resting on the spotless paint, he wondered if this was like fainting, and whether he should be able to keep from "going off" like Mr. Dallas.

"We're strangers to Mr. Felton, of course," said the woman; "and it's natural everybody as can should like to keep their troubles to themselves, for it don't do no good tellin' of em, and people don't think no more of you; but there's things as can and things as can't be hid, and them as can't has been a takin' place here."

"Yes," said Jim, faintly; for the words he had heard in the crowd were ringing in his ears; "yes, yes; but tell me—"

"I'll tell you, as plain as I can speak it out. Mr. Felton had some letters yesterday—letters as come from America—and there were a carte of his son in 'em; he hasn't seen nor yet heard of him for ever so long; and when Mr. Dallas see the carte he knew as the man was the same as was murdered, and never found out, in the spring."

"Well?" said Jim. "Yes? Go on." The faint feeling was subsiding; he was begining to understand.

"It were an awful shock for Mr. Dallas to find out as his cousin had been murdered, and to have to break it to the father; and no wonder he fainted over it. Nobody knows how he did it, but there must have been a dreadful scene; for I shouldn't ha' known Mr. Felton from the dead when I went to ask, through their not answering James' knock, whether they were goin' to have any dinner. He was sittin' in his chair, white and quiet; and Mr. Dallas—he as had been took so bad himself in the beginin'—he was kneeling on the ground beside him, and I think his arm was round his neck; but I couldn't see his face, for he only put out his hand, and says he, 'No, thank you, Mary; go away for a little, please.' I waited in the passage, but I never heard a word pass between them; and we didn't know whatever could be the matter, for we only knew about the letters after Mr. Dallas had been took up."

"Mr. Dallas took up? They said that outside, but I thought it must be their larks. Wotever do you mean? Go on—go on; tell me—quick!"

"It's quite true; no larks at all. It might be about eight or nine, and we was all sittin' down stairs, a talkin' about the parlors, and a very quick ring comes to the 'all door. James opens it, and in comes two men, very short and business-like, which they must see Mr. Dallas, and can't take no denial. So James goes to the door to ask if Mr. Dallas will see them, but they're too quick for James, and walk in; and in two minutes there's a great to do and explanation, and Mr. Dallas is took up."

"But wot for?—wot had he done?" asked Jim.

"Murdered his cousin, don't I tell you!" said the woman, a little snappishly. "Ain't I a-tellin' of you as plain as I can speak. He 'd been and murdered this other gentleman wot nobody knew, in the spring, and then he sent the police a lookin' after his cousin, and just tells them enough to make them know as the other gentlemen was him, which they 'd never had a notion of before, so they come and took him on suspicion of the murder, and Mr. Felton went away with him. We was all there when they put the handcuffs on him, and his uncle he stopped him in the 'all, as they were goin' to the cab, and says he, 'George, my boy, I do this, that no one may think I'm deceived,' and he put his hands on his shoulders and kisses him, as if he was a woman, before us all."

Jim listened, pale and breathless, but quite silent.

"Mr. Felton were out pretty near all night; and when he come 'ome, the gentleman as is here now were with him. He hasn't been to bed at all, and I haven't seen him, but just when I let the lady in, which she's a sweet lookin' creature, and has been cryin' dreadful."

"Let me see Mr. Felton," said Jim, catching the woman by her dress, and speaking with the utmost eagerness and passion, "let me see him. I came to see Mr. Dallas about business. Let me see Mr. Felton."

"You came! why what have you got to do with it?" said the woman; her curiosity vehemently aroused.

"I will tell you all about it," said Jim, adroitly; "you shall hear it all afterwards—a curious story as any one ever had to tell. Mr. Dallas never did it—not he, I know better than that. I can tell Mr. Felton a great deal."

"I must ask if he will see you," said the woman; "if he won't, perhaps the lawyer—"

"No, no, it must be Mr. Felton himself. Let me into the room."

She offered no resistance, and in another minute Jim was in the presence of a group composed of Mr. Felton, a grave gentleman, who looked like a lawyer, a beautiful girl, who was Clare Carruthers, and a plain, clever-looking young woman, who was Clare's cousin, Mrs. Stanhope. The lawyer and Mr. Stanhope were seated by a table, in close conversation, which they carried on in lowered tones. Clare and Mr. Felton stood upon the hearth-rug, the girl's golden head was resting upon her companion's shoulder, and she was crying silently, but unrestrained.

"Is he very, very ill?" she had said, a little before Jim entered the room.

"Not seriously so, my dear, and indeed nothing could be more fortunate than that his strength failed him so completely. It gives us time, and I need it, I am so bewildered even yet."

"Did Mr. Lowther say—say that he was not—not brought before the magistrates, not brought into that dreadful place, to-day?" said Clare, her voice hardly audible for her sobs.

"Yes, my dear. Think a little; I could not be here if he had not so much respite. Clare, I am a chief witness; I must be there, you know, to tell them about—about my son ———." He paused, and closed his eyes for a few minutes.

"The case was called pro forma this morning, but Mr. Lowther's partner, his brother, easily procured a delay. George was too ill to appear, but he sent me word that there was nothing seriously wrong."

"Can no one see him?" asked Clare, imploringly. "O, Mr. Felton, can no one go to him? Can no one give him any comfort—help him to bear it? Are they so cruel as that, are they so cruel?"

"Hush, dear, it is not cruel; it is right. No one can see him for the present but Mr. Lowther—Mr. James Lowther, who is with him now, I dare say, who will be here this afternoon."

"How can you bear it? how are you ever to bear it?" she said.

"My dear, I must bear it; and I have time before me in which to suffer; this is the time for action. You must help me, Clare, my dear, brave girl. I sent to you for this; I sent for you, at his desire, my child. His last words were, 'My mother, my mother, she is coming home to-morrow.' I told him to be satisfied, she should be kept from the knowledge of all this." He shuddered from head to foot. "Clare, are you strong enough to redeem my promise? Can you hide all that has happened from her? Can you be with her, watching her, keeping a calm face before her? My dear, have you strength for this?"

She lifted her golden head, and looked at him with her innocent fearless eyes.

"I have strength to do anything that he—that George desires, and you think is right."

"Then that is your share of our dreadful task, my dear. God knows it is no light or easy share."

Clare's tears streamed forth again. She nestled closer to him, and whispered—

"Is there no—no hope?"

"None," he replied. "If it had been possible for George to be mistaken, I have had the sight of my own eyes. Clare, they brought me my son's coat! Ay, like Jacob, they brought me my son's coat. My own last gift to him, Clare." His eyes were dry and bright, but their sockets had deepened since the day before, and his voice had the febrile accent of intense grief and passion restrained by a powerful will.

"What George must have suffered!" she said, still in a broken whisper, her tear-stained face upon his breast.

"Ah, yes, it is all dim to me still. Mr. Lowther and I have been searching out the truth all night, but we are still in confusion. Tatlow is coming presently, and you must go away, my dear, you must go home. You have your share to do, and need strength to do it. You shall know all I learn from hour to hour. Mrs. Stanhope, will you—who is this? What brings you here, boy?"

"Sir," stammered Jim, though he had the wizened mannish look peculiar to his tribe, was only a boy, and was desperately frightened—"sir, I came to tell you that I know the man as didn't do it, and I know the man as did."

Mr. Felton loosed his hold of Clare, and came forward. Mr. Lowther rose hurriedly from his seat; he did not share the blank, incredulous surprise of Mr. Felton. The two ladies drew near each other.

"Who are you?" asked Mr. Lowther.

Jim told him.

"What are you come for? What —?" began Mr. Felton; but Mr. Lowther made a sign to him to be silent, and addressing Jim in a quiet, friendly voice, took him by the arm and led him to a chair.

"Sit down there, my boy," he said, "and don't be afraid. You must have come here of your own free will, and we do not doubt you have come for a good purpose. You have something important to tell Mr. Felton. You know Mr. Dallas, I think, and I gather from what you said just now that you know what he is accused of." Jim assented by a downcast nod. "There, tell us all about it. Take your time, and don't get frightened." So saying, and giving the boy a reassuring pat on the shoulder, the lawyer sat down on a chair opposite to Jim, and spread his hands upon his knees in an attitude of serious, but not stern, attention. The two woman looked on in silent suspense, and Mr. Felton, guided by a glance from Mr. Lowther, moved a little to the back of the chair on which Jim was seated.

"Come," said Mr. Lowther, giving him another pat, "we are all anxious to hear what you have got to say. Speak up, my boy."

"Sir," began Jim, "I should like to ask you something first. It is true, as the gentleman as was murdered was Mr. Dallas' own cousin?"

"Only too true. He was Mr. Felton's son," and the lawyer eyed the unhappy father, as if measuring the strength he could command to bear this new trial. Mr. Felton came to Jim's side, and touched him kindly on the arm.

"Don't be afraid to speak before me," he said. "You may; and don't keep us waiting any longer, my good boy."

(To be Continued.)

Proper Rules for Young Ladies.—A Boston paper, no doubt versed in the rules of society at the "Hub," suggests the following memoranda as a guide to young ladies in their conduct:

Have a good piano or none. Be sure to have a "dreadful cold" when asked to "favor the company." Cry at a wedding, but don't faint. Always scream at a spider. Never leave your curl paper in the drawing room. Drop your handkerchief when you are going to faint. Mind you are "engaged" if you don't like your partner. Adjure ringlets on a wet day. Never faint unless it is convenient to fall into the arms of the young gentleman you love. Remember, its vulgar in the extreme to know what your mother is going to have for dinner. When you go a-shopping, be sure to take your ma along to carry the bundles.

The fifth twenty-inch gun ever cast in this country was hoisted out of the pit, where it was cast some three weeks ago, at Fort Pitt foundry last week. Some idea of the amount of labor required to finish these monster guns may be formed from the fact that it takes several men three months to finish one of them. The ball used is solid and weighs over half a ton, requiring one hundred pounds of powder a charge. A navy gun of this calibre was tried a few days ago, at the providing ground near Wall's Station. The immeuse ball penetrated into the bank about forty feet, and produced quite a jar.—Pittsburgh Republic.

The Last French Fashion.—The Globe's Paris correspondent writes as follows: "Now that crinoline is gone and crines ficti menaced, the great geniuses who in this part of the world invent female adornments have struck out something new. It is to deck garments with little pictures. In a shop window this morning, I observed a par dessus of gorgeous red, bearing the picture of a silly young man; on a third, of a horse; on a fourth, of a black geutleman with tails and horns; on others, ships, landscapes, coats of arms and so on."

An euthusiastic Millerite at Providence, R. I., who fancied that the millenium was near at hand, recently arrayed himself in a white garment, remarkable only for its scautiness, and with a red candle and white flag stationed himself in the window of his hotel, exhorting the passers-by, and waiting for his translation. He was twice interrupted by the police, and finally taken to the insane asylum.

Next September it will be twenty-seven years since Greenwood Cemetery was opened to the public as a burial place for the dead. Since that time the number of interments had reached, up to March 9th, the immense figure of one hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and twenty-eight, or an average of twenty per day during the whole of these long years.

Fred Douglas and John Brown, Jr., are preparing a biography of "old John Brown."

"RUSSIAN SCANDAL."

THE title of this paper implies that we have a budget of news from the court of St. Petersburgh. It suggests Siberia. The well-known Duke—is already en route, and the lovely Princess—is also consigned to those inhospitable regions. Or else it has a smack of the knout about it, as if we were going to tell the story of titled ladies who were "sent for" to inexorable bureaux, and who, standing there on a movable board like the coal-cellar plates of our streets, suddenly decended "a certain distance," and underwent a severe private swishing in the room below; a punishment of extreme delicacy, as the executioners would be unable to identify the half-bodies lowered for correction. Nothing of the kind. This paper is going to be a dull moral essay, and the taking title is merely put there ad captandum; just as one of the London tea companies puts forth a startling advertisement, "What are the wild waves saying," and when we greedily look for the answer to that extremely difficult question, which even Florence Dombey, in the song, answers very unsatisfactorily, we find that all that has to be said is that John Chinaman, A 1 for thirteen years, has arrived with a few million chests of the spring pickings on board, and that the Wiry Family Congou is three half pence a pound cheaper to direct consumers.

The few words we have to say are about the morality of anecdote-telling, and that we may not sink quite so low as a tea company, we will first explain that there is a thread of connection between our advertisement and our discourse. "Russian Scandal" is the name of a winter-evening game, combining, as children's books say, "instruction with amusement." The instructive part of it is the convincing test it affords of this morality to which we have alluded. The game does not want clever people to play at it, for attempts at ingenuity spoil the solid result. It is played as follows: Somebody writes down on paper a very short account of something that has, or is supposed to have taken place. The paper is folded up and put aside. The writer then leaves the room, taking with him one of the party. When the scribe is a young gentleman, it frequently happens that the one selected to go out, is a young lady; but this has nothing to do with the "Russian Scandal." That we may not seem either to approve or to discourage this tendency, we shall call the writer A, and the person who left the room with him, B. A tells B, to the best of his belief, the story just as he wrote it down, then he comes in again, leaviug B outside. Some one else, called C, then goes out, and B gives her (or his) version of the story to C, leaving C behind. D then hears C's version, and in like manner passes it on to E, till, perhaps, a dozen or more have been alternately auditors and informants. The last recipient comes back and once more writes down the story after it has percolated through these various strata of confusion, forgetfulness, imagination, flurry, stupidity, and other every-day virtues. Then the original document is opened, and the two papers read alond to a breathless audience, as identical accounts of the same occurrence.

It is not difficult to imagine the result. Not only is the story distorted, bnt is frequently thrown altogether into a different shape, the relation between the characters is altogether altered, the real original point is often lost, and a new point and center for the story is introduced. Now the real interest in the analysis of this is, that it represents, as far as such a conscious effort can represent it, the natural changes which a plain story can undergo in the mere process of transmission. No personal feelings come in to color it, no malice, no favoritism. Everybody is trying his best to recollect the circumstances, and hand them on ungarbled. More than this, there is hardly time for forgetfulness; scarcely a minute elapses between the hearing and the telling of a plain narrative, so that there seems to be a combination of peculiarly favorable circumstances for reproducing the whole in its intrgrity. Yet after all these advantages the last desceudant of our original story generally bears but a very faint family resemblance to its remote ancestor. Not the least interesting point in the examination is they way in which the point of the story shifts. We know that there are many persons who never see the real point of anything they are told, and our "Russian Scandal" brings out that truth very clearly. Some little by-fact, which is wholly unessential to the action, is snapped up by them as if it were the leading circumstance. In their version this trivial incident assumes undue importance and is overstated, and in this condition it is transferred to the next hearer, and probably becomes at once registered in that shape. The result of this is, that, as no short story can have two distinct points, the original one dwindles and fades in exact proportion as the other is forced into the foreground. And thus the metamorphose becomes complete. Here we have a real practical illustration of the value of hearsay, even when a strict morality of conscientiousness guides the progress of the story—a morality all the more strict because there are no particular motives for transgressing it. It seems to be a flat denial of the trustworthiness of oral tradition, unless checked and tested in various ways. About the generality of stories bandied from one to the other by interested parties, who interpret the plainest facts by a code of their own and reproduce them in a corresponding form, of all that we have nothing to say here. It belongs to quite a different subject.

But upon the morality of anecdote-telling, as a qnestion of casuistry, we may make one or two suggestions. Nothing is more delicious than to know the groundwork of a story, and to watch the license which different people allow themselves in narrating it. The easy morality of narration, first of all, is supposed to give permission to dramatize. An isolated bon-mot, a laughable circumstance in which the actors are unknown and nameless, is likely either to fall flat, or to be discredited. To give a false look of truth, the repartee is promptly fathered upon some well-known personage not wholly incongruous, and the comic circumstance is connected with familiar scenes. It is wonderful how this enhances the reality doing of the story. Some persons have a general and loose way of this, and use some well-known character, as, for example, the Duke of Wellington, if they want to go a generation back, or Mr. Disraeli, if it is to be strictly modern. Others are content with family generalities—"I don't know if I ever told you what happened once to an uncle of mine." "This very same thing occurred to a very 'cute fellow I know up in the north of England. Vague, the uncle is; vague, the 'cute fellow; vagne, the north of England; and yet the story really seems much more natural by the use of these personal and geographical landmarks. It is better than the list of dull Greek stories in our grammar, all beginning with a "certain fool." There was nothing to identify the fool, and we did not care about his folly.

Easy morality has also the tendency to make anecdotes travel steadily out of the past into the present. Our interest in the present is infinitely more vivid, and the story-teller knows it, or let us say for his sake, that he feels it, and with unconscious poetry he acts upon it; just as the old classic writers wrote a present tense to make the action more sprightly where the grammer of the sentence seems to expect the past. At any rate we notice the time-honored stories boiled down again and again, like Æetes in the caldron, and turning up once more with all the freshness of immortal youth. Nowhere is this habit more amusingly visible than in University life. For most men four years makes a generation there, so that one who has resided any time in the precincts of Alma Mater becomes in this sense a very Nestor, whose boast was that he had lived through three generations of men. Old residents may hear every day the same stories in which they delighted in their Freshman term, reproduced with a totally mise-en-scéne. Famous mistakes and brilliant answers at the public examination of twenty years ago still pass from month to mouth as having only occurred yesterday, and the perpetrator is confidently pointed out among existing undergraduates. Old stock-stories of college tutors and vice-chancellors and proctors are served up with unceasing relish, and are assigned to some fresh personage as the original passes away. One great maxim then would seem to be—Identify your anecdote with known names and circumstances.

Another very favorite liberty which the story-teller commonly takes is gradually to work up to the first person singular. If you will narrate the events before Troy, it adds immeasurably to the interests to be able to say, "Quorum pars magna fui." And so we shall find very often that a story travels steadily in this direction. "A man told me that a friend of his once shot a sparrow with his bow and arrow.' "I once shot a sparrow with my bow and arrow," Here we have the two extremes; the original vague account, the entertaining fact corroborated by the teller's personal experiences. The intermediate stages may be innumerable; the "man" and his "friend" probably do not die at once, but peak and pine for want of notice till they soon fade out of the story altogether, and the first personal pronoun, the philosophic Ich, finding the frame of the story empty and garnished, enters in and dwells there. And not the least remarkable thing is that this process of negligent morality is often unconscious. From repetition of the story, the narrator becomes such a familiar friend of the persons and scenes that it describes, that he becomes assured at any rate of his own presence among them, and by and by, by an easy transition, he becomes the prime actor in the whole affair.

Now there are some persons in the world who treat such casiustry with horrible roughness, and weaknesses. They can't accept the anecdote as something surrounded by its own characteristic phenomena. They criticise it, they analyze it, nay, they actually challenge the narrator ou the coarse ground of its being the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. He has had all the trouble of living down the sternuess of fact; he has fully persuaded himself of the veracity of his new version, adapted to the comprehension of dinner-tables, and tipped with some sparkling allusion to affairs of the day; and is ho to be silenced by the mere pedantry of "that story is told in Jesse's 'George III.;" you'll find that it occurred to yourself. It is an unseemly interruption. If the morality of anecdote-telling is ever to be called in qustion, lot us have a professor to devote his attention to it as a special branch of Casuistry. We recommend it for a subject of lectures to Cambridge dons and undergruduates from Mr. Maurice's chair.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

ARTEMUS WARD.

WE attribute to William Winter, of the New York Weekly Review, a genial and feeling tribute to the memory of Artemus Ward that appeared in a recent number of that paper. The following is an interesting extract, illustrating in a pleasant style, some of the kindly characteristics of the deceased humorist:

"His quaintness of appearance and his merry manners won at once upon the regard of the young journalists into whose society he naturally drifted. One instance of how he drifted thither we can never forget. That was the period when certain young writers, most of whom have since died, were called 'Bohemians.' They met, at dinner, at one of the Broadway restaurants, where a table was especially reserved for them; and here, one evening, came Artemus Ward—a stranger to most of the persons assembled—and brought with him an acquaintance. Those who knew his gleeful manner will appreciate the humorous effect produced, when, addressing the acquaintance, as they sat down, he said, with cordial hospitality: 'Don't you be afraid. You're in good company. These are Bohemians here. Don't you know what Bohemians are? A Bohemian is an educated hoss-thief.' And so he rattled on, with a good-nature that nothing could dampen, and that made him welcome to everybody. The scope of his acquaintanceship rapidly widened, in after days, and, in every direction, as he became better known, interest deepened into affection. The story of his public life is well known. Its success was due to the same causes that made him so charming in private life. He was a true humorist, a man of the kindest heart, and he was always natural. Seeing him once you saw him always. He had no rostrum robes, no dresses for gala-days and state occasions. A kind-hearted jester, content to wear his cap and bells, an affectionate friend, a man who, if he ever took the trouble to think about the matter at all, held himself as one of the humblest laborers in the literary vocation—such was Artemus Ward. It is not strange that he inspired affection. The world, as Thackeray somewhere tells us, is a very good world to those who come to it good-naturedly, and laugh with it, and make merry; and this young humorist was never weary of ringing the bells of merriment. As he walked in the street, he saw everything in its comical light. He would go up to any respectable stranger, shake his hand fervently, remind him of early days in some far-off country town, speak of the 'old folks,' and describe the sorrow of 'poor Aunt Hannah,' at her boy's coming to the 'wild and whirling' metropolis, and advise the astounded stranger to return at once to home and virtue. 'All will be forgiven, John,' he would exclaim, 'and all forgotten. Take my advice, and go back.' The writer of these lines went with him to his hotel, late one night, not long before his departure to England. A waiter was summoned, with a view to convivial refreshment. 'James,' the humorist said, taking off his overcoat, 'has Mr. ——' (naming the proprietor of the hotel) 'has Mr. —— gone to bed?' 'Yes, sir.' 'Then, James, will you just go to him and wake him up, and tell him, with my sincere regards, that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. Remember that message, James, and—don't wait.' And the waiter retired in a convulsion of suppressed merriment. Such trifling incidents show the habit of his mind. He was always straying into ludicrous words and actions. One of his most intimate and dear friends was the comedian Setchell, himself 'a fellow of infinite jest,' and himself also gone hence beyond the dark and awful river of death. These two made a trip together, through one of the New England States, one summer month, riding in a carriage, and sporting with the rural residents whenever encountered. The record of that month can never be known, but such stories as have been told of it show that it was one of the merriest of all jovial times. On another occasion these two humorists, assuming to be store-keepers from 'up the river,' went to Barnum's Museum, and consulted a phrenologist who was then at that place, and who—ignorant of their identity, but bounteously responsive to their questions—told Artemus Ward that he might possibly understand a joke but could never make one, and told Setchell to 'stick to the store' and give up all idea of going upon the stage. One can fancy these wags, strolling thus along the highway of life and turning everything into mirth! The skies were blue overhead and the roses bloomed about their footsteps, and they went out of life with the echoes of happy laughter ringing in their ears."

ECCE DEUS.

Though this book is evidently not destined to cause as wide or lasting a sensation as Ecce Homo, it is nevertheless a very clever work. It is full of things that strike you at first as original, but which, upon examination, turn out to be original in expression only. The Nation criticises it as follows:

"By the whole tone of the volume, its basis and its superstructure, it differs from its predecessor very widly. But it is quite as difficult to fix the author's place in the religious world as if he were identical with the author of "Ecce Homo." Indeed, it is more difficult; for the importance attached to forms rather than to dogmas; the stroke of policy by which he made legitimate the sacraments of baptism and the supper, which the general tone of his book seemed not to require, indicated very plainly that it was to the Established Church of England that the author of "Ecce Homo" owed his allegiance. But in the case of "Ecce Deus" we have no such positive clue, and can only say with certainty that the writer is not a Calvinist. His strictures on the doctrine of election are of themselves sufficient proof of this.

"Ecce Homo" was an able book; "Ecce Deus" is a smart one. By those who differ widely from the opinions that distinguish "Ecce Homo" it is agreed that it evinces much ability. But ability is too large a word to characterize the present work. It is simply smart, volatile, alert. If possible it is more uncritical than "Ecce Homo." If "Ecce Homo" ignored criticism, "Ecce Deus" affects to despise it. It troubles itself with no questions of authenticity or credibility. It takes for granted that the Gospel narratives are uniformly correct in their statements. There were statements in "Ecce Homo" which presupposed a certain amount of critical research. From those statements "Ecce Deus" hastens to dissent, remanding the whole question of what actually took place in Judea in the reign of Tiberius to the realm of tradition and faith. The way in which this is done, if not altogether satisfactory, is infinitely amusing. If it makes our author less convincing, it almost always saves him from the curse of being dull. If 'Ecce Deus' is not a true book, it is certainly a bright one, and if 'Ecce Homo' had never been written it would be worth while to peruse it.

The method of 'Ecce Deus' is in the exact opposite of that pursued in 'Ecce Homo.' The author of 'Ecce Homo' was original in many of his views of Christ's character and position, but conventional in his explanations of these views and in his estimate of their practical bearing. The author of 'Ecce Deus' is always conventional in his leading views. In no respect is he heretical. He could, no doubt, recite the creeds and articles without a bit of hesitation. But having recited them, he would go about to explain them in his own way, which oftener than not is quite original. The author of 'Ecce Homo' was like the man who said 'I go not,' and then went; the author of 'Ecce Deus' like the man who said 'I go,' and went not. The author of 'Ece Homo' found the Gospels very ready to conform to all his predetermined views of Jesus; the author of the work we are considering is equally successful with the creeds. As that book had a pet horror, so also has this. But in that case the horror was dogmatism and in this case it is sectarianism. 'Christ founded no sect,' we are told; 'he established a church.' To belong to that church nothing is necessary but love to God and man. To this theme the author constantly recurs. Taken altogether, although the book adheres in form more closely to the current dogmas than its predecessors, in reality it departs from them quite as widely. On account of its title and its formal adhesion to the dogmas of the Church, it will doubtless be considered orthodox in many circles where 'Ecce Homo' was felt to be heretical. But this opinion will have little warrant. There exists between the two books this marked similarity; they are both better in parts than in their total result. Almost every page of either contains something that is suggestive or inspiring, but neither of them contains a life of Jesus that will satisfy the cultivated intellect, be it ever so little given to be critical."

CONGRESSIONAL PORTRAITS

The following sketches of the personal appearance and characteristics of some of the most noted Republican leaders in Congress, are by the Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune:

N. P. BANKS.

Mr. Banks is the most agreeable speaker on the floor. Erect, lithe, elegant, fluent, sparing of gestures, which, when used, he makes effective, quite convinced of some point which is not always the one under debate, he leads you gracefully up to it, and you look at it from his side, and are certain that it is the most admirable point taken by anybody since the serpent argued with Eve in the Garden. It is only after he sits down that you discover how many other points converge against it and, very possibly that allowing the argument to be unanswerable, it has nothing to do with the question at issue. It seems to be the characteristic of this gentleman's intellect that is negatively strong. It denies magnificently; detests flaws and mistakes, objects to schemes—oftentimes shrewdly and with justice—but founds no system of its own. Whatever he may lack, however, Mr. Banks has good taste. He never tears a passion to tatters, to very rags. He keens his temper. He neither smokes nor eats apples on the floor of the House. He puts his feet under his desk, and not on it; all of which virtues, though by no means individual, are not I regret to say universal.

BOUTWELL.

Mr. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, has some strong words to say. He is no orator as Brutus, but he speaks with such a splendid back-ground of zeal and earnestness and honesty behind him that his clear voice would ring down the centuries with its cry of "courage and truth." He has come out of bondage into this new light of liberty, having learned his Radical notions in a Conservative school—assurance that they are most genuine. Clear-headed, logical, always forcible, he commands the attention of the House. Tall, slender, a little round-shouldered, as, alas, most American thinkers are, with long, night-black hair and inky beard, he is one of the handsomest of the Congressmen. And for all his virtues he may be pardoned an occasional erratic radiation from the central purposes of the session.

BINGHAM.

Another Ohioan, Judge Bingham. This man is a hawk on a column. Figure straight, graceless, solid, and immovable as a rock. Head large in front, superb brow, aquiline nose, unyielding chin. Yes, he is a hawk, or an adze. Positive, aggressive, chafing at interruption, impatient of contradiction or dissent, sweeping rather than powerful, declamatory rather than convincing, he is yet, when in the mood, one of the most impressive speakers in the House. He puts down no brakes. If he should hit another ear let that ear look out for itself. And he sometimes moves with such velocity upon opposing entities not in the least disturbed thereby, that he revives the old problem in philosophy—"If and irresistible force encounter and immovable body, what would be the result?" If one could fancy an angry Mephistophiles—which one cannot, for evil is too strong to be impatient—a defiant and fierce Mephistophiles, Judge Bingham might well stand for the portrait in any of his moods.

THAD STEVENS.

And now the members crowd around a central desk. The confusion of tongues which amazes a spectator in the galleries is hushed for a brief space. The crowds in the balconies bend eager ears. A gaunt, wierd, tall old man has risen in his seat—the man who is often called the leader of the House. If to be voted down on half the questions of the day, to be admired, wondered at, listened to with strained attention, and then resisted in argument and beaten on appeal, be leadership, he has it; but not else. Deep eyes, hidden under a cliff brow, the strong nose of a pioneer of thought, shut, thin lips, a face pale with the frost of the grave, long, bony, emphatic limbs—these cover the uneasy ghost which men call Thaddeus Stevens. The great days of his power are past. Perseus has slain his dragon, and now he would unchain the fair Andromeda for whom he fought, binding her brows with the stars. The new version is sadder than the old, for he was wrought. Yet, to drop metaphors, which are dangerous will-o'-the-wisps, he is wonderful even in his decline. Day after day he comes, compelling his poor body, by the might of the strong soul that is in him, to serve him yet longer. He looks so weary of this confusion which we call life, and yet so resolute to command it still. He is Alaric, the Scourge, whose mission it is to chasten this terrible, turbulent South till she shall yield. If the means proposed are odious to her, they are none the worse for that, thinks relentless Hun. Let her pride be broken! Has she not broken hearts of ours, aye, and honor, which is more than hearts? These are long arrears to settle. So when the Blaine-Sherman amendment comes back, he will vote one of it. It is not fair to say, as some of these papers have done, that the Radicals were false who voted against Stevens on this issue. It was not a test-vote, as is shown in the facts that the copperheads were with him. Erratic, domineering, hard, subtle, Stevens is yet so heroic, he wears such a crown of noble years upon him, that one's enthusiasm and one's reverence cling to him. All those stilettoes of pitiless wit which have made his caustic tongue so dreaded, are unsheathed from the softest tones of his voice, and are quite lost to us. But the sardonic light of his face, and the laugh of the members reach us.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The New York Home Journal is about to enlarge. It "respectfully invites the attention" of the public to fact. The Home Journal occupies a field of its own, in which it has no formidable rival. As a purely literary journal, it does not undertake to compete with the Nation or the Round Table, but it is much superior to the flash Saturday and Sunday papers of the old regime.

With the present year will expire all German copyrights whose term has been extended by special privilege. Among the works which have hitherto been the property of authors families or of individuals, but which are now to become common property, are the writings of Schiller, Goethe, Wieland, Herder, Korner, Burger, Jean Paul, and other German Classics, of many of which series of cheap reprints are already announced in Berlin.

Edgar A. Poe's "Tales" will be issued by Widdleton, this week, in two volumes, comprising all the prose tales in the more expensive edition of the author's works. These volumes will be each complete in itself, and will be uniform in style with the volume of Poe's poems. Such an opportunity as this to obtain the rarest and most artistic prose productions of this inimitable genius will be welcomed far and near.

Preparations are being made for a colossal bust of the poet Bryant, in the Central Park. Launt Thompson is to furnish the model, which, we understand, is to be cast in bronze.

An "Artemus Ward Monument Association" was organized in New Orleans, the officers of which are, for the most part, leading newspaper men.

Ik Marvel has opened a real estate office in New York, and will give especial attention to the sale and purchase of choice rural sites.

"Ecce Homo" has sold to the extent of ten thousand copies, in the half guinea edition. Of the new edition, at six shillings, three thousand copies were taken by subscription. Roberts Brothers, the American publisher, are printing the twentieth thousand.

A Florence letter, of the eighth, says: "One of the oldest and most popular of Anglo-Florentines is on the point of leaving us. Charles Lever, the inexhaustible novelist, the genial humorist, the shrewd satirist, is about to desert to the Austrians. In fact, he has actually gone. Last week he struck his consular flag at Spezzia, where it may have been seen flying any time these last ten years or thereabout, and he has gone to hoist it in the flourishing seaport city of Trieste. All who know him will rejoice at the promotion for which he has so long waited; but Florence will certainly mourn his loss, which will leave a gap hard to fill in a very large circle of friends and intimates."

Edmund Kirke, author of "Among the Pines," publisher of the late "Knickerbocker," "Continental" and "Northern Lights" magazines, and the man who, during the rebellion, paid a visit to Jeff Davis, in company with Mr. Jacques, is seeking for a position in the New York Custom House, where Richard Grant White, Charles F. Briggs, R. H. Stoddard, Barry Gray, and some other literary lights earn their daily bread.

[For the Californian.]

GASTRONOMICAL REFLECTIONS.

BY PRENTICE.

IT is about time that sermons were preached on diet and food. Hints on cookery and the proper method of eating meals could be embraced within such discourses.

It has long been said of us that we eat too fast. We take in meat and vegetables as a locomotive does wood and water, and are then off again at the rate of sixty miles a minute.

The prevalent idea is that what is termed "plain living," is conducive to health. "High living" is popularly supposed to bring on gout and all sorts of disorders.

Farmers are supposed to live plainly. They do. A large majority of American farmers sell the best of their produce and live on the refuse. The geese, turkeys and chickens, and the best of the "garden sass" go to market. The staple article of fare for family consumption may be salted beef and pork.

I have lived on farms where regularly morning, noon and evening, there made its appearance on the table a dish filled to the height of six or eight inches with square, dice shaped bits of fried pork. It was the household god of the table.

These people were never in perfect health. The women always had some mysterious complaint, and the men always grumbling. There was ever a demand for some sort of medicine when "husband" went to town.

I accuse pork as guilty of a large portion of these internal disturbances, pork in pie crusts, pork in cake, pork used to fry, pork mighty and prevailing in everything.

Cabbage is another favorite of the farm-house table. Pork and cabbage go hand in hand to ruin the national stomach, promote national dyspepsia, destroy the peace of the national mind, aggravate national disturbances, and finally bring on civil war.

This is plain cookery, or at least what is meant in many households by plain cookery. It is diabolical plain cookery.

I believe in generous diet, chicken, turkey, oysters, etc., and a glass of good wine. Such food eaten decently and in order, interferes far less with the stomach's comfort than pork, sausages and tough beef.

We cannot all of us get these things every day. "There's the rub." Those condemned for their sins to eat at a restaurant, cannot always have their food cooked as it should be.

But I will tell you what we can do. We can chew—that is if we try, if we take time. It will not be such easy work, O son of America, to masticate your food properly as you may imagine. It will at first tax severely your patience. The national jaw needs training. The mania for doing everything too fast extends even to the working of the jaws.

Good company and cheerful, animating conversation are necessary essentials, without which no meal is perfect. With these requisites the breakfast can easily be protracted an hour, and by a little training and perseverance the dinner may be made to last two or more. To many of my countrymen this is downright treason and a useless waste of time. Such sentiments are considered indicative of gluttony. But it is not. It is a part of life to eat. The Frenchman knows this. He knows how in this manner to be combine mental and physical pleasure.

Refinement of taste extends equally to all things, the choice and preparation of food included. The savage can devour raw meats, grubs, insects—and so he remains a savage. The denizen of the southwest subsist on pork and corn dodgers—and remains a sort of savage white man. The more cultivated become critical as to their food as they rise in the scale of intellect.

But, says one, "do not the poor students often subsist on the plainest diet and thrive?" Yes. I have seen many of them subsisting in this way on plain diet, and going grumbling about with pale faces and general consumptive aspect. Good people attributed it to overmuch study. They, themselves, rather liked their own distresses, because it made them appear interesting, and savored of studious habits. Bosh! Pork, sausages, hot biscuit, bad mastication and want of exercise lay at the bottom of it.

Daily I behold men eating their meals with such haste that a person not familiar with this national peculiarity might be led to imagine that they suffered from a perpetual fear while inside of a house of being overwhelmed by an earthquake. And what do these same people do when this gastronomical race is over? Nothing. A man dined with me not long since. Scrabble is entertaining, has ideas of his own, and might enjoy himself could he get rid of the national mania for hurry and impatience. We sat half an hour. I had just fairly entered into the merits of dinner when Scrabble proposed leaving. He had finished. Mind you, Scrabble had enjoyed himself thoroughly, for I had allowed him to monopolize most of the conversation, and such a proceeding was to him no bore. But the habit of hurrying and gastronomical bolting had induced Scrabble to imagine he must put an end to any further sitting. Had he anything to do? No. Any appointment to keep? No. He must go because he must go. That was all. "Now," said I, "Scrabble, sit down, and see for the sake of experiment if you cannot get through another half hour. You are enjoying yourself. You are not going to better your present condition by leaving." And then I managed successfully to launch another topic, one of Scrabble's hobbies; he took it up and sailed off in it, sipped his claret, and coquetted with a breast of chicken which had been quietly by my order placed before him, and before he was aware of it Mr. Scrabble had been beguiled in spending two hours at dinner.

I suppose this is treason against habits of order and industry. Still I cannot see why pleasure cannot be interwoven in many of our pursuits and customs, to which it is quite a stranger. Our recreations are "staked out" as it were and made entirely distinct and separate from the "business of life." But much of the business of life can be made to afford us as much pleasure as what we term our pleasures and recreations, and our recreations might thereby be made to render ten, aye, an hundred fold more enjoyment.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday, Miss Helen Western appeared in the French Spy at Maguire's Opera House and made quite a hit. Her fencing in the combat with "Mohammed (J. A. Herne), was extremely fine. In the Day After the Wedding Mr. Herne strengthened the good opinion which the public have formed of his ability, by the manner in which he played "Col. Freelove." Mrs. Jackson, "Lady Freelove," was an admirably artistic impersonation. On Thursday, Don Cæsar de Bazan was played with Miss Western in the title role, which she filled with considerable ability. Yesterday evening, the French Spy and Don Cæsar de Bazan were performed. This afternoon, a French Spy Matinee will be given. A grand bill has been prepared for to-night: Oliver Twist and Jonathan Bradford will be played. Miss Western's "Nancy Sikes" will probably be a strikingly original performance. I expect that Mr. Heine will play "Sikes" splendidly, and the part of "Fagan" will have full justice done it by Harry Jackson. Poor Mr. Edwards is condemned to play the cheerful character of Jonathan Bradford, of course he will, resigned to his fate, play it in the same artistic manner in which he performs the most ungracious parts. The Corsican Brothers is in active preparation, and will be produced with startling scenic effects next week.

At the Metropolitan Theater, the Black Rook is still running.

The prophesy of some newspapers that because Mr. Bugbee had gone to the East, the Hawthorne Theatricals would be suspended, is disproved. I must acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the first of a new series of private theatricals in the parlors of Union Hall, on Tuesday evening, May 21st, when the Lady of Lyons will be played. Geo. M. Ciprico is the new manager of the Hawthorne Theatricals. He will play "Claude Melnotte."

Mrs. Laura Cuppy met with great success in Grass Valley. The National thus speaks of her first lecture:

"She spoke, without notes fluently and with great self-possession. Her manner is easy and her movements graceful. Her discourse evinced far more than ordinary powers of mind, and would have done credit to the most masculine intellect in the State. The audience listened with great interest and attention, frequently applauding. Mrs. Cuppy stops to argue all the issues presented against her creed, and does not deal in mere assertion and visionary declarations. She appeals directly to the coldest reason, and patiently labors to demonstrate the truth which she believes, and to make it comprehensible to the most stubborn or stupid of her hearers.

Mrs. Cuppy will lecture to-morrow morning and evening at Mechanics' Institute Hall, on Post street.

Mlle. Rosa Celeste, the funambuliste, left for the East on the steamer yesterday. She inteuds to walk a rope across the Niagara Falls. TOUCHSTONE.

NEW MUSIC.—We have received from M. Gray, music publisher and dealer in musical merchandise, the following of his last publications: "Molly Asthore," a very pretty Irish ballad composed by L. H. Lavenn; "The Rustic Gate," poetry by Charles Swain, music by Frank Mori, and "The Anvil Polka," by A. Parlow, which has become so popular in San Francisco. M. Gray also sends us a ballad published in New York by W. A. Pond & Co., entitled "Croquet," words by C. H. Webb, (formerly of THE CALIFORNIAN,) music by J. R. Thomas. Both words and music are pretty. This little song of three verses describes a croquet courting and how it ended.

OAK POISONING CURED by the never-failing and only scientific method of Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Discovered, introduced and practiced with unexampled success, during more than fourteen years in San Francisco, only by Dr. Bourne. *

RHEUMATISM.—Cures guaranteed for a stipulated fee—no humbug about that—by Dr. Bourne's pleasant and never-failing method. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

ELECTRICITY.—The use of Dr. Bourne's powerful and superb battery may be had at a charge of only four bits—10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

ITALIAN OPERA.

THE new season at the Academy of Music was inaugurated on Thursday evening, with the utmost success, in in the presence of a brilliant and overflowing house. With great enterprise and liberality, the manager has engaged all the available talent here in addition to the new artistes secured in New York by Signor Milleri; and the present troupe is, undoubtedly, stronger, and of more even excellence in the various departments, than any combination ever before formed in San Francisco. Ernani, the opera of Thursday evening, brought forward a new tenor, Signor G. Limberti, who leaped at one bound into public favor. His voice is both sweet and powerful, and is admirably trained; while his stage presence and manner, though not remarkably graceful, are prepossessing, and full of spirit and intelligence. He was applauded with the greatest enthusiasm, and his debut may be regarded as a triumph. Signorina Brambilla, Signor Mancusi and Signor Milleri, who sustained the other leading characters, were heartily welcomed back to the stage from which they had so long been absent; we have so often had occasion to praise their performance in this favorite opera that it is now only necessary to say that they sang on Thursday night with their usual success, except Signor Mancusi, whose voice appeared sometimes a little uncertain—no doubt a temporary difficulty, of which he was as well aware as the audience. The chorus was large and generally good; the orchestra lacking in precision, and too easily disturbed (considering that everybody knows Ernani by heart) by the sometimes astonishing variations in the tempo of the concerted pieces. Under the competent leadership of Mr. Evans, we hope for better things hereafter.

Lucrezia Borgia was produced last night, affording an opportunity for the debut of Madame Stella Bonheur, the new contralto, as "Maffio Orsini." We regret that the early hour at which we go to press precludes a notice of the performance. This evening, Il Trovatore will be given, with the young and beautiful Signorina Eugenia Bellini as "Leonora," and the other characters by Madame Stella Bonheur, Signor Limberti and Signor Milieri. On Monday, Lucia di Lammermoor will be produced. The troupe will sing every evening during the week; three of which are subscription nights, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

NATIVE WINES.—It was our good fortune, a day or two since, to be introduced into the Wine Vaults of Eberhardt, at the corner of Market and First streets, the successor to the agency for the sale of wines of B. D. Wilson, of Mount Vineyard, at San Gabriel, Los Angeles county. Our astonishment at the variety was more than equaled by the delicious aroma and flavor (bouquet) of the wines. The White is a dry wine, which might easily deceive an old drinker of light Rhine wines; whilst the fragrant Port gives one the true taste of Old Oporto, such as we have drunk in Lisbon and Rio, the pure grape, and not that of the drugs of London Dock. But that which appears to be in great favor, is the Mount Vineyard Braud; is very fruity in flavor; a clear, rich wine, with more body than the White, and is much more sought after. And then the Sherry, like unto the Cape Madiera, though much lighter, would deceive many a bon vivant for a Xeres wine. The Grape Brandy is excellent, pure and unadulterated, a grape flavor, and but for prejudice would without doubt take the place of the poison dealt out at many bars in this city; however, large quantities of it are sold in New York, where in many places it has superseded the French article. Had we space a long narration of these wines could be given, and can but recommend all lovers of pure good wines and brandies to give Mr. Eberbardt a call, and taste for themselves; they are at very reasonable prices, and well worthy the attention of the public.

NEW PIANO MANUFACTORY.—Mr. Walter S. Pierce, No. 536 Market street, opposite Second, has fitted up in connection with his Piano Forte Warerooms a factory for the manufacture and repairing of pianos; the repairing department of which is conducted on an entire new plan. The defective parts of the piano are taken out and laid aside, and their places supplied with entire new action, or whatever is required, which actually makes the old piano as perfect an instrument as when it first left the manufacturer's hands. Mr. Pierce's factory is stocked with complete sets of Action, Springs, Cloths, Feltings, etc., adapted to every maker's pianos in the United States. His factory is supplied with the latest improvements in machinery, and his workmen are from the best Eastern factories, which gives him advantages for doing good and quick work over any establishment of the kind on the Pacific coast. Persons with dilapidated pianos can, by calling on Mr. Pierce, have new ones made of them by his giving them a rejuvenated appearance, and renewed and healthy tone and action. We saw a number of these instruments at his factory that would pass muster for new ones anywhere.

FRESH MACCARONI, VERMICELLI, ETC.—The manufactory of Messrs Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co., at 706 Sansome street, in this city, is rapidly supplying the local market with these goods, to the detriment of the importers of the foreign manufactured articles, which is found to become soured and injured by the long voyage and extreme age. We are pleased to commend our local made commodities in every instance.

MADISON & BURKE.—This firm do the most extensive House and Property Agency business of any in the city. For houses to rent or to let, or any description of real estate property to sell or purchase, there is no other palce where the parties interested can so soon effect a trade as at Madison & Burke's, 316 Montgomery street.

ALAMEDA PROPERTY.—Maurice Dore & Co's., great sale of 500 beautifully located Villa Lots on the Encinal, near the Alameda Railroad Station, directly fronting the Alameda Park Hotel, will be held on Tuesday next, at their spacious salesroom, number 327 Montgomery street. For terms, etc., see advertisemen

TO A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.

BY W. L. SHOEMAKER.

I.

AY, thou art fair—fair as the mornings prime,
And dewy fresh as the rose's bloom,
And good, methinks, as beautiful, to whom
Unknown, I pour the homage of my rhyme!
A thousand knights would, in the olden time,
Have held it fame thy favors to assume,
And died for thee, and gladly met their doom,
And not to worship thee have deemed it crime.
A thousand minstrels would have sung they face
As one all peerless, and have singled thee
To crown with wreaths of deathless poesy;
So rich art thou in every mystic grace,
Making us almost marvel if thou be,
In very sooth, of our own earth-born race.

II.

I have beheld thee in the crowded hall,
Where youth and beauty met; but thou, most fair,
Shone, like a star thro' clouds, among them there,
The cynosure, the wonder of them all.
Nor dost thou to thine aid those trappings call,
Which others use; as well the rose might care
For other charms than hers already are:
Nor gold, nor pearl thou needest, to enthrall
Who thee behold. "Plain in thy neatness," thou
Art queenly with a flower amid thy hair.
And thy clear eyes outshine all gems most rare;
Nor would a diadem on thy modest brow,
Give thee more sway than thou, uncrowned, dost bear,
Who art, by beauty's power, a sovereign now.

—New York Home Journal.

THE GREAT MARKETS OF PARIS.

THE four o'clock A. M. bell is like the sound of the gong in the fairy-piece, which makes a whole world rise out of earth. The Great Markets, relatively quiet until that bell sounds, are the scene of noise, bustle, and methodical confusion. It is said that it was amid this morning turmoil that Auber found the motif of the market chorus in Massaniello. One sees there so many varied spectacles, one hears so many cries, six pair of eyes and several pair of ears would not suffice to save us from losing something. At first one sees moving about among the market-gardeners none but greengrocers, purveyors, hawkers, and the like. Soon the cooks of hotels and restaurants appear, and their white costume forms a strange contrast to the motley dresses on every hand. Then come soldiers of the different regiments charged with the day's marketing; and les petites sœurs (a sort of a sister of charity) begging for their poor, here a cabbage, there eggs, yonder potatoes or salad. In old times gourmets made it a point of duty to come to the Great Markets to pick for themselves the best pieces brought. Grimod de la Reyniere never once missed coming to the Great Markets at their opening. He came wearing his handsomest dress-coat and his most delicate lace; he was followed by three footmen with immense baskets. It was Grimod de la Reyniere who, describing how thrushes were cooked wtih gin, was so far carrried away by his enthusiasm as to say, "One would eat one's own father if served up with this sauce."

Do you hear that noise? It comes from the middle of the Rue de la Toonellerie, and is made by there or four lusty fellows, who are hopping, skipping, jumping amid heaps of verdure, constantly gesticulating and bawling at the top of their voices: "All is going! All will disappear! I tell ye, here's the beautiful article, boys! I tell ye, here be the best ye can find! and be spry, for there isn't enough for everybody!" They are the fern-dealers. They come from twenty-five or thirty leagues to sell for three sous a bunch of those beautiful deoticulated leaves with which green grocers adorn their shop wiodows. By the side of the fern dealers are the vine-dealers. Vine leaves are used to set off fruit to advantage. These women sort their merchandise into little packets, which are tied with straw. They get the vine-leaves from the market-gardeners, or from some roguish boy who has been pillaging the vines. They sell their little packets for four sous, and make some three or four francs a day on an average. There are days when they make ten or twelve. Do not be astonished! It is really at the Great Markets one may see the justice of the proverb: "There is no stupid trade." I was shown at the Great Markets a dealer in chick-weed for birds in cages, who has made money enough to buy three houses at Montreuil?

Another profitable trade in the Great Market is that of itinerent coffee-sellers. There are six of them. They have a large cylindrical vessel made of sheet-iron. It is provided with two cocks. Under the cylinder is a heater, and noder the heater is a cup-warmer, where cups and spoons are kept; under the cup-warmer is a basin of water, where each cup and spoon dives after the customer empties it, and after each dive the water changes color, becoming darker and darker. This operation is called "washing the cup." The dish of coffee, sugared, costs one sou; there are, however, dishes at two sous for the aristos, for people who wish to make a show. The whole difference between the coffee at one sou and that at two sous consists in the position of the cock. The one sou cock is on the right, the two sou cock is on the left. The liquid which issues from both cocks is identical, for if the cylinder has two apartures it has no interior division. The two cocks are for appearance' sake. The sale of coffee is prodigious. Hundreds of amateurs may be seen around the coffee-women waiting their turn to be served, and she can scarcely ever be seen without a large koot of coffee-drinkers around her. Fortunately, this liquid is absolutely without danger, for it contains no exciting principles. Between you and me, good reader, this coffee is a very distant relation of its homonyme of Bourbon and Martinique. The best "grounds" used have been used several times before they come to the Great Markets. These coffee-women buy the "grounds" from petty cafés, who themselves bought the "grounds" from large cafes. Those who would enjoy, without spending much more money, a little more substantial aliment, apply to the soup-woman. They bring their cups of soup to the Great Markets in baskets which hold 30 at a time. Each of these soup-women sells on an average 15 or 20 baskets a morning. One of them disposes of 1,000 cups a day. She is the aristocrat of the business. She employs a lad to do nothing but wipe the spoons.

Let us pause for a moment in the fish department. To hear an auctioneer in the Great Market is a pleasure one ought to enjoy at least once in a life-time. To understand what he says is a feat beyond the reach of mortal man. The astutest people guess at it. It is an abrupt continuous hum, amid which numerals burst like the explosion of artillery or the rattle of musketry. When there is an auction going on at each of the eight stands at the same time, the spectator at a distance thinks he hears immense watchman's rattles, agitated by convulsive hands. While this uproar is taking place at each stand, a decanter puts both hands to his mouth to form a speaking-trumpet, and bawls the new fishes he spreads on the bench. Besides the eight stands for sea-fishes, where the sales annually amount to $2,000,000, there is one reserved for fresh-water fishes, which sells about $200,000 worth of fishes a year. We may regard as a portion of this market the retail of small Seine fishes, driven by fishermen's wives on one of the outside sidewalks.

It is not far from the fish-market to the butter-market. We meet, at its entrance, the egg-dealers. It is not often a farmer raises so many chickens as to warrant him sending them directly to market. The greater part of the eggs brought to Paris consequently come through the egg-dealers. They go from farm to farm, and from rural market to market, picking up a dozen here and a dozen there, and sending them up to Paris in large quantities. Eggs are sold at private sale. When a buyer and seller come to terms they send for the viewer, who is the only judge who can officially attest the quality of the eggs. There are sixty egg-viewers in the Great Markets. Their business is divided into three successive operations: counting, running through the ring, and viewing. Counting consits in verifying the alleged number of eggs, from which the broken eggs are substracted; ring-running detects the eggs which are under size, and consequently of less value; viewing proper eliminates spotted, bad, frozen, and limed eggs.* By an odd custom of trade, if the alleged number of eggs prove ten less than the real number, the seller pays the counting; if there be above forty spotted eggs, he pays the viewing. Otherwise both these charges fall on the purchaser. A viewer earns $1 40 on what he calls his good days. His business is irregular and fatiguing. He is sometimes obliged to remain forty-eight hours bent over baskets, and this commonly in cellars, for eggs cannot be viewed except in a place removed from daylight. He views the eggs with a candle before him; he takes them two by two (one in each hand), and holds them together before the light, giving them a slight rotatory motion with his fingers to enable him to inspect all around the shell. To discover from the slightest indication the condition of the egg concealed in the shell is a much more complicated science than may be believed, and it requires long special studies. A viewer recently said to me: "I have been in this business these fifteen years, and every day I learn something new." Paris annually consumes 240,000,000 eggs. Statisticians have discovered that each inhabitant of Paris consumes on an average 200 eggs, 246 lbs. of fruit, 20 lbs. of butter, and 6 lbs. of cheese annually. Dry cheeses alone are included in this last figure; cheeses like Gruyere, Roquefort etc., are called dry cheeses. New cheeses (Brie, Neufchatel, and Montlhéry) are sold to a much larger amount. The latter are almost the only cheeses sold wholesale in the Great Markets. Dry cheeses are chiefly sold wholesale in the shops of the Rue des Lombards and Rue de la Verrerie. The sale at the Great Markets takes place only twice a week, and it is not large, as the greater part even of the new cheeses are sent directly to the retail dealers.

Wholesale butter consequently thrones pre-eminently in this portion of the Great Markets. It comes there daily in innumerable lumps and pounds, whose quality varies with its origin. Paris annually makes way with 28,000,000 lbs. of butter, and of this quantity 18,000,000 lbs. are sold at the Great Markets. If we edge our way through enormous baskets of eggs and lumps of butter placed in order on the ground in their white cotton envelopes, we shall reach the center of the butter-market. Here we come upon an odd-looking thing. Imagine a wooden tower, from which falls four drawbridges in the form of a cross. They are narrow and they are long. When the four persons who gesticulate and scream inarticulate sounds at the entrance of each of these drawbridges are seen from some distance—while a crowd of people in a violent excitement seethe and surge around them—one would think that he witnessed a riot, or saw insurgent peasants besieging the fortress in which their lord had taken refuge, and whose entrance was defended by four valorous champions. But when one raises his eyes toward the summit of the tower, one is surprised to see—instead of archers armed from head to foot—very quiet clerks (peacefully writing in immense blank-books) with linen sleeves drawn over their coats. One at last sees the tower is nothing but an account-ing-desk, the valorous champions mere auctioneers, the four drawbridges sales' benches, and the mob of insurgents mere buyers and sellers. As for the dagger which most of them hold in their hands, it is a mere probe, which they call "lance," and use to taste the butter offered on sale. As it is necessary to distrust the external layers of butter, each buyer thrusts his probe as deep as he can, gives it a twist, and brings out with it a small portion of the butter. Then he takes with his thumb-nail a bit of butter from the probe, which he puts into his mouth, and throws the rest back into the lump. You are all attention, I hope, good reader? Well, I said the buyer puts a bit of butter into his mouth. As he tastes about 100 lumps one after the other, were he to swallow the sample tasted he would be sure of nausea long before he had tasted the 99th lump. Consequently, after turning it with his tongue two or three times to give his palate full opportunity to make its acquaintance, he spits it out. I beg pardon for entering into this detail, but it is indispensably neceseary in order that I may reveal to you one of the strangest trades I know. The space where the buyers stand and the edges of the sales' benches are covered with straw, destined to catch these bits of butter. After the tales are ended, the porters collect this straw saturated with butter, and sell it to people whose name we consent to leave in the shade. These people throw this straw into immense pots full of boiling water. The butter melts from the straw and rises to the surface of the water, where it is collected by skimmers. This disgusting, horrible melted butter is used by pastry-cooks and by bakers, who make "fancy bread!" Before it became the emolument of the porters of the butter markets, who make from it some $1,800 or $2,000 a year—ay, $1,800 or $2,000 a year!—the sale of this straw belonged to one of the old keeper of butter. After he died his widow obtained a continuance of the privilege to her to serve her as a pension. So great was the grief of the new keeper of the butter-market upon finding such a reveuue escape him that he actually died of a broken heart. I can vouch for the truth of all these statements, because I have obtained them from the son of the broken-hearted man, who is now the keeper of the butter-market. Is not all this incredible?

Let us now visit tradesmen who pompously call themselves dealers in cooked meats, but whom the people call by their true name, which is arlequins dealers. The word arlequin (harlequin) explains itself. It indicates a dish composed of every sort of bit, like the motely-colored habit of the hero of the Italian pantomime. It is an indiscribable medley, an odious mixture. Fragments of fishes hob-nob in plates with vestiges of dried meats, and bones of all species of poultry together with spinach and potatoes—all saturated with a liquid containing more or less grease, as it pleased the sauces of yesterday or day before to deposit there. Some people's appetite is sharpened by the sight of this dish. Hunger is a good thing in its way! Twelve or fifteen people assembled in one of the corners of Division No. 12 drive the sale of this terrible merchandise. They draw their supplies from the dish-washers of wealthy houses, or from the more important restaurants, who sell them for an insignificant sum of money the unappetizing omnium of all the tableclothes. Some of them sell stale pastry too. On their crowded stall are to be seen all the varieties of stale desert, from wine-colored tarts to those granite-like set-cakes, which resist all all efforts of the teeth. These dealers have fewer customers than the others, for if the robust viscera of the customers wish solid food, 't is not of this sort. Pastry is good for girls. No, no, no; 't is your real arlequins dealers who drive the prosperous trade. They sell some $3,000 or $4,000 worth of arlequins annually. One of them married his daughter the other day and gave her $6,000 in dowry. At breakfast time you may every morning see poor famishing devils waiting in front of their shops each for his turn to come. You ought to see that sight, if only to know the worth of a piece of dry bread.

If you are bold, and your gorge does not rise beforehand at every thought on it, elbow your way through the crowd around the stall. It is the hour when the supply is delivered. The dealer is on her legs, fresh, fat, smiling, with a mountain of broken bread on one side of her, and a pyramid of dark grease,

* Eggs are steeped in lime to preserve hem. The lime does not injure them; it shows they are not fresh.

the somhre production of mysterious meltings, on the other side of her. Behind her is a shelf groaning beneath many a packet covered with a bit of newspaper. She opens them one after the other, indicating the contents more or less pompously, and then she empties them ou a plate. As she does this the customers in the second rank push those of the front rank, while all around are eager eyes staring through the wired fence.

She wheezes: "Here is a bone of haked leg of mntton, for only 5 sons; here is rice and omelette, 4 sous; haked canliflowers, 3 sous; who wants the cauliflowers? This side, eh?" (She folds up the piece of newspaper, and hands it to the applicant.) "A blanquette of veal, 3 sous: who wants the blanquette?" Five or six hands are extended; one seizes the paper, and throws down his 3 sous; while the lncky fellow retires with a beaming face, murmurs of disappointment are heard all around him. "Mame Henri, if you've any chicory?" asks a regular customer. She replies: "Wait a bit, wait a bit, and we'll see." Then she goes on wheezing: "Three artichokes, with a bit of sole," (she dips her finger in the sauce, and carries it to her mouth,) "a tip-top article! 4 sous." (She opens a paper dropping oil.) "Here is salad. Who wants salad? 2 sous. Here is a charming piece of beef, streaked fat and lean, 12 sous." (Murmurs of admiratiou). A voice ventures to bid 8 sous for it. She replies: "You are a pretty fellow! Roast beef for 8 sous! Well, well, take it after all, and be off with ye!"

She continues wheezing as she opens packet after packet, and the plates covered with broken victuals crowd the marble counter more and more, and the crowd of her customers becomes larger and larger, until all passage in her neighborhood is intercepted. Now and then, to the annoyance of customers whose mouths water at the glance she gives, she folds up again a paper she opens, and put it aside. It is a tit-bit which some neighboring cheap eating-house keeper will serve up that same evening to his patrons under some most appetizing name. Somebody comes up, nods, slips in her hand a sou and receives in exchange a large packet strongly tied. This takes place again and again. I ask an old woman husily engaged in filling her basket who stands by my side to unravel this riddle to me. She replies: "'Tis mince meat at one sou a packet." I found it hard to repress a wry face. She exclaimed: "O, sir, you can buy here with confidence; all is good meat here." Had I uttered another word the old woman would have insisted upon my testing it—just to see. So I took to my heels.

The Duties of an English Lady's Maid.—One of these not-to-he-envied persons, a race that may be classed with that of governesses, has recently made disclosures throwing a peculiar light upon the women of rank in "Old England."

"Much is required of us in London," she writes. "We must, above all, be very punctual, for fashionahle ladies change their dresses at least five times a day during the seasou. We must have polished manners, be uo older than thirty-five years, and always be cheerful and good tempered, although for weeks we are kept without sleep until four o'clock in the morning—a practice which is equally injurious to eyes and lungs. We are expected to cut and fit and use the most improved machine, and to dress hair for the morning, evening and court costume, as well as for the drive; to iron well, read, write, cypher; to speak French and German, and, if possible, to have traveled. There is still another function of a lady's maid, which is supposed to be of modern introduction, hut which is, in fact, merely a revival of an old custom. We must he ahle to paint in pastel; not, indeed, after nature, hut upon her. To beautify our mistress we must redden the cheeks, put antimony on the eyelids, pastel up on the brows, introduce belladonna into the eyes in order to enlarge the pupils, paint blue veins upon the temples, and usc ninon paint and pearl white upon the rest of the skin. We must change the hair to a reddish brown by means of a corroding material or of 'palma veechie,' which is now used in preference for that purpose, and we must he possessed of great skill in applying all thcse ingredients, as their use is universal with the old as well as the young.

A Lock of Hair.—Hair is at once the most delicate and lasting of our materials, and survives us like love. It is so light, so gentle, so escaping from the idea of death, that with a lock of hair helonging to a child or friend, we may almost look up to Hcaven and compare notes with the angelic nature; may almost say, "I have a part of thee here, not unworthy of thy being now."

It is not the paintiug, gilding aud carving that makes a good ship; but if she he a nimble sailor, tight and strong to endure the seas, that is her excellence. It is the edge and temper of the blade that makes a good sword, not the richness of the scahhard; and so it is not money or possessions that make a man considerahle, but his virtues.

Prince Napoleon is reported as having said a good thing of the Emperor. "He has twice deceived France," says the Prince; "first in 1848, in making her believe that he was a fool; next in 1866, in making her believe he was a genius."

Hiram Woodruff is dead. On the "turf" so long himself, he goes "under" at last.

SONG.

BY PAUL HAYNE.

I.

My wedded love is fast asleep,
The white lids closed o'er marvellous eyes,
That shine a meaning, pure and deep,
As midnight's far, unfathomed skies;
Her heart upon the tide of dreams
Is heaving like a fairy boat,
And o'er her face the mystic gleams
Of tender thoughts and memories float.

II.

My earlier love, I could not wed,
Is slumbering too, but far away—
She sleeps among the tranquil dead,
And couched upon the churchyard clay;
Her lids are closed o'er soulless eyes,
Her pulseless heart is mute and cold—
But thought is busy where she lies,
And memory wakes beneath the mould.

NOVELTIES.

PARASOLS.

The new styles are made of white silk, dotted with amber beads, and trimmed with amber fringe, or white silk, dotted with coral beads, and trimmed with heavy coral fringe. Some are trimmed with feathers, but these are only suitable for carriage dresses.

JEWELRY.

We have some very curious jewelry, just received from Paris. It consists of earrings, pins, and necklaces of wood, lava, and malachite, carved in the most beautiful manner. Some have cut in them sphinx heads, and others, pictures copied from the Vatican. They are very costly and handsome, and worthy a close inspection; the workmanship heing of the finest description, and said to be done with the aid of a microscope.

GLOVES.

The new evening gloves are of the lightest lemon color, made with long wrists, with eight gilt buttons, aud embroi dered on the back with flowers of silk, a shade darker than the gloves. They are very pretty and stylish, and will soon he the height of fashion.

Mrs. Blue.—Mrs. Blue is an unhappy woman. Life to her is a barren desert, containing nothing but sands of unhappiness. Out of little troubles she forms mountains of evils; and every moment of happiness is considered a forerunner of some great calamity. I have seen her go into hysterics over a bleeding nose, and cry for honrs over a cut finger, fearing it would produce the lockjaw. If Blue attmepts a joke she thinks him intoxicated; and forthwith hemoans the manhood of her husband and preaches unto him a sermon of morals, interlarded with her own hardships and trials. Her friends have ceased to visit her, leaving her to hrood over troubles alone and undisturbed. Poor Mrs. Blue! I pity her, but her husband more.

Now there are a great many Mrs. Blues in this land of ours, who go through life a dissatisfied, miserable, and despised crowd. And, iu their eager grasp after the thistles of life, they never observe or think of the beautiful flowers of happiuess that grow beneath the thistle's shade. The sweet smile of innocent childhood and the approving words of old age are unknown to them. They "have set their lives upon a cast," and think they "must stand the hazard of the die." The cast is the suppression of all that is good and noble in their nature, and the die is a life of misery and unmourned death.

"Sweet, Sweet Home."—A Bostou man, who wanted to trade in mahogany, sugar, honey, beeswax and hides, lived at Bæza, a little palm town on the coast of Ecurador, South America, near the beautiful plains and mouutains of Anna. He had a little house that was built of palm-tree hark and covered with palm leaves. At last he had a house made of pine hoards at home, all fitted ready to put up. 'This was put on shipboard and carried to Bæza, and he put it up, had it nicely ceiled, and thought he was very grand. But the sun shrunk the boards, and very soon the seams in his nice new house were large enough to let in a bee; and in the bees went, between the ceiling and the roof, between the ceiling and the weather-boarding, into his closets, under his chamher-floors, up his chimney, everywhere; and before three months, so delighted were they with this new home, they had filled every crack and crevice overhead and round about with comh and honey, till it poured through the cracks and streamed down on his head, and his house became snch a "sweet, sweet home," that he had to run away and leave it, or be stuck fast and drawn out, like a fly in a cup, from his own great beehive.

Almost any one cau write a long newspaper article, hut it takes talent to put the same amount of thought into a short one; and ten persons will read the latter where one will the former.

We are glad to hear that the estate left by "Artemus Ward" is so much as $60,000.

[From Henry Morford's new book "Over the Sea."]

CHARLES READE.

PERHAPS it has nothing to do with the "green lanes of merrie England," except as it is certainly a green spot in memory, and has to do with a writer who describes rurality most charmingly—hut I found even more of that ahsence of hrnsquerie and that practical heartiness of manner, in the only other English author of marked eminence with whom my limited stay and pre-occupation in London enahled me to come into contact. My fortunate other one was Charles Reade, unquestionably after Dickeus, the first of living English novelists of the day, and to whom I had, happily, not even the necessity of an introduction, having, for years, enjoyed the pleasure of his occasional correspondence. But, strangely enough, no portrait of him had ever come beyond the Atlantic, (a fact which I found accounted for by the yet strauger fact that he had only once ever heen painted, in a jealousy preserved miniature:) and I had, consequently, the face and not the heart of a stranger to meet. And yet I did not meet even a strange face after all; for the handsome and courteous little lady who presides over the destinies of the pleasant residence on St. George's Road, in that unimpeachahle district of southwestern London, known as "South Belgravia"—that handsome and courteous little lady favored me with a glance at the miniature while the subject of it was yet, for the moment, engaged; and so at last I met a facial acquaintance whose hrief description will he quite as much demanded by the readers and hearers of "Peg Woffington," the "Cloister and Hearth," "White Lies," "Very Hard Cash," "Love me Little," "Never too Late to Mend," and the now prevalent "Griffith Gaunt," as even that of Mr. Trollope by the readers of "The Warden," "Barcheston Towers," "Orley Farm," "Belton Estate," "North America," "The Claverings," and the "Last Chronicle of Barset."

Charles Reade, when met fully in the presence, is among the finest types of the rare blending of mental and physical to he met with to-day on either side of the cable-vexed ocean. He must he nearing or past fifty, and yet, with reference to his preserved youthfulness, he might be only twenty-five. Very little short of six feet in height, and stout (not in the sense of fat, but powerful) in build, with the slightest possible droop at the shonlders, and an affection for short sacks which makes him look stouter and more rural—there is more than a suspicion of the athlete in him, and one is not surprised to learn that he has heen an ardent cricketer (precisely equivalent, in degree, to heing an American "base-hall man.") The silky, nut-buown hair is beginning to thin almost to baldness at the very crown; but age has made no other mark. For the somewhat massive, but pleasantly-moulded English face, with brown beard on square chin and a slight continuation at the sides, seems to have no line of care or over-work, spite of the long lahor which the brain behind the fine brow has certainly performed; and there is an almost hoyish merriment in the eye (brown or blue—I am not certain which,) which joins with the most genial of voices to put the very thought of time out of the question.

How many literary visitors have enjoyed, first and last, the hospitality of that tastefully-appointed dwelling in South Belgravia, with its genial faces, and those other faces, by Sir Thomas and Sir Joshua, and their great compeers, that look down so pleasantly from the walls—and of that other house, only less perfect, which preceded it in "May Fair!" And how many pleasant words and kind offers, if his manner to me was any index to the usual, Charles Reade must have distributed within the last fifteen years of his literary life? Frank, hearty, hospitahle, sometimes irascible, often opinionated, not seldom vain, most thoroughly English, and yet most cosmopolitan Charles Reade!—it is not easy to forget thee.

Doings of a Crazy Man.—The night watchman of the New Haven aud New London Railroad, at the depot on Shaw's Neck, in New London, Tuesday evening, in a crazy fit, knocked the fireman of the locomotive Saybrook from the platform, just after the engine was run into the depot and the engineer had left, and putting on steam started the locomotive for the bridge, singing out. "turn the switch;" "damn the goat," (a goat was leisurly walking hy the side of the track). The watchman was bareheaded and frothing at the mouth. Mr Getchell, of the Short Line boat, who was going toward the depot, succeded in getting on the engine, and stopped it just a few rods from where the switch was formed. But for this fortunate occurrence, there is no calculating what injury may have occurred.

The largest vessel ever built, in Ireland, the Istrian, was launched at Belfast, last month. It is four hundred and one feet in length, thirty-seven feet in breadth, and 2,900 tons register, or upward of 4,000 tons burden. Although the Istrian is the longest vessel in the world, except the Great Eastern, there are several vessels of greater tonnage—the Istrian being a comparatively narrow ship.

Nature, when she makes a beautiful head, is often so absorbed with admiration of her work, that she forgets the brains.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1867.

BUZZARDS AND WHITEWASHERS.

THERE are men whose zeal in the cause of "historic truth" always takes a peculiar not to say sinister shape, and manifests itself chiefly in hostilities against the apologists for the failings of great men, and also against the entire class of mild and charitably disposed person, whose natural feelings impel them to explain away dark transactions, and to suspect that the devil himself is not quite as black as he is painted. Persons whose love of absolute truth is not fanatical, and whose ideal of justice does not too closely approximate to vengeance, sometimes get very much out of patience with both of these classes. The charitable apologiests often carry questionable sentiment so far as to offend the moral sense and to dangerously ignore moral distinctions which it is important to maintain, sharply defined in the popular conscience. Macanlay thought that Moutague erred in this direction, in his defence of Bacon, hence his famous essay; and—to descend from great things to small—Doctor Snodgrass considered Mrs. Oakes Smith guilty of the like offence in trying to convince the public that poor Poe did not die dead drunk, and hence his—not exactly famous—letter to Beadle's Magazine. Snodgrass himself is a good typical specimen of the other class—the stickers for ugly truth—whom for convenience we shall designate as the "Buzzards," while the gentlemen of optinistic views, for whom the animal kingdom suggests to our mind no fitting representative, may be called the "Whitewashers." Though these terms may have an approbrious sound, we are far from ignoring the usefulness of the former class or the amiability of the latter. Indeed, the faults peculiar to each are but virtues in excess. The Whitewasher carries charity so far that it begins to lose itself in moral flabbiness. The Buzzard, the product of a natural and wholesome reaction—in his zeal for truth becomes oblivious, sometimes of humanity and sometimes of decency. The Buzzard is always narrow-minded, but often possesses intellectual vigor, while the Whitewasher's heart is generally better than his head.

The Buzzard is constitutionally a cynic; the Whitewasher a sentimentalist. But all distinctions based upon natural disposition and temperament are lost in confusion when men become partisans. In political and religious discussion the born Buzzard whitewashes the champions of his own side with eulogistic effusion, and the born Whitewasher emulates his natural opposite, in cynical criticism. A man's faith in regard to the narratives of rebel cruelties and the like matters, is pretty certain to be determined, more by the circumstance of his political connection, than by the weight of the evidence. The Examiner recently administered a sharp rebuke to the Times for "rehashing the exploded falsehoods" in regard to the cruelties practiced against Union soldiers in Southern prisons during the war. Had the Examiner been content with making the point that in the present condition of things it is unnecessary to recall public attention to matters of this kind, and that it can serve no good purpose to do so, most thoughtful persons would have been inclined to accord a mute assent to the proposition. But the charge that the fearful narratives of the Andersonville prison-pens, are "exploded falsehoods," will very naturally stimulate renewed attention to the subject on part of those who are zealous in behalf of historic verity; and we suspect that whoever thoroughly examines the evidence adduced at the Wirz trial, will find himself compelled to admit that there is much more truth in the narratives referred to, than for the credit of human nature, he would wish.

MISS EMMA HARDINGE, whose visit to San Francisco is well remembered, is said to be preparing a history of the Rochester religion, entitled, "A History of Spiritualism in America." The New York Nation predicts that the work "will not be well done" and thinks that Emma's "literary performance" when she is "under the influence," is prophetic of sad work from her when not "inspired."

PENNSYLVANIA IS giving evidence of a great change in public opinion within her borders. The Legislature has passed, and Governor Geary has ratified, a law compelling railroad and steamboat companies within the limits of the State to receive and accommodate passengers without distinction of color.

"GASTRONOMICAL Reflections," a characteristic paper by "Prentice," the writer of the "Ravages at a Bore" in our last issue, will be found on the fifth page.

DEVINE'S BUST OF BRODERICK.

THIS is generally considered Mr. Devine's most successful attempt in his art. It is certainly a very marked advance upon some of his earlier efforts. If we are to accept as sound the theory that the highest aim of the artist is to attain literal fidelity to nature, the bust is obnoxious to criticism as being too much idealized. Both the features, and the general expression, differ materially from those seen in the ordinary photographs. On this point of faithfulness, however, there seems to be some difference of opinion. A gentleman well qualified to judge, sends us a criticism of the bust, in which it is claimed that "Devine has caught and expressed in marble the possibilities and not the actualities of Broderick's countenance," stating also that the writer has seen a large photograph of Broderick, by Brady of New York, taken apparently in some happy moment when the mood and frame of mind were most favorable, which was characterized by all the elevation and refinement of expression that are seen in Mr. Devine's work. But whatever may be the judgment in regard to its faithfulness to the original, the bust is highly creditble to Mr. Devine as a work of art.

It shows much study and conscientious labor. Indeed, there is much fine work in detail expended upon it, the effect of which will be quite lost when the bust is elevated to its destined niche, some twenty-five feet from the ground. But with the true artistic instinct, Mr. Devine has been no less painstaking in his attention to finish in detail, on this account. In several of his earlier attempts, Mr. Devine fell short of achieving what could fairly be called works of art, though he evinced an extraordinary talent for producing good likenesses from the slender material of photographs, and his own recollection of the features. In this estimate of certain of his previous efforts, we have no doubt that Mr. Devine would himself agree. The difference between the bust of Broderick, and even the comparatively recent one of Parker, is almost as great as that which distinguishes the work of the mechanic, from that of the artist.

The material of the bust is a white marble, from Columbia, Tuolumne County. It is much harder, more compact, and finer in grain than Italian marble. Its extreme whiteness does not strike us as being an advantage. One or two slight blemishes in the stone are noticeable on the face and neck of the bust, but only on close inspection, and they will not be seen when it is elevated to its place on the monument.

STODDARD'S POEMS.

WE have seen the first sixteen pages of the proofs of Mr. Stoddard's forthcoming volume of poetry. These specimen pages exhibit a typographical perfection never before attained in California, and rarely surpassed anywhere. The paper is of the fine texture and quality used in the costliest English editions of standard authors, and every detail is conformable to the suggestions of an exquisite taste. The volume opens with an "Invocation" which does not strike us as being in Mr. Stoddard's best vein, though it contains a number of fine lines. Here are four stanzas:

INCOVATION.

"Oh, Poesy! exquisite gift,
Thou art a magnet that shall lift
My gold from out the drossy rift.

Thou art my soul's refulgent beam
My guiding star to ever gleam
A flaming pillar in my dream.

Thou art my drifting cloud by day
Whose bright pavilion-courts alway
Allure me with their fair display.

Thou art a Hebe that presents
A chalice to my lips, and thence
I drain the charméd, rich contents."

The manner in which the book will be presented, judging from the specimen before us, reflects high credit upon Bosqui & Co., the publishers.

WE have received a copy of a sermon preached in the First Presbyterian Church of this city, on the occasion of the installation of Rev. James Eells, D. D., by the Rev. Charles Wadsworth, D. D. The sermon is published "by request," and seems to be designed as a reply to the popular assertion that "Christianity is a failure," and is not adequate or adapted to "the wants of the race at this stage of its progress." The Doctor insists that both morally and intellectually, the Christian system is still abreast, if not in advance of "this marvellously marching humanity," and alludes with asperity to the suggestions of modern scientific scepticism as "the gibberish of fools."

WE acknowledge the receipt of invitations to "the first of a series of private theatricals in the parlors of the Union Hall," to take place on Tuesday evening, May 21st, under the direction of Geo. M. Ciprieo, manager. Mr. Ciprico was one of the leading members of the "Hawthornes," from which association we infer that he has "seceded," that name not appearing on the cards issued for the entertainment of May 21st.

A PLUCKY MANAGER.

MAX Maretzek, the famous New York Operatic manager, is evidently an individual of rare nerve and admirable pluck. He has dared to do what no theatrical or operatic manager has ever before ventured to do in the city of New York. He has refused to truckle to Bennett of the Herald, and has ventured to defy his utmost malice. The result has taken most people by surprise. Bennett, like a certain gentleman formerly connected with the Alta of this city, has long been supposed to be a sort of Warwick in the theatrical world, who could write up, or write down any actor, musician, or theatrical manager according to his sovereign will and pleasure. On the strength of this widely accepted faith, the Herald has been in the habit of levying black mail, directly or indirectly, upon actors, singers, danseuses and managers. It compelled all the theaters to get their job printing done at the Herald office, at extortionate prices; and it caused all new comers who sought the favor of the New York public to recognize the expediency, if not the necessity, of propitiating the Herald by expensive presents to the proprietor of that journal, or to his wife. Poor Fanny Ellsler was led in this way to the tune of several thousands of dollars. Diamond necklaces, services of plate, costly dresses, and gold pencil cases were among the propitiatory offerings which Fanny made to the Mephistopheles of the New York Press and his family. The sturdy Maretzek seems to have been the first who has ventured to rebel against the iron rule of the autocrat of the Herald. Max objected to paying a double price for his printing, and to furnishing unlimited secured seats and free proscenium boxes to Bennett and his friends. The consequence was, that the Herald commenced a bitter crusade against him. But the result has been such as to show that the influence and power of the Herald had been vastly exaggerated. Notwithstanding the persistent and systematic attacks of that paper, Max has made his operatic enterprise a grand success in New York, and a wholesome lesson has been given to the venal bullies of the Press. It has been demonstrated that the influence of theatrical black-mailers is exaggerated, and that the man who has the moral courage to defy them, can do so with impunity, when he has right and justice on his side. The Herald has come off second best in the fight with the indomitable manager; and the more timid and sensitive artists who have been in the habit of truckling to Mephistopheles have learned that his power had its chief foundation in their own exaggerated fears. The lesson is a valuable one, and it has no less practical value in this latitude than in that of New York. As a general rule, the black-mailer is chiefly formidable through the foolish cowardice of his victims. He has only to be fearlessly confronted in order to make his impotence apparent. In this community the black-mailing business has long been successfully carried on by organs of no real influence, and which any honest man could safely afford to defy, if he only had the pluck and manliness to do so.

THE RICHMOND Enquirer seems to have entirely lost confidence in the Northern Democracy. It is particularly severe upon the New York World, the most thorough-going "friend of the South" to be found in the ranks of Democratic journalism. The bitterness of the Enquirer toward its northern allies, appears in the following:

"Until the Northern Democrats show more strength, and more nerve, the Southern vote, if given in bulk, would avail them but little; and if so given would probably draw down upon us fresh proscriptions from the successful party, with fresh condolence from the World, and fresh counsel to make the best of our case by making some new venture for the Democrats. We must tell the World plainly that its abandonment of the constitutional questions involved in the impeding legislation, and its leaving the South to make her defences under the Constitution, unaided, and with careful admonition that it is her case exclusively, are to our conceptions treacherous to us, and treacherous to principle; and can but be received as a warning not to expect future fidelity, and as counsel to take care of ourselves the best we may, regardless of past associations or commitments. This is the logic of the World's example."

THE Special Report of the Superintendent of Public Schools, to the Board of Supervisors, presented April 29, 1867, has been laid upon our table. It appears to us to be unusually able and interesting official document. Last evening's Bulletin comments upon it with much asperity in an article entitled "Wire Pulling," reflecting severely upon Superintendent Pelton. It will probably be remembered that Mr. Pelton was the subject of bitter, and in the public judgement, of ungenerous and unjust animadversion, in the Bulletin, at the time that he was a candidate for the office he now fills. For some reason, which we fear is not a worthy one, the Bulletin still retains its hostility to that gentleman, and loses no opportunity of exhibiting it.

BEWARE OF CONJURORS.—The Atlanta (Ga.) Era has this item: "Houdin, the great prestigiditator, left on Thursday night, and forgot to pay sundry printing and board bills.

A NUMBER of book-notices are again unavoidably laid over. A clever criticism of "Ecce Deus" will be found in our "Literary Gleanings."

[For the Californian.]

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE RUSSIAN TERRITORY.

I PROPOSE to write a brief and succinct account of the Russian Territory in North America, recently purchased by the United States for the sum of seven millions of dollars. I think that purchase was the biggest thing on ice that has been accomplished of late years. Some people pretend to think that seven millions of dollars is a large sum to invest, even in a nice speculation like this; but the frozen truth is that our Government didn't buy the property solely with a view to future ice-creams and sherry-cobblers; the President and Cabinet, having resolved upon playing a game of freeze-out with Great Britain for her possessions on this continent, thought the Russian Territory might be rung into the game as a "cold hand." I am quite certain that Uncle Sam will not burn his fingers with this little bit of property.

The Russian Territory was discovered about 1,400 years B. C. by an expatriated Crim Tartar named Bul-leh-haw-eh, who, having by mistake knocked another man's father on the head instead of his own, was forced to abandon his beautiful home under the shadow of Mount Caucasus and flee for his life. When he arrived at Cape York, finding himself hotly pursued, he ventured upon the ice, which bearing him up, he took his bearings straight for the opposite headland, and made the riffle in safety, while his pursuers, bearing too far to the northward, fell into Symmes' Hole, and were lost to the outside world forever. Bul-leh-baw-eh named the icy path which led him to free America "Bearing Straight," which the Russians spell "Behring's Strait," and being pleased with the appearance of the country, resolved to found a colony there. True, he found very little bare soil—hardly sufficient for the production of potatoes, turnips and cabbages for his household; but he did not let that trouble him, as he could obtain an abundance of bear's oil, and a bare subsistence by hunting the Polar bears which were numerous in the vicinity of his new home. He also satisfied himself, by experiment, that if the earth could only be relieved from its icy covering, and warmed up a little, it would produce wheat as good as that of Lower Canada or Western New York. Building material was plentiful and convenient. He had only to saw out square blocks of ice, pile them up, and cement them together by pouring cold water over them, and he had a crystal palace for his habitation. It is probable that Bul-leh-baw-eh would have lived and died in this Arcadian land, where the splendor of the Aurora Borealis eclipses the gorgeous scenery of the Black Crook; but having one evening chewed too much quass (Tartarian brandy) he got tipsy, left his nose out all night, and was next morning much surprised, when he undertook to blow it (in the Tartar fashion), to have it break off in his fingers, as if it had been the stem of a chalk pipe. This little incident caused him to conceive a dislike to the climate; so, gathering his wife and children together he journeyed southward until he came to the spot now known as San Francisco. As Bul-leh-baw-eh and his family were clad in bearskin garments, archæologists insist that they were the first to introduce the fashion which prevails so extensively at some of our theaters.

After dwelling for some time at San Francisco, Bul-leh-haw-eh found, to his great grief, that, owing to some peculiarity of the climate, or the excess of electricity in the atmosphere, his wife's affections were becoming estranged from him. She finally insisted upon a separation from his bed and board, and would doubtless have sued for a divorce, and married another man, but that there was no court in which to bring the suit, and no other man to marry. At length Bul-leh-haw-eh induced her to return to him by promising to buy her a new waterfall and take her East, which he did. They made the trip by easy stages—not Holladay's—and settled down in Massachusetts and reared a numerous progeny. Their posterity, I believe, gave our forefathers some trouble a couple of hundred years or so ago. Most of them have since been killed; but there are enough of them remaining to raise old Nicholas on the plains once or twice a year.

No further attempt was made to settle the new territory until about the year 1570, when Peter the Great of Russia, having quarreled with his wife, ran away from home and went to Saardam, in Holland, where he worked for his bash in a shipyard for a year or two. Peter seems to have been of a very unhappy disposition; for he quarreled with his boss and ran away again one dark night, carrying with him a small vessel of two hundred and fifty tons burden, completely rigged and provisioned for a voyage. He returned to St. Petersburgh, entering the city with his vessel under his arm. When his people saw him coming back with such a valuable prize, they welcomed him with shouts of joy, and his wife received him with every demonstration of affection. At her instigation Peter, who had dumped the ship in the Neva, manned it with a choice crew, and putting it under command of that famous old Admiral, Count Blominozoff, dispatched it on a voyage of discovery. Peter's wife ("which her name it was Katherine," says the veracious old chronicler from whom I derive the foregoing facts) particularly desired them to discover a gold mine, as the royal exchequer was low, and she was in want of a new crinoline and false bosom.

After sailing for a number of days, more or less, they landed at the mouth of the Kwichpak river, and took possession of the country in the name of the Czar of all the Russias.

Admiral Blominozoff was delighted to find that the whole surface of the country was covered with a beautiful transparent substance, clear as crystal, and capable of being cut into any desired form. He had never seen anything of the kind before. He loaded his vessel with it for the purpose of building Peter a new palace, which should surpass in magnificence the most famous edifices of the world.

When, in the course of time, he returned to St. Petersburgh, he hastened to inform the Czar of the discovery he had made and the present he had brought him. Together they proceeded to the vessel and caused the hatches to be opened, when lo! the beautiful crystalline building material had vanished, and the hold was filled with water!

The Admiral was puzzled; so was Peter. They called in a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences, who, after carefully investigating the subject, wrote a learned treatise thereupon, copies of which are still extant in scientific libraries, in which he proved, to the satisfaction of Peter and the Admiral, and, indeed, of everybody else, that if the beautiful crystalline building material had not by some mysterious process been changed to water it would probably have remained solid.

Peter consoled himself for his disappointment by bowstringing twenty of his nearest relations, and banishing a hundred of his nobles, with their wifes and families, to the new territory. The exiles supported themselves by fur-hunting, and raising potatoes, turnips and cabbages, which they sold to the whalers who pursued their vocation in the Arctic seas. In the course of time they built a city which they called Iceberg, and another which they called New Archangel, and they drove a thriving trade in iced sodas and mint juleps; and they increased and multiplied, until the territory, which, including the islands of Sitka, Kodiac, etc., is much larger than California, now contains a population of near fifty thousand. This enormous increase in the course of two hundred years is owing to the fact that the population has been constantly replenished by political exiles from Russia, for whom the climate of Siberia was considered unhealthily hot, and has been kept from emigrating by Russian garrisons, stationed at every point affording egress from the country. But for this wise precaution on the part of the Russian Czars, many of the inhabitants might have wandered off into torrid climes, and perished miserably of debility,

The Indians of Russian America are noted for their fair complexions and robust, well-proportioned forms. The men are athletic and courageous, and will fight in any way to accommodate their adversaries. They are the only savages I have ever heard of who will resent an insult on the spot with a blow of the fist. The women are handsome, and they have a great partiality for red shirts and sailors. Many of these Indians have light hair and blue eyes, indicating that the morals of their remote maternal progenitors were not more rigid than those of the present generation, especially when Russian officers were about; while their skill in carving, as well as the style of the work, points to a Japanese origin. (I trust nothing in this paragraph will induce any misguided young man to depart for the far north with an invoice of red shirts.)

Gold, silver, and other precious metals are abundant in the Russian Territory. There was formerly an extensive deposit of brass there; but the mine has been worked out, on account of the Times. The discovery of the gold and silver in Russian America is due to a learned member of the California Academy of Sciences, who, on assaying a block of Sitka ice, found it to contain a large per cent. of the precious metals—in fact, about $.0001, per ton. Thereupon the Times published an article urging our Government to purchase Russian America; a copy of the paper containing the article was sent by telegraph to Washington, and the next day the purchase was effected. We are to pay for the property the trifling sum of seven millions of dollars; and it is estimated that the first crop of potatoes, cabbages and turnips raised in the new Territory will realize at least that amount. A Yankee, who has invented a plan for conducting agricultural operations under snow and ice, has gone up there to experiment on a large scale.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Clock Company are manufacturing time-pieces adapted to Russian America, where the year consists of a day and a night, each four thousand three hundred and eighty-three hours long. An enterprising publisher of this city, also, has got out a Hyperborean Almanac—the calendar occupies two lines, the rest of the book being made up of advertisements of quack doctors. No one who goes to that country should fail to purchase one.

This is all the information I at present possess in regard to Russian America. It is not much, but it has the advantage of being strictly authentic. When I get time I will (if not too lazy) endeavor to obtain some further information concerning the country, and then I shall be able to write more fully of it.

JOHN CLERK.

EDITING A PAPER.

CONSIDERING how many good advisers of editors there are, it is strange there are so few good editors. Perhaps a careful investigation of the matter would show, however, that good editors are oftener spoiled by trying to follow too many advisers than by having too few. There is plenty of advice, which the receiver would do better to pocket than to practice. Most advisers, so far as our observation goes, regard much writing and good editing as nearly synonymous. There is no greater mistake, and none more fatal in the successful editing of a general newspaper. Benjamin Franklin has the credit of saying that "the best editor is the scissors," by which he probably meant that the editor who recognizes the fact of there being in the world many good writers besides himself, and avails himself of the good things they have written, will make the most interesting and acceptable newspaper. Men who know most about making newspapers, do not estimate an editor's labor by the number of columns he writes, but by the general completeness and finish of his paper as a whole. The following paragraph, written by an Englishman of much experience, contains the gist of the whole matter:

"A good editor, or competent newspaper conductor, is like a general or a poet—born, not made. Exercise and experience give facility, but the qualification is innate, or is is never manifested. On the London daily papers, all the great historians, novelists, poets, essayists, and writers of travels, have been tried, and nearly every one has failed. 'I can,' said the late editor of the London Times, 'find any number of men of genius to write for me, but very seldom one man of common sense.' Nearly all successful editors are of this description. A good editor seldom writes much for his paper; he reads, judges, selects, dictates, alters and combines; and after doing all this well, he has but little time for composition. To write for a paper is one thing—to edit a paper is another."

CATCHING WHALES.—Nicholas was rather a wild boy; so full of pranks as to give serious trouble at home. A three-years' whaling voyage had the effect of sobering him somewhat. At all events, his maritime experience gave him a reputation in the agricultural community where he lived, and he was reported as having come home greatly improved by the discipline to which he had been subjected. His mother especially regarded him with a species of admiring awe, listening to his yarns with an attention and patience which was quite commendable.

"How dew ye ketch whales, sonny? Tell me the hull on it," quoth the old lady one day, when they were alone.

Nick's eyes twinkled. The temptation was too strong to resist.

"Get me a ball of yarn, mother, and you help me."

Nick supplied himself with a fork, and proceeded to make the end of the yarn fast to the handle.

"There mother; you hold the ball, and pay out when I tell you."

With a quick movement, he threw the mimic harpoon at the cat, lying asleep upon the settle. With one outrageous yell, the affrighted animal bounded through the open window.

"Give her line, mother! give her line!" shouted the mischievous Nick, as the old lady stood transfixed with horror.

A PLEASANT PICNIC.—The "B'nai B'rith" picnic on Sunday last, at Belmont, was a model affair of the kind. Everything passed off pleasantly and harmoniously. There was not the least indication of rudeness of any kind exhibited on the grounds. The guests seemed to constitute a homogenous family circle, made up of congenial elements, with no discordant element among them. No more delightful spot could have been selected for such an occasion; and the company seemed to possess all the social qualities required to make the affair a most happy sucess. The "Alemannia" society will hold their picnic on the same ground on Sunday week.

A BRIEF BUT PITHY SERMON.—Here is the pithiest sermon ever preached: "Our ingress into life is naked and bare; our progress through life is trouble and care; our egress out of it we know not where; but doing well here we shall do well there; I could not tell more by preaching a year."

WOODWARD'S GARDEN.—Everyone is glad during the present hot weather to escape from the heated brick and mortar of the city to some green spot in the country. The shady groves in Woodward's beautiful garden furnish a delightful retreat.

A FRENCHMAN, who had been in India, speaking of tiger-hunts, pleasantly remarks: "When ze Frenchman hunts ze tigare, ah! ze sport is grand, magnifique! but, when ze tigare hunt ze Frenchman—out! zere is za very devil to pay!"

SAN FRANCISCO CADETS.—This crack company will hold their annual picnic to-morrow, underneath the wide spreading oaks at Martinez.

THE inventor of the "walking doll," which was so fashionable a few years ago, is said to have made $75,000 by the patent.

THE KNIGHT'S LEAP AT ALTENAHR.

"SO the foemen has fired the gate, men of mine,
And the water is spent and done;
Then bring me a cup of the red Ahr-wine—
I shall never drink but this one.

"And fetch me my harness and saddle my horse,
And lead him me round to the door;
He must take such a leap to-night perforce
As horse never took before.

"I have lived by the saddle for years a score,
And if I must die on tree,
The old saddle-tree which has borne me of yore
Is the properest timber for me.

"I have lived my life, I have fought my fight,
I have drunk my share of wine;
From Trier to Coln there was never a knight
Lived a merrier life than mine.

"So now to show bishop and burgher, and priest
How the Altenahr hawk can die;
If they smoke the old falcon out of his nest,
He must take to his wings and fly."

He harnessed himself by the clear moonshine,
And he mounted himself by the door,
And he took such a pull at the red Ahr-wine
As man never took before.

He spurred the old horse and he held him tight,
And he leapt him out over the wall,
Out over the cliff, out into the night,
Three hundred feet of fall.

They found him next morning alone in the glen,
And never a bone in him whole:
But heaven may yet have more mercy than men
On such a bold rider's soul.

BLOBBS OF WADHAM.

MY name is Withers—Richard Withers, of Jermyn street, Londoa, ostensibly aa importer of foreign wines. I don't mention it by way of advertisement, but that I may not be introduced to the public under false pretences. I am not Blobbs of Wadham; that is what I wish to be understood clearly. In the year eighteen hundred and ten, or thereabouts, the great firm of Nature and Company falling short, I suppose, in their original material, issued a couple of duplicates—facsimiles—and I had the misfortune to be one of them. We were not twins: there was no mystic sympathy of being between us to whisper each to each, "Thou hast a double;" no cuticle, or smallest superfluity of skin, as had been granted to the Siamese, to hint that there was a ditto somewhere. Long Experience, our only common mother, was left to teach us this; and in my education, at least, that lady has proved herself a Tartar.

My first introduction to a knowledge of the other twin was not till some few years ago. As I was walking along Fleet street, on my way into the city on business, I was saluted from behind with a most tremendous thwack across the shoulders. I turned around between purple and white; for, angry as I was, a little reminiscence flashed across me of a certain bill transaction—a thing that will mix itself up somehow with the wine trade—and I thought it just possible that this assault had arisen from some unprofessional view of that matter; but an utter stranger, with outstretched hand and beaming smile, confronted me.

"Deelighted to see you, old boy," said he. "How is the wife and the piccaninnies?"

"Sir," I replied, rubbing my back as well as I was able, "I am a bachelor."

"D'ye mane to say ye are not Blobbs?" said he.

"Certainly I do, sir," answered I, with warmth.

"Well, then, it's nothing more or less than a coincidence," said he.

"Sir," said I, "it is a blister." And it was a blister.

The very next day, and almost in the same place, across the shoulders, I received two thwacks from that identical cane, and in the same unmistakeable Hibernian accents, I heard it shouted; "I took another man for you yesterday, Blobbs; but, bedad, I've got you to-day."

I happened to have a nephew at Wadham College, Oxford, at that time; and, not without an eye to business, I went down to stay there for a week. I had heard a good deal before of the hospitality of the University, but the cordial manner of those fellows did surprise me.

"Well, how are you, old boy? So you are come down to see us at last," exclaimed one, at the very gate, as he shook my hand most heartily. "But you are getting bald, my friend—henpecked about the crown—eh, eh? And you're stouter than you were, too, a good deal."

"Really, sir," I began, "these familiar remarks"—but my nephew came up just at that moment, and prevented my explanation. In the combination room, after dinner, I sat next to the sub-warden, and was treated with all imaginable kindness. "I have some wine of this character," I was casually remarking, as I held the glass up against a candle, "that has been with me this twenty years.',

"Then I don't know where you put it to," observed a gruff voice, lower down. "For a man who drinks habitually, I must say, I don't know worse wine than yours."

"Don't you mind what Savage says," said the sub, gently; "you know his strange ways."

"But I do mind what Savage says, sir," I replied; "and I don't know his ways. I am not going to sit here, and hear my wine run down by Savage, or any other man."

"Why, Blobbs, Blobbs, you did not use to be so touchy as that up here," interposed the dean; "bad at chapels, bad at lectures, shocking bad at knocking-in, but always good-tempered and ready to take a joke."

"Gentleman," exclaimed I, "once for all, I am not Blobbs!"

Alas! it was but little good for me to say "once for all;" I went out to breakfast at another college, and was purposely introduced to everybody as Richard Withers; but the association of ideas proved almost as bad as the confusion of persons, and I was asked about six times whether I knew Blobbs of Wadham. I got quite to know when it was coming, by the way in which the interrogator would survey my features, give a little smile at the absurd likeness, and begin his question with "Mr. Withers?" to prevent himself from addressing me by the wrong name. I astonished one of these persons a good deal when he had got thus far by anticipating the rest, and saying—

"No; I don't know Blobbs at all," which rather terrified him.

The disadvantages of my resemblance to this person have been counterbalanced by no benefits; nobody has ever paid me money for Blobbs, or asked me to dinner, or given me so much as a lift in his carriage; no charming young creature has ever embraced me by mistake, as being the wife or sister of me, Withers. On the contrary, Mrs. Blobbs has been presented to me, more than once, in the form of a Nemesis, or avenging female. At the casinos and the like, for instance, which I solemnly assert I only visit as the haunts in which sundry young gentlemen, with whom I am professionally connected are almost likely to be found, it has been often whispered to me—

"Lucky Mrs. Blobbs don't see you here to-night, my boy;" and, on one occasion, "If you don't lend me that fifty we were speaking about, as sure as you live I'll tell your wife." I should not wonder if some domestic recriminations took place somewhere in consequence of my firm refusal; I believe and hope that Blobbs is not altogether exempt from the results of our similitude; that the toil and truth of our double has befallen him likewise.

After a few scores of these mistakes had happened, I learned to take them quietly enough; if I was arrested for debt, or even lodged in Newgate for murder, to-morrow, it would not much distress me; "It's Blobbs," I should say, "that's all." The former, indeed, is not unlikely, for he is a very fast character, or, at all events, has lots of half-mad friends; just before the pillars were taken away from the Regent's Quadrant, I had a proof of this. I was coming from the Piccadilly end, at my ordinary quiet pace (for I am very respectable, and not thin), when I was violently seized by the shoulders, and threaded—run in and out—through each of the pillars, all the way to the top. It was in the mid afternoon, and the proceeding attracted every eye; but what did I care? What was the use of caring? "It is some friend of Blobbs' of Wadham, having his lark," I said to myself; "and he will be very much astonished when he comes to find out that he has got hold of the wrong man!" As soon as I could get my breath again, I gave Blobbs' friend in charge to a policeman, and he paid five pounds for that little run of his; it would have been cheaper for him to have taken a cab.

I never saw this parody upon me in all my life, but I have been very near seeing him; I got into a coach at Dorchester, one night, to go to Weymouth, and had to pay about forty miles' fare further back—from Honiton, I think. The guard, and the coachman, and the insides, all swore to my having traveled that distance, and I was obliged to give the money—I have no doubt for Blobbs.

And yet it was better so, perhaps, than to have met him; what horror to have awoke suddenly, and beheld oneself sitting opposite in the dim obscure! Echoing, perhaps, one's cry of terror, wearing hair after the same porcupine fashion, and with cheeks of the like fear-stricken hue!

What a shocking business it will be when one of us two dies! Perhaps, we shall expire simultaneously. Otherwise, when an enfranchised-looking female, in a widow's cap, comes suddenly upon me in the street, and faints, I shall then know that Blobbs is dead.

A DAUGHTER of Charles Dickens is understood to be the author of a very charming story called Aunt Margaret's Trouble, published in All the Year Round, and since reprinted in London in book form. She is to furnish the next leading story for All the Year Round, after the completion of Edmund Yates' Black Sheep.

THE BEST BOY.—Artemus Ward bequeathed his library "to the best boy in the school of his native village of Waterford (Me.)," who is to be apprenticed for two years to the best printer in America, to learn the value of an education, and then to be sent to college.

A STORM ON THE ATLANTIC.

"MY own two hands, and feet likewise," says Charles Dickens, "being very cold on this particular occasion, I crept below at midnight. It was not exactly comfortable below. It was decidedly close; and it was impossible to be unconscious of the presence of that extraordinary compound of strange smells, which is to be found nowhere but on board ship, and which is such a subtle perfume that it seems to enter at every pore of the skin, and whisper of the hold. Two passengers' wives (one of them my own) lay already in silent agonies on the sofa; and one lady's-maid (my lady's) was a mere bundle on the floor, execrating her destiny, and pounding her curl-papers among the stray boxes. Everything sloped the wrong way, which in itself was an aggravation scarcely to be borne.

"I had left the door open a moment before in the bosom of a gentle declivity, and when I turned to shut it, it was on the summit of a lofty eminence. Now every plank and timber creaked as if the ship were made of wicker work; and now crackled, like an enormous fire of the driest possible twigs. There was nothing for it but bed; so I went to bed. It was pretty much the same for the next two days, with a tolerably fair wind and dry weather. I read in bed (but to this hour I don't know what) a good deal; and reeled on deck a little; drank cold brandy-and water with an unspeakable disgust, and ate hard biscuit perseveringly; not ill, but going to be.

"It is the third morning. I am awakened out of my sleep by a dismal shriek from my wife, who demands to know whether there is any danger. I rouse myself, and look out of bed. The water-jug is plunging, and leaping like a dolphin; all the smaller articles are afloat, except my shoes, which are stranded on a carpet-bag, high and dry, like a couple of coal barges. Suddenly I see them spring into the air, and behold the looking-glass, which is nailed to the wall, sticking fast upon the ceiling. At the same time the door entirely disappears, and a new one is opened in the floor.

"Then I began to comprehend that the state-room is standing on its head. Before it is possible to make any arrangements at all compatible with this novel state of things, the ship rights. Before one can say, 'Thank Heaven!' she wrongs again. Before one can cry she is wrong, she seems to have started forward, and to be a creature actively running of its own accord, with broken knees and failing legs, through every variety of hole and pitfall, and stumbling constantly. Before one can so much as wonder, she takes a high leap into the air. Before she has well done that, she takes a dive into the water. Before she has gained the surface she throws a summerset. The instant she is on her legs she rushes backward; and so she goes on staggering, heaving, wrestling, leaping, diving, jumping, pitching, throbbing, rolling, and rocking, and going through all these movements—sometimes by turns, and sometimes altogether—until one feels disposed to roar for mercy. A steward passes.

"'Steward!'

"'Sir?'

"'What is the matter? what do you call this?'

"'Rather a heavy sea on, sir, and a head wind.'

"A head wind! Imagine a human face upon the vessel's prow, with fifteen thousand Sampsons in one, bent upon driving her back, and hitting her exactly between the eyes whenever she attempts to advance an inch. Imagine the ship herself, with every pulse and artery of her huge body swollen and bursting under this maltreatment, sworn to go on or die. Imagine the wind howling, the sea roaring, the rain beating; all in furious array against her. Picture the sky both dark and wild, and the clouds, in fearful sympathy with the waves, making another ocean in the air.

"Add to all this the clattering on deck and down below; the tread of hurried feet, the loud, hoarse shouts of seamen, the gurgling in and out of water through the scuppers, with every now and then the striking of a heavy sea upon the planks above, with the deep dead, heavy sound of thunder heard within a vault, and there is the wind of that January morning."—American Notes.

PAUL JONES.—A gentleman in Liverpool, England, has had photographed to the exact size of the originals, two official documents relative to Paul Jones. These documents were issued by the custom officials at Kirkcudbright, in 1770, and set forth that Paul Jones "is the master of the ship John of Dumfries," and that she "has on board a cargo of sugar, ginger, etc., all British sugar plantation product, brought direct from Grenadoes, a British plantation in America." In those days, "protection of native industry" was the rule of British national policy, and Capt. John Paul, as he is styled in the documents, had to declare that "all his crew were British seamen, and that since loading at Grenadoes, I have had no foreign sails or sailcloth on board." Paul Jones could handle a pen as well as a pistol, for his signature is remarkably bold and clear, with plenty of flourishes round the capital letters.

A man at Fredericksburg, Va., was recently knocked down by lightning. He had been at death's door with rheumatism previously, but has not felt a twinge since.

THE BOOMERANG.

The extraordinary weapon used hy the natives of Australia puzzles the most scientific men in the world It can be thrown a distance of three hundred feet, and will return and fall nt the feet of the thrower. As the Australian boomeraug is confessed to be one of the greatest things ever invented, so is the Sao Francisco BOOMERANG, at the corner of Washington and Dupont streets, acknowledged to be one of the greatest institutions of the city. The snug bar, the glorious Staffordshire Ale, the hot punches, made from the finest Scotch Whisky and the oldest Jamaica Rum —in fact, everything about the Boomerang is perfect.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whose husband supposed she had absconded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, and get one dozeo of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you want to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 snd 27 Third street, east side, near Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazsar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case sliver watches from the American Watch Compauy are superior to nnything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmauship is superior, the casiogs pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensivo on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, aud all kinds of musical instrumeuts, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your mouey to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery aud Pine streets.

N. B.—An immense assortment of Japanese curiosities for sale.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitablo for milk-men and furniture dealers, nnd others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagous from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagous have stood the test of our California climate, aud are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite tho Metrooiitau market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ WONDERFUL BUT TRUE.—MADAME REMINGton, tho world-renowned Astrologist and Somnnmbulistic Clairvnyant, while in a clairvoyant state, delineates the very features of the person you are to marry, and by the aid of an instrument of intense power, known as the Psychomotrope, guarantees to produce a perfect and life like picture of the future husband or wife of the applicant, with date of marriage, occupation, leading traits of character, etc. This is no imposition, as testimonials without number can assert. By stating place of birth, age, disposition, color of eyes and hair, and enclosing fifty cents and stamped envelope addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail, together with desired information.

Address in confidence, MADAME GERTRUDE REMINGTON, P. O. Box 297, West Troy, N. Y.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his cure. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) - CLAY STREET, (Old No

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Between Clay snd Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,

515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST-CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

HAT OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of

PIANO-FORTES.

FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.

☞ PIANOS TO RENT.☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S

Piano Manufactory

Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.

THE FAMOUS

PIANOS

OF

Chickering & Son

Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's'.

Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,

Have the Largest Office,

Do the most work,

And do it better

Than other offices

536 In this City,

Try them

With a Job,

And you will be

Satisfied the above

Statements are facts.

Their office is at 536

Clay St., below Montgom'y,

Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

San Francisco Mill.

H. OBBS, GILMORE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

BOXES,

Market Street, between Beale and Main,

SAN FRANCISCO.

For Sale, Mahogany, Spanish Cedar, and other Fancy Woods.

D. A. MACDONALD, J. H. MACDONALD, } J. MCGILL, H. CHIPMAN.

D. A. MACDONALD & CO.,

SAWING AND PLANING MILLS,

AND MANUFACTURERS OF

DOORS, SASHES, BLINDS AND MOULDINGS,

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Finishing Work for Buildings constantly on hand, and got up to order.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,

NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,

San Francisco.

SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

PIONEER IRON SHUTTER WORKS.

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

I. H. SMALL,

Machine Shop,

BUILDER OF

Steam Engines, Saw Mills, Mining Machinery,

Also, I. H. Small's Patent Boot Screwing Machine.

Gears of all kinds Cut at Short Notice,

And at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing of all kinds done with Promptness and Dispatch.

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. O. HANSCOM. H. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO. { T. PENDERGAST. W. W. HANSCOM.

Etna Iron Works!

S. E. corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,

Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,

MANUFACTURE

STEAM ENGINES,

QUARTZ-MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting

PISTON PACKING,

Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,

The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.

TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,

Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables.

All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.

SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES."

None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.

Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

☞ Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

THE CALIFORNIA

Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE, HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the Interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rate, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

DRESSING FOR CHURCH.

Has anybody heard the bell?
You have?—dear me! I know full well
I'll never dress in time—
For mercy's sake, come help me, Luce,
I'll make my toilet very spruce—
The silk is quite sublime!

Here, lace this gaiter for me—do;
"A hole!" yon say? plague take the shoe;
Please, Lucie, try and hide it,
Just think, it's Sunday, and, my soul,
I cannot wear it with a hole!
The men will surely spy it.

They're always peeping at our feet,
(Tho', to be sure, they needn't peep,
The way we bold our dresses;)
I'll disappoint them, though, to-day,
"And cross myself?" pray did you say?
Don't laugh at my distresses!

Now, Lucie, pray fix my waterfall—
Do you think it large? ain't it too small?
What bother those things give!
My rats and mice, do they set straight?
Please hurry, Lucie, I know I'm late—
"There's Willie," as I live!

How splendidly the silk will rustle!
(Please hand my "self-adjusting bustle,"
My corset and my hoop.)
There, now, I'll take five skirts or six—
Do hurry, Lucie, and help me fix;
You know I cannot stoop!

"How shall I say my prayers to-day?"
As if girls went to church to pray!
How can you be so foolish?
Here, damp this ribbon in cologne;
"What for?" to paint, you silly one!
Now, Lucie, don't be mulish.

Now, then, my hat—how he abhors
This thing—it's big as all out doors—
The frightful sugar-scoop!
Thank Heaven, my cloak is handsome, too,
It cost enough to be, I know—
(Straighten this horrid hoop!)

My handkerchief and gloves you'll find
Just in that drawer. Lucie, are you blind?
(Does my dress trail?)
It's all the fashion now, you know;
(Pray, does the paint and powder show
Through my loose veil?)

Thank you, my dear, I b'lieve I'm dressed;
The saints be praised! the day of rest
Comes only once in seven,
For if, on all the other six,
This trouble I should have to fix,
I'd never get to Heaven!

A GENTLE HINT.—At a concert which took place lately out West, a gentleman in the audience rose up just as the third piece in the programme had been performed, and said: "Mr. Conductor, will you oblige me, sir, by requesting your vocalists to sing louder, or to sing in whispers, as there is a conversation going on near by where I sit, that is conducted in such a loud tone as to hinder my enjoyment of the music. I prefer certainly to hear the concert; but if I cannot be so privileged I desire to hear the conversation." There was an extremely quiet and attentive audience in the hall during the rest of the evening.

NEARLY forty-three thousand dollars have been subscribed in and around Boston for the relief of the Southern destitute.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT, Jr., has purchased the L'Hirondelle, the crack sloop of Newport.

QUEEN VICTORIA has declared her purpose to permit no more hangings to occur in her dominions.

A. J. SWEETSER,

Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic

Song and Cage Birds,

CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.

No. 519 Kearney street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

THE GREAT
New England Remedy!

DR. J. W. POLAND'S
White-Pine Compound,

IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHOUT the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

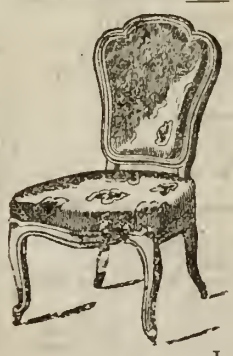
TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.



WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT HAVING BEEN imitated (poorly, however,) by an inferior and pernicious article, and sold in this market for the genuine, the Proprietor of HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT has made an alteration in the general trade-mark, and also substituted for Rheumatic Liniment, CURATIVE OIL. This great remedy will be known hereafter as HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,

For the Extermination of Pain, Is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.

For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

☞ Sole Agents—CRANE & BRIGHAM and R. H. McDONALD & CO., San Francisco.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,
Portland Boiler Works,

311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,
Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

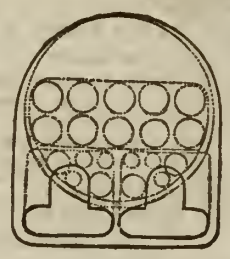
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.

Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.

T. J. MOYNIHAN,
JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, Manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; with out excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COBBLEDICK, } San Francisco.

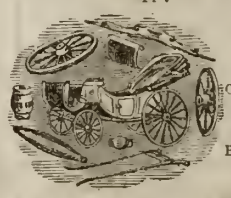
MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wagon & Carriage Materials,

NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.

The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, ETC.

Also, Importers of

GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,

Hub Boring Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & CO.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sbeldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Welderbold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalvo, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustavo Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Sav' 'aun's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhusb & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

Good for Forty Tunes.—The Shelby(Ind.) Courier, says: "Organs in the churches have become very fashionable of late. In almost every church you go into you will find one of these instruments. A friend of ours, who lives in a neighboring village, related to us yesterday an amusing incident which occurred in their church.

He said, to be in fashion, they must have an organ. The congregation could not afford to pay an organist, so they got a self-acting organ, a compact instrument, well suited to the purpose, and constructed to play forty tunes.

The sexton had instructions how to set it going, and how to stop it; but, unfortunately he forgot the latter part of his business; and after singing the first four verses of a hymn before the sermon, the organ could not be stopped, and continued playing two verses more; then just as the clergyman completed the words, 'let us pray,' the organ again clicked and started another tune.

The sexton and others continued their exertions to find the spring, but no one could put a stop it; so they got four of the stoutest men in the church to shoulder the perverse instrument, and they carried it down the aisle of the church, playing away, into the church yard, where it continued clicking and playing until the whole forty tunes were finished."

At a tableau exhibition in Auburn, New York, the following vegetable poem was produced:

"Onion garden bed reclining
Beets a youth his aching head;
Cauliflowers! Lo, weeds confront me!
Lettnce hence, he sadly said:
Carrots out the stoutest manhood,
Peas my wearied soul doth need;
Bean O! strive for me hereafter,
Else my heart will go to seed."

There was a "Topsy" in the Police Court in Detroit lately, in the shape of a colored girl who was called to the witness-stand. She surveyed the witness-box for a few moments, and, after mounting the highest portion of it she could find, directed the Court to "go ahead wid de sale."

Never look at the girls. They can't bear it; they regard it as an insult. They wear their feathers, furbelows and frills, merely to gratify their mammas, that's all!

A Western paper, in describing the debut of a young orator, says that "he broke the ice felicitously with the opening sentence, and was immediately drowned with applause."

Punch gets off an unpardonable joke, in saying that a mother gets her first impression of her baby by setting it in small caps.

The Paris Exhibition opened all in a heap. Nothing from the United States appeared to be assorted.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

Is a concentrated extract of the choice root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthouy's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolongod use of this Sarsaparilla, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this Extract of Sarsaparilla.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used Ayer's—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice. Dyepepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Hearthurn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco, and all Dealers.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petalnma.

WINE SALOON.

Union Saloon.—C. H. Cordes is the proprietor of the Union Saloon, Market street, a few doors south of Fremont, where is to be found the choicest wines and liquors. Mr. Cordes prides himself on his Kentucky Whisky, which is very old and oily. The "Davis" brand whisky drinkers should by all means call and test this whisky. Hot lunch is set on the table from 10 till 2.

California Wines.

Vintage 1862.

The undersigned offers for sale some very choice Wines, of the above named vintage. That connoisseurs, all interested in the development of this magnificent resource of our State, and the public generally, may be convinced that California is able to produce as good Wine (when properly treated and of sufficient age) as other parts of the Wine producing regions of the globe, attention is respectfully called to these Wines, by A. S. LOWNDES, Wine Merchant, 311 Battery Street, S. F.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

615 WASHINGTON STREET, 615,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDRO, - - - - Proprietor

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.
Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

Always on hand, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL-KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

Powell Street
WARM SWIMMING BATHS!

N. E. Corner Powell and Filbert Streets,
OPPOSITE WASHINGTON SQUARE.

J. M. NASH.....PROPRIETOR.

Warm and Cold Baths from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. daily, with every appliance usually connected with a well-ordered Gymnasium for the development of Health and Muscle.

The only Complete Swimming Bath on this Coast.

Another advantage connected with this establishment, not usually found in Swimming Baths, is, that the water is Continually Changing, Fresh Water running in and out Constantly.

Single Baths, including Towels and Bathing Dress.25 cts
5 Bath Tickets, " " $1

Call and Try Them. The Kearny Street and Montgomery Street Cars pass the door every five minutes.

The Baths are reserved for Ladies every Tuesday, from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. Ladies to supply their own Bathing Dresses.

I will guarantee to impart a thorough practical knowledge of Swimming in one month. Terms for the Course, $10.
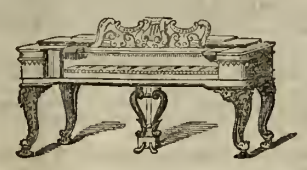
J. M. NASH.

THE CELEBRATED PIANOS



—OF—

J. B. DUNHAM, F. C. LIGHTE & CO.,
AND ERNEST GABLER,

Are warranted for FIVE YEARS, and indorsed by the LEADING PIANISTS of AMERICA as SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS.
Sole Agents— C WIEDERHOLD & CO.,
685 Market street, near Third.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS
Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

J. C. E. KLEPZIG,
MANUFACTURER
—AND—
DEALER IN GUNS, PISTOLS,

Sporting Apparatus,
AMMUNITION
AND GUN MATERIALS,
No. 733 Washington Street, San Francisco.
Gilding and Silver Plating of all kinds of metals; also, Silver or Plated Ware rehurnished.

HOLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
STOVES, TIN-PLATE,
SHEET IRON, LEAD PIPE, PUMPS, ZINC, WIRE, AND
HOUSE FURNISHING HARDWARE.
MANUFACTURERS OF
TIN, SHEET-IRON AND COPPER WARE.
Nos. 13 and 15 Front street.....San Francisco
Noe. 176 and 178 J street..... ....Sacramento
Main street.....Austin, Nevada

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE
HAVE IN STORE, EX LATE ARRIVALS, A FULL stock of
STOVES AND RANGES,
METALS, WIRE, IRON PIPE,
LEAD PIPE, BRASS GOODS, HOSE,
HOLLOW-WARE, TIN-WARE,
TINMEN'S STOCK AND TRIMMINGS,
TOOLS AND MACHINES,
Plumbers' Goods,
LIFT AND FORCE PUMPS,
Hansbrow's Patent
SHIP, FARM AND MINING PUMPS,
Which they offer to Dealers at the lowest market rates.
112 AND 114 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,
DENTIST,
No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast Call and examine specimens.
North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.
N. T. WHITCOMB.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 KEARNY STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.
Office Hours: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma
H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF
MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.
(706 Sansome St. 706)
SAN FRANCISCO.
BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR
RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES
C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.
☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.
WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE
FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.
GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines halve is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all grades of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A. DEMING,
137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner.
Samuel Hill, Agent,
111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

THE SOUTHERN FEELING.

"Gris," the correspondent of the Cincinnati Weekly Times, writes from Chattanooga, on the 29th of April, as follows:

"All along the route, from Nashville to Chattanooga, there are mounds of earth, more or less extensive, that resemble fortifications. Can it be that they have been having a difficulty down this way? It looks like somebody had been having tronble with the South. They were the only indications visible to me, however, of the late struggle. Occasionally you see a faded gray uniform, patched and soiled but you see the blue, too. I saw many a group of colored children in which little ebony faces were struggling to peer from beneath soldier caps, all to large for them, quite unconscious of the share their black skins had had in peopling the land with those military head coverings. I have heard very little reference made to political snbjects, and I have certainly heard none of that bitter acrimony toward the Union and Union men that pains the ears of many correspondents who penetrate this region. I haven't been shot at once because I came from opposite Covington, and I haven't seen a single Union man adorning shade trees by the roadside. The fact is, the people hereaway got all they wanted of war, if their politicians, who took precious good care to keep out of it, did not. Some of our Northern copperheads may think them meanspirited; but they are really more concerned about providing snstenance and apparel for their families, than they are about the negro voting. They are rapidly coming back to the frame of mind in which they were when Lee snrrendered, and are about as ready to "accept the situation" as could be desired. The advice of such prominent rebels as Lee and Longstreet is having its effects, and the path to speedy reconstruction seems tolerably clear. They have relinquished all hope of aid from the Northern Democrats, and they look upon Andy Johnson, whom a year ago they claimed as their particular "Moses," with contempt. Here in Chattanooga there is the most friendly feeling between men who have served in the rival armies. If I am introduced to Colonel this, or Captain that, or Major so-and-so, I am constrained to inquire in which of our American armies he served. It is pretty generally conceded by soldiers who fought on both sides that there were two tolerably powerful armies on this continent for four years; and so far as courage, endurance, pluck, and all mere fighting qualities are concerned, no American need be ashamed of either. Should any foreign nation have the andacity to pluck the beard of our Uncle Samuel, the soldier of the Union and the defender of the late so-called would be found fighting side by side, I am convinced."

A. J. SWEETSER,
Dealer in all kinds of Foreign and Domestic
Song and Cage Birds,
CAGES, SEED-SHELLS, GOLD AND SILVER FISH, GLOBES, AQUARIES, ETC.
No. 519 Kearney street, between Sacramento and California, San Francisco.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.
N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.
J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.
RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

MRS. WINSHIP,
Fashionable Milliner,

NO. 23 POST STREET,
Between Kearny and Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.
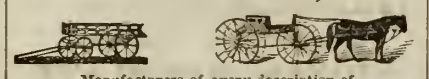
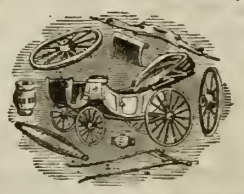
All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.
Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.
Goods received by every steamer, from New York and Paris.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,
CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.
Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.
THEODORE MEETZ.....President
WM. ERZGRABER.....Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.....Secretary
TRUSTEES.
FABIAN JOOST, HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT, FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE, PETER MEYER.
The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best
Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer
In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.
All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,


Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

A. FOLSOM,


Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
cornerner of Sansome, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.
Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.
Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.
UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,
HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.
LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.
DIRECTORS.
J. Mora Moss, Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis, Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron, Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle, Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe, John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor, J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander, M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller, C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard, James Phelan,
Charles L. Low, Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle, Michael Castle,
James Dows, Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller, N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen, Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper, Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet, Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein, Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham, William Smith, Marysville.
CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

BAKER & HAMILTON,
IMPORTERS OF
Agricultural Implements,
MACHINES, HARDWARE, ETC.,
NOS. 17 AND 19 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO,
NOS. 9, 11, 13 AND 15 J STREET,
(Near the Levee,) SACRAMENTO,
Eastern Office, 88 Wall Street, New York,
OFFER:
Buckeye Reapers, 5 and 6 feet; Mowers, 2 sizes.
Ball's Ohio Reapers; Mowers, 3 sizes.
Burt's Eagle Reapers and Mowers, double and single gear.
McCormack's Reapers and Mowers, hand and self-raking.
Manny Reaper and Mower, 5 feet cut—cheap.
Wood's Prize Combined Machines, 5 feet cut.
Kirby's Reapers and Mowers, 5 feet cut.
Wood's Prize Mowers, jointed and stiff bars.
Badger State Reapers and Mowers.
Russell's Junior Mowers.
Union Mowers, 2 sizes.
Champion Mowers.
Bay State Mowers.
Haine's Headers, iron wheels—genuine.
Haine's Headers, screw hub wheels—genuine.
Header Wagons, screw hub wheels.
Pitt's Improved Threshers, 24 to 40-inch cylinders.
Aultman's Sweepstakes Threshers, 33 to 40-inch cylinders.
Pitt's Double Pinion and Iron Horse Power.
Portable Steam Engines, 5 to 20-horse power.
Wheel Wire Horse Rakes.
Revolving and Wire Horse Rakes.
Hay Presses, Hay Rope and Baling Wire.
Scythes, Snathes, Rakes, Cradles, Forks, etc.
Rubber and Leather Belting, all sizes.
Single Plows and Gang Plows.
Harrows, Horse Hoes, Cultivators.
Fan Mills, Grain Mills, Hay Cutters.
Wine and Cider Presses, Churns.
Broadcast Seed Sowers and Seed Drills.
Ox Yokes, Road Scrapers, etc., etc.
Samples of machines may be seen at their new warerooms. BAKER & HAMILTON,
Front street, between Pine and Market streets, San Francisco.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
Headley's Great Work!
The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,
Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.
In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.
E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.
LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.
RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,
MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,
ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON, SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.
Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

WINE SALOON.

UNION SALOON.—C. H. Cordes is the proprietor of the Union Saloon, Market street, a few doors south of Fremont, where is to be found the choicest wines and liquors. Mr. Cordes prides himself on his Kentucky Whisky, which is very old and oily. The "Davis" brand whisky drinkers should by all means call and test this whisky. Hot lunch is set on the table from 10 till 2.

California Wines.

Vintage 1862.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFERS FOR SALE SOME very choice Wines, of the above named vintage. That connoisseurs, all interested in the development of this magnificent resource of our State, and the public generally, may be convinced that California is able to produce as good Wine (when properly treated and of sufficient age) as other parts of the Wine producing regions of the globe, attention is respectfully called to these Wines, by A. S. LOWNDES, Wine Merchant,
311 Battery Street, S. F.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

615 WASHINGTON STREET, 615,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A, ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—

HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under
Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Souoma Champague, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

REMOVAL.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

To the S. E. corner Montgomery and Pine streets,

San Francisco.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,

OPTICIANS

THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined.

SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.

Double sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.

Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.

N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 and 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

JACOB SHEW,

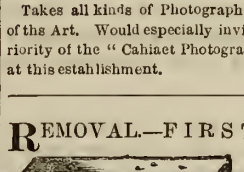
Pioneer Photographer

612 CLAY STREET,

North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM



Billiard
TABLE
MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

Has removed from 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description. All goods sold are warranted.

THE MOST PERFECT CUTTING MACHINE EVER MADE

HUBBARD PRIZE MOWER

The Excelsior Mower of the Day.

The Makers of this Celebrated Machine have finally been enabled to increase their manufacturing facilities to such an extent, as to equal the Eastern demand, and permit of a full stock being kept at San Francisco for the wants of the Pacific Farmers.

This Machine took the FIRST GOLD MEDAL PREMIUM from

EIGHTEEN COMPETITORS,

At the Great Public Trial of MOWERS held at Utica, New York.

Farmers and Dealers, send for a pamphlet, and consult your own interests by examining this Machine before you make your purchases for the season.

ADDRESS

WM. B. ISAACS,

Office of the Russel & Erwin Manufacturing Company,

106 AND 108 BATTERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES

Executed in a Superior Style, at

GEO. D. MORSE'S

NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,
No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of DANIEL B. BARNES, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Stephen Smith, Administrator of the Estate of Daniel B. Barnes, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the entitled;

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the third day of June, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of said deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said third day of June A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated May 3d, A. D. 1867. my4-5t5

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN JENNER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Jenner, the Executor of the last will and testament of Ellen Jenner, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heirs and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 3d day of June, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs and devisees of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said third day of June, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 23d, A. D. 1867.

THOS. B. BISHOP, Att'y for Executor. ap27-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, William Rowan, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said William Rowan, at No 532 Merchant street, Room No. 3, in the City and County of San Francisco.

WM. ROWAN.

Administrator of the estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 26th, 1867. ap17-tf

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CHARLES MITCHELL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of Charles Mitchell, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF LUDWIG IGEL, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of LUDWIG IGEL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated April 11th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Ludwig Igel, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JACOB R. MAYER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 523 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Dated April 13th, A. D. 1867.

A. W. BOWMAN,

Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Jacob R. Mayer, deceased. ap13-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ROBERT CARTER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of Robert Carter, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix, at the place of transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, John F. Finn, No. 36 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

GRACE CARTER,

Administratrix of the Estate of Robert Carter, deceased.

Dated April 12, 1867. ap13-5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No. 5 of the 100 vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber I of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.

THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF San Francisco. In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.

Order of Publication on application for order of sale.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Quarles, administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 20th day of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 17th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Probate Court, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Petitioner. ap20-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate left unadministered of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated April 12th, A. D. 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Thomas A. Kimball, deceased

WINANS & BELKNAP, Att'ys for Administrator. ap13-5t.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CARS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Staga Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

The Beautiful and Fascinating

HELEN WESTERN,

Supported by THE GRAND COMBINATION COMPANY,

This Afternoon.....May Eleventh,

FRENCH SPY MATINEE.

THIS EVENING,

Oliver Twist, and Jonathan Bradford.

In Rehearsal—The CORSICAN BROTHERS, introducing the celebrated Mechanical effect of the Moving Graveyard, and ending with a Grand Apotheosis.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra $1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE.....Proprietor
CHARLES TIBBETTS.....Business Manager

ITALIAN OPERA.

SATURDAY EVENING.....MAY 11th,

Will be presented the Grand Opera of

IL TROVATORE.

Leonora.....Signorina Eugenia Bellini.
Azucena.....Madame Stella Bouheur.
Manrico.....Signor E. Bianchi.
Count di Luni.....Signor G. Mancusi.
Ferrardo.....Signor S. Milleri.

Being the debut in San Francisco of the young and beautiful Prima Donna,

SIGORINA EUGENIA BELLINI.

MONDAY EVENING.....LUCIA DE LAMMERMOOR.

Conductor.....MR. GEO. T. EVANS.

NOTICE.—In consequence of the expense attendant upon the management of this great combination of artistes, the Prices of admission for the Opera Season will be as follows:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 50
(No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.)
Family Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 1 00
Gallery, - - - - - - - - - - - 50

☞The Regular Subscription Nights will be Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, but Subscribers' Tickets will be good for any representation, and their seats will be held for them for any night, by notice left at the Box Office.

THE CENTRAL PARK OF THE PACIFIC.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery,

Museum, Gymnasium

.....AND.....

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THESE BEAUTIFUL GARDENS ARE VISITED DAILY by hundreds of the pleasure seeking public, and all agree in pronouncing them the best and only first class suburban resort on the Pacific coast.

The extensive grounds are covered with the rarest trees and shrubbery, making it a most desirable spot for small parties wishing to enjoy a Pic-Nic.

New attractions are being constantly added.

These Gardens are accessible by the Howard, Market and Folsom street cars. Entrances on Mission and Valencia streets, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth. OPEN EVERY DAY.

Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 years, half price.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

between California and Pine.

JAMES C. PARKINSON JOHN J. MAHONEY.

PARKINSON & MAHONEY,

GILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS

—OF—

LOOKING-GLASS AND PICTURE FRAMES,

No. 333 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco. All kinds of Oval Frames, Lithographs and Engravings kept constantly on hand. Pictures cleaned and varnished. Old Frames regilt.

ARRIVAL

—OF—

MADAME LAURUSTINUS,

The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europa, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

MONTHLY LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MAY, 1867.

A Journey to Ashango-Land. By Du Chaillu.
Sybil's Second Love. By Julia Kavanagh.
Annual of Scientific Discovery for 1866 and 1867.
Black Sheep; a Novel. By Edmund Yates.
Lion in the Path. By J. Saunders.
Beale on the Microscope in Practical Medicine; new edition.
Treusseau's Clinical Medicine—Part II.
Up and Down the London streets. By Mark Lemon.
Thomas' American Fruit Culturist; new edition.
Natural Theology. By Prof. P. A. Chadbourne.
"Maga" Stories. Putnam's Railway Classics.
Literary Life of J. K. Paulding. Compiled by his Son, Wm. I. Paulding.
Froude's History of England—Vols. IX and X.
Æneid of Virgil. Translated by J. Conington, M. A.
Edgar A. Poe's Prose Tales; new edition—2 vols.
Political Writings of Richard Cobden—2 vols.
The Rich Husband. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
Sut Lovingood's Yarns.
Siege of Washington. By F. C. Adams.
The Reign of Law. By the Duke of Argyll.
Mexico under Maximilian. By H. M. Flint.
Edged Tools. (Win and Wear Series.)
Lydia. A Tale of the Second Century.
The English of Shakspeare. By Geo. L. Craik.
True Protestant Ritualism. By Rev. Chas. H. Hall.
Five Centuries of English Literature.
Incidents Connected with the Pacific Railroad. By S. Seymour.
History of California—in German. By Karl Ruhl.
Voice and Action. By Prof. J. E. Frobisher.
Battle Fields of Virginia—Chancellorsville.
Coming Wonders Expected between 1867 and 1875.
Layres' Elements of Composition. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Campaign of Mobile. By Bvt. Maj.-Gen'l C. C. Andrews.
Warren's Problems of Shades and Shadows.
Family Prayers for the Christian Year. By Henry Alford, D. D.
Sequel to Ministering Children—2 vols. 18mo.
Christian Ethics. By Joseph Alden.
Percy's Reliques—3 vols. Tauchnitz Edition.
Swedenborg's Heaven and Hell; new edition—8vo.
Chambers on Indigestion—8vo.
Ecce Deus, with Controversial Notes on "Ecce Homo."
David Copperfield. Diamond Edition.
Harriet Beecher Stowe's Religious Poems. Illustrated.
Famous Americans of Recent Times. By Jas. Parton.
Gardening for Profit. By Peter Henderson.
Back-Bone; Photographed from "The Scalpel."
Annals of a Quiet Neighborhood. By Rev. Geo. MacDonald.
Wells' Every Man His Own Lawyer, and Form Book.
Cummings & Miller's Architecture. Designs for Street Fronts.
Da Costa on Inhalation.
Atwater's Manual of Elementary Logic.

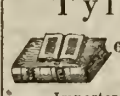
PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,

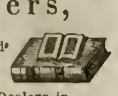
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,

Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

Tyler Brothers,



691 Market st., cor. Third,



SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we Stamp with Initials

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

Engraved, Written or Printed.

LOTS FOR SALE ON RERNAL RANCHO.

NOTICE IS GIVEN, THAT IN PURSTANCE OF AN Order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the undersigned will sell at public auction, in two separate parcels, subject to confirmation by said Court, on TUESDAY, the 4th day of June, 1867, at 12 o'clock noon, at the auction rooms of MAURICE DORE & CO., No. 327 Montgomery street, in said City and County, the real estate belonging to the Estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, described as follows, to-wit:

All those certain pieces or parcels of land situated, lying and being on the Bernal Rancho, in the City and County of San Francisco, aforesaid and known and designated upon a certain map entitled, "Gift Map No. 3," as and by the numbers 269 and 271—being each 25 feet in width, in front and rear, and 70 feet deep.

Terms of Sale—Cash, in United States Gold Coin. Deeds and Stamps at expense of purchaser.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator of the Estate of Cornelius Rickter, deceased.
Dated May 11th, 1867. my11-3w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HENRY SEAMAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

JANE SEAMAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of Henry Seaman, deceased.
May 10th, 1867. my11 6w

MAURICE DORE & CO.,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

AUCTIONEERS.

OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.,

H. A. COBB, Auctioneer.

TUESDAY.

TUESDAY.....MAY 14th, 1867.

AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,

At Salesroom, No. 327 Montgomery Street,

CREDIT SALE OF

Alameda Property,

500 VILLA LOTS

On the Encinal, near Alameda Station,

ON THE RAILROAD, AND DIRECTLY FRONTING THE

ALAMEDA PARK HOTEL,

SIZE OF LOTS—Fifty by One Hundred and Fifty Feet.

TITLE PERFECT.

TERMS:

Extremely liberal—will be announced in a few days.

We present this splendid property to the public with every confidence that for country residence purposes, its equal cannot be found in the neighborhood of San Francisco.

Some of its great and peculiar advantages are, unequalled productiveness of soil for all manner of shrubbery and garden purposes; its grand old oak trees, unsurpassed in the State; its climate, the best in California, and its accessibility to business, the passage to and from the city being made at almost every hour of the day, by steam ferry and railroad, in 30 minutes.

The blocks are properly staked on the corners, and names of streets painted thereon, so that persons will have no difficulty in finding any locality.

☞Further particulars in a few days.

MAURICE DORE & CO., Auctioneers.

Don't Read This!

PORK TRIMMINGS not GIVE AWAY.

PRICES:

Pigs' Heads..... 6 cents
Pigs' Feet..... 7 cents
Pigs' Tongues.....10 cents
Tails..... 7 cents
Spare Ribs.....10 cents
Sausage Meat..... 8 cents
Pork Roast.....10 cents
Sugar Cured Hams.....18 cents
Breakfast Bacon.....18 cents
Leaf Lard.....15 cnets

The above are from grain-fed Hogs.

No. 1 American Beef.....from 5 to 10 cents
Sugar Cured Smoked Beef.....12½ cents
Choice Mutton.....5 to 7 cents

FOR SALE—1,000 South Down SHEEP.

WILSON & STEVENS,
508 Market street,
9 Sutter street.

D. GHERARDELLIS & CO.'S

Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.

CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Gherardellis' Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any imported Chocolate.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - PROPRIETOR

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MAY.

May 18th—MONTANA, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Harris.
May 30th—SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

JAMES H. BLETHEN.....Commander

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

WEDNESDAY, - - MAY 15th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship SANTIAGO, 2,500 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞The AMERICA will sail June 5th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

There cometh glad tidings of joy to all,
To young and old, to great and to small;
The beauty which was once so precious and rare,
Is free for all, and all may be fair.

By the use of

CHASTELLAR'S

WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL,

FOR IMPROVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE COMplexion.

The most valuable and perfect preparation in use, for giving the skin a beautiful pearl-like tint, that is only found in youth. It quickly removes Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Blotches, Moth Patches, Sallowness, Eruptions, and all impurities of the skin, kindly healing the same, leaving the skin white and clear as alabaster. Its use cannot be detected by the closest scrutiny, and being a vegetable preparation is perfectly harmless. It is the only article of the kind used by the French, and is considered by the Parisian as indispensable to a perfect toilet. Upwards of 30,000 bottles were sold during the past year, a sufficient guarantee of its efficacy. Price only 75 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of order, by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Excelsior! Excelsior!!

CHASTELLAR'S

HAIR EXERMINATOR, FOR REMOVING SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

TO THE LADIES ESPECIALLY, THIS INVALUABLE depilatory recommends itself as being an almost indispensable article to female beauty, is easily applied, does not burn or injure the skin, but acts directly on the roots. It is warranted to remove superfluous hair from low foreheads, or from any part of the body, completely, totally and radically extirpating the same, leaving the skin soft, smooth and natural. This is the only article used by the French, and is the only real effectual depilatory in existence. Price 75 cents per package, sent post paid, to any address, on receipt of an order by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Whiskers and Mustaches!

FORCED TO GROW UPON THE SMOOTHEST FACE face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

Beauty!

Auburn, Golden, Flaxen and Silken Curls,

PRODUCED BY THE USE OF PROF. DE BREUX FRISER LE CHEVEUX.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets, or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London, with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No. 26. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 18, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

Original: Glimpses of Bohemia, by an Old Stager; Our Dog, by Prentice; Is Our Sytem of Government a Failure? Literary Gleanings; The Progress of Ritualism in the Episcopal Church; Walter Savage Landor; Books Received; The Opera; Dramatic Affairs; "LION'S MOUTH:" A Shocking Case of Distress; Epic on the Deceased De Haro Claim; The Alchemist and the Jews; A Census Takers Troubles; etc. And five pages of choice selcted Stories, Essays, Sketches, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me."
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

The "Local's" Painful Task.

The "Local" of the Alta thus moralizes:

"However outsiders may regard it, it is not a gracious duty to chronicle the crimes, frailties, follies, and misfortunes of our fellow men, as they are too frequently displayed in the proceedings at the Police Court As among other large populations, there are doubtless many in ours who delight to gratify a morbid curiosity to know the shortcomings of their fellow creatures, and find pleasure in reading a recital of how this and that one came to grief, and being made acquainted with the minute details of the conduct of the unfortunates who appear before the tribunal."

Our heart bleeds for that local. He doesn't gloat over a murder case, he doesn't make exquisitely humorous jokes about burglaries and write up cases of assault and battery in a thrilling style Oh no! It was Fitz-Smythe who used to do that sort of thing, (by the by, Fitz-Smythe has returned.) This local, in reporting the case of the Jew who ran away with a girl from New York the other day, this same local who is so averse to gratifying the "morbid curiosity" of the public, informed them of the name of the hotel to which Meyer took his wife after he was released from custody. Of course this was his duty, and he had to perform it however ungracious it might be.

A Census Taker's Troubles.

The time for the taking of the inevitable yearly school census approaches. Our attention was lately arrested by seeing some blanks to be used by the unfortunate men appointed for the marshalship. These blanks require the unfortunate to enter respectable houses and inquire "How many negro, Mongolian and Indian children under fifteen have you here?" There is trouble ahead for the census taker. We once took a school census in an interior county. It was an arduous task tramping over an area equal in extent to the State of Rhode Island, in the hottest of California summer weather, going from ranch to ranch, often miles apart, treated with coolness verging at times on rudeness, suspected of being a tax collector or some other disagreable Federal official by heads of families noted for their secession proclivities, (this was in '60). And for all this we received nine dollars. The county Supervisors laboring under a severe fit of retrenchment, cut down our modest bill of twenty dollars to nine. We survived, but our boots did not. They fell martyrs in the cause of education.

A Terrible Infliction Threatened.

"A competent manager" advertises for two ladies who wish to adopt the stage as a profession. His offers are "instructions given gratis; liberal salary paid and a guarantee to put them on the stage in this city one week after they commence rehearsal." Now we see trouble to come out of this. It is terrible to think that before long two ladies who have rehearsed a week will appear on the stage in this city. Of course the manager will not be able to find any lady who wishes to adopt the stage as her profession, who will be willing to make her first appearance in a minor part. If that manager succeeds in procuring these two ladies, we may expect to see The Wife and The Hunchback announced in the bills shortly. We have turned out some very good actors and actresses in California, but the public have suffered much. One debutante at a time is as much as they should be expected to stand.

Thoroughly Posted-Scudderania.

Advertising has taken a new form when it comes from the pulpit. Among other notices read after the morning or evening discourse, we may hear as follows:

"Smith is a good barber. I have been a barber myself. He is thoroughly posted."

"Jones is not a bad dentist. I have pulled teeth myself. He is thoroughly posted."

"Brown keeps well broken horses and will drive you anywhere without charging exorbitantly. I have been in the livery business myself. He is thoroughly posted."

"Briggs is a superior whitewasher. I have whitewashed myself. He is thoroughly posted."

Epic on the Deceased De Haro Claim.

Great legal monster, most stupendous swindle,
Rivalling Bolton and Burron, Limantour and Moore,
Which o'er the Potrero like a black cloud hung,
Covering some 900 acres,
And like an avalanche threatened to overwhelm
About 1200 acres beside, of most valuable city property.
Generated in the city of brotherly love,
Having in thy favor concentruted
Formidable personal and political influences,
Thou art crushed, squelched and annihilated.
The holders of city property freer breathe,
And torturing anxiety no more invests lot owners' souls.
O, fearful would have been the ruin
That followed in the trail of thy success.
For, like unto a slimy hydra-headed worm,
Thou wouldst have crept and poked each separate head,
Into each separate interest.
These interests ramifying far and wide,
In each particular ramification
Would poisoned be,
By the deadly virus of thy numerous fangs,
And lands unlimited been gobbled up.
No down
In thy insatiate maw.
And yet besides
Other and more fearful beasts
By thy success encouraged, woul l have crept
Forth from the dim, dark, nasty, musty, tobacco and whisky tainted dens of law
Blasting with noisome breath of fraudulent titles
The city and the State.
Rest, monster rest!
'Twon't pay.
Black boots, dig clams, vend apples,
Aye, bear even the advertising banners
Of noble, enterprising corn doctors,
Rather than seek to filch from us
Our homesteads by honest industry acquired.

A Shocking Case of Distress.

Last Monday morning, at about six o'clock, we discovered a painful case of destitution in a building on Merchant street. There he crouched in a corner surrounded by a construction displaying exquisite artistic skill on which much time and labor had evidently been bestowed. There were no signs of food anywhere. The anxious, hungry look of the industrious but unfortunate laborer moved our compassion, and we immediately went in search of something with which to relieve his necessities. Food suitable for him appeared very hard to obtain at that early hour in the morning, and nearly a quarter of an hour was spent in fruitless efforts to obtain a delicate morsel for this deserving object of charity. There the poor spider had to remain in unxious anticipation while we were trying to catch flies. At length we caught one—not such a fly as we could have wished—it was a thin, dirty, degraded-looking little fly, but still it was better than nothing. We hurried back to the hungry sufferer and cast the fly into his magnificent web, with one bound he sprang upon it and dragged it into his eating room. The fly didn't like it, but what of that, it was not a happy fly and was quite as well off dead as alive. On the other hand, all the spider required to make him happy was a sufficiency of flies. He had spent a considerable portion of his life in constructing his dwelling, had been unfortunate in choosing a location for it, but like the inhabitants of Sacramento, would not give it up. We succeeded with much trouble in catching three more flies—all lean and haggard-looking; we imagine they must have been underground flies just dug up by the workmen engaged in making the sewer. How that spider is to subsist if flies continue as scarce as they were last Monday, we cannot imagine. No doubt he thinks the scarcity of flies a far more serious evil than the high price of beef. He probably regarded us in the light of a special providence, and imagined himself Elijah fed by ravens, we being the raven. That spider shall not starve.

Company for Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Davis.

The Flag, since its resuscitation, has become uncommonly mild and merciful. It almost sympathizes with Jefferson Davis, and does not howl with rage at his release on bail. It says:

"He is undoubtedly a brave man, and the axe, the gibbet or the faggot, would be a relief from his friendless abandonment in the earth. He and his faithful wife are the Salathiel and Miriam of the 'Lost Cause;' and as they wander over the desolate country of their people, they will encounter the mournful bittern and the solitary pelican of the desert."

We don't think that Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Davis are likely to see it exactly in that light. As to their meeting the mournful bittern and the pelican of the wilderness, that's all bosh, and even if they did, pelicans don't bite. It is extremely likely that this brave man and his faithful wife will resume their old place in society in Richmond, among those who were equally engaged in the "Lost Cause" with Jefferson Davis. It is comfortable to find the Flag becoming merciful at last.

The Alchemist and the Jews.

One of the most wonderful events of the nineteenth century has occurred in San Francisco. Jews are not generally considered people whom it is easy to swindle out of money, but evidence was adduced on the trial of John Richards Hobson which took place on Thursday last, which conclusively proves that there are members of this acute and far-seeing race whom it is possible to gull. First Tuckalasky and Morris gave Hobson $500 and Falk gave him $1,000, afterwards Falk gave him $2,000. Part of this money Hobson expended in the purchase of iron filings and part he dissolved in muriatic acid, the liquified gold in conjunction with certain chemicals, iron filings and cow dung would, Hobson assured his Jewish clients, be changed into gold. Hobson dug a hole in the ground under the direction of the invisibles who first told him how to make gold, and the Jews got into it and prayed. There is one curious statement in Hobson's evidence. He says: "I did what Jehovah told me to do; he told me, my people shall fleece thee as a sheep sheared.'" It appears that Hobson wished to turn the tables on the Lord's people and fleeced them. It is evident that Hobson is no ordinary man. We sympathize with Tuckalasky, Morris and Falk; they have expended money and prayers without receiving any return. They prayed fervently we are sure, and alas Hobson "fleeced them as a sheep sheared." What a number of proselytes the Spiritualists would make if the invisibles would only teach those with whom they communicate how to make or find gold. The streets of the New Jerusalem are to be paved with gold, therefore, let us pray fervently that we may go there. Many persons would pray if they felt sure that they would be paid for doing so—in gold. Glorious Gold!

A Highly Proper Fair.

At the fair to be given by the ladies of the different evangelica churches for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, "no charades, masquerades, or tableaux or anything at all of fensive to those opposed to such amusements" will be allowed. The whole affair will probably be conducted on the most gigantic scale of orthodox dullness, ill timed levity will be rebuked, smiles will be frowned down, and not one of the Christian Young Men will run any risk of being shocked. The Alta is responsible for the above statement. We trust it may prove true, but we are exceedingly troubled at the description of the attractions which are thought unobjectionable appearing in the same paper. There are to be no charades or tableaux, but oh!

"They have determined to have a Flora Temple, the shrine of thirty deesses; a Turkish Bazaar, wherein California houris will hold sway; a New England Kitchen, and a Picture Gallery."

We should like to know what business "deesses" have at a Christian Festival! Worse still, far more horrifying, and indeed, utterly abominable is the "Turkish Bazaar wherein California Houris will hold sway!" Houris are horribly bad characters, and we are sure that Judge Deady would disapprove of a representation of a Mahomadan paradise with Houris lying round loose. It wont do for these Christian Young Men to express virtuous indignation at charades and tableaux, and then have a Turkish Bazaar full of Houris.

The Mild and Stupid "Flag."

The poor Flag is very silly at present. It wishes to make friends with all its contemporaries except the Call. On Thursday it apologized to the Examiner thus:

"Our cotemporary is assured that the Flag is incapable of intending a deliberate and unprovoked affront to a neighbor of ability and cultivation."

Dear, dear, how long is it since the Flag discovered that the "copperhead Examiner" was "a neighbor of ability and cultivation?" In its anxiety to injure the Call, which it considers its especial rival, it makes an absurd blunder. It publishes the following:

"VILE.—Since its apostacy from the Union party, the little Call appears to be gravitating deplorably. It yesterday contained an editorial advertisement of a disreputable woman, 'who arrived from the East by the last steamer, is about thirty years of age, rather tall, of prepossessing appearance, with a profusion of rich, flowing ringlets,' etc.

A journal of such peculiar characteristics must be a nice thing to have in families!"

The unhappy Flag not having many * notices to publish, was unable to guess that the paragraph which incited its indignation was an advertisement of the old play, The Female Pickpocket, which is to be played at one of the melodeons.

More Savage Animals.

It is terrible to reflect that the citizens of San Francisco cannot walk the streets without running the risk of being bitten, mangled and perhaps torn to pieces by vicious horses. Only the other day a gentleman was terribly bitten in the back by a horse standing in the street. We hope the Board of Supervisors will immediately pass an ordinance forbidding any horse to appear in the street unmuzzled. They might also empower the police to shoot any horse without a muzzle. The ferocious dogs of this city are behaving very well at present—they have not eaten anyone lately; it is now time to protect our citizens from ferocious horses.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER XV.—JIM SWAIN'S REVELATION.

CONTINUED.

THEN Jim made a desperate effort and told his story—told it in his ignorant, blundering fashion—told it with circumlocution and hesitation, but never interrupted. Mr. Lowther heard him without a word, and held Mr. Felton and the two women silent by the unspoken counsel of his glance.

"I had done many an odd job at the house in South Molton street, said the boy when he had told them a good deal about himself, in a rambling way, "and I knowed Mr. Routh well, but I don't snppose he knowed me; and when I saw him a-lingerin' about the tavern, and a-lookin' in at the winder, he wasn't no stranger to me. Well, he giv' me the letter, and I giv' it to the gentleman. He had a beard as came down to a point, and was sharp with me, but not so sharp as the waiter, as I giv' him his own sauce, and the gentleman laughed, and seemed as if he didn't object to me holdin' of my own; but Mr. Dallas, which I didn't know his name then, he didn't laugh, and he asks the gentleman if there weren't no answer, and the gentleman says no there weren't none, and somehow I seemed to know as he wanted to spite Mr. Routh. So I felt cur'ous about it, particklar when I see as Mr. Routh looked savage when I came out of the coffee-room and told him there weren't no answer. You must understand," said Jim, who had regained his composure now, and was in the full tide of his discourse, which he addressed exclusively to Mr. Lowther, with the instinctive delicacy which Harriet Routh had once observed in the neglected boy, "as I was not to say he was there; I were merely to give the note. He giv' me sixpence, and he went away down the Strand. I got a horse-holdin' job just then, and it were a long 'un; and there I was when tho two gents came to the door, a-smoking their cigars, and then the gent as I held his horse took him from me, and I hadn't nothin' better to do than to follow them, which I did; for who should I see but Mr. Routh a-skulkin' along the other side of the Strand, as if he wanted to keep 'em in sight without their seenin' of him. I follered them, sir, and follered them feelin' as if I was one of them 'ere wild Ingins in the 'Alfpenny 'Alf-hours on a trail, until I follered them to Boyle's billiard rooms, as I knows it well, and had swept it often on a Sunday mornin'. They went in, and I was tired of hangin' about, and was going away, when I see Routh again. There weren't nobody in the street but him and me. I skulked into a lane and watched him, and I don't know how long we was there—I a little way down the lane, and he a saunterin' up and down, and lookin' at the doors and windows, but never goin' nigh the house. It must ha' been very late when the two gents came out, and I was very tired; but the old woman—that's my aunt, sir—had had a row in the morning, and I thought I'd like to giv' her a fright, and stay out all night, which I haven't often slep in the street, considerin.'"

Jim had ceased to wriggle about on his chair, to twist his cap between his hands, and to shuffle his feet upon the floor. He was nearly as motionless as the listeners, who heard him in breathless silence. By degrees Clare had drawn nearer to Mr. Felton, and she was now standing, her hand in his, her head in its former place upon his shoulder, behind Jim's chair. But the character of the group formed by tho two was no longer what it had been; the girl was supporting the man now; tho girl was silently nerving him to courage and resolution.

"They came out, sir," the boy continued, "very friendly-like and good humored, and Mr. Dallas, he were a-laughin', and he shook hands with the other gent, which he called himself Mr. Deane—it were on the note; and he went away whistlin' down the very lane as I was in, passed me close, and never saw me. I saw him, though, quite plain, I thought, 'You've been winnin', and you likes it;' but still I had my eye on Mr. Routh, and presently I sees him speakin' to the other gent, as was puttin' on his big fur coat, which it had a 'ood to it as I never see one like it afore. I thought they wouldn't be pleasant together, and they wasn't not to judge by their voices, and I heard the other gent give a sneerin' kind of a laugh, which were aggravatin'; and soon they walked away together, through the Bar and up Fleet street, and I followed 'em, for I thought I'd sleep under the dry arch of the bridge, and get a chance of odd jobs at the early trains in the mornin', which they're profitable if you ain't too tired. They was talkin' and talkin', and the oddest thing was that I knew they was quarrellin', though I couldn't hear a word they said, and I knew the other gent was a sneerin' and a-aggravatin' of Mr. Routh, and yet they was arm-in-arm all the time like brothers. They went on, and there wasn't a livin' bein' in the street but them and me and an odd p'liceman or so, wot took no notice, only beat their 'ands together and passed by. All on a sudden, when they wos near the bridge, and close to all the little narrow streets down there, I gets tired, and don't seem to care about follerin' of 'em; and then, while I am thinkin' of makin' for the dry arch, I misses of 'em, and they're gone."

The boy stood up now, and his cap fell unheeded on the floor. The embarrassment, the confusion, the vulgarity of his manner, were gone. He met the lawyer's piercing gaze unabashed; he lifted his hand and moved it with a expressive gesture.

"It was gettin' light overhead, and I was tired, and my head begin to turn. I sat down in a doorway; there wasn't no one to move me on, and I must ha' fell asleep, for I don't remember any more until I heard something pass by me very quick, quite near me, as near as Mr. Dallas passed me in the lane. I looked up, pretty smart, and, sir, it were a man."

"Mr. Routh?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes, sir, it were Mr. Routh. His head were down, and he was goin' as quick as any man could walk, short of runnin', but he did not run. I roused up, and wondered where the other gent was, and then I see a narrow passage a little way off the doorway where I was a sittin', leadin' straight to the river. I thought they must ha' turned down there to have their talk out, when I missed them so sudden. I went down the passage, and at the end of it was stones and mud and the river; and there was no one there. But oh, sir!" and here Jim began to tremble and to look nervously round toward Mr. Felton, "there were blood on the edge of the stones, and footsteps in the mud where the water was a-creepin' up, and there was no one there."

A convulsive sob burst from Clare's lips; but Mr. Felton clasped her closer to him and kept her quiet.

'A dreadful sight—a dreadful discovery," said Mr. Lowther: "but, my boy," and again he touched Jim gently on the arm, "why did you conceal it? Did you not understand the crime that had been committed? Did you not know all that happened afterward?"

"Sir," said Jim, boldly, but not without an effort. "I was not sure. I thought it might have been a fight, and that ain't murder anyways. I didn't know as how it had been stabbin' until I see it in Lloyd's Weekly, for I kep' away on purpose."

Here Jim put his hand into his pocket, and drew it out again closed round some object which he had still a lingering reluctance to show.

"I'll tell you all the truth, sir, though I dare say I must get into trouble. If it hadn't been as I was afraid of gettin' into it, I should ha' spoke before when I see Mrs. Routh, as is a good lady, a frettin' herself to death, and him a-deceivin' of her. When I was a-lookin' close at the stones and the mud, and the blood upon 'em, which the tide was very nigh upon 'em afore I came away, I see somethin' nearly stamped into the mud as looked like gold, and I fished it out, and I knew it were somethin' as I had seen hangin' on the other gent's chain, which he was a-twiddlin' on it with his fingers when I giv' him the note in the coffee-room. I fished it out, sir, and I kep' it, and I was afraid to take it to the pawnshop when I heerd as the body was found; and as it were a murder, I was afraid to sell it, and I hid it in the wall—and," said Jim, speaking with great rapidity and earnestness, "I am glad I've told the truth, for Mr. Dallas' sake, and I'm ready to suffer for it, if I must. Here it is, sir." Then the boy unclosed his hand, and placed in that of Mr. Lowther a locket in the form of a golden egg.

"It opens in the middle," said Jim, "and there's pictures in it: one is Mr. Deane's, and the other is a lady's. I know where she lives, and I saw Mr. Routh with her on Monday night. Mr. Routh has another, just the same as this, on the outside anyways."

"Do you recogniso this trinket?" asked Mr. Lowther of Mr. Felton, who replied:

"I do. It was my son's."

A few minutes of close and anxious consultation between the gentlemen followed, and then Mr. Lowther, telling Jim that he must remain with Mr. Felton until his return, went out, and was driven away in Mrs. Stanhope's carriage. Mr. Felton and the women treated the boy with kind consideration. In the frightful position in which they were all placed, there was now a prospect of relief, not, indeed, from the tremendous calamity, but from the dreadful danger, and Jim, as the medium through which the hope shone, was very valuable to them. Food was given him, of a quality rare to the street-boy, and he ate it with sufficient appetite. Thus the time passed, until Mr. Lowther returned, accompanied by a small, smart man in a greasy suit, who was no other than Mr. Tatlow, and whose first words to Mr. Felton were:

"It's all right. We've got the other warrant."

Then Mr. Felton sent Clare and her cousin away, and Jim, having been cheered and consoled by many a reassuring word and promise from Mr. Felton, whose strength and self-control proved themselves to the utmost on this occasion, underwent a long and searching examination from Mr. Lowther and the self-congratulatory Tatlow.

The afternoon was already advanced, and Mr. Tatlow had gone away and returned again, when the boy's explanation was concluded, and the plans formed upon it were finally arranged. Then the lawyer's quick eye noticed symptoms of giving way in Mr. Felton. There were many hours of excitement and strain upon the nerves still to be endured, and not yet might he be free to face the grief which was his, pre-eminently his; not yet must he seek solitude, to mourn his only son. Anguish, fear and fatigue were setting their mark upon him, but he must not yet have even bodily rest.

"You will not come with us?" said Mr. Lowther.

"No," replied Mr. Felton, with an irrepressible shudder. "I could not see that man before I must."

"You will lie down and rest?"

"Not yet. I will rest to-night. I must see my brother-in-law, who will reach London this evening, and tell him what has happened."

"Your brother-in-law?"

"Mr. Carruthers, my sister's husband. Much depends on George's mother being kept in ignorance, and Mr. Carruthers must be prepared."

During this short dialogue, Jim had been speaking earnestly to Mr. Tatlow, apparently urging very strongly an earnest appeal. On its cessation, Mr. Tatlow addressed Mr. Lowther.

"He agrees to everything, if one of you gentlemen will write to Mrs. Routh for him. That's it, ain't it?" said he, turning again to Jim.

"Yes, sir," said the boy, with an earnestness of entreaty in his voice and look which touched the listeners. "If one of you will write to her. I don't mean a letter to your own—grand like—for then she mightn't believe it, and she might think as I was paid. I did it for Mr. Dallas, but I don't think as I should have done it if he hadn't been bad to her, and if I hadn't seen her a-dyin' day after day, as courageous as can be, but still a-dyin', and he a-negleatin' of her first and deceivin' of her after."

"She is this man's accomplice," said Mr. Lowther, moodily.

"Perhaps so, to a certain extent," said Mr. Felton; "but she is to be pitied, too. I saw that. I saw a little way into her life at Homburg, and, from all George has told me, I would be as little hard with her as possible. He cannot escape us, she cannot shield him; let us hear what the boy wishes to say to her, and then decide. Tell me," he said, kindly, to Jim, "what do wish to say to this lady?"

"You must understand," said Mr. Tatlow, "that you can't send your letter till we've got him."

"I don't want to, sir," said Jim. "I think as he's runnin' away from her to-night, partik'lar as the lady is gone."

(Mr. Tatlow had ascertained the fact of Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge's departure during his brief absence.)

"He didn't go home last night, and I think he's afraid to to face her, and is runnin' away to-night."

"Very well, then," said Mr. Lowther, "I will write the letter. You shall tell me what to say, and it shall be sent to her this evening."

So Jim dictated, with infinite difficulty and astonishing slowness, and Mr. Lowther wrote:

"Dear Ma'am. This comes from Jim Swain, as wouldn't like to hurt you, but has to tell at last, because of Mr. Dallas being took for what he didn't do. I wanted to see you to-day, but you was out, and I couldn't, and I came down here and heard of Mr. Dallas being took. You weren't in it, dear ma'am, I'm sure, and so I have told the gentlemen and Mr. Tallow, which has me in charge at present; but you know it, and that Mr. Dallas did not do it, and Mr. Routh did. I followed them all the night it was done, and I saw Mr. Deane and Mr. Routh going down to the river, when one was gone away alive and the other couldn't be found, only his blood on the stones, and I found the gold thing he had on his chain, which the gentlemen has it now, and Mr. Routh have the same in a little drawer in the big desk in the parlor. I havn't hid anything, dear ma'am, and Mr. Routh will be took at six o'clock, at the railway, where he told me to meet him, which so I am to do. I know about a lady, too, which her picture is in the gold thing, and I would have told you about her if I could have seen you to-day. I hope you won't be hurt. I didn't mean to do it to hurt you. I wish I hadn't been so secret so long."

When Jim had formally made his mark, the letter was sealed and directed, and Mr. Lowther took charge of it.

Considerably before the platform of the London tidal bridge railway station, for which the train for Folkstone was about to start, had received the usual crowd of passengers and their friends, a lady, plainly dressed, and closely veiled, made her unobtrusive appearance upon it. "I am waiting to see a friend off," she had said, as the official at the barrier questioned her, and she attracted no further notice. Slowly and with downcast eyes, and hands which clasped each other closely under her shawl, she walked up and down, keeping close to the wall, and allowing the groups, as they began to form, to form between her and the edge of the platform. Once or twice she unclasped her hands, and lifted her veil, and breathed deeply; then, after one piercing glance, which comprehended every face under the roof within its vision, dropped it again. Once, as she did this, a nursemaid with a child in her arms at the back of the platform noticed her, and said to a fellow-servant—

"That woman's face is enough to frighten one; she looks like death!"

But life was strong in Harriet Routh, and hope was strong in her also—a terrible hope, indeed, which to any suffering less than hers would have worn the semblance of despair. A little while now and he would be safe, safe for the present, for the next few hours, which were so all-important. The letter she had written, telling him all she had done, and why, would await him at Amiens, and show him that all his plans were in vain, would convince him, at last. The arrangement of his money matters, which he must have made for the flight he contemplated, would avail in the case of this flight which she had imposed upon him. A little more torture, a little more suspense, and something like rest would come. Perhaps she should he ahle to sleep a little to-night, while he would be speeding through the darkness to safety. Something like a forlorn sense of peace came to her with the anticipation. So she walked up and down, thinking these thoughts, and sometimes lapsing into a mental blank, out of which condition she would come with a start, to go into a kind of vision of the last two days—of the woman she had so completely mastered—of the last time she had seen her husband's face—of the blow he had struck her; but she felt no anger in the remembrance. What did it matter now, in the face of this great crisis? It was strange that she had heard nothing of George, and the fact rendered her only the more eager and apprehensive. He was busy with the investigation, which must end in—what? In that which she now had effectually prevented. So she walked up and down, thinking, and the platform became peopled, and all the fuss and hurry of the departure of the tidal train was around her. Presently, as she reached the end of the platform and turned to resume her walk, she saw her husband, coming quickly toward the line of carriages, carrying the small bag which had been sent to him at Tokenhouse-yard in the morning, and which she had packed with reference to this occasion. Routh, indeed, had heen not a little surprised by its contents. He came along the platform, the bag in one hand, a letter in the other, looking frowningly round as though in search of somebody. She shrank back, as much out of sight as possible. Presently, just as he was stepping into a into a carriage, Jim Swain appeared, and went up to him. A few words passed between them, and then Harriet saw two persons, one of whom was a smart, slightly built man in a gray suit, address him. Straining her eyes with a fixed intensity of gaze which made her brain ache, she looked. He tore the letter in his hand to pieces, with inconceivable quickness, the fragments fluttering to the ground, turned, and with one of his unknown interlocutors on either side, and Jim following—how strange the boy looked, Harriet thought—walked along the platform, passed through the barrier, and was lost to her gaze at the distant entrance.

Harriet stood rooted to the spot. It was not until all the passengers had taken their places, and the train had gone off with a shriek and a pant, that she had the power to move. Then a moan of utter despair hurst from her white lips, and a cold thrill shook her limbs, as she murmured:

"He has been called hack on business, and he is lost, utterly lost!"

CHAPTER XVI.—STRONG AS DEATH.

Unspeakable terror laid its paralysing grasp upon Harriet; upon her heart, which ceased, it seemed to her, to beat; upon her limhs, which refused to obey the impulse of her will. Alone she stood upon the platform, long after the traiu had disappeared, and thought failed her with the power of movement; a blank fell upon her. A porter addressed her, but she stared stupidly in his face, and made no reply.

"The lady's ill," the man said to another. "I had better take her to the waiting-room, and fetch a cab. If you'll come this way, ma'am——"

Then Harriet's faculties awoke with a start. "No, thank you," she said; "I must get home." And she walked swiftly and steadily away. Two of the superior officials were talking together close to the door through which she had to pass, and she heard one of them say:

"Very quietly done, if it was so; and I'm pretty sure it was; I couldn't he mistaken in Tatlow."

The words conveyed no meaning, no alarm to Harriet. She went on, and out into the crowded street. She walked a long way before she felt that she could bear the restraint, the sitting still implied by driving in any vehicle. But when she reached Tokenhouse-yard, and found that nothing was known there of Routh, that no message had been received from him since he had left that evening, she got into a cah and went home. No news there, no message, no letter. Nothing for her to do but wait, to wait as patiently as she could, while the servants speculated npon the queer state of affairs, commented upon "master's" ahsence on the preceeding night, and hoped he had not "bolted"—a proceeding which they understood was not uncommon in the case of gentlemen of Routh's anomalons and dim profession. Nothing for her to do hut to wait, nothing but the hardest of all tasks, the most agonising of all sufferings. And this was the night which was to have brought her, with utter despair for herself, rest. Rest of body, which she had never so sorely needed, and had never felt so impossible of attainment. Her iron streugth and endurance were gone now. Her whole frame ached, her nerves thrilled like the strings of a musical instrumeut, a terrible interior distraction and hurry came over her at intervals, and seemed to sweep away her consciousness of reality without deadening her sense of suffering. She did not now wonder whether she was going mad; since she had known the very, very worst of her own fate, that fear had entirely left her. She wondered now whether she was dying. Wondered, with some curiosity, but no fear; wondered, with a vague feeling of the strangeness of the irruption of utter nothingness, into such a chaos of suffering and dread as life had become to her. There would be rest, but not the consciousness of it; she would no more exist. A little while ago she would have shrank from that, because love remained to her; but now—if she could but know the worst, know the truth, know that he could not be saved, or that he was safe, she would not care how soon she ceased to he one of the facts of the universe. She had never mattered much; she did not much matter now. But these thoughts crossed her mind vaguely and rarely; for the most part it was abandoned to the tumultuous agony of her ignorance and suspense. Still no letter, no message. The time wore on, and it was nine o'clock when Harriet heard a ring at the door, and a man's voice asking to see Mrs. Routh. It was not a voice she knew; and even while she eagerly hoped the man might have come to her from Routh, she trembled at the thought that he might be the bearer of a communication from George Dallas, for whose silence she had been thankful, but unable to account.

The man was a clerk from Mr. Lowther's office, and his errand was to deliver to Mrs. Routh a letter, "on very important business," he said, which he had directions to give into her own hauds. He executed his commission, retired promptly, and Harriet was left aloue to find the solution of all her doubts, the termination of all her suspeuse, in Jim Swain's letter.

The approaches to the Mansion House police conrt, and the precincts of the court itself, were densely crowded. All sorts of rumors prevailed respecting the reported discovery of the mystery which had perplexed the police and the public in spring. The arrest of two persons at different places, and the reports, garbled, exaggerated, and distorted as they were, of the circumstances which had led to the discovery which directed suspicion toward the second of the two accused persons, had keenly excited the public curiosity. The proceedings of the coroner's inquest upon the body of the unknown man had been raked up and read with avidity; and the oozing out of even the smallest particulars relative to the two prisoners was eagerly watched for by the greedy crowd. Curiosity and expectation were obliged to satisty themselves for the nonce with the proceedings in the case of Stewart Routh. George Dallas was unable to appear; Since the previous day his illness had materially increased, and the official medical report pronounced it to be brain fever. Unconscious of the frightful discovery which had strnck him so heavy a blow, George Dallas lay, under suspicion of a dreadful crime, in prison ward, and under prison watch and care. So attention and curiosity centered themselves in Stewart Routh, and the wildest stories were propagated, the wildest conjectures ran riot.

The prisoner had been brought up with the customary formalities, at an early hour, and the examination, which was likely to last some time, had begun, when Mr. Felton, who was in the court with Mr. Carruthers, pressed that gentleman's arm, and whispered:

"Look there! To the left, just under the window. Do you see her?"

"I see a woman—yes," replied Mr. Carruthers.

"His wife," said Mr. Felton, in a tone of compassionate amazement. It was his wife. Thus Routh and Harriet found themselves face to face again. As the prisoner's eye, shifting restlessly around him, seeing curious faces, full of avidity, but not one ray of compassion, fell upon her, every trace of color faded out of his cheek, and he drew one deep, gasping breath. Had she betrayed him? He should soon know; the story about to he told would soon enlighten him. Did he really thiuk she had done so? Did he really believe it for one minute? No. He had tried, in the blind fury of his rage, when he found himself trapped, halked, hopelessly in the power of the law, and the game utterly up—when, in the lonliness of the night, he had brooded savagely over the hopes he had entertained, over the dazzling pictures his fancy had painted, then, he had tried to accnse her, he had hated and execrated her, and tried to accuse her. Bnt in vain; villain as he was, he was not a fool, and his common scnse forbade the success of the attempt. And now, when he saw her, her from whom he last parted with a cruel blow, and a word that was more cruel, it was as though all his past life looked out at him through her woeful blue eyes. Awfully it looked at him, and held him fascinated, even to a brief oblivion of the scene around him. She had raised her veil, not quite off her face, but so that he could see her distinctly, and when he looked at her, his lips parted, in a vain heroic attempt to smile. But they only quivered and closed again, and she knew it, and drew the veil closely around her face, and sat thenceforth her head falling forward upon her breast, her figure quite motionless.

(Concluded in our Next.)

THE BOURNE.

Under the growing grass;
Underneath the living flowers,
Deeper than the sound of showers;
There we shall not count the hours
By the shadows as they pass.

Youth and health will be but vain;
Beauty reckoned of no worth;
There a little girth
Can hold round what once the earth
Seemed too narrow to contain.

THE FATE OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.

DR. E. G. SEWARD'S dispatch to the English Foreign Office concerning the probable fate of Dr. Livingstone, was read at a meeting of the British Royal Geographical Society, held in London on the twenty-fifth of March. It is the fullest and most important document yet communicated to that Society upon the subject, and in England it is generally considered as establishing the untimely death of the eminent African explorer beyond a preadventure. The following is a summarry of the dispatch:

"If the story of some fugitives from Dr. Livingstone's party be true, he was slain during a sudden and unprovoked encounter with the very Zulus of whom, in the last dispatch received from him, dated Ngomana, May eighteenth, he said that they had laid waste the country round ahout him. With an escort reduced to twenty by desertions, deaths and dismissals, he had traversed, as I believe, terra incognita between the confluence of the Leonde and Rovuma Rivers at Ngomana and the eastern or northeastern shore of Lake Nyassa, had crossed the lake at some point not yet ascertained, had reached a station named Kampunda, on its western or northwestern shore, and was pushing westward or northwestward into dangerous ground, when between Marenga and Maklisoora a band of implacable savagas stopped the way, a mixed herd of Zulus or Mafite and Nyassa folk. The Nyassa folk were armed with bow and arrow, the Zulus with the traditional shield, broad-bladed spears and axes. With Livingstone there were nine or ten musketeers; his Johauna men were resting with their loads far in the rear. The Mafite instantly came on to fight. There was no parley, no avoidance of the combat. They came on with a rush, with war cries, rattling their shields with their spears. As Liviugstone and his party raised their pieces the onset was, for a moment, checked. Livingstone fired, and two Znlus were shot dead. His boys fired, but their fire was harmless. He was in the act of reloading, when three Mafites leapt upon him through the smoke. There was no resistance, there could be none; one cruel ax-cut from behind put him out of life."

THE EFFECTS OF TEA ON THE SKIN.—If you drop a few drops of strong tea upon a piece of iron—a knife blade, for instance, the tannate of iron is formed, which is black. If you mix it with iron fillings or pulverized iron, you can make a fair article of ink. If you mix it with fresh human blood, it forms, with the iron of the blood, the tannate of iron Now, when we remember that the liquids which enter the stomach are rapidly absorbed by the veins and absorbauts of the stomach, and enter into the circulation, and are thrown out of the system by the skin, respiration and the kidneys, it is probable that a drink so common as tea and so abundantly used, will have some effect. Can it he possible that tannin introduced with so much warm liquor, producing perspiration, will have no more effect upon the skin? Look at the tea-drinkers of Russia, the Chinese, and the old women of America, who have so long continued the habit of drinking strong teas. Are they not dark colored and leather-skinned? Wheu young they were fair complexioned.

NEW THINGS IN COSTUME.—We have seen quite a number of short dresses worn at balls and parties, this season, and, to some, they are very becoming, especially when there is a pretty foot and ankle in the case; but, as a general thing, we do not admire them. For the street, as walking dresses, they are very appropriate, that they are going out of fashion, that, in fact, their day is past. The latest style of street dresses are made short, it is true, but they only just clear the ground. Ladies who have had handsome silks cut to suit the present fashion, will be sorry to hear this, no doubt. We learn, with pleasure, that ladies' hats are to be worn much larger. For summer, they will be trimmed with long wreaths of flowers, which fall on either side, and are tied with narrow ribbon, having a loose ribbon of black or white lace over them. Parasols are trimmed with feather trimming of all colors—pretty, but very frail.

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

THE PROGRESS OF RITUALISM IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

THE Ritual movement in the English church, seems to have communicated itself to the Episcopal church in the United States, though on this side of the Atlantic it has taken on a comparatively mild and inoffensive form. The ceremonial at St. James' Church in this city, is said to furnish a fair representation of the most advanced ritualistic service as conducted in New York, or any of the Eastern cities, yet it is very far indeed from approximating so closely to the worship of the Church of Rome, as does the service in a number of the English Episcopal parishes. A few extracts from an elaborite article on "Ultra Ritualism" in the last number of the London Quarterly, and from the authorities therein cited, will serve to furnish some idea of the lengths to which the movement has been carried in England. Here are some of the directions for conducting the service, as given in the Directorium Anglicanum, a work of authority with English ritualists; these directions, however, are designed for "Cathedrals only:"

"The bishop will enter the cathedral church vested in purple cassock, rochet, chimere, episcopal ring, zucchetto, and birretta. If he do not vest in the sacristy, he will receive his vestments from the altar....On reaching the faldstool, the bishop will remove his birretta, and deliver it to the deacon, who will hand it to the sub-deacon, who in his turn will deliver it to an acolyte. He will wear the zucchetto till the assumption of the mitre. The gloves will be carried on a salver.... The bishop, on being vested with the dalmatic, sits down, and the deacon removes the episcopal ring, and hands it to the sub deacon to place on a salver held by an acolyte for that function. The gloves are then presented on a salver, and should be so arranged that the right may lie at the side of the deacon, and the left at that of the sub-deacon. In putting on the gloves. the deacon assists at the right and the sub-deacon at the left."

Though these edifying ceremonies are such as we may not hope ever to see at St. James' (unless, indeed, Mr. Eagan should he elected a Bishop, and should make that Church his "Episcopal seat") yet as the ritualistic system may become "the mode" in this diocese, we need not utterly despair of some day witnessing them at Grace.

One characteristic of the English ritualists (which has also developed itself to some extent in this country) is the slender respect they evince for the Episcopal authority. Indeed, their writers occasionally talk of the Bishops in language which would be discourteous if employed in speaking of a chimney sweep. Says the Review:

"Archdeacons and canons, however, are very small game for these soaring birds to stoop to, and their main fury is reserved for the bishops. There is no longer anything of that inconsistency between the profession of abject reverence and the practice of habitual insult and defiance which used formerly to startle us in the behavior of Tractarians toward bishops. True it is that the 'Directorium' is, 'with every feeling of profound respect, most humbly dedicated to the Archbishop and Bishops in visible communion with the see of Canterbury,' and that a copy of the volume of Essays was solemnly presented to the Upper House of Convocation; but these are merely such pleasantries as some extreme Protestants have indulged in by dedicating their works to the Pope, and in general the anti-episcopal spirit now shows itself without even the pretence of formal respect for those against whom it is directed. Dr. Littledale, for instance, after telling us that—

'Griudal's theory of his episcopal authority was that it was given him for the purpose of enabling him to put down with a high hand whatever he disliked, whether legal or not,' adds

'Such a method of Government is not so perfectly unlike that of some diocesans of a much later day that it need excite any surprise.'"

And here is another fulmination against those who exhibit a tame submission to Episcopal despotism:

"I must protest against the miserable, trembling, cowardly attitude which [a correspondent of the 'Guardian' newspaper] reccommeuds the clergy to assume towards their bishops. If the Bishop of Loudon is inclined to 'run-a-muck' at Catholic faith and Catholic worship, by all means let him do so. If he wishes to puritauize the church, as I believe he does, let him take all lawful means towards his object; and if we wish to Catholicize the church, as we avowedly do, let us take all lawful means towards our object, too; and God defend the right!

'Who is this awful despot, this terrible Turk, this Pope in posse, who is ready to cat off all our heads in five minutes if we 'provoke' him? He is a constitutional officer of the Church, and himself subject to its laws as much as any one else.'"

And once more:

"Little do some of our Fathers in God seem to reck of the anguish, not unmixed with indignation, caused to faithful souls by the shallow denials of unpopular truths into which they sometimes allow themselves to be drawn."

Speaking of the bishops of Wesley's time, the same writer says:

"Like some of their successors of the present day, they could only trample out a religious energy which they had neither the grace to appreciate, nor the energy to control."

In the same spirit, another writer, Mr. Baring-Gould, tells us that "the episcopal boot" is accustomed "to descend on every spark of vitality in the stubble of the estbalishment."

The same Dr. Littledale, above quoted, expresses his contempt of the bishops, on account of their ignorance of "Lit iurgiology," and is indignant with them for their misbehavior when called upon to officiate in the churches of the party. He says:

"It is very seldom that an accomplished Ritualist is permitted to celebrate in a non-ritual church; but every one has seen the manner in which strange celebrants, episcopal and others, deliberately ignore and set at nought the use of some churches where they chance to officiate."

But it seems that the bishops are as ignorant on some other subjects as in regard to the proper method of celebrating the service. Mr. Medd, a ritualistic authority, says of the Bishop of Ely, that he is "one among the few members of the episcopal bench who enjoy any reputation for theological acquirement;" and even his acquirements are not, in Mr. Medd's opinion, sufficient to save him from gross error in the attempt to understand the ritualistic doctrine.

The Bishop of London having characterized the ritualist ceremonial as "almost histrionic," Dr. Littledale thus boldly accepts the epithet:

"It is an axiom in liturgiology that no public worship is really deserving of its name unless it be histrionic. Histrionic for three reasons: First, because it is an attempt to imitate and represent on earth what Christians believe to be going on in heaven. Secondly, because this representation is partly effected by the employment of material symbols, to shadow forth invisible powers. Thirdly, because personal action rather than passive receptivity is the essence of its character. The whole histrionic principle is conceded and hallowed by the two most sacred rites of the Christian religion; Baptism, which physically suggests the idea of moral cleansing, and the Holy Eucharist, which shows forth the broken Body and the outpoured Blood, at the same time that it presents to the mind the notion of sustenance."

Mr. Perry, another high authority with his party, enumerates as the five prominent points to be insisted on:

(1). "The ancient vestments of the bishops and other clergy;
(2). The two lights on the altar;
(3). The incense;
(4). The mixed chalice; and
(5). The eastward position, in front of the altar, of the priest and his assistants at the celebration of the Holy Communion."

To these, other leading ritualists add:

"(6). The use of wafer-bread;
(7). The presence of 'the faithful' for what is styled 'spiritual communion;'
(8). The elevation of the consecrated elements."

The above particulars, however, refer only to the ceremonial of worship, not to matters of doctrine; nor to the favor with which monastic institutions, confession to a priest, and the celibacy of the clergy are viewed by the more "advanced" section of the party.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

For some time previous to his departure to Italy, where he died, this veteran writer resided in Bath. At a recent meeting of a Literary Association of that place, a paper was read, giving many interesting particulars of his life during his sojourn there. The paper says:

"Landor lived at No. 3 Rivers street, near the Park. He occupied the two drawing-rooms, and his bed-room and dressroom was immediately above. He always spoke of Bath with enthusiasm as an unrivalled winter residence—bright, clear and dry. No epigram passed his lips satirizing the sauntering steps of the inhabitants, or the hot, blue waters of the springs; nor did he ever grumble spitefully at the steep hills, or at the wheel-chairs, which are very apt to bar the way of pedestrians. He was a great walker, and was generally dressed in the shabbiest clothes. His umbrella was a marvel of untidiness, and he wore an old hat slouched backwardly so as to display the large front of a fine bald head. In this guise the literary veteran went forth on his daily rounds. He never paused to look in at shop windows, nor did he seem to covet any man's goods, excepting his pictures. He manifested no consciousness of weather, time, or space. To look at him you would say that he saw neither sun, moon, or stars, for he always gazed grimly on the ground. A great flood, violent hail, a storm, very vivid lightning, or other remarkable phenomena might attract his attention; but those of an ordinary description were apparently unheeded. He was destitute of all scientific instruments, and probably did not know the uses of the commonest. He never took part in conversation relating to barometers, thermometers, or telescopes. It is doubtful whether he was acquainted with the points of the compass or the signs of the zodiac. He was childishly innocent and careless about all 'objectivities,' save that he valued at their proper worth gold, silver and jewels. There was one creature in the Animal Kingdom which Landor appeared to love above all other creatures, and this was a pretty dog of the Pomerian breed, his constant companion for several years. No affectation was too bountiful for this dog—no offering too dainty. "It is impossible," Landor used to say with great vehemence, "that I can ever survive my dog, should it die before me." But, alas! the day came when the master was seen walking alone, somewhat sadder than usual, but not otherwise discomposed; and benevolent inquiry revealed the mournful fact that the dazzling little feathery dog had departed this life, and would never more be seen following his fond master. The walls of Landor's drawing-rooms were covered with paintings, and some were placed on chairs. These paintings were of various values: a few were genuine works of old masters, the greater portion copies. The fact is, that although Landor possessed a theoretical knowledge of the schools of painting, he had no practical knowledge of pictures. A shabby piece of colored canvas was often glorified by him into an old master, and placed in a gorgeous frame; and Landor then led his friends up to it as to an awful shrine. Few could help enjoying such a jest as this. He valued one picture, which he held to be by Correggio, at 1,200*l.*; and he repeatedly declared that he would not take a sovereign less for it. Most of his other pictures were valued by hundreds of pounds. Amidst much rubbish and imposture there were a few positive treasures. He possessed two undoubted Turners, in that great painter's style, of 1824-8; one or two Copley Fieldings, a Cox, and a Nicolas Poussin. There were also a few other good pictures by artists of less renown. The walls of the staircase of his house were covered with pictures, as were also those of his bed-room. His landlady, too, turned her rooms into a picture-gallery, adorning them with the pictorial crumbs which fell from her patron's table. Landor had few books in Bath, but those were of a high order of excellence. His habit was to spend the morning in writing and reading, and the afternoon in walking. He almost always called on his friends on Sunday afternoons. He largely illustrated in his own life the doctrine of 'plain living and high thinking.' He never went to private parties or public amusements, and hated mobs with the severity of an intellectual republican. He detested kings, bishops, and priests, always excepting Julius Hare, for whom he entertained a sincere friendship. All orders and hereditary castes seemed to him to be deeply stained with original sin. In fine, Landor while he lived in Bath was a keen, satiric, epigrammatic man, abrupt and not at all copious in conversation, bluntly cordial to a few near friends, but with antipathies much stronger and more abundant than his sympathies. Such are the leading characteristics of Walter Savage Landor as he was known in Bath. With commendable reticene Mr. Spender is silent respecting the events which cast a dark cloud over the last days of Landor's life in that city. A conqueror of many fields of literature, he never conquered himself, and suffered accordingly. How he went to Florence, giving intelligence of himself by occasional 'good words' in the Athenæum, is well known to our readers. Not equally well known is the fact that the grave of this eminent man of letters is deformed by a villaneous case of misspelling. His tombstone in the Protestant burial ground, at Florence, bears this inscription: 'Sacred to the Memory of Walter Savage Landor. Born 30 Jan. 1775. Died 17 Sept. 1865. The last sad tribute of his Coife and Children.' Is there no friend of Landor who will amend this error."

CALIFORNIA WINES.—A. S. Lowndes, Wine Merchant of 311 Battery street, has on hand some very choice native wines, among which is the famous "Gerke," a white wine which probably enjoys a higher reputation than any other product of our vineyards. For delicacy of flavor, it is certainty equalled by none of the native white wines yet known to the public.

In the same vaults is an article of Californian Port, so entirely different from the wine that commonly passes by that name, that it would not be recognized by those familiar with the common article. If there is any native Port at all equal to this, we have not yet had an opportunity of tasting it. Mr. Lowndes informs us that, as an experiment, he has this year, at a heavy cost, shipped all the wine he had on hand to the East and back, to give it the advantage of a double sea voyage, in the course of which it had to pass four times through the tropics. Only first class wines can stand a test like this. The resul of the experiment has been to demonstrate that California can produce wines which, when properly manufactured and skillfully handled, are not inferior to any in the world of correspondiug kind. Those who wish to judge intelligently of California wines in their perfection, should visit Lowndes' wine vaults.

THE MINT.—At this establishment, which is directly opposite the U. S. Mint on Commercial street, the mint-drops of the latter institution will be received as a legal tender for mint-juleps, or other liquid refreshments. Captain Sam. Gardner is superintendent of "The Mint," though he has not yet received his commission from Washington. In fact, he is not particularly anxious about the commission; and he defies all the politicians of all stripes and complexions to deprive him of his office. Captain Gardner's Mint, is not as exclusive and old fogy an institution as the opposite concern across the way. It is freely open to the public, without "permits" at all reasonable hours of the day and night.

STATISTICS show that during the past year nearly two hundred persons have been burned to death by the explosion of kerosene lamps, and that the destruction of property amounts to more than six million dollars.

JERUSALEM is still, in some respects, the city of the Jews. It is found that there are seven thousand Jewish inhabitants, five thousand Mahometans, and three thousand four hundred Christians in the place.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE—No. 223 Bush street, just east of the Occidental Hotel, is one of the most popular saloons in our city, and is gaining more than a local reputation for "fine brands" and choice beverages.

PUNCH says that women first resorted to tight lacing to prove to the men how well they could bear tight squeezing.

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, ETC., are cured speedily and pleasantly for a stipulated fee, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. •

ELECTRICITY.—The powerful and superb battery of Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, may be employed for only four bits. •

OAK POISON.—The truly scientific and only unfailing cure is the method of Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street •

OUR DOG.

BY PRENTICE.

IT is necessary to own a dog. Why, it is difficult to tell, but everybody at some time in their lives have taken unto themselves a dog.

Our dog Nip, made himself at home immediately after his arrival at the house. There were no intermediate stages of backwardness with him in his intercourse with the family, or in his assumiug the direction of a large portion of affairs relating to the household. He is a small dog, but very lively. His natural condition seems that of motion. He concentrates within himself the activity of three or four ordinary dogs.

His first act soon after coming to live with us was to take charge of the back door mat. He seemed to regard it as his own exclusive possession. He had his ideas with regard to its place and use. We preferred that it should remain where the cleanliness of the household might be best promoted. He preferred it in the back yard. It staid in the back yard. The whole household toiled in vain to keep it where it was supposed to belong, dragging it time after time up the back stairs, all to no purpose. When such a dog as Nip chooses to devote his whole life to keeping a door mat in a back yard it is difficult to contend successfully with him. When he thought we had become resigned to his disposition of the mat he became dissatisfied and tore it to pieces. He was dissatisfied because we were resigned. He wished to do something provoking. He loves actions of this kind. There was an inoffensive old broom which, having been discarded from the house, was used to sweep the back stairs. This he set upon and tore also to pieces. The broom never did him any harm. It would not harm anybody. But its total innocence and inoffensiveness provoked him. Good nature is ofteu provoking.

He has access to the cellar. He rules there. It was a very quiet and orderly cellar previous to his coming. If it be so now, it is according to canine not human views of order and neatness. He was furnished with a heap of old clothes for a bed. These have been torn up and dragged in every direction. He has no use for a bed. His time is too precious to be devoted to sleep. There are holes to be dug in the bare cellar floor, and anything accidentally hung up in his reach must be torn down. The kindling wood must be kept scattered about. Old newspapers falling in his reach must be torn to shreds. In his eyes the general appearance of the premises is much improved by these bits of torn newspaper. He monopolizes the morning paper left at she door, and it is often found lying ignobly in one corner of the yard covered with dirt, "gone to the dogs." He shows a great contempt for newspapers.

Nip is a great pet. That is what he was given us for; something on which we might expend our spare care and sympathy. Nip more than "fills the bill." He is always performing some aggravating and mischievous action so that we never forget him—never.

He mines. The backyard is fitted with numerous excavations and heaps of dirt. He buries bones in one place, and then digs large holes elsewhere, pretending to be looking for them. This is the only shadow of an excuse made for any mischief committed. As for eating, he bolts a meal in ten seconds. Yet it is a satisfaction to see that this aggravating little brute cannot thus outrage nature with impunity, as evinced by his occasional bodily contortions consequent on an overloaded canine stomach.

We have a rooster. Before Nip's arrival he was a haughty and consequential rooster in his own estimation, and that of his several wives. He issued his prouunciamentos daily, claiming the allegiance of his hens, and boasted in long speeches concerning the completeness of his authority over the yard and hencoop. But Nip has taken all the conceit out of him. Daily he chases him in abject fear before his subjects. He has chased him from the high pedestal of his former dignity. Adding injury to insult he has torn out the most glorious of his tail feathers. It is pitiful to see a rooster so completely demolished both in appearance and dignity. He runs after the hens also. Not from motives of gallantry does he this, but to humiliate more thoroughly the dejected, tail-ridden rooster. Our persecuted fowl have scarcely a place n which they may lay their heads—or their eggs in peace.

He has contests with an old tin pan carried on with great noise and fury. He idealizes this pan into some terrible monster, and idealizes so successfully that the combat is more real than imaginary. The contest goes on over the whole yard, the combatants swaying backward and forward, but Nip always comes off victorious. We could dispense with his dragging this utensil up the steps and letting it roll down again. In his estimation the dramatic effect may be very powerful, but the peace of the family is not at all increased by the clangor. It must be very gratifying to fight an opponent so terrible, to be at times almost overcome and yet to be ever certain of victory.

The most provoking characteristic of this animal is that punishment when inflicted has no effect on him. He is often turned out of doors in disgrace, but he ignores this as punishment entirely. He refuses to be regarded with disapprobation. His manner speaks thus to us as he noisily scratches at the door for re-admittance, or looks impudently in, his paws resting on the sill of a low window: "O, you needn't look so cross. You like all these pranks of mine after all. You couldn't get along without me. I am the Punch of the household, Didn't I make a nice mess of the contents of your work-basket? I can do so again if you will only let me in."

He has occasionally been whipped, but seems to feel no shame on account of the castigation and the operation over, always resumes his usual frisky manner. He has an admirable command of temper and bears no malice. This disposition heaps coals of fire upou the heads of those whom he causes to loose their tempers. To one's conscience it says: "There you've lost your temper havn't you, and you a human being but little lower than the angels, and I nothing but a dog and a little dog at that. Feel any better for that kick you gave me? It shall not make any difference in our relations. I am still your affectionate Nip as full of mischief as ever."

Loss of temper causes remorse, both for our weakness in loosing it and for mean acts committed while laboring under such loss. Were Nip but possessed of a nature full of stupid, ugly antagonism causing him to seek revenge in snarling, biting, or a fit of sulks more or less prolonged, there might be some degree of compensation in our anger. But his persistent good humor and inevitable forgiveness is very aggravating. He comes off victorious in these soul conflicts, and covers us with shame to be so beaten by a dog.

Nip after all is a positive benefit. Although he at times annoys, yet he amuses and instructs. Dog nature is worth studying as well as human nature. And in the comparison between the two the latter has sometimes cause to blush.

THE CIRCUS.—The buffalo at the circus proves a great attraction. His talent is very generally acknowledged. A stern critic might take exception to his Western style; but he may, if he stays long enough in California, correct it and become an accomplished artiste. We have had few trained buffaloes here, and, therefore, if we would, could not justly institute comparisons. Of course all the children wish to see the buffalo, and as the circus will very shortly start for the interior, those who have not yet visited it should go at once. Performances this afternoon and evening. On Monday evening, Mr. Wm. Kennedy, the clown, will take his benefit, when entire new features will be presented.

THE BILLIARD TOURNAMENT.—The billiard tournament gotten up under the auspices of Messrs. Strahle & Hughes, the manufacturers of the celebrated billiard tables, is now being played at Congress Hall. Virginia City, Carson City, Washoe City, Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton, Placerville, Grass Valley, Red Bluff, Shasta, Yreka, Portland, Salem, Victoria, and other places, are represeuted by their crack players. The playing is witnessed by a large number of persons. This eveuing A. W. Jamisou and Joseph Little will play a match of fifteen huudred points. On Monday evening, the receipts of the house being donated to the Southern Relief Fund. Some splendid playing will be doue this evening, and a full house will without douht be in attendence.

Not Crazy, but "Mad."

Henry Shine having knocked down a witness in the Police Court, was arrested. Several persons swore that Shine was sometimes insane in consequence of having some time ago fractured his skull. Judge Rix, under these circumstances, imposed the light fine of $25. He evidently did not believe that Henry Shine is insane, hut, perhaps, as he is cracked, as regards his scull, thought that he ought uot to be so severely punished for gettiug mad as other people.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & Co.—This leading Dry Goods House announce in our advertisiug columns, 200 pieces of superior Black Silks at 25 per cent. less than the cost of importation; and 500 pieces of French and English Cloths at greatly reduced rates; also, Ladies' Dress Goods, and Domestic Goods, such as Sheetings, Shirtings, Towelings, Table Damasks, Flannels, etc., at surprising low rates. Meagher, Taffee & Co. are determiued to undersell any House in San Francisco.

MADISON & BURKE'S Real Estate Agency, 316 Montgomery street, is one of the business features of the city. The amount of buying and selling, leasing and reuting, and business transacted there in a single day is almost increditable. A small army of clerks and corps of horsemen are kept constautly busy iu transacting the business of this Real Estate Exchange.

B. C. HORN & Co.—This favorite House, so long celebrated for the superiority of its imported Tobacco and Cigars, have just received the long expected Hibernia Smoking Tobacco, which proves to be the best ever imported. Try it. They are also offering 500,000 cigars at the surprising low rate of $5 per thousand. Everyhody can afford to smoke cigars at that rate.

PEET & SON.—Saddlery and Harness Warehouse, 315 Battery street, one door from Commercial, is one of the most complete establishmeuts in that line of husiness. Among the specialities that may be found there are improved side saddles, splendid sets of harness, made to order, rich robes, fancy whips, California saddles, made like the English riding saddles, etc.

STRENGTH, APPETITE AND GOOD HEALTH.—Wheu these qualities are impaired a good tonic is often the most efficatious remedy. Lacour' Sarsapariphere Bitters possess valuable medical properities in these cases, and are highly recommended by those who know their merits.

WATER CURE.—"Pioneer" and only Water Cure in San Francisco, No 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Dr. Bourne, the only old, experienced and practical water cure physician on this coast. Guarantees cures for stipulated fees in all cases.

ITALIAN OPERA.

SINCE our last issue we have to notice the production of five different operas on five successive nights—an amount of work which naturally had an unfavorable effect upon tha performers, and was by no means acceptable to the public. Hereafter there will be but four performances each week, and we may, therefore, reasonably expect an improvement in their quality. Lucrezia Borgia, Il Trovatore, Lucia di Lammermoor, Norma and Il Traviata, were given respectively on Friday, Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and all but Norma to crowded and fashionable houses. Madame Stella Bonheur, who made her debut as "Orsini," also appeared as "Azucena" and as "Adalgisa," and made, on the whole, a very favorable impression. Her voice is full and clear, and the low notes are especially good; the upper ones might be equally so if they were not spoiled by an almost coustant and very injudicious use of the tremolo. Her face and figure are prepossessing; but her manner indicates embarassment and lack of experience; her acting, although intense enough, has little variety, and her expression changes suddenly from extreme grief or anger to a broad and hearty smile, or vice versa, without any apparent reason, and without resting upon any intermediate emotion. Of the three characters which she has assumed, her "Azucena" was certainly the best. Signorina Bellini appeared as "Leonora" and as "Violetta," but her success was not encouraging. Her voice is hard and thin, and she sings the piano passages with her lips almost entirely closed; her intonation is correct, and she apparently knows the music of her part, but has neither style nor mechanical execution. She has, however, youth, beauty, and natural talent, and under proper training will undoubtedly attain high rank as an artiste. Signor Limberti, as "Edgardo," and as "Pollio," was suffering from a severe attack of hoarseness, and cannot justly be criticised; but his "Gennaro" was a spirited and successful effort. Signor Bianchi appeared as "Manrico," and as "Alfredo;" Signor Mancusi as the "Count di Luna," as "Enrico," and as "Giorgio Germont;" Signor Milleri as the "Duke Alfonso," as "Ferrando," as "Raimondo," and as "Oroveso." Other characters in the various operas were creditably sustained by M. Charles and M. Roncoveri, Mme. Yonker and Mrs. Hall. The orchestra and chorus, though overworked, have doue bravely.

Signoriua Eugenia Bellini made her debut last night in the comic opera of Don Pasquale, with Signorina Bellini, Signors Bianchi and Mancusi in the other parts. We are obliged to defer until next week any notice of the performance. Il Trovatore will be given this evening. Un Ballo en Maschera is announced for Monday.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, the Corsican Brothers was produced on Monday, with Miss Helen Western in the parts of "Fabian'" and "Louis dei Franchi," which she played tolerably well. The piece was well put on the stage and the scene of the "Moving Graveyard" was effective. On Wednesday the Female American Cousin, a play written expressly for Miss Helen Western, was produced. This is one of the most trashy productions ever produced on the stage; it is an unscrupulous plagiarism, plot, situations and characters being all stolen from the stupid play of Our American Cousin. To appear in such a part as "Flora Hazlett" would prove fatal to the reputation of any actress; Miss Helen Western appeared to take delight in aggravating its repulsive features, and succeeded in thoroughly disgusting all present by her coarseness and vulgarity. J. A. Herne deserves great credit for making so much of the badly written part of "Nathan Bennett," and by his assumption of the clever Yankee dialect and fine acting, rendering the character somewhat amusing. In the afterpiece, the Pet of the Petticoats, Willie Edouin caused roars of laughter by the manuer in which he acted the character of "Zephyr," the dancing master. Miss Western made "Paul" too rowdyish a character to be the pet of any young ladies. This afternoon the American Female Cousin will be played, and in the evening the bill will consist of Rosina Meadows, and the French Spy. On Monday, Miss Helen Western will appear in East Lynne, and it may with safety be prophesied, present an entirely differeut "Lady Isabel" from any ever before witnessed on this stage.

At the Metropolitan Theater, the Martinetti Troupe are producing ballet and pantomime.

Mrs. Laura Cuppy will lecture as usual to-morrow evening, at Mechanics' Institute Hall. The subject of her lecture will be "The Religious Destiny of California."

TOUCHSTONE.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.—These delightful pleasure grounds never looked more lovely than at present. In one of the hot houses a number of beautiful pine apples may be seen in various stages of growth.

PACIFIC MUSEUM.—Strangers visiting this city should not leave without first inspecting the beautiful models to be seen at this institution.

LEISURE.

THE cultivation of leisure as an art seems to be in danger of dying out amongst us, not so much for want of appreciation of its value, which in theory at least we are more likely to exaggerate than to under-estimate, but for want of its being generally recognised as an art which comes, not by nature, but by practice. Busy people are apt to think that you have only to take away business, and what remains will be leisure. But daily experience shows that this is by no means the case. Life is composed of an elastic material, and wherever a solid piece of business is removed, there the surrounding atmosphere of trifles rushes in as certainly as the air into a bottle when you pour out its contents. Most people have to guard an hour's leisure by as strong a barrier of resolution and precaution as can be needed for hours of study or business. Indeed hours of business and study in a measure guard themselves, but leisure has no natural protector except sleep, which robs it, in exchange, of half its charms and all its individuality. You can no more calculate upon finding the possession of leisure in connexion with a life of small moment to the outer world, than upon its being a necessary accompaniment of great and important occupations; indeed the latter would be the safer presumption of the two.

A man whose life is spent in conducting affairs of large national importance will often sit for an hour talking, with a perfectly disengaged mind, upon some trivial matter of domestic interest; while a lady who lives upon her sofa, and has no creature dependent upon her, will tell you that she has waited week after week for leisure to answer a note. And this is not necessarily either a false pretence or a morbid fancy. It is a form of weakness. Method no doubt facilitates the closer packing of the hours, and the quality of their contents will vary according to each person's mental calibre; but the quantity, whether of business or leisure, which can be compressed into them depends chiefly on nervous energy. People who have but a small or an intermittent supply of this have really a smaller quantity of life than others, whatever may be the space over which it is spread; and the more brains and method they have, the more clearly will they recognise the impossibility of increasing (beyond a certain point) the quantity of their activity within any given time without injury, not only to its quality, but in the long run to the actual amount accomplished. They absolutely require vacant intervals in which to allow for the replenishing of their stock of energy. Their hours of activity are like bits of china, which must be packed separately in a great deal of hay or wadding; and their hours of leisure are like some kinds of plants, which will not blossom freely unless set in plenty of space and in a rich light soil.

The perfection of leisure, that state of things in which any pursuit expands to its fullest beauty and perfection, depends upon three conditions. The first and most obvious is such abundance of time for the pursuit in hand as shall leave no temptation even to hurry over, much less actually to abridge or omit, any of its details. The very essence of leisure is a luxurious sense of a boundless superabundance of time. It is the sense of the infinity of time as opposed to the sense of the infinity of the objects of knowledge or pursuit. And this will naturally be enhanced by occupation in employments limited enough to be not only carried on, but calmly and fully completed.

The second condition necessary to the perfection of leisure is that the matter upon which it is spent be regarded, not as a means, but as an end. That state of mind in which the book, the musical performance, the walk in the country, or the conversation with a friend, or whatever else may be the occupation of the hour, is read, listened to, or gone through, for the sake of an ulterior object, is not true leisure. As a certain singleness of effect is necessary to the perfection of any work of art, so singleness of interest is necessary to the perfection of leisure. And no hours deserve the name of leisure of which the contents are in any way or for any purpose, cramped or curtailed. And besides this, the mere strain upon the mind of any ulterior aim, the mere fact of the complication of feeling which it introduces, destroys the play and freedom and beauty of real leisure.

And this brings us to the third condition of which we have spoken— namely, that the mind itself be at a certain happily pitched degree of tension, neither overstrained nor relaxed, but elastic, ready to vibrate to every breath of pleasure, of association, of emotion—not pre-occupied so as to be insensible to suggestions from without, nor indolent so as to be unready to respond to them. Such elasticity implies a healthy state of mind, and a due supply of nervous energy. This accounts for the curious contrast, to which we have already referred, between the faculty of being at leisure which is often seen in busy people, and the very common want of it in those who have nothing to do. Too little work is as fatal as too much to that lightness and elacrity of spirit which are needed for the conversation of spare time into hours of leisure worthy to be so called. And the same fact affords a fairly good, if not quite a certain, test of the way in which health is being affected by hard work. A man can scarcely be very seriously overworked who is able keenly to enjoy a holiday.

Leisure is not only, when thus obtained in perfection, a state of extreme enjoyment, but it is a necessary condition of certain graces and charms of mind, or at least of their fullest development. One of these is the love of beauty in all its forms, from the cultivation of art (or rather that part of the cultivation of art which depends upon sensibility to beauty) down to the most evanescent graces of manner and the observance of delicate fitness in the smallest details of every-day life. Life can never be made beautiful while it is being got through in a hurry, although the hurry which leaves no room for beauty in its details may be a splendid sacrifice to a worthier object than mere beauty of detail. The price may be well worth paying, but it should not for that reason be ignored.

Another gift, the exercise of which in perfection depends upon leisure, is sympathy. This faculty can never reach its greatest degree, either of intensity or delicacy, in a pre-occupied mind, and any degree of hurry is apt to be fatal to its manifestation. And it is equally obvious how unfavorable to sympathy are both fatigued and indolent states of mind. The sympathy which is really healing is that which is given with such a prodigality of time, such a singleness of interest, and such an elasticity of mind as we have already described as the necessary conditions of leisure.

For these and similar reasons, people who, by reason either of their wealth or their sex, are at leisure to fix the amount of their own activity, would do well to remember what they throw away when they suffer themselves to be drawn into the general tide of hurry which carries away all who do not resolutely set bounds to it. They throw away the power of cultivating flowers and fruits, which will not grow except in the rich soil of leisure fed upon activity. And these fruits and flowers of leisure in return nourish and stimulate the activity which prepares the soil for them. The sense of beauty and the sympathetic insight which flourish in intervals of leisure are among the strongest incentives to active work in self-culture, and for the comfort and help of others.

Activity which never relaxes sufficiently to allow time for a calm and more or less passive contemplation of life as a whole, is apt to degenerate into mere hand-to-mouth fussiness or drudgery, and can be justified only by necessity. And the very repose of leisure is by no means a purely selfish enjoyment. It is one of the most communicable, nay contagious, of pleasures. There are people whose company is as restful as sleep, in whose presence hurry seems like a bad dream when it is past, and whom one leaves with a sense of refreshment and renewed energy such as is produced by a good night's rest. To afford such refreshment to others may often be turning time to better account than to crowd it with self-chosen business.

The means of cultivating this art of leisure are obvious, but not very easy. The first, of course, is to cut one's coat according to one's cloth—to undertake neither too much nor too little. But to take the measure of one's strength, or income, or abilities is a task in which but few people succeed. Neither is it easy to count the cost of any proposed undertaking. Yet both must be done in order to make both ends meet, whether in time or money. Most of us know too well how hard a thing that is to accomplish. Still forethought and determination may do much in providing against hurry, and luck will do something in affording intervals of leisure.

As a security against pre-occupation of mind, a strenuous habit of forgetting, a severe determination to dismiss what is done with, are needed, and great things may be accomplished in this direction with practice. But when the hours have been reclaimed from hurry, and swept clear of pre-occupation, only the outward form of leisure is secured; it is reserved for that elasticity of mind which is perhaps hardly attainable by any direct effort to give it life and value. This crowning felicity, if not bestowed by nature, must be won, if at all, in other fields. It is not everyone who can obtain even the materials of leisure; it is a bad sign when those who have it do not enjoy it; and it is surely a pity when those who are capable of enjoying it, and of transmitting that enjoyment to others, make no effort to secure it.—London Saturday Review.

WHY IT IS THE BEST.—Miss Julia Canty, 399 Canal street, New York, who has been using Sewing Machines eleven years, states: "I like the Grover & Baker Machine best; it is simpler. I have tested the Wheeler & Wilson and Singer. I give the Grover & Baker the preference over all others; it is easier managed; the stitch is durable; I have made garments on the Grover & Baker Machine and had the garments entirely worn out without ripping at all; and the machine is much easier learned. It will do a greater range of work; it will do from a piece of heavy cloth to a piece of Nansook without any change excepting cotton and needles. I can make an ordinarily intelligent girl quite a good operator in about a week, and on other machines I do not think they would understand as well in three weeks, the Grover & Baker Machine is so simple."

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

LITTLE NELL.

BY MARIETTA HAWLEY.

CLASP your arms round her neck to-night,
Little Nell;
Arms so delicate, soft and white,
And yet so strong in love's strange might;
Clasp them around the kneeling form,
Fold them tenderly, close and warm,
And who can tell,
But such slight links may draw her back,
Away from the fearful fatal track?
Who can tell
Little Nell?

Press your lips to her lips of snow,
Little Nell;
Oh, baby heart, may you never know
The anguish that makes them quiver so;
But now, in her weakness and mortal pain,
Let your kisses fall like a gentle rain,
And who can tell
But your innocent love, your childish kiss,
May lure her back from the dread abyss?
Who can tell
Little Nell?

Lay your cheek on her aching breast,
Little Nell;
To you 'tis a refuge of holy rest—
But a dying bird never drooped its crest
With a deadlier pain in its wounded heart;
Ah! love's sweet links may be torn apart,
Little Nell;
The altar may flame with gems and gold,
And splendor be bought, and peace be sold;
But is it well
Little Nell?

Veil her face with your tresses bright,
Little Nell;
Hide that vision out of her sight—
Those deep, dark eyes, with their tender light—
Uplift your pure face, it cannot be
She will bid farewell to heaven and thee,
Little Nell;
No, your mute lips plead with eloquent power
And her tears fall like an April shower;
It is well,
Little Nell.

Now close your darling eyes in sleep,
Little Nell;
Bright angels o'er thee watch will keep;
At morn a ship will cleave the deep,
And one alone will be borne away,
And one will clasp thee close and pray!
Oh, Little Nell,
Never, never beneath the sun,
Will you dream what you this night have done—
Done so well,
Little Nell.

—Home Journal

KNOCKED ABOUT.—It is a good thing for a young man to be knocked about in the world, though his soft-hearted parents may not think so. All youths, or if not all, certainly nineteen-twentieths of the sum total, enter life with a surplusage of self-conceit. The sooner they are relieved of it the better. If, in measuring themselves with wiser and older men, they discover that it is unwarranted, and get rid of it gracefully, of their own accord, well and good; if not, it is desirable, for their own sakes, that it be knocked out of them.

A boy who is sent to a large school soon finds his level. His will may have been paramount at home; but schoolboys are democratic in their ideas, and if arrogant, he is sure to be thrashed into a recognition of the golden rule. The world is a great public school, and it soon teaches a new pupil his proper place. If he has the attributes that belong to a leader, he will be installed into the position of leader; if not, whatever his own opinion of his abilities may be, he will be compelled to fall back with the rank and file. If not destined to greatness, the next best thing which he can aspire to is respectability; but no man can be either truly great or respectable who is vain, pompous, and overbearing.

By the time the novice has found his legitimate social position, be the same high or low, the probability is that the disagreeable traits of his character will be softened down or worn away. Most likely the process of abrasion will be rough, perhaps very rough; but when it is all over, and he begins to see himself as others see him, and not as reflected in the mirror of self-conceit, he will be thankful that he has run the gauntlet, and arrived, though by a rough road at self knowledge. Upon the whole, whatever loving mothers may think to the contrary, it is a good thing for youths to be knocked about in the world; it makes men of them.

INNOCENCE.—To dread no eye, and to suspect no tongue, is the great prerogative of innocence—an exemption granted only to invariable virtue. But guilt has always its horrors and solicitudes; and to make it yet more shameful and detestable, it is doomed often to stand in awe of those to whom nothing could give influence or weight, but their power of betraying.

WHAT is better than a promising young man? A paying one.

THE LEGEND OF ARGIS.

ONE of the most curious and pathetic legends of Wallachia, tells of the foundation of the great metropolitan church of Argis.

In the middle of the fifteenth century, the Prince of Niagoe, warring against the Turks, was on the eve of fighting a great battle, and went to the hermitage of a pious anchorite, before whom he made a vow that, if victorious, he would build on that very spot the most splendid temple that ever sought the rays of the sun. Consequently, it is supposed, his triumph was complete. The Ottomans were dispersed; and he had nothing to do but to accomplish his promise. Princes were usually faithful in these kinds of undertakings. Niagoe had much wealth at his command, and knew of an able architect named Manoli. To him he entrusted the task of constructing the temple—bidding him collect the best Greek, Arab, and Byzantine workmen. That solitary region was accordingly soon peopled with strangers. The forests began to retire, the flanks of the mountains were torn open; and the bears that looked in while passing down the long glades on the rugged ruins, became convinced that their occupation in that part of the world was gone for ever.

Manoli had set about his task with enthusiasm. There were day gangs and night gangs; so that the walls rose as if by magic.

Already the topmost pinnacle began to appear to the distant traveler over the surrounding trees. when suddenly the edifice sunk into the earth, and spread upon it in ruin. Manoli attributed this disaster to some defect in his plan, or to the too great haste with which it was carried out; and began again with more caution. But, no sooner had the building reached the former elevation than down it came again. Not one stone remained upon another. Manoli had confidence in his own talent, and was therefore convinced that some invisible power was determined to cross his purposes. He would have been inclined to give up the work altogether; but Niagoe had become furious. As usual in building enterprises, the expenses of the first construction exceeded the estimate by at least a half. To effect the second the prince was obliged to sell the diamonds of his wife. His vow was costing him dear; but he dared not break it. The simpler course was to swear by his beard that Manoli should be decapitated, and all his workmen hanged, if the church were not finished by a given time.

Under these circumstances, Manoli went to consult the aged anchorite who had witnessed the Prince Niagoe's vow, and asked him what was to be done. "Build again," was the reply, "and when the last stone is about to be placed, come to me, and by that I may have found an expedient." Manoli accordingly, for the third time, labored, and for the third time brought the church near perfection. Then he paused and went to the anchorite, who received him with a glare of horror such as he had never seen before, hurriedly interrupted his pious salutation, and said in a strange unearthly voice, "Watch tomorrow from the pinnacle, and the first woman thou beholdest approaching from the east cause her to be taken, when she reaches the place of work, with whatever she may have in her arms, and walled up within one of the pillars of the church. Thus only will success crown thy efforts."

Manoli was a humane man; and his heart shrank within him at hearing this order. But his own life, with that of many others, was at stake, and he went away from the cell sadly determined to obey what he conceived to be a divine command. He was awakened next morning by the singing of the workmen, and climbed up immediately to the appointed place, when, shading his eyes from the low sun with his hand, he anxiously looked forth. Some time passed and no female form appeared. At length a slight figure was seen approaching down a glade, in the midst of a light mist, kindled into gold by the still slanting rays of the sun. Manoli was about to rejoice, when suddenly he recognised in the devoted victim his own young wife Uca—his wife of two summers only, the mother of the boy whose smiles and even whose cries gladdened his heart, when he drew near home. He knelt down and prayed with streaming eyes, that some obstacle might present itself to turn back her steps. He had scarcely concluded when a huge dog rushed out from a thicket, overturned the basket of provisions which Uca was bringing for her husband, and forced her to go back to prepare a new meal.

Manoli rejoiced, and continued to look toward the silent and motionless east. Suddenly the form of a woman again appeared. He strained his eyes beneath his broad hard hand, leaning forward, he nearly toppled over, and to his dismay he saw that it was Uca again. The good housewife had returned to her home, had replenished her basket, and was now not walking but running, lest her husband might suffer by the delay. Manoli resorted to prayer once more; although he believed it was almost impious thus to strive with fate. This time a gaunt wolf stalked forth from beneath the trees, and Uca again fled back to her dwelling.

Manoli returned thanks in a passion of joy, and remained for the whole day still looking anxiously out. The sun had gone down beneath the long black horizon behind him; the trees had melted into a dim shadow; the course of the stream could no longer be traced; the flocks on the hill sides faded from sight, though their monotonous bleating and the shouting of the shepherds could still be heard. Manoli began to believe that the church was destined never to be finished, and resolved to share its destruction. Suddenly, near at hand, quite among the workmen, he beheld the indomitable Uca, with a third basket of provisions on one arm, and her babe upon the other. She looked around for her husband, eager to explain the cause of her delay and to justify herself. He was soon in her presence. Looking on, by the workman's torches, which were already lighted, she wondered at the solemnity of his aspect. He did not now shed many tears; for he believed that he was obeying the thrice-expressed will of Heaven. He kissed his wife tenderly, putting aside the hands of the little child which endeavored to clasp his neck—for how could he have resisted that caress?—and then, in a loud, husky voice, ordered the two victims to be enclosed in the central pillar of the great aisle. They wondered and murmured—but they obeyed; and the shrieks of despair that thrilled at first through the darkness were soon drowned in the noise of hammers and chissels and pickaxes. Manoli looked sternly on until the pale face of his wife had disappeared; and then he went apart, and throwing himself on the ground, spent the night in despair, which no consolation came to visit.

Shortly afterwards, the church was finished, and all the country round came to shower praises on the architect. But some say envy, and some say injured affection, was on the watch. The most probable story is that the father of Uca, a master-workman, silently excited his comrades against Manoli. One day he had ascended to the highest tower to see that all was right, they drew away the ladder, and called out to him tauntingly to come down if he could. The unhappy man shrieked aloud, endeavoring to justify himself. He had obeyed the orders of Heaven, given through the anchorite of the cell. They replied that the anchorite had died the day before his last visit, and that he had been deluded by a fiend in human shape. His despair then became overwhelming. But love of life is strong. He was a great mechanician, and endeavored, they say, to fabricate a pair of wings, by which he might fly down from that immense height. He dared not implore the succor of Heaven, and he leaped with mad courage. Down he came. The wings shattered by the first shock, beat uselessly round him during that terrible dive. He was seen to descend like an arrow; and they say that the earth opened like water to receive him, and closed again over his head. The legend asserts that ever since, at the hour of midnight a plaintive woman's voice is always heard murmuring through the church, imploring Manoli to release her and her child.

The present inhabitant of the ruined Argis has never heard these words; for he has never been present at the hour when they are uttered. But he knows that he can do so when he will. Meanwhile, he never wakes at midnight without offering up a prayer for the soul of poor Uca, and even for that of the unfortunate Manoli.

ABOUT AMBER.—Now that amber is being largely used for trimming ladies' dresses, and is otherwise attracting marked attention, the following facts concerning it (which we cut from an English journal) have a peculiar interest: "The uses to which amber is put, are not very numerous. As a material for art carving, nothing can be more beautiful. The principal market is Constantinople, where it is made into pipe mouthpieces, and articles of female ornament, such as beads. The Turks and Armenians are acknowledged to be first-rate judges of amber, and a connoisseur could enjoy no greater treat than a stroll through the Bazaar at Stamboul, where the amber-workers are located. For a pair of chibouk mouth-pieces, of moderate dimensions, but well matched as to color, sums varying from twenty to fifty pounds will be demanded; while, for a chaplet of beads, three shillings the drachm would not be considered exorbitant, although that amount might be fractionally reduced, should the purchaser have the nerve and patience to devote a day or two to the conduct of the bargain, and be able to withstand the flattering allusions to his imperial descent, with which Ali or Hassan will plentifully bespatter him. There are many very fine examples of carving in amber to be found in the royal collections of Europe. In the loan collection at South Kensington, may be seen an octagonal casket, the property of the Queen, the oblong plates carved with figures emblematic of the cardinal virtues; and, in close proximity, there is a larger casket of architectural design, chiefly remarkable for the variety of colors in the amber used in its construction. It is ornamented with statuettes, twisted pillars, and quaint panelling, the workmanship being Flemish, of the early part of the seventeenth century. A very elegant piece of modern carving, in amber, was shown at the International Exhibition of 1862, in the shape of a vine branch with leaves and fruit; but such works of art must always be scarce, owing to the difficulty of procuring lumps of amber of sufficient size and purity. The only purposes to which amber is applied in the useful arts, is in the manufacture of varnishes for carriage-builders and photographers. That used for the panels of carriages is expensive, and is a long time in drying.

ALWAYS LOVE.

BECAUSE Love's sigh is but a sigh,
Doth it the less Love's heart disclose?
Because the rose must fade and die,
Is it the less the lovely rose?
Because black night must shrond the day
Shall the brave sun no more be gay?

Because chill Autumn frights the birds
Shall we distrust that Spring will come
Because sweet words are only words,
Shall love for evermore be dumb?
Because our bliss is fleeting bliss,
Shall we who love forbear to kiss?

Because those eyes of gentle mirth
Must sometime cease my heart to thrill,
Because the sweetest voice on earth
Sooner or later must be still,
Because its idol is unsure.
Shall my strong love the less endure?

Ah, no! let lovers breathe their sighs,
And roses bloom, and music sound,
And passion burn on lips and eyes,
And Pleasure's merry world go round
Let golden sunshine flood the sky,
And let me love, or let me die!

—WILLIAM WINTER.

WITNESSES IN COURT.—Of all unfortunate people in this world, none are more entitled to sympathy and commisseration than those whom circumstances oblige to appear upon the witness stand in court. You are called to the stand and place your hand upon a copy of the Scriptures in sheepskin binding, with a cross on one side and none on the other, to accommodate either variety of the Christian faith. You are then arraigned before two legal gentlemen, one of whom smiles at you blandly because you are on his side, the other eyeing you savagely for the opposite reason. The gentleman who smiles proceeds to pump you of all you know, and having squeezed all he wants out of you, hands you over to the other, who proceeds to show you that you are entirely mistaken in all your suppositions; that you never saw anything you have sworn to; that you never saw the defendant in your life; in short, that you have committed direct perjury. He wants to know if you have ever been in state prison, and takes your denial with the air of a man who thinks you ought to have been there, asks you all the questions over again in different ways, and tells you, with an awe inspiring severity, to be careful what you say. He wants to know if he understood you to say so and so, and wants to know whether you meant something else. Having bullied and scared you out of your wits, and convicted you in the eyes of the jury of prevarication, he lets you go. By and by everybody you have fallen out with is put on the stand to swear that you are the biggest scoundrel they ever knew, and not to be believed under oath. Then the opposing counsel, in summing up, paints your moral photograph to the jury, as a character fit to be handed down to time as the type of infamy; as a man who had conspired against innocence and virtue, and stood convicted of the attempt. The judge, in his charge, tells the jury if they believe your testimony, etc., etc., indicating that there is even a judicial doubt of your veracity, and you go home to your wife and family, neighbors and acquaintances, a suspected man, all because of your accidental presence on an unfortunate occasion.

THE "EXILES OF SIBERIA."—According to a manifesto issued for and probably by aristocratic representatives of Poland, the number of Poles sent to Siberia since January, 1863, amounts to 18,682, among whom 164 are women and 114 priests. All were transported for political delinquencies, and, according to the offence imputed, are sentenced either to forced labor in the mines, colonisation in the villages, or mere residences in the villages or towns. In addition to these, 33,780 persons were banished to the steppes of the Ural, as severe a punishment as removal to Siberia, but nearer home. Furthermore, 12,556 persons, among them 218 women and 163 priests, were forcibly made to leave their homes and accept a compulsory abode in the interior of European Russia; 2,416 were placed in the ranks of the army; 31,500 in houses of correction, (the greater part of whom were subsequnetly removed to Siberia,) and 620 in the churchyards of divers penitentiaries, having died before trial. On the battle-fields of the rebellion, as Russian communication show, 33,800 were buried. As 1,468 more were shot or hung by courts martial, and 7,060 forced to seek refuge in foreign countries, the total of the melancholy list is swelled to 141,881. Besides these, Poland has furnished two per cent. of her male population as recruits.

CHINESE.—The Chinese, themselves, have no tunes, and no ideas of music. Their instruments can only produce two or three tones, and their singing is screeching in falsetto to no kind of tune. The conventional terms of "high" and "low," are utterly unknown to them. Why, they ask, should a grave note be "down" and a shrill note be "up?" Their voices are harsh, to a painful degree, and their talent for flattening wonderful. They must never be asked to go above D, and, after half an hour's singing, loose all command of their voices. They also incline to bawl.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1867.

IS OUR SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT A FAILURE?

IT is a fact not to be disguised, that the number of thoughtful Americans who have come to regard this question as one open to serious discussion, and that may possibly admit of a decision in the affirmative, is very rapidly increasing. In the progress of events, the development of new social conditions and of the results of some of our social and political experiments, the more advanced mind of the nation has quite outgrown that state of childlike faith and patriotic enthusiasm which inspired the Fourth of July orations of the last generation, and has learned to feel and express doubts in regard to the excellence of some of the leading features of free Democratic institutions, which would have been deemed rank treason twenty years ago.

We allude to this change simply as a fact which will be conceded by every candid observer, without designing at present, to enter into a discussion of the question whether there is reasonable foundation for the spirit of distrust alluded to. A certain natural reaction from what is familiar, is characteristic of a large class of cultivated and philosophic minds in which judgment predominates over sentiment. The distant ship, says Emerson, ever seems fairer to us than the one in which we are sailing. At the same time that thoughtful men among us are seriously alarmed by some of the workings of an elective judiciary and of universal suffrage, many of the same class in England are strenuously urging modifications in their system which shall approximate it to our own. If in many of our most intelligent circles the melancholly conviction is felt that the government of numbers has proved a failure, and a preference for monarchical over popular institutions is freely expressed, it is equally true that our system has many of its most enthusiastic admirers and also not a few of its ablest expounders among distinguished writers who are subjects of European monarchies. The obvious explanation is that as no form of government is perfect, each possessing defects and merits of its own; and as the evils inevitably attract the attention of those who experience them more readily than the excellencies, men whose candor and judgment are not affected by a spurious sentiment of patriotism, are naturally prone to exaggerate the inconveniences which attach to the system under which they live, while inconveniences equally great connected with other systems in a great measure escape their observation. Thus, while the more enlightened and philosophic advocates of reform, in France, admire the conservatism and extreme caution that characterize English statesmen in introducing political changes, some of the most eminent British political writers have been enthusiastic in their admiration of the boldness and thoroughness with which French reformers have overthrown at a single blow institutions that were the growth of centuries, and proceeded to erect an entirely new edifice upon the ruins.

Within the last quarter of a century, certain very marked changes have been developed in the older communities in the United States; and they have been of such a character as not only to strengthen the tendency on the part of Americans of wealth and education to regard our political future with feelings of alarm, but in a great measure to modify the favorable views of the foreign admirers of our institutions.

The wide diffusion of a modicum of education among the masses, has without doubt diminished the influence of the more highly cultured few, has promoted the general growth of conceit and self-confidence, and destroyed the wholsome respect for what is superior. The experiment of an elective judiciary has made the office of a judge, a reward for party service. The principle of universal suffrage, by rendering it necessary for all who aspire to office to conciliate the multitude, has produced a horde of demagogues, and excluded the best class of citizens from office. New York, the largest American city, and which it might be claimed with some show of plausibility may be taken as a fair type of what large communities will become under the influence of the rule of numbers, is one of the worst governed cities in the world. Why, it may be asked, are we not to expect similar developments in Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, and other growing cities, when they shall have become as old as New York; when larger amounts of public money to be disbursed shall present greater temptations to jobbing and corruption; and when the same causes that have placed the control of New York municipal affairs, in the hands of demagogues and unscrupulous politicians, to the exclusion of the best citizens, shall have produced the same results in all the great centres of wealth and population?

But it is not in our great cities alone that the opponent of American institutions, can find facts upon which to found his argument against them; neither in the disregard of law, and the frequent resort to "irregular justice," which have been the rule, and not the exception, in many of our frontier communities. An official document, the startling statements of which are vouched for in such a manner as to leave no room to doubt their accuracy, informs the American public and the world, that for several years there has existed in the State of New York an organized association of depredators whose operations, carried on in defiance of the law, extend through eight counties, and whose members are numbered by thousands. Among these are farmers, country merchants, and even justices of the peace. "They have," says the Report, "numerous well-trained confederates in all those counties." The organization has, hitherto, proved itself altogether too strong for the law. Its members, we are told, "have been indicted times without number" in Oneida, Oswego, Otesgo, Madison, Chenango, and other counties, "but none have ever been convicted." No sooner are they arrested than "farmers, apparently respectable, who belong to the gang, and share its profits," come forward and offer bail. Persons who exhibit any activity against them, are sure to be visited with speedy punishment. Their houses take fire mysteriously, or their horses and cattle disappear. Even District Attorneys and Judges seem to stand in awe of them, for these officers are elected by popular vote, and the Report informs us that the association "exerts a great political influence, and it is well understood that it is always ready to reward its friends and punish its enemies."

Of course, no association of such a character, and upon such a scale, could exist for a month, under any European government; and we cannot wonder at the declaration of the London Quarterly, made after quoting several pages of the Report, that such facts show that our "boasted liberty resolves itself to a considerable extent into freedom for theives, and thraldom for honest men."

But after all, facts like these do not demonstrate that popular government is a failure. They simply confirm the principle always insisted upon by the friends of popular government, that the education of the masses is necessary for the permanence and purity of our institutions; they show the great importance of preventing the control of municipal affairs in large cities from falling into the hands of needy politicians, and also the importance of insisting upon character and probity as the very first qualifications for municipal office; and they further show that Judges, and all other officers connected with the administration of justice ought either to be selected in some other way than by popular vote, or to be chosen for life. We cannot perceive that the logical force of the facts which we have frankly conceded, extends beyond the inferences stated. Popular government may indeed prove a failure, but we are not yet justified in declaring that it has already proved one. The trial is still going on; and until further evidence shall be produced, a verdict will be premature.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

WE have received from A. Roman & Co. the following publications:

LECTURES ON NATURAL THEOLOGY; or, Nature and the Bible from the same Author. Delivered before the Lowell Institute, Boston. By P. A. Chadbourne, A. M., M. D., Professor of Natural History in Williams College; Author of Lectures on the "Relations of Natural History," etc. New York; G. P. Putnam, 1867.

A JOURNEY TO ASHANGO-LAND; And Further Penetration into Equatorial Africa. By Paul B. Du Chaillu, author of Explorations in Equatorial Africa, with maps and Illustrations, New York; D. Appleton and Co., Broadway, 1867.

A TALK WITH MY PUPILS, By Mrs. Charles Sedgwick, New Edition, New York; James Miller Publisher, 522 Broadway, 1867.

CLASSIC QUOTATIONS: A Thought-Book of the Wise Spirits of all Ages and all Countries, Fit for All Men and All Hours. Collected, Arranged, and Edited by James Elmes, Author of "Memoirs of Sir Christopher Wren:" "Dictionary of the Fine Arts;" "Lectures on Architecture," etc., New York; Published by James Miller, Successor to C. S. Francis & Co., 522 Broadway, 1867.

THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, By Charles Dickens, With original Illustrations by S. Eytinge Jr., Boston; Ticknor and Fields, 1867.

PLUTARCH ON THE DELAY OF DEITY IN PUNISHING THE WICKED, Revised Edition, with Notes, By Professors H. B. Hackett and W. S. Tyler, New York; D. Appleton and Co., Broadway, 1867.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW; complete. The Diamond Edition. Boston; Ticknor & Fields, 1867.

MORE POLITICAL BITTERNESS.

THE New York Herald alludes to the riot on St Patrick's Day, as "a most unfortunate occurrence," and has from the commencement been remarkably mild in all its allusions to the matter. There are, however, others among the leading Eastern journals that are far from taking the affair so meekly. Several New England papers hint strongly at the necessity of organizing an new "Native American Party," upon a wider and wiser principle than that of the old one. The Boston correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin speaks as though he anticipated an early political movement in this direction. The recent grant of one side of Union Square, in New York, made by the Common Council, to the Roman Catholics, for the erection of a building in which to hold a fancy fair, seems also to have caused dissatisfaction in some quarters. The Nation, commenting upon this action of the New York Municipal Authorities, expresses the opinion that "no other denomination would have asked such a favor," and adds: "The Common Council confesses frankly that no other denomination would have received it. The building has raised the rate of insurance on the houses along the entire block, but the owners have applied in vain to the Courts for an injunction." If the New York Common Council after granting this unusual favor, did in fact "confess frankly that no other denomination would have received it," we can scarcely wonder at the bitterness of the Nation's concluding comment on the affair taken in connection with the outrage of the 17th of March, which is as follows: "The experiment of Fenian government is, in fact, being tried in New York so thoroughly that we cannot for the life of us imagine what causes the Brotherhood to risk their pence in trying to wrest Ireland from the British. When people can butcher policemen on Patrick's Day, and raise money for their church by blocking up the public streets, they must be great fools to go fighting for "liberty" elsewhere."

Unless we are mistaken, however, there has been a precedent for granting the use of the Square for the purpose of holding a fair, though in the case referred to, it was for a national purpose, that is, in aid of the Sanitary Commission, and not for the benefit of any particular religious body.

IT SEEMS to be the general impression among the Eastern press that legislative corruption is rapidly spreading over the whole country. In New York and New Jersey it has become so flagrant and open, that its existence in the most shameless forms is disputed by no one. It is now said that the condition of things in Pennsylvania is very nearly as bad, and that in the latter State the Central Railroad company wield a power similar to that of the Camden and Amboy, in New Jersey, or the New York Central, in New York. The two last named corporations have long been said to "own" the States in which they respectively located, and it is an undisputed fact that they have long possessed the power to defeat any bill before the legislature which they saw fit to oppose. Large railroad coporations at the West, and throughout the country, are said to be grasping at the same kind of political influence. A large increase in the number of the legislature of the States where the evil exists has been suggested.

THE DISTURBANCES among the freedmen at several points in the South, have elicited a great deal of comment of a kind which would seem to imply that it is reasonable to expect better behavior from the black man than from the white, under corresponding circumstances. The negroes, suddenly removed from the condition of slavery to that of freedmen, have been guilty of some follies and excesses. In this they have simply acted as all men, of whatever race or color have done when placed in a new and strange position, for which there had been no gradual preparation. It is unreasonable to expect a slave suddenly transformed into a free man, to conduct himself with the judgment and prudence of one who has always been free. But there seems to be a considerable number of political moralists who insist, just now, of applying a higher standard in judging the acts of the late slaves, than when those of their late masters are in question.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for April, contains a remarkably instructive paper on "The New Jersey Monopolies," from which California politicians and public men can, we think, learn some valuable lessons. The writer shows how a score or so of men have for thirty years managed to control a sovereign State, for their own private benefit. He shows how governors and legislators have been made and unmade, as the interests of the clique seemed to demand; and how the press, the legislature, and the bar were influenced to lend themselves to the purposes of a great monied corporation; and finally he shows how the public suffered, as it always must in similar cases, for the benefit of a few wealthy schemers.

A COPY of a painting of the Crucifixion has been shown us by Mr. Edwards the accomplished and well-known actor, who is its owner. The picture is by Master Benoult, who is but eleven years of age. Considered as the work of one so young, it is a very remarkable production, and furnishes evidence of rare talent, which should not lack judicious encouragement.

GLIMPSES OF BOHEMIA.

BY AN OLD STAGER.

GLIMPSE THE FIRST—A METROPOLITAN BOHEMIAN IN HIS DEN.

MY plan for the future was conceived and matured during that last sleepless, remorseful night at Old Union, and a most preposterous plan it was, such as could only have originated in the brain of an inexperienced and romantic, not to say weak-minded youth. It was nothing less absurd than the project of going to New York and earning a living by my pen. The most intimate friendship I had contracted during my year and a half of college life was with John Pike, the junior editor of the Pantheon, at the time when I entered the institution. Pike was a young man of sanguine temperament and versatile talents, a ready and rather clever writer on almost any subject. Whatever he was capable of doing at all, he could do with facility and at the shortest notice. All his performances, whether in prose or verse, evinced talent and ingenuity, but without a scintilla of genius. His special forte was burlesque and parody; and he produced surprisingly neat imitations and caricatures of the manner of celebrated authors. To a considerable share of wit he joined that species of rollicking humor which results from overflowing animal spirits and native vivacity of temperament, rather than from purely intellectual characteristics. In our little world, he was considered a brillant genius. His travesties of popular poets were pronounced equal to anything in the Rejected Addresses, and of course, distinguished literary success was predicted for him. Upon graduating, he had gone to New York for the purpose of reading law with an uncle, and since that time he had maintained a regular correspondence with me. His letters presented a highly colored and most alluring picture of the charms of metropolitan life. He very seldom made any allusion to his law studies, or the routine of his office duties, and the impression naturally produced upon one's mind by his letters, was that he was leading the careless existence of a member of a select Bohemian Circle, of which the choice spirits found it easy by brief periods of fitful literary labor, to obtain the means of indulging in intervals of elegant leisure and harmless dissipation. Champagne dinners at Delmonico's; rustic feasts at the "Wehawken Cottage;" the Saturday afternoon excursions of the "Mango Club" to Coney Island; the doings and sayings of said Bohemian Association at their weekly meetings in the back-room of a lager-beer saloon in the Bowery, (the Teutonic beverage had not then become fashionable and invaded the aristocratic precincts of Broadway, as it did a few years later)—these and the like matters furnished the staple of Pike's epistles.

A few months after his arrival in the metropolis, he had became an occasional contributor to a certain Sunday paper, which I will call the Dredger, and through some one connected with that journal had made the acquaintance of a publisher, who employed him to furnish indexes to American editions of standard works, and to perform other labor of the like kind. Although he never went into details, or mentioned the amount of compensation received for these services, I very naturally inferred that it must be liberal from the kind of life my friend appeared to be leading, and my knowledge that he was as destitute of resources as myself, he having himself mentioned that his "close-fisted curmuedgeon of an uncle," allowed him barely enough for his "invaluable services as clerk to pay his washing bills"—a statement which I understood literally, and which in fact was not extravagantly figurative, as I afterward learned.

Under these circumstances, my inference in regard to the liberal rewards of literary labor in the metropolis, and the pleasures of a literary career, were not altogether unnatural. I secretly held myself to be not inferior to Pike as a writer; why then should I prove less successful? why should not I too enter the charmed circle and share the glory and the felicity of the "Mangoes?" Manifestly there was no reason why it should not be so—at least I was unable to discover any. Accordingly, my brain fired with visions of literary distinction, and of the charms of such pursuits and society as my imagination had erected upon the slender foundation of Pike's lively and unpremeditated letters, I resolved to seek my fortune in the metropolis. I would no longer be a burden upon a care-worn mother, the selfish lazy self-indulgent wronger of brothers and sisters pinched and economizing for my sake Never shall I forget the feelings of pride and exultation—the sense of independence which I experienced, when I had settled the entire matter in my mind. There was of course something both ludicrous and pathetic in all this; but it was long before the ludicrous element fully revealed itself in my own consciousness

Pike's descriptions and allusions had made the chief ornaments of his circle so familiar to me, that I had formed as distinct, if not as truthful, images of them in my mind as though I had already met them in bodily presence, had drank lager with them at their Bowery Symposium, and shared their festive sandwiches, bolognas, and "weiss wein" on the occasion of those Saturday visits to the Wehawken Gast house. which my imagination pictured as so altogether charming. I seemed to know them all—those choice and gifted spirits—from the grave, imperturbable "Pork-up," the great poet and novelist of the Dredger, with his flowing beard and majestic stature, to the fiery and etherial little "C. Columbus, Tottle," musical and dramatic critic on the Sunday Globe, with his erect and martial form, measuring just five feet three, in high-heeled boots. Already, in my heart I hailed these children of genius as comrades and friends; already I revelled in the anticipation of such intellectual feasts and such manifold forms of Bohemian enjoyment and good fellowship, as poet or novelist has never yet adequately painted.

So fully possessed was I by the conviction of the perfect practicability of my scheme, so confident of success, and that confidence imparted such an air of manliness and independence to my bearing, that I easily succeeded in imposing my own views upon my foud and credulous mother. Indeed, it was but natural that she should become a ready convert. Had she uot always had faith in my precocious talent? Had she not always said I was reserved for illustrious things, since the day of my providential deliverance, through the hands of Jake Darter as the human instrument, from that air-hole in the ice of Moffat's Mill poud? Had I not carried off the prize at the Academy, when a mere child, from a host of competitors among whom were great hulking lads of eighteen? How then should I fail?

I did not, however, develope my scheme very clearly to my mother. I spoke of "influential friends," made at College, who were now residing in New York, and hinted vaguely at employment in a law-office, and a position on a newspaper, yet with an air that implied that all was arranged and certain. Had she understood the real position of things, and the slender foundation upon which my hopes were built, her consent to my scheme could not have been so readily gained; and had I hinted at such a thing as any connection with Sunday papers, or intimate association with the writers for them, I should have utterly destroyed the illusion I had created, and inflicted upon her needless pain and mortification.

It was on a very pleasant June morning that I arrived at New York. The steamer, towing a barge loaded with hay, had left H—— about a huudred and twenty miles up the river, at five o'clock P. M., the preceding day, and it was eleven A. M., when she rounded to, at the foot of Courtland street. The Albany steamers made the trip in half the time—but then they were more expensive, and economy was an important consideration to a youth going to seek his fortune in a strange city, with all his worldly effects packed in a deer-skiu trunk of such moderate weight and size as would not task the strength of a consumptive porter, and possessing the sum of twenty eight dollars, six shillings and sixpence, New York currency, as his entire cash capital.

Following the advice of certain traveled members of my family, who had several times made the voyage between H—— and the metropolis, I left my trunk on board the boat for the present, and stepping upon the wharf with a pleasant sense of freedom from all embarrassment arising from the necessity of looking after "luggage," made my way through the crowd of hackmen, porters, etc., until I found myself in the busy, and crowded thoroughfare that borders the North River. I was now very hungry, having had no breakfast, and seeing close at hand a sort of booth, its whole front open on the street, with a display of hot coffee, pies, crabs, lobsters, and small plates of raw oysters, such an establishment as is to be found in the vicinity of the wharves of most large maritime cities, for the accommodation of sailors and watermen, I perched myself upon one of the row of high stools in front of the counter, or bar, aud regaled myself with a sumptuous repast of coffee, oysters and lobster. I say a sumptuous repast, for such it seemed to me, shell-fish being a marine dainty that very seldom fouud its way to H—— in those days, and I do not believe that I had tasted oysters a dozen times in my life. After a week of metropolitan experience, I should have smiled (or perhaps blushed) at the thought of being seen eating at such a place; but at present, in my rustic simplicity I had no suspicion that the establishment was not such an one as might be patronized at times by the "Mangoes" themselves, or that an epicure might not consider it a highly eligible place for the gratification of a taste for marine delicacies.

Having finished my meal, and paid the sum of "one and ninepence" (twenty-one and a half cents) therefor, I obtained of the proprietor of the booth directions for finding Nassau street, and went on my way pondering the expensiveness of the luxuries in which I had been so extravagantly indulging. Upon reaching Broadway, I was less impressed than I had expected to be by that great thoroughfare, which, at the point where I entered it, was far from exhibiting the splendor and attractions with which my imagination had clothed it. Throngs of pre-occupied, eager looking men were hurrying along the sidewalk, and the street was crowded with drays, hackney coaches, and other vehicles of a homely, business like aspect. All was dust, bustle and confusion; and I looked in vain for the magnificent stores, the aristocratic equipages, and the gay throng of fashionable promenaders which were associated in my mind with the name of this renowned street. I was not yet sufficiently familiar with the city to be aware that these were features of Broadway that were only to be found north of Chambers street.

Upon leaving the steamboat, it was my intention to seek out Pike at once, inform him of my plans, and obtain his advice as to the proper steps to be taken in order to obtain literary employment. He had never formally communicated to me his address, but I had a clue to it in the following paragraph in one of his recent letters:

"Behold me, then, my dear Flicker, fairly embarked on the voyage of life entirely on my own hook, where,

"Each for himself must cast the sounding-line
In the deep ocean of Futurity."

But I fear I am not much of a navigator, on that metaphorical sea, all my nautical achievments for two days past having consisted of reading Cooper's "Red Rover" while reclining at ease upon the dilapidated lounge which constitutes the most ornamental article of furniture that my "apartments," (third floor back, No. 9, Nassau street,) can boast of. The spell of an invincible indolence is upon me. Blackstone and Graham's Practice have become as an abomination, and I can brace myself to no severer intellectual effort than novel reading. I have even proved unequal to the exertion of preparing my weekly contribution for the Dredger, a sin of omission which will have to be expiated, I fear, by fasting; prayer alone, being inefficacious (so far as my personal experience goes) in cases of this nature."

Taking a glance at the letter in order to refresh my memory as to the address, I soon succeded in inquiring my way to No. 9 Nassau, which proved to be a high and rather ancient looking brick building, one or two doors from the corner of Pine street. The sides of the main entrance were plentifully garnished with tin signs of various dimensions, upon which appeared the names of numerous "Attorneys" and "Attorneys & Counselors," together with a few which boasted the additional title of "Solicitor in Chancery"—for the "New Code" had not yet been adopted in the State of New York, and the Court of Chancery still held jurisdiction of all "cases in Equity."

Among this multitude of signs, my eye rested upon one bearing the name "John Pike" without title or addition of any kind. Inside the entrance I discovered another with the same name and a hand pointing upstairs, and at the head of the first flight, still another with the name and hand, beneath which was the legend "Excelsior! Back room; left hand side." At the head of the second flight of stairs, on the left side of the hall, was a door upon which were two pieces of paper, affixed with wafers. The upper paper, which seemed to be designed as an economical substitute for a sign, exhibited the single word "Pike" in elaborate German text; the one beneath it was of a temporary character, and bore the inscription "Gone to the City Hall. Will return in five minutes."

While I stood, considering how I could best pass the "five minutes," I heard a light quick step ascending the stairs, and turning, I encountered my college friend, face to face. His reception of me was as cordial as could have been desired; indeed his greetings were so loud and animated that the front room door at the end of the passage opened, and a sandy head with a pen behind one of his ears thereunto appertaining was thrust forth to see what had caused so unwonted a commotion.

Taking a key from what appeared to be its place of concealment in a small space between the wall and a coal box in the corner near the head of the stairs, my friend opened his door and ushered me into his "den"—a name which I saw at a glance was appropriate to it in the most literal sense. It was a small, dingy, bare apartment, without covering for the floor, and with no furniture except a chair, a washstand, a table covered with green baize, a trunk of prodigious size, and a tarnished lounge, the inequalities in the surface of which spoke of long use. A rusty little grate, without any fender enhanced the forlorn aspect of the room, which was imperfectly lighted by one high old-fashioned window. There was no closet, and no door opening into any other apartment. On the mantel over the grate stood a fragment of looking-glass and a dozen or so of books. Such was the "den" with all its appurtenances and belongings, which Pike has informed me in one of his letters, served him "for bed-room and office at once." Understood literally, my friend's epistolary allusions to his quarters, were not such as to justify me in expecting anything much better than I now saw. But instead of so understanding them I had taken all his disparaging expressions as mere pleasantries, and had supposed that his "office and lodgings" though not perhaps patterns of order and neatness consisted of at least two or three comfortable rooms, in one of which he could, if occasion required, offer a friend a "shake down."

THE American Institute has decided to hold a world's fair in New York in 1867, beginning on the 4th of July, the centennial of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

SUSPICION is no less an enemy to virtue than to happiness. He that is already corrupt, is naturally suspicious; and he that becomes suspicious, will quickly be corrupt.

THE ROBBERY OF COUNT DE MONTGOMMERI.

A HISTORICAL STORY.

IN the year of grace sixteen hundred and eighty-seven, Laurent Guillemott d'Anglade, lived in a fine house in the Rue Royale, at Paris, near the Bastille. He and his wife lived in great style, kept their carriage, played high, talked incessantly of their high birth and family estate, appeared to have plenty of money—which they lent occasionally upon good security—and, on the strength of their own representations obtained entrance into the society of some of the best houses in Paris. For the rest, they were a worthy, respectable couple, like hundreds of others; their only sin being that they gave themselves out for being much richer and grander than they actually were.

M. d'Anglade and his wife occupied the greater part of the house; but, as general in Paris, there were other inmates. A certain Count and Countess de Montgommeri occupied the ground-floor and the rooms above. The ground-floor consisted of three rooms, which all opened into a long corridor, at one end of which was the porte-cochére of the court-yard, and at the other a staircase leading to the rooms upon the first floor, where there was a small inner closet or strong room. Here the count and countess kept their money and jewels. The Abbe Francois Gagnard, the count's almoner, a page, and a valet-de-chambre, slept in one of the three rooms on the ground-floor.

A friendly acquaintance soon sprung up fletween the 'lAnglades and the Montgommeries. Soon after he entered the house, the Count de Montgommeri received a large sum of money, partly louis-d'ors, some of which were quite new and others au cordon, or old ones. The remainder of the money was in thirteen bags, each bag containing a thousand francs; also there was a bag containing eleven thonsand five hundred livres in Spanish pistoles. All this money, together with a magnificent pearl necklace, estimated to be worth four thousand livres, was secured in a strong coffer, and the coffer was carefully placed in the small inner closet we have mentioned. The d'Anglades knew all this, and had recommended an investment for his money to the count. One day M. de Montgommeri and his wife agreed to go and spend a few days at their country house of Ville Vousin, near Mont l'Hére, and invited their neighbors, the d'Anglades, to accompany them. They accepted the invitation; but subsequently made some excuse for remaining at home. The count and countess set off on Monday, the twenty-second of September, sixteen hundred and eighty-seven, and gave out that they should return the following Thursday. The almoner, l'Abbe Gagnard, and all the servants accompanied them, except a femme-de-chambre, named Forménie, and one lacquey. Four sewing women, employed to embroider some hangings for Madame de Montgommeri, were also left in the house; but they were lodged in another part of the building. The key of the outer door of the room on the first floor was confided to the femme-de-chambre; the Abbe Gagnard shut and double-locked the door of his room on the ground floor; and the family departed, considering that they had left everything secure. This was showing a contempt for burglars that, under the circumstances, amounted to rashness; and they seem to have thought so, for, they returned home suddenly, twenty-four hours earlier than they had intended.

The first thing that struck the abbe was, finding his room-door ajar, although, during the absence of the count and countess, it had seemed to be closed; the abbe having double locked it with his own hands, and the key had never been out of his possession. All the servants remarked the fact also, but at the moment it did not, singular to state, make much impression on them. Supper was served to the count and countess in the salle-á-manger, and they were still at table when their neighbor, d'Anglade, came home, at eleven o'clock, accompanied by the Abbes de Fleury and de Villais, who had supped with him at the house of la Présidente Robert. Finding the count and countess were returned, they all went in, and presently Madame d'Anglade joined them. After a lively conversation they all separated for the night, and everything seemed as usual.

The next morning, the Count de Montgommeri discovered that he had been robbed. The lock of his strong box had been forced, and everything it contained had been carried away.

He of course made a complaint to the lieutenant-criminel of the châtelet; who, with the procureur du roi and the commissary of police, lost no time in repairing to the spot. On examination they declared the robbery to have been committed by some one upon the premises, and decided upon searching the whole house. D'Anglade and his wife requested that their own apartments should be the first examined. Strict scrutiny was made, but nothing could he discovered in the rooms they inhabited. The officers proceeded to the attics. Madame d'Anglade excused herself from accompanying them upon the plea of sudden faintness. Up to the attics the officers went; and, concealed in an old chest, under wearing apparel and house linen, they found a rouleau of sixty louis au cordon, wrapped in a printed paper, which the Count de Montgommeri declared was his genealogy. He also said that part of the money stolen from him consisted of louis au cordon of the years sixteen hundred and eighty-six and sixteen hundred and eighty-seven.

When d'Anglade was questioned about this money, he stammered and could give no account of how he came by it. He seemed in despair, and Madame d'Anglade said that the door of the apartment of the Abbe Gagnard had not been secured as it ought to have been, and she insisted that it should be likewise searched. This was done, it was found that money had been abstracted from five bags, each containing a thousand livres. As the Abbe Gagnard had double-locked the door before his departure and never parted with the key out of his possession, this incident confirmed the suspicion that had settled upon d'Anglade and his wife. The lieutenant-criminel went so far as to say to d'Anglade—

"Either you or I must have committed the robbery."

So convinced was he that he had secured the guilty person, that he declared it useless to waste time in making any further search, especially as the count said he could answer for the honesty of all his own servants.

D'Anglade and his wife were taken formally into custody; their persons were searched, and seventeen louis-d'or and a double pistole, Spanish money, were found in d'Anglade's purse—a circumstance which strengthened the suspicion against him, as part of the money stolen was in pistoles. It came out also, that d'Anglade, who was in the habit of supping every night in town, always took the key of the street door; there being no regular porter; but, upon this night on which the robbery must have been committed, he supped at home, contrary to his usual custom. This crowning piece of circumstantial evidence seemed decisive; seals were placed on all the doors, and d'Anglade and his wife were carried off to prison—the husband was placed in the châtelet, and the wife in Fort Evéque. They were each thrown into a dungeon, and the gaolers were strictly charged to prevent them seeing or communicating with any one. Their confinement was made as severe as possible. Madame d'Anglade had a dangerous miscarriage, but it brought no amelioration to the rigor of her prison.

The trial came on. Witnesses were heard for the prosecution. Amongst the chief were the count's servants and the Abbe Gagnard, his almoner; and two of these witnesses deposed that they had seen d'Anglade near the door of the abbe's apartment just before the arrival of the Count de Montgommeri. Another witness swore that he knew d'Anglade to be a gambler, and that he had heard the Abbe Bouin call him an old clothes-man; and this tallied with the fact that he lent money upon pledges.

Another witness deposed to having heard that d'Anglade had once stolen a piece of ribbon, and that, before he came to live in the Rue Royale, a quantity of silver plate had suddenly disappeared from the house where he lodged. Many other minute facts came out, all tending to deepen the suspicion against the d'Anglades. The most damaging evidence, however, was gathered from his own replies to the interrogatories concerning his birth and source of income. An evident mystery surrounded him. He prevaricated in his answers. At last it was made clear, that instead of being, as he had boasted, a gentleman of high birth and large fortune, his origin was mean, and his income was not more than two thousand livres, although he lived expensively, paid for everything in ready money, and had money to lend out besides. This at once established him as a chevalier d'industrie, and put an end to the sympathies of honest men. Added to all these facts and suspicions, d'Anglade and his wife contradicted each other, and there were discrepancies between their statements. The case looked black against them; but, as the justice of those days would on no account condemn a prisoner without giving him every chance of confessing his doom to be well merited, d'Anglade was put to the torture. The evidence was after all only circumstantial, and it would be a satisfaction if he could he made to confess. He was first put to the torture ordinary; and, as that brought nothing, they proceeded to the torture extraordinary, which brought nothing either. As d'Anglade refused to confess his guilt, there was nothing to be done but to condemn him without a confession (for of course justice never felt a moment's hesitation as to his guilt,) and, on the sixteenth of February, sixteen hundred and eighty-eight, he was condemned to the galleys for nine years: his wife was banished from Paris for a like period. Also, he was sentenced to pay fine to the king, to make restitution of the stolen goods, and to pay three thousand livres to the count by way of compensation, which required more than he had in the world. The five months he had spent in prison, during which he had lived on bread and water, with nothing but damp and rotten straw for a bed, had entirely shattered his constitution. Nevertheless, on being taken from the torture chamber he was thrown into the darkest and frightfulest dungeon of the Montgommeri tower, from which he was only removed to be taken—all broken to pieces—to the Château de la Joucelle, where he was attached to a gang of forcats. He seemed to be at the point of death; he declared that he was innocent of all knowledge of the robbery, received the last sacraments with devotion, pardoned his enemies, and expected death with a composure that might arise either from a sense of innocense or the prospect of a release from intense suffering. He recovered, however, sufficiently to depart for the galleys with the rest; but he was obliged to be conveyed in a cart, and two men were employed to litt him down every evening and lay him upon his bed of straw, and to lift him again into the cart the next morning. The Count de Montgommeri, who was terribly afraid that the sufferings of d'Anglade might soften the heart of justice, or that death might deprive him of his revenge, was earnest in his solicitations for the immediate departure of d'Anglade to the galleys, and stationed himself upon the road by which he must pass in order to feast his eyes upon the spectacle of d'Anglade's misery.

Upon the fourth of March, sixteen hundred and eighty-nine, d'Anglade died in the hospital at Marseilles, four months after his arrival at the galleys.

No sooner was d'Anglade dead, than annoymous letters began to circulate in all direction, in which the writer declared that his conscience would give him no peace until he declared that M. d'Anglade was entirely innocent of the robbery committed upon the Count de Montgommeri, and that the real criminals were one Vincent, alias Belestre, and the Abbe Gagnard, almoner to the count. It was added that a woman named La Comble could give important evidence.

Here was a terrible revelation! The penitent prosecutor had become horror-struck at the possibility of having been the means of subjecting an innocent man to so terrible a fate. He ordered a certain Degrais, (the same who was employed to persuade the prisoner, Madame Brinvilliers, to leave the convent, where she had taken refuge), to make inquiries into the life and habits of the party now accused. The result was that Peter Vincent, or Belestre, the first named, was discovered to be the son of a poor tanner at Mans. He had enlisted as a soldier, under the name of Belestre, and had risen to the rank of serjeant; but had been tried and condemned to the galleys for his share in the assassination of a miller. This was his first offence. His latter exploits had been confined to burglary and highway robbery. After being very poor for a long time, and a vagabond besides, he had finished by purchasing an estate in the neighborhood of Mans, for which he had paid ten thousand livres. As to the Abbe Gagnard, his father was gaoler to the prison in Mans, and the son had nothing to live upon when he first came to Paris, except the masses he said at the Saint Esprit. When he entered the household of the Count de Montgommeri in quality of almoner, he was in the most abject poverty; but, three months after he quitted him, he lived in something like opulence. He had never been suspected of any especial crime; but he was intimate with Belestre. He was moreover perfectly acquainted with everything that passed in the count's household; and, above all, he knew that the count had received a large sum of money in the month of June, sixteen hundred and eighty-seven, and he also knew where it was kept.

They were both arrested. The woman La Comble, alias Cartant, Belestre's mistress, gave evidence which was corroborated by a crowd of other witnesses; and it was clearly proved that Belestre had committed the robbery by means of false keys, and with the assistance of Gagnard. Belestre endured the torture without confessing anything; but Gagnard had less fortitude, and confessed his crime. He said, too, that he was so much alarmed when the lieutenant-criminel was examining the premises, that had he asked him the smallest question he should have confessed everything. A comfortable hearing for that officer!

The gibbet relieved the world of these two scoundrels. Nothing then remained to be done, except to make amends to the victim of judicial error. Letters of revision were obtained. Parliament pronounced a decree on the seventeenth of June, sixteen hundred and ninety-three, which rehabilitated the memory of d'Anglade, justified the wife, and rescinded her sentence, condemned the Count de Montgommeri to make restitution of the money that had been adjudged to him as reparation for the robbery, and to pay all expenses besides. A collection was made in the court for the benefit of the daughter of M. and Madame d'Anglade, which amounted to above a hundred thousand livres.

But all this did not bring back poor M. d'Anglade to life again.

THE grand event of the Opera season in Havana, has been the début of Mme. Peralta in "Sonnambula," who electrified the audience by her superb and magnificent singing. She is undoubtedly one of the greatest prima donnas now living, and should she come to New York will create a furore here. Mme. Peralta is a native of Mexico, and of a very commanding appearance.

In Harlem, a peculiar ornament of white lace and cardboard, hung just outside the street door, signifies the birth of a child; and for the period of six weeks after a birth while such a badge is visible, no tax collector or creditor of any kind is allowed to demand payment.

ABSCONDED!—The wife whose husband supposed she had abscooded was freely forgiven, when he found she had only been down to the NEW YORK PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY to see HOWLAND, and get one dozen of those beautiful Card Pictures, THE BEST ever made in this city. Come early, if you want to get a sitting. Remember the Place—Nos. 25 and 27 Third street, east side, near Market street. B. F. HOWLAND, Artist.

MAYER'S BAZAAR.—R. Mayer offers at his Bazaar, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, the greatest variety of jewelry, watches, silver-plated ware, guitars, music boxes; concertinas, accordeons, opera glasses, etc., etc., to the public of San Francisco, and to the country trade, at prices that defy competition, and is determined to close out his present stock at greatly reduced rates. His heavy case silver watches from the American Watch Company are superior to anything ever before offered to the public. These watches are taking the place of heavy gold watches from the fact that the workmanship is superior, the castings pure silver, and the prices low. The sale of these watches is very extensive on the Pacific coast. Another proof that American manufactures can beat the world. The works are made of platina and never get out of repair. French opera glasses of great power for sale or hire, and all kinds of musical instruments, eight day family clocks, etc. This is a rare chance to invest your money to advantage, at Mayer's Bazaar, southeast corner of Montgomery and Pine streets.

N. B.—An immense assortment of Japanese curiosities for sale.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ WONDERFUL BUT TRUE.—MADAME REMINGTON, the world-renowned Astrologist and Somnambulistic Clairvoyant, while in a clairvoyant state, delineates the very features of the person you are to marry, and by the aid of an instrument of intense power, known as the Psychomotrope, guarantees to produce a perfect and life like picture of the future husband or wife of the applicant, with date of marriage, occupation, leading traits of character, etc. This is no imposition, as testimonials without number can assert. By stating place of birth, age, disposition, color of eyes and hair, and enclosing fifty cents and stamped envelope addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail, together with desired information.

Address in confidence, MADAME GERTRUDE REMINGTON, P. O. Box 297, West Troy, N. Y.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties. LEON DINGEON, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA

COFFEE AND DINING SALOON,

(Formerly the German Coffee Saloon,)

NOS. 612 AND 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN.....Proprietor

This house has undergone a thorough change, both in MANAGEMENT and PRICES. A fine Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up in the rear, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued

A. BONZI & CO.,

Italian Restaurant,

515 Merchant street, opposite Washington Market, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

MEALS, WITH WINE, 50 CENTS.

THE CHOICEST COMMODITIES OF THE Market served up in the best style of Italian and French cookery.

On the second floor are numerous private rooms, for social or private DINNER PARTIES. Coffee, Chocolate, Wine, Beer, Liqueurs, with every description of edible accompaniments, served to order at any hour of the day or evening.

REMOVED

To 645 Clay street, a few doors below Kearny.

DR. BLAKE CAN NOW BE FOUND AT the above location. Engagements as usual can be made with all those who desire thorough and FIRST-CLASS GOLD FILLINGS.

Lamott's Hat Emporium

IS THE PLACE TO GET A FASHIONABLE

HAT OR CAP,

AND AT PRICES 25 PER CENT. LESS THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE IN THIS CITY.

Do not fail to have one of

LAMOTT'S HATS!

CORNER PINE AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Manufacturer and Importer of

PIANO-FORTES.

FACTORY AND WAREROOM, NO. 536 MARKET Street, opposite Second.

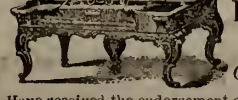
☞ PIANOS TO RENT. ☜

WALTER S. PIERCE'S

Piano Manufactory

Is the most complete on the Pacific Coast, having every appliance of machinery for Making or REPAIRING Pianos to be found in the largest Eastern Factories.

Old Pianos converted into new, by putting in new interior mechanism complete.



THE FAMOUS

PIANOS

OF

Chickering & Son

Have received the endorsement of all the leading Artistes of Europe and America. Testimonials to be seen at the Agent's.

Pianos to rent, from $5 to $10. Tuning free.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,

Have the Largest Office,

Do the most work,

And do it better

Than other offices

536 In this City,

Try them

With a Job,

And you will be

Satisfied the above

Statements are facts.

Their office is at 536

Clay St., below Montgom'y,

Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

San Francisco Mill.

HOBBS, GILMORE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

BOXES,

Market Street, between Beale and Main,

SAN FRANCISCO.

For Sale, Mahogany, Spanish Cedar, and other Fancy Woods.

D. A. MACDONALD, J. H. MACDONALD, } J. MCGILL, H. CHIPMAN.

D. A. MACDONALD & CO.,

SAWING AND PLANING MILLS,

AND MANUFACTURERS OF

DOORS, SASHES, BLINDS AND MOULDINGS,

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Finishing Work for Buildings constantly on hand, and got up to order.

W. N. MILLER.....J. F. HALEY.

MILLER & HALEY,

EMPIRE STEAM MILLS,

NO. 29 FREMONT STREET,

San Francisco.

SASH, BLIND, DOOR AND MOULDING FACTORY.

PIONEER IRON SHUTTER WORKS.

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

I. H. SMALL,

Machine Shop,

BUILDER OF

Steam Engines, Saw Mills, Mining Machinery,

Also, I. H. Small's Patent Boot Screwing Machine.

Gears of all kinds Cut at Short Notice,

And at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing of all kinds done with Promptness and Dispatch.

Corner of Market and Beale Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. O. HANSCOM. H. S. SMITH. } HANSCOM & CO. { T. PENDERGAST. W. W. HANSCOM.

Etna Iron Works!

S. E. corner Fremont and Tehama Streets, San Francisco,

Practical Machinists and Iron Founders,

MANUFACTURE

STEAM ENGINES,

QUARTZ-MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS, SAW-MILLS, FLOUR-MILLS,

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting

PISTON PACKING,

Now so extensively used in the East and in this State. Requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

HANSCOM'S CRUSHER,

The best of the kind now in use in this State or anywhere else. All kinds of GRINDERS and AMALGAMATORS made to order. Manufacturers of the new Prospecting Quartz-Mills, consisting of Boiler, Engine, 2-stamp Battery and Grinding and Amalgamating Pan, complete, for working from one ton per day upwards. Drawings are furnished with each of these mills, so that any competent engineer can set it up in running order in two days' time.

TYLER'S IMPROVED WATER-WHEEL,

Giving greater power at lower cost than any wheel in use. Send for one of our circulars giving full tables.

All Wheels warranted to give the Power as set forth, or the money will be refunded.

SOLE MAKERS FOR THIS COAST OF THE "PENDERGAST WHITE IRON STAMP SHOES AND DIES."

None genuine unless obtained from us. Every one warranted.

Patented Machinery of all kinds will be furnished by us at market prices. Particular attention given to drawings and specifications of machinery, which will be made to order. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

☞ Particular attention paid to HOUSE WORK and ORNAMENTAL CASTINGS.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

THE CALIFORNIA

Building and Savings Bank,

CALIFORNIA ST., ONE DOOR FROM SANSOME.

Capital and Deposits, - - - - - $600,000

WHICH IS LOANED ON PROPERTY.

LOANS MADE on CITY REAL ESTATE,

HOUSES, SHIPS, FACTORIES

AND MERCHANDISE.

Deposits received at one per cent. per month.

Money transmitted from the interior, by Express or Mail, passed to interest from the day of arrival, and a Certificate returned in course of post.

Strangers may deposit Bonds, Gold Dust, Coin, or Valuable Papers in the Vault, for long or short periods, at a small rent, for which valuables the Company will be accountable. THOMAS MOONEY, President.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Furs without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Festhers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

SLOKUM ON PRACTICAL JOKES.

Si Sloakum, Jr., evidently is not partial to practical jokes, or other little pleasantries of that nature. He says:

"I don't like, when in kumpany, tu hev a chair ontu wich I am about tu squot, pulled away & konsekently I go tu the floor, causin' a bust ov larfter & snickerin' amnng the wimin. It aint gratifyin'.

I don't like a feller tu say, 'Stand up tu me, back tu back, let's see how much difference thare iz in our hite,' & then for him tu bend forard sudden & vigerous, sendin' me face tu the floor, dislokatin' mi back, or puttin' the lumbago intu it. It aint agreeable, bi no meens.

I don't like for a chap tu put the red hot end ov a cigar ontu mi face, sayin' thare wuz a fly thare & he didn't meen tu burn me. It aint helthy—not tu him.

I don't like for a chap, wich I confide intu, tu say, honest like, 'Si, don't yoo waut tu go tu the theatur tu-nite? I've got a ticket & can't use it. Yoo'd better go—here,' upon wich I take the ticket, & put for the theatur, on'y tu find ont itz a last yeer's peace ov pasteboard, & ov no akount. It makes mi blud bile, that duz.

I don't like, when, in a party wich iz imbibin ontu whisky punches, tu hev a free-mannered kuss in the krowd, one ov those wide awake chaps wich duz things all in a joke yoo kno, put his finger in mi punch, stir it round & taste ov it—even if he duz say it's good. I prefer tu be my own judge, I do.

I don't like for one ov them free-mannered kusses tu say awl ov a sudden, 'Hold still, Si—thare's a muskeeter,' & hit me a thunderin' welt on the cheek, sayin', 'The kuss got away arfter awl.' It isn't soothin,' & iz apt to bring on a fite.

I don't like a feller tu say in a corjul manner—'Kum, take sunthin, Si,' (this part I like,) & we go in, & hev him swoller hizen afour I've got tu mine, & then have him say 'Hold on a minit, Si,' & go ont and leave me tu pay for the entertainment. The refreshment duz no good in sich cases.

I don't like to hev a chap give me a thunderin' slap ontu mi back, & knock mi hat off, jest az I wuz goin' tu bow tu a female, & then hev the free-mannered kuss say, 'Oh, I thawt it wuz Jim Brown.' It makes one feel awkeredly. Make sure ov yoor Jim Brown, & then slap, but not utherwize.

I don't like for a feller when he shakes hands ontu me, to squeez mi hand in hizzen till I holler with pane, & the tears knm. It's fnstrate for him, but it's too coarjul & pressin' for me.

There's many other things I don't like, ov similer kussedness, but ov them anon."

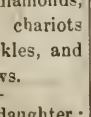
PORTICAL.—A young lady says the first time she was kissed she felt like a tub of roses swimming in honey, cologne, nutmegs, and cranberries. She felt also as if something was running through her nerves on feet of diamonds, escorted by several little cupids in chariots drawn by angels, shaded by honeysuckles, and the whole spread with melted rainbows.

A WIDOW said one day to her daughter: "When you are of my age you will be dreaming of a husband." "Yes, mamma," replied the young lady, "for the second time."

Hoops surround what ruin men—wine and women.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,
Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.



THE GREAT
New England Remedy!
DR. J. W. POLAND'S
White-Pine Compound,
IS NOW OFFERED TO THE AFFLICTED THROUGHout the country, after having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become as well known as the tree from which, in part, it derives its virtues.

THE WHITE-PINE COMPOUND CURES:
Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Diptheria, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary Affections generally. It is a remarkable Remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Difficulty of Avoiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, and other Complaints. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found very valuable.

Give it a Trial, if you would learn the value of a Good and Tried Medicine.

It is pleasant, safe and sure. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine generally.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery Street, cor. Clay, San Francisco.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.
Experience of 25 years (15th (1866) in San Francisco,) enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.
10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,
ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.
Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

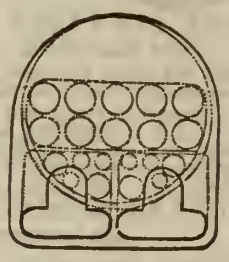
W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
Main street, Petaluma.

MOYNIHAN & AITKIN,
Portland Boiler Works,
311 AND 313 MISSION STREET,
Between Beale and Fremont streets, San Francisco.
Manufacturers of Steam Boilers, high or low pressure—Cylinder, Tubular or Flue; Sheet Iron Work; Steam and Water Pipe of the best quality, and at more reasonable prices than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast.
Being Practical Boiler Makers, of long experience, confining our whole time and attention to our branch of business, and having enlarged our works, and also added the most improved tools in the country, we are enabled to turn out Boilers more expeditiously than any other establishment on the Pacific Coast—using none but the best quality and brands of Boiler and Sheet Iron and Boiler Tubes. Those in want of anything in the above line will do well to give us a call. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.
All work warranted according to order. Particular attention paid to Repairing Steam Boilers.
T. J. MOYNIHAN, JAS. AITKEN, } Proprietors.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.
MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.
The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.
All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.
D. CAMERON.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,
Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.
STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.
Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam tight; with ont excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.
MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.
DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.
LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.
RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morsbead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 15 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreet, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Savannu's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holdiog's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohlor, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

SANS CŒUR.

I was born to be a rich man's bride,
My father's rugged kinsmen said;
I was reckless and clever, and fair beside,
Like my lady mother, who rashly wed;
Reckless and clever, and very fair—
I know that the women hated me then,
For my pensive eyes and my amber hair
Had worked sad mischief among the men.

I fancy they knew that I played them false,
That I laughed at the flames I helped to fan,
And took them only to practice the waltz,
Before the dance of my life began.
And yet they searched for a woman's heart,
As a miner sifts the sandy grains,
Until I was weary rehearsing the part,
And longed for a guerdon worth my pains.

It came one evening—a monied beau,
Sallow with cities, and worn with wine;
He was doing the pastoral thing, you know,
And had heard of our lodge—that the sport was fine.
I counted the creature a costly prize—
There was scanty fuel to start a flame,
But I knew the magic in my eyes,
So I gathered my glances and played my game.

I claimed no cunning at ribbons, or rouge,
They lay below by finer arts,
For it costs a deeper subterfuge
To warm the blood in shrivelled hearts.
I did not trust to look alone—
I was not my mother's child for naught,
And the langnid lids were all her own,
And the winning whisper she had taught.

The odds were strong against me; life
Had been to me a feast forlorn,
A banquet broken up with strife,
Lit by the mockery of morn.
To him all women wore a mask,
As every rose conceals a sting,
From such as spurn, to such as ask
All trinkets, save the wedding ring.

I pleased him from the first—a slight,
Indifferent fancy, it is true—
But one I watched and guided right,
And nurtured as it slowly grew.
I had no hope of winning love,
Beyond a witchery of the eye,
And yet the meshes that I wove
Were tightened to the marriage-tie.

Heigho! The scene was shifted then,
And I had left the life I loathed,
To hold my own with women and men,
Daintily fed and richly clothed.
The thing was clever that I had done,
The world was ready with smile and stare,
And I spent the money that I had won,
And queened it over the proudest there.

I am growing old, my enemies say,
But the fire of youth is in me still,
And of jewels and flowers, and all things gay,
I fear I shall never have had my fill.
Right merrily I have lived, and well,
Careless of cavil, and deaf to blame,
And not the foulest tongue can tell
A slanderous story to my shame.

Men are gathering round me yet,
Of every age, and every style,
And many remember, but few forget,
The bright bewitching of my smile.
I have conquered the world, and I'll hold my place
That I toiled to maintain, and lifted high,
Ruining men with my handsome face,
And living on flattery till I die.

—New York Home Journal.

Tyler Brothers,

691 Market st., cor. Third,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO
LADIES' STATIONERY,
Which we Stamp with Initials
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
Engraved, Written or Printed.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG GLOVE.
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets.

J. F. SNOW, THE "GLOVE MAN," CLEANS Pure without removing the lining. All kinds of Dresses—including Stage and Party Dresses—WITHOUT RIPPING. Woolen Goods, Shawls, Buck and Kid Gloves, Buck Undervests, Feathers, etc., etc. He dyes Kid Gloves and Feathers.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA FOR THE HAIR FOR SALE.

WINE SALOON.

UNION SALOON.—C. H. Cordea is the proprietor of the Union Saloon, Market street, a few doors south of Fremont, where is to be found the choicest wines and liquors. Mr. Cordes prides himself on his Kentucky Whisky, which is very old and oily. The "Davie" brand whisky drinkers should by all means call and test this whisky. Hot lunch is set on the table from 10 till 2.

California Wines.
Vintage 1862.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFRS FOR SALE SOME very choice Wines, of the above named vintage. That connoisseurs, all interested in the development of this magnificent resource of our State, and the public generally, may be convinced that California is able to produce as good Wine (when properly treated and of sufficient age) as other parts of the Wine producing regions of the globe, attention is respectfully called to these Wines, by A. S. LOWNDES, Wine Merchant,
311 Battery Street, S. F.

"OUR OPERA."
CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,
615 WASHINGTON STREET, 615,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco.

THE BEST FAMILY WINES
IN THE CITY
—Are to be found at—
HOADLEY & CO.'S,
533 Merchant street, under
Pacific Fruit Market.

☞ Call and try our Sonoma Champagne, Vega del Rio, Sonoma Port, Red and White Wines, Wine and Brandy Bitters, and all the varieties usually found in a California Wine Cellar.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,
No. 223 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at any hour of the day.
Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
J. W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL-KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

IS A CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF THE CHOICE root, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effectual antidote for diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. Such a remedy is surely wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove, as this has, of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found in the following complaints:

Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Sores, Skin Diseases, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Eruptions, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, etc

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient is left in comparative health.

Female diseases are caused by Scrofula in the blood, and are often soon cured by this EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

Do not discard this invaluable medicine, because you have been imposed upon by something pretending to be Sarsaparilla, while it was not. When you have used AYER'S—then, and not till then, will you know the virtues of Sarsaparilla. For minute particulars of the diseases it cures, we refer you to Ayer's American Almanac, which the agent below named will furnish gratis to all who call for it.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, for the cure of Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Heartburn arising from Disordered Stomach, Pain, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, and for a Dinner Pill.

They are sugar coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best Aperient in the world for all the purposes of a Family Physic.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Lawrence & Houseworth,

317 AND 319 MONTGOMERY STREET,

OPTICIANS

THE LARGEST OPTICAL INSTRUMENT Establishment on the Pacific Coast. Import all their own goods direct from European and American manufacturers, and have a larger and more complete assortment than all other dealers combined.

SPECTACLES and EYE-GLASSES warranted to suit the sight in every particular.

Double-sighted Spectacles, Tinted Spectacles and Brazilian Pebble Spectacles of the most approved form.

Those who have been disappointed at other establishments will certainly be pleased with the Spectacles they purchase from us.

N. B.—Inferior Glasses are not sold by us to the unwary for Brazilian Pebbles.

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Complete Catalogues of Optical Instruments furnished free.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

Beauty!
Auburn, Golden, Flaxen and Silken Curls
PRODUCED BY THE USE OF PROF. DE BREUX FRISER LE CHEVEUX.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets, or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London, with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address
BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,
MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

ARRIVAL
—OF—
MADAME LAURUSTINUS,
The Great Prophetess and Doctress.

The Madame has astonished thousands of her visitors in Europe, England and America, by revealing the Past, Present and Future Events of Life, such as Law Suits, Travel by Sea or Land, Lost or Stolen Goods, Hidden Treasure, Absent Friends or Relatives, and all affairs of business in general.

☞ The Madame has a select assortment of pure Roman Talismans, for Love, Good Luck, Success in Business, and guaranteed for Life.

Office of MADAME LAURUSTINUS, No. 816 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Office hours, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE.
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco

AT THE REGULAR
C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOWE'S NEW STYLE
FAMILY SEWING MACHINES.
GREAT IMPROVEMENT—JUST RECEIVED.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR FINE WORK. Also, Braiding, Hemming, etc. The advantage these Machines have is extreme simplicity, very strong and durable, not liable to get out of order—adapted equally well to all gradee of work. The Howe should be examined by all contemplating purchasing. H. A. DEMING,
137 Kearny street, S. W. cor. Sutter, San Francisco, Cal

IF there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

THE LOVE BIRD.

The maple is flushing in crimson spray,
The cold and the winter have passed away,
A little bird sits in the buds at play,
And he sings and whistles the live-long day
One constant strain in a tinkling swell,
Like a fairy's touch on a silver bell.
I know not if others can read so well
The story his gurgling warbles tell;
Now pealing loud and sinking low,
Now bursting and swelling with liquid flow;
But each rippling note,
From his mellow throat,
As it floats along,
Sings the sweet song:
I love you, I love you, I love you.

Way down in my heart a little bird sings,
With golden plumage and scarlet wings;
His voice is clear as the crystal springs,
And his notes, like a pattering of pearls, he flings.
A gentle thing is that bosom bird,
With the tenderest tone you ever heard,
His strain is by softened memories stirred,
And its key note is struck from one sweet word.
His lay begins with the earliest morn,
Yet e'en in my dreams it goes ringing on;
And my heart beats time
To the silvery chime,
Pealing back the same
In a tone of flame:
I love you, I love you, I love you.

REFRESHING CANDOR.—The late Mr. Braham, known to the public as the greatest male volcalist of his time, was equally famed among his private friends as a narrator of funny anecdotes, which he is said to have recounted with a certain grave humor, not to be equalled, much less surpassed. The late Mr. Bnnn—no bad story-teller himself—has recorded one of these, observing that he only regrets that he cannot give it the point which it derived from the manner of the celebrated singer. A certain Hebrew, it appears, having no readier means of making money, hit upon the expedient of purchasing a book of one of the elder Charles Mathew's entertainments, and announced his intention of repeating the entertainment to the public of a provincial town, in which amusements were scarce. The assembly room at which the performance took place was crowded, but not many minutes had elapsed before it became painfully evident that the artist, having no talent whatever, was about to read through the book, without displaying any more humor or any aptitude for delineating character than was at the command of the least artistic person in his audience. Indeed, it is a question whether they would not all have surpassed him, for at all events they would have read with a proper English accent, whereas his utterance was veiled by a Jewish dialect of the thickest and most repulsive kind. The discovery of the "entertainer's" deficiencies soon led to an universal cry of "Swindle! swindle!" Meekly bowing to the sentence thus pronounced, and looking as if he acknowledged its justice, he said with the utmost calmness, "Ladish and gentlemansh—Yon are right. It ish a swindle." General indignation was at once merged in a general roar of laughter.

THE Boston Bulletin interprets titles of sundry popular songs in the following style:

I Know a Bank—Sand or Fare?

My Highland Rose—Did it? Then you made something.

Song of the Lark—We won't go home till morning.

There's a Bower—There are two, right and left.

All Hail to the Land—Some rain would be better.

The Days Seem Longer Now—Well, they are longer.

I Would Not Live Always—Sour Grapes?

Will You Come to the Bower?—If you play the right one.

You'll Remember—When my note is protested.

In Darkness I Wander—Take a lantern and go straight on.

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner Sacramento and Kearny streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO STOCK BREWERY,
CORNER POWELL AND FRANCISCO STS.
Capital Stock $200,000, divided in Two Thousand Shares of $100 each.

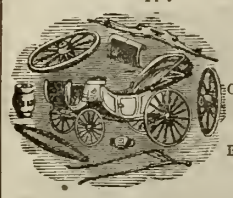
THEODORE MEETZ.....President
WM. ERZGRABER.....Vice President
J. G. WATERMANN.....Secretary

TRUSTEES.

FABIAN JOOST, HENNING KOSTER,
HERMANN WENDT, FREDERICK BRUNS,
HERMANN SCHWARZE, PETER MEYER.

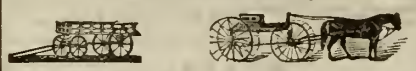
The above Company intend to establish a reputation for making the best
Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer
In the country, and respectfully solicit the patronage of their friends and the public generally.
☞ All orders from the country promptly filled and delivered free of charge in the city.

WILLIAM JAMES, Newark, N. J. | DAVID MEEKER, J. COSMLEDICK, } San Francisco.
MEEKER, JAMES & CO.,
Importers and Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
Wagon & Carriage Materials,
NOS. 12 AND 14 PINE STREET.
The Largest Establishment on the Pacific Coast for the supply of materials for



WAGONS, TRUCKS,
CARTS, OMNIBUSSES,
CARRIAGES, COACHES,
EXPRESS WAGONS,
BUGGIES, SULKIES, ETC.
Also, Importers of
GREGG'S TENONING MACHINES,
Hub Boxing Machines, Thimble Skeins for Wood Axles, Hub Bands, Axle Clips, Shaft Shackles, Malleable Iron Castings, Concord Axles and Springs.
☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to. MEEKER, JAMES & Co.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

SAUL & McARRON,
Manufacturers of
STAGE AND THOROUGHBRACE WAGONS,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.
Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.
Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.
UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $750,000

The California Lloyds,
HAVING CONSOLIDATED WITH THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1866, THIS COMPANY ARE NOW PREPARED TO EFFECT MARINE AS WELL AS FIRE INSURANCE UPON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.
LOSSES PROMPTLY AND EQUITABLY ADJUSTED AND PAID IN GOLD COIN.

DIRECTORS.

J. Mora Moss,	Benjamin Brewster,
James Otis,	Lloyd Tevis,
Wm. E. Barron,	Thos. H. Selby,
J. G. Kittle,	Nicholas Luning,
Joseph A. Donohoe,	John Parrott,
M. J. O'Connor,	J. Underhill,
I. Friedlander,	M. D. Sweeny,
Moses Heller,	C. N. Felton,
Lafayette Maynard,	James Phelan,
Charles L. Low,	Gustave Touchard,
Jacob Scholle,	Michael Castle,
James Dows,	Nicholas Larco,
Joseph Seller,	N. G. Kittle,
L. H. Allen,	Wm. C. Talbot,
Wm. Hooper,	Patrick McAran,
C. Temple Emmet,	Geo. C. Johnson,
Joseph Brandenstein,	Caleb T. Fay,
B. F. Hastings, Sacramento.
L. Cunningham, Marysville.	William Smith,

CALEB T. FAY, President.
CHARLES D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Marine Director.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.
It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.
Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.
BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

HEALY'S CURATIVE OIL,
For the Extermination of Pain, is a Sovereign Remedy for Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cramps in the Limbs, Diarrhœa, Sprains, Bruises, Burns and Cuts, and for the Bites of Poisonous Insects, Frozen Feet, etc., stands unrivalled.
For Sale by all dealers in medicines. Price One Dollar per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
Headley's Great Work!
The only book issued on our NAVY during the Rebellion. Agents find no competition.
FARRAGUT AND OUR NAVAL COMMANDERS,
Comprising Popular Biographies of our Naval Heroes, by Hon. J. T. Headley, the distinguished Author and Historian—complete in one large volume—handsomely illustrated in steel. The best paying Agency of the day.
In connection with this work our Agents can take orders for five of Headley's Standard Works. Call or send at once for Circulars and Terms.
E. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.
LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.
RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

JOHN HAGAN,
Marble - Worker,
MARKET ST, OPPOSITE LINCOLN SCHOOL HOUSE, between Fifth and Sixth.

Marble Mantels, Grates, Monuments, Headstones, Cemetery Copings, and all kinds of Marble Work executed on most reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to the placing of Tombstones at Lone Mountain or Calvary Cemeteries. N. B.—Country orders promptly attended to.

P. A. FINIGAN'S

NORFOLK STABLES,
ELLIS STREET, BETWEEN POWELL AND MASON,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FINEST STABLE KNOWN IN AMERICA.
Horses, Buggies, and all kinds of Carriages to let on reasonable terms. Particular attention paid to boarding horses. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddle Horses always on hand. P. A. FINIGAN, Proprietor.

BEDDING AND FURNITURE,
LIVE GEESE FEATHERS,
DOWNY PULU, CURLED HAIR, MOSS, AND WOOL MATTRESSES.
—ALSO—
The sole right to manufacture FULLER'S PATENT SPIRAL SPRING MATTRESSES, admitted by everybody to be the BEST, more durable, more elastic, and cheaper than the old style Spring Beds.
A full assortment of FURNITURE, SHEETING, BLANKETS, etc., at extremely low prices, for cash.
JACOB SCHREIBER,
Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine, San Francisco.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOELSCHER & WIELAND,
Proprietors.

THE CELEBRATED PIANOS

—OF—

J. B. DUNHAM, F. C. LIGHTE & CO.,

AND ERNEST GABLER,

Are warranted for FIVE YEARS, and indorsed by the LEADING PIANISTS of AMERICA as SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS.

SOLE AGENTS— C WIEDERHOLD & CO.,
685 Market street, near Third.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

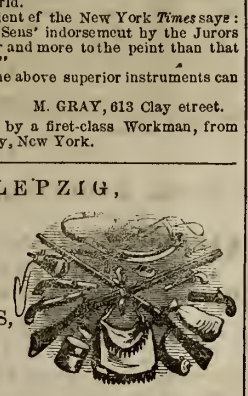
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

J. C. E. KLEPZIG,

MANUFACTURER

—AND—

DEALER IN



GUNS, PISTOLS,

Sporting Apparatus,

AMMUNITION

AND GUN MATERIALS,

No. 733 Washington Street, San Francisco.

Gilding and Silver Plating of all kinds of metals; also, Silver or Plated Ware reburnished.

HOLBROOK, MERRILL & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

STOVES, TIN-PLATE,

SHEET IRON, LEAD PIPE, PUMPS, ZINC, WIRE, AND

HOUSE FURNISHING HARDWARE.

MANUFACTURERS OF

TIN, SHEET-IRON AND COPPER WARE.

Nos. 13 and 15 Front street.....San Francisco
Nos. 176 and 178 J street.....Sacramento
Main street.....Austin, Nevada

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE

HAVE IN STORE, EX LATE ARRIVALS, A FULL stock of

STOVES AND RANGES,

METALS, WIRE, IRON PIPE,
LEAD PIPE, BRASS GOODS, HOSE,
HOLLOW-WARE, TIN-WARE,
TINMEN'S STOCK AND TRIMMINGS,
TOOLS AND MACHINES,

Plumbers' Goods,

LIFT AND FORCE PUMPS,

Hansbrow's Patent

SHIP, FARM AND MINING PUMPS,

Which they offer to Dealers at the lowest market rates.

112 AND 114 BATTERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.
North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.
N. T. WHITCOMB.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 KEARNY STREET,

Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma
H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

Powell Street

WARM SWIMMING BATHS!

N. E. Corner Powell and Filbert Streets,

OPPOSITE WASHINGTON SQUARE.

J. M. NASH.....PROPRIETOR.

WARM AND COLD BATHS from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. daily, with every appliance usually connected with a well-ordered Gymnasium for the development of Health and Muscle.

The only Complete Swimming Bath on this Coast.

Another advantage connected with this establishment, not usually found in Swimming Baths, is, that the water is Continually Changing, Fresh Water running in and out Constantly.

Single Baths, including Towels and Bathing Dress.25 cts
5 Bath Tickets, " " $1

Call and Try Them. The Kearny Street and Montgomery Street Cars pass the door every five minutes.

The Baths are reserved for Ladies every Tuesday, from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. Ladies to supply their own Bathing Dresses.

I will guarantee to impart a thorough practical knowledge of Swimming in one month. Terms for the Course, $10.
J. M. NASH.

JACOB SHEW,

Pioneer Photographer

612 CLAY STREET,

Nerth side, four doers above Mentgomery.

Takes all kinds ef Photographs in the very best etyle of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority ol the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES

Executed in a Superior Style, at

GEO. D. MORSE'S

NEW AND ELEGANT ROOMS,

No. 315 Montgomery Street, corner of Summer.

Photographs retouched in India Ink or Water Colors, and copied from daguerreotypes or ambrotypes to any size. All work guaranteed and perfect satisfaction given. Call and see specimens before going elsewhere.

REMOVAL.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

To the S. E. corner Montgomery and Pine streets,

San Francisco.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

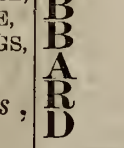
328 Mentgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washingtou street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, cerner of Clay; Wm. J. Adame, Esq., (Adams, Blinu & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnvereiu Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnstou, Esq., Insuranco Building, 412 and 414 Montgemery street; Jamee Breeks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

THE MOST PERFECT CUTTING MACHINE EVER MADE

HUBBARD PRIZE MOWER



The Excelsior Mower of the Day.

The Makers of this Celebrated Machine have finally been enabled to increase their manufacturing facilities to such an extent, as to equal the Eastern demand, and permit of a full stock being kept at San Francisco for the wants of the Pacific Farmers.

This Machine took the FIRST GOLD MEDAL PREMIUM from

EIGHTEEN COMPETITORS,

At the Great Public Trial of MOWERS held at Utica, New York.

Farmers and Dealers, send for a pamphlet, and consult your own interests by examining this Machine before you make your purchases for the season.

ADDRESS

WM. B. ISAACS,

Office of the Ruseel & Erwin Manufacturing Company,

106 AND 108 BATTERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one fer Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers fer Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregen, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedre, and San Diego.

Office ef the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, Preeident.

MRS. WINSHIP,

Fashionable Milliner.

NO. 23 POST STREET,

Between Kearny and Mentgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Lace Work, Head Dresses, Breakfast Caps, &c., made to order.

Particular attention paid to mending and doing up Laces.

☞ Goods received by every steamer, frem New York and Paris.

REMOVAL.—FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

Has removed frem 612 Battery street to 537 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the medern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every descriptien.
All goods sold are warranted.

LOTS FOR SALE ON BERNAL RANCHO.

NOTICE IS GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE OF AN Order of the Probate Court ef the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the undersigned will sell at public auction, in two separate parcels, subject to confirmation by said Court, on TUESDAY, the 4th day of June, 1867, at 12 o'clock noon, at the auction rooms of MAURICE DORE & CO., No. 327 Montgomery street, in said City and County, the real estate belonging to the Estate of CORNELIUS RICKTER, deceased, described as follows, to-wit:

All those certain pieces or parcels of land situated, lying and being on the Bernal Rancho, in the City and County ef San Francisco, aforesaid and known and designated upon a certain map entitled, "Gift Map No. 3," as and by the numbers 269 and 271—being each 25 feet in width, in frent and rear, and 70 feet deep.

Terms of Sale—Cash, in United States Gold Coin. Deeds and Stamps at expense of purchaser.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator of the Estate of Cornelius Rickter, deceased.
Dated May 11th, 1867. my11-3w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of DANIEL B. BARNES, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distributien should net be made.

On reading and filing the petition ef Stephen Smith, Administrator of the Estate of Daniel B. Barnes, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased. in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the third day of June, A. D. 1867, at cleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of said deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order he published for four successive weeks, before the said third day of June A D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated May 3d, A. D. 1867. my4-5t13

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF San Francisco. In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of THOMAS A. KIMBALL, deceased.

Order of Publication on application for order of sale.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Quarles, administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court-room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 20th day of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated April 17th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Probate Court, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1867.

[Seal and Int. Rev. stamp 50 cts., canceled.]

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JECHERS, Deputy Clerk.
WINANS & BELENAP, Att'ys for Petitioner. ap20-5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

EDWARD J. QUIRK, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES P. HORBACH, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JAMES P. HORBACH, HENRY DELVENDAHL, HENRY BREMMERMAN, ERNST JANSSEN and GUSTAV HELMKE, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to require you, the said defendants, to set forth the nature of your respective claims to that certain lot or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco, as particularly described in the complaint herein, being subdivision No. 5 of the 100-vara lot known on the map of the city of San Francisco as No. 276, as designated on a plat of the original subdivision thereof, recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said city and County, in Liber 1 of Certified Grants, at page 156, that all adverse claims of said defendants and each of them may be determined by a decree of this Court; that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that the said defendants, each and all of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said parcel of land, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that said defendants, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said land adverse to plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as to this Hon. Court shall seem meet and agreeable to equity, with costs of suit against such of the defendants as shall defend this action.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in said complaint.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL.] By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Plaintiff's Attorney. mh30-13w

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ELLEN JENNER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of William A. Jenner, the Executor of the last will and testament of Ellen Jenner, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heirs and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 3d day of June, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the heirs and devisees of the said Ellen Jenner, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said third day of June, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated April 23d, A. D. 1867.
THOS. B. BISHOP, Att'y for Executor. ap27-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, William Rowan, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said William Rowan, at No 532 Merchant street, Room No. 3, in the City and County of San Francisco.

WM. ROWAN.
Administrator of the estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, April 26th, 1867. my4-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF HENRY SEAMAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco.

JANE SEAMAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of Henry Seaman, deceased.
May 10th, 1867. my11-6w

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor
CARR. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

The Beautiful and Fascinating

HELEN WESTERN,

Supported by THE GRAND COMBINATION COMPANY,

This Afternoon.....May Eighteenth,

AMERICAN COUSIN.

THIS EVENING,

Rosina Meadows, and French Spy.

In Rehearsal—The Helen Western Speciality -

HOME AND ABROAD!

In which she will enact Ten Characters, and introduce the celebrated FEMALE MINSTRELS.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra $1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

☞No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE.....Proprietor
CHARLES TIBBETTS.....Business Manager

ITALIAN OPERA.

SATURDAY EVENING.....MAY 18th,

Will be presented the Grand Opera of

IL TROVATORE.

Leonora.....Siguorina Eugenia Bellini.
Azucena.....Madame Stella Bonheur.
Manrico.....Signor E. Bianchi.
Count di Luni.....Signor G. Mancusi.
Ferrando.....Signor S. Milleri.

MONDAY EVENING.....BALLO EN MASCHERA.

Conductor.....MR. GEO. T. EVANS.

☞ The Regular Subscription Nights will be Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. On Saturday evening an extra night will be given.

GO AND SEE THE WONDERFUL PERFORMING BUFFALO
AND THE
GREAT COMBINATION OF EQUESTRIAN, ACROBATIC AND GYMNASTIC PERFORMANCE AT
THE

New York Circus,

International Lot, Jackson Street, near Montgomery.

Afternoon Performance at 2 o'clock To-Day.

GRAND PERFORMANCE THIS EVENING.

MONDAY EVENING,

Benefit of

WM. KENNEDY, CLOWN.

☞ Entire New Features will be Presented.☜

Pacific Billiard Tournament,

OPEN TO

ALL PLAYERS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

THE GRAND BILLIARD TOURNAMENT FOR THE Championship of the Pacific Coast, is now taking place at CONGRESS HALL, Bush street, just above Montgomery, and will be continued TO-DAY and THIS EVENING, and on MONDAY.

First Prize—A most splendid gold-mounted Cue, and the Championship.

There will also be four other prizes in cash, ranging from One Hundred Dollars up.

The New York American Billiard Players' Association's rules will be strictly adhered to in this contest.

STRAHLE & HUGHES,
567 Market Street, San Francisco.

THE CENTRAL PARK OF THE PACIFIC.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery,

Museum, Gymnasium

.....AND.....

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THESE BEAUTIFUL GARDENS ARE VISITED DAILY by hundreds of the pleasure seeking public, and all agree in pronouncing them the best and only first class suburban resort on the Pacific coast.

The extensive grounds are covered with the rarest trees and shrubbery, making it a most desirable spot for small parties wishing to enjoy a Pic-Nic.

New attractions are being constantly added.

These Gardens are accessible by the Howard, Market and Folsom street cars. Entrances on Mission and Valencia streets, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth. OPEN EVERY DAY.

Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 years, half price.

Peet & Son,

IMPORTERS AND MANUFACTURERS OF

SADDLERY AND HARNESS,

No. 315 BATTERY STREET,

Nex Door to Commercial Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Black Silks.

200 PIECES.

VERY SUPERIOR BLACK SILKS.

Suitable for

DRESSES,

CLOAKS AND

MANTILLAS,

AT A REDUCTION OF 25 PER CENT.

From Cost of Importation.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

No. 107 BATTERY STREET, BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE.

Cloths, Cloths.

500 PIECES.

FRENCH, SCOTCH AND ENGLISH CLOTHS

Suitable for

CLOAKS, AND MEN AND BOYS' WEAR,

Just received, and will be offered on

MONDAY, 13th inst.,

AT A REDUCTION OF 50 PER CENT.

From Cost of Importation.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

No. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

Family Dry Goods

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings;
Linen Sheetings and Shirtings;
Towels and Towelings;
Barnesly, Scotch and French Table Damask and Table Cloths;
Flannels, Blankets, Quilts, Etc.

—ALSO—

A large line of French Cambrics, Nainsooks, Mull Mull, Jaconets and Organdies, suitable for Ladies' and Childrens' Dresses.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

No. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

Erin Go Bragh.

B. C. HORN & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF

HAVANNA CIGARS,

Agents for Virginia Manufactured Tobacco,

FRONT STREET, CORNER OF CLAY,

SAN FRANCISCO.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

LACOUR'S

SARSAPARIPHERE

BITTERS

POSSESS INVALUABLE PROPERTIES.

They give Health to the Sick,

Strength to the Weak,

Joy to the Afflicted.

☞SOLD EVERYWHERE.☜

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

MONTHLY LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MAY, 1867.

A Journey to Ashango-Land. By Du Chaillu.
Sybil's Second Love. By Julia Kavanagh.
Annual of Scientific Discovery for 1866 and 1867.
Black Sheep; a Novel. By Edmund Yates.
Lion in the Path. By J. Saunders.
Beale on the Microscope in Practical Medicine; new edition.
Treusseau's Clinical Medicine—Part II.
Up and Down the London streets. By Mark Lemon.
Thomas' American Fruit Culturist; new edition.
Natural Theology. By Prof. P. A. Chadbourne.
"Maga" Stories. Putnam's Railway Classics.
Literary Life of J. K. Paulding. Compiled by his Son Wm. I. Paulding.
Froude's History of England—Vols. IX and X.
Æneid of Virgil. Translated by J. Conington, M. A.
Edgar A. Poe's Prose Tales; new edition—2 vols.
Political Writings of Richard Cobden—2 vols.
The Rich Husband. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
Sut Lovingood's Yarns.
Siege of Washington. By F. C. Adams.
The Reign of Law. By the Duke of Argyll.
Mexico under Maximilian. By H. M. Flint.
Edged Tools. (Win and Wear Series.)
Lydia. A Tale of the Second Century.
The English of Shakspeare. By Geo. L. Craik.
True Protestant Ritualism. By Rev. Chas. H. Hall.
Five Centuries of English Literature.
Incidents Connected with the Pacific Railroad. By S. Seymour.
History of California—in German. By Karl Ruhl.
Voice and Action. By Prof. J. E. Frobisher.
Battle Fields of Virginia—Chancellorsville.
Coming Wonders Expected between 1867 and 1875.
Layres' Elements of Composition. Published by A. Roman & Co.
Campaign of Mobile. By Bvt. Maj.-Gen'l C. C. Andrews.
Warren's Problems of Shades and Shadows.
Family Prayers for the Christian Year. By Henry Alford, D. D.
Sequel to Ministering Children—2 vols. 18mo.
Christian Ethics. By Joseph Alden.
Percy's Reliques—3 vols. Tauchnitz Edition.
Swedenborg's Heaven and Hell; new edition—8vo.
Chambers on Indigestion—8vo.
Ecce Deus, with Controversial Notes on "Ecce Homo."
David Copperfield. Diamond Edition.
Harriet Beecher Stowe's Religious Poems. Illustrated.
Famous Americans of Recent Times. By Jas. Parton.
Gardening for Profit. By Peter Henderson.
Back-Bone; Photographed from "The Scalpel."
Annals of a Quiet Neighborhood. By Rev. Geo. MacDonald.
Wells' Every Man His Own Lawyer, and Form Book.
Cummings & Miller's Architecture. Designs for Street Fronts.
Da Costa on Inhalation.
Atwater's Manual of Elementary Logic.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers,
Nos. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

Don't Read This!

PORK TRIMMINGS TO GIVEN AWAY.

PRICES:

Pigs' Heads..... 6 cents
Pigs' Feet..... 7 cents
Pigs' Tongues.....10 cents
Tails..... 7 cents
Spare Ribs.....10 cents
Sausage Meat..... 8 cents
Pork Roast.....10 cents
Sugar Cured Hams .....18 cents
Breakfast Bacon.....18 cents
Leaf Lard.....15 cnets

The above are from grain-fed Hogs.

No. 1 American Beef.....from 5 to 10 cents
Sugar Cured Smoked Beef .....12½ cents
Choice Mutton.....5 to 7 cents

FOR SALE—1,000 South Down SHEEP.

WILSON & STEVENS,
508 Market street,
9 Sutter street.

D. GHERARDELLIS & CO.'S

Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.

CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS:

N. B.—Gherardelli's' Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, . . . PROPRIETOR

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamers for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR MAY.

May 18th—MONTANA, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Harris.
May 30th—SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman", and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on July 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

Great Reduction in Rates.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

AMERICA,

2500 Tons.....EDGAR WAKEMAN, Commander,

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

WEDNESDAY, - - JUNE 5th, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship SANTIAGO, 2,500 tons, for NEW YORK.

☞The MOSES TAYLOR will sail June 25th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

There cometh glad tidings of joy to all,
To young and old, to great and to small;
The beauty which was once so precious and rare,
Is free for all, and all may be fair.

By the use of

CHASTELLAR'S

WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL,

FOR IMPROVING AND BEAUTIFYING THE COMplexion.

The most valuable and perfect preparation in use, for giving the skin a beautiful pearl-like tint, that is only found in youth. It quickly removes Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Blotches, Moth Patches, Sallowness, Eruptions, and all impurities of the skin, kindly healing the same, leaving the skin white and clear as alabaster. Its use cannot be detected by the closest crutiny, and being a vegetable preparation is perfectly harmless. It is the only article of the kind used by the French, and is considered by the Parisian as indispensable to a perfect toilet. Upwards of 30,000 bottles were sold during the past year, a sufficient guarantee of its efficacy. Price only 75 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of order, by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Excelsior! Excelsior!!

CHASTELLAR'S

HAIR EXERMINATOR, FOR REMOVING SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

TO THE LADIES ESPECIALLY, THIS INVALUABLE depilatory recommends itself as being an almost indispensable article to female beauty, is easily applied, does not burn or injure the skin, but acts directly on the roots. It is warranted to remove superfluous hair from low foreheads, or from any part of the body, completely, totally and radically extirpating the same, leaving the skin soft, smooth and natural. This is the only article used by the French, and is the only real effectual depilatory in existence. Price 75 cents per package, sent post-paid, to any address, on receipt of an order by

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
285 River street, Troy, N. Y.

Whiskers and Mustaches!

FORCED TO GROW UPON THE SMOOTHEST FACE face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and post paid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address

BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists,
No. 285 River street, Troy, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for the United States.

JAMES C. PARKINSON JOHN J. MAHONEY.

PARKINSON & MAHONEY,

GILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS

—OF—

LOOKING-GLASS AND PICTURE FRAMES,

No. 333 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco. All kinds of Oval Frames, Lithographs and Engravings kept constantly on hand. Pictures cleaned and varnished. Old Framas regilt.